A

COMMENTARY

Upon the VVhole

OLD TESTAMENT;

Consisting of four Parts,

I The Pentateuch, or five Books of Moses.

II The Historicall Part, from Joshua to Esther.

III Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Solomons Song

IV All the Prophets both Great and Small.

WHEREIN

The diverse Translations and Expositions, Literall and Mysticall, of all the most Famous Commentators both Ancient and Modern are propounded, examined and judged of, for the more full satisfaction of the Studious Reader in all things; and many genuine Notions inserted for Edification in the Grace of our Lord JESUS CHRIST.

WHICH

Compleateth the AUTHORS Comment on the whole

BIBLE.

A VVork, the like unto which hath never yet been published by any man, yet very necessary, not only for Students in Divinity; but also for every Christian that loveth the knowledge of Divine things, or Humane, whereof this COMMENT is also full.

By JOHN MAYER, Doctor in Divinity.

JOB 33. 23, 24.

If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one of a thousand, to shew unto man his uprightness; then he is gracious to him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom.

LONDON,

Printed by R. L. and R. I. and are to be sold by EDVVARD DOD at the Gunne in Ivy-Lane. MDCLIV.

6 C

77. B. 3.

TO THE MOST RELIGIOVS and Zealous of the Commonalty of ENGLAND.

IT was the complaint of the Apoſtle Paul touching his brethren, the Jews, that they had the zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, Rom. 10. 2. and may not the ſame complaint be now made of you, my zealous Brethren, the Engliſh? For when as your zeal carrieth you onely to read and hear the Word of God in a curſory manner, but not to a more ſerious ſtudying and ſearching into it, nor uſing ſuch helps as ye have to finde out the treaſures of divine knowledge that lie hid therein, which all ſerve to make the man of God perfect, as is taught, 2 Tim. 3.16. is this to be zealous according to knowledge, to take a ſealed book into your hands, but not to endeavour to have the ſeal opened that ye may read with underſtanding, Eſa. 29.11. to walk in a field wherein great treaſures lie hid, of which ye have need, but not to dig down to theſe treaſures, or to accept of them that offer their labours to help you thereunto? As it's ſaid of Henry the Seventh, King of England, that Americus offered him to finde out the rich treaſures of India to his uſe, if he would but have furniſht him with three ſhips victualled for a voyage of three yeers; but he refuſed, and ſo that offer was made to the King of Spain, and accepted of to the wonderfull increaſe of his Revenues ever ſince; for precious wiſdom muſt be ſearched for as for hidden treaſures, Prov. 2.4. It is the pearl, to buy which a man ſelleth all that he hath, Matth. 13. 44. For want of ſuch ſearching, and through ſticking at the charge, many even zealous Chriſtians, although living many years in the liberty of all means that may make them wiſe to ſalvation, are very poore in knowledge, when as hereby they might have been Teachers of others, as Priſcilla and Aquila were, and even this way Babes ſtill, as the Apoſtle chargeth the believing Hebrews to have been, Heb. 5.12. A man that is of any trade, and hath long been, is aſhamed to be ignorant of the myſteries of his trade: now the Chriſtian Religion is a Trade or Science more excellent then any other Science, and ye that have a zeal towards it are commonly called Profeſſours hereof: now the myſteries of this Science are ſet forth in the Holy Scriptures, and that in many places in a myſticall and hidden manner; and are ye not aſhamed then to have no more underſtanding hereof then any naturall man at the firſt looking into them may have? Haply ye know how many Teſtaments there be, and ſome of you, how many Books in each Teſtament, and the Hiſtories and Laws therein conteined, but how few have any inſight into the myſteries of either of them? That in the hiſtories of the Old Teſtament there are myſteries, appears by the ſaying of our Lord, both when he ſaid, As Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſſe, ſo muſt the ſon of man be lifted up, Joh. 3.14. and alſo where he ſaith, As Jonah was three dayes and three nights in the whales belly; ſo ſhall the ſon of man be in the heart of the earth, Matth. 12.40. wherefore that hiſtory of Moſes his making a brazen ſerpent, Numb. 21. and ſetting it upon a pole, had more then an hiſtory in it by every good Reader to be looked into, and likewiſe that of Jonah ſo miraculouſly brought out of the whales belly, Jon. 2. And the ſame further appears by the Allegory made by the Apoſtle of the hiſtory of Abraham, having two wives, Sarah and Hagar, Gal. 4.24. and in that relating the hiſtory of things done in the Temple, he ſaith, The Holy Ghoſt ſignifying this hereby, &c. And as for lawes and ordinances, Gods ordeining, that they ſhould not muzzle the mouth of the oxe that treadeth out the corn, he ſheweth, was not that God had care of oxen, but of his Miniſters, that they ſhould have liberall maintenance, 1 Tim. 5.18. whence it muſt needs follow, that there are many more hiſtories & ordinances, where by myſtically other things tend to our edification were ſet forth.

And the like is to be held touching Parables, and many prophecies are ſo obſcure, as that they do but wander in darkneſſe that read them without an Interpreter. And of all the books of holy Scripture the books of Moſes, whereupon all the reſt are founded, have moſt need of interpretation for many hiſtories therein conteined; in which, if the myſteries in them lying hid be not found out, there is rather ſcandall then edification to the Reader, and the like may be ſaid of many ordinances and lawes. And this hath from time to time been acknowledged by the learned of all ages, who have ſpent a great part of their time to finde them out, and to improve them to profit both to themſelves and to their Readers, as they could not but be excited to do, becauſe The whole Scripture is ſaid to be profitable to inſtruct, &c. 2 Tim. 3.16. That the man of God might be perfect: ſo that they come ſhort of perfection and of ſtriving after it, that neither know theſe things, as none of the people can, but by the interpretation, nor care whether they know them or no, and ſo are not of the number of thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, So many ny of us as be perfect: let us be thus minded. When he had ſpoken before of preſſing on to more knowledge, *Phil.*3.14,15. Upon the books of Moſes therefore I wrote with the help of many worthy lights before the other books of the Old Teſtament, even 20 years ago, and had then publiſhed this Commentary before Deodate, Jackſon, or the Annotations upon the Bible, or Trappe, who have written ſince: but by the Hierarchicall Government that then was, the coming of it forth hath been hindered; and ſince the times being full of trouble and tumult, men have had enough to do to bear their ſhare in theſe troubles, which permit not the reading and ſtudying of books, how neceſſary ſoever. For hereby they that are to uſher good books into the World, have been greatly diſcouraged from ſo doing; and Authors that have written them, have not been ſo able as willing to publiſh them for a common good. For as the ſaying of the Poet is,

Carmina proveniunt animo deducta ſereno:
Me mare, me venti, me fera jactat hyems.

The troubles of the times have neither permitted much Printing or reading of books moſt uſefull, but according to mens humours, being ſet upon novelties, of news-books, and petty controverſies ſprung up in the Church in theſe times, of which we may ſay with Solomon, *Eccleſ.*12.12. Of many books making there is no end, and much reading is a wearineſſe to the fleſh: that is, this is all the good which is gotten by reading ſuch books, but to read books made for the better underſtanding of the Book of God, is to turn wearineſſe into joy, for the treaſures found herein to enrich the ſoul to eternall life. But touching this my book in particular, ye will ſay there is no need of it now, there being ſo many out before it upon the ſame ſubject. This indeed, I finde, hath taken off the edge of the Bookſellers zeal hereunto; but none that have hitherto written hereupon have gone that way which I have gone, by giving the Reader a Synopſis or ſhort view of all the moſt famous lights that have been before me, whereby as by many lights brought into a dark room together, I have been the better able to ſee into every corner, and to diſcover unto thee whatſoever is precious lying hid therein; ſo that although they have all done worthily, who in this kinde have been before me, yet thou ſhalt in this work of mine finde ſomewhat more for thy illumination, conſolation and edification; for we all, whether in writing or preaching, are labourers together with God, ye are Gods husbandry and Gods building. And as I have done in this, ſo in the reſt of my Works upon the whole Old Teſtament, and not much differing upon the New, which are all publiſhed, and what Reader who hath them, but muſt needs deſire to have the whole Work perfect, whereunto at all times he may have recourſe when he is reading the holy Scriptures in any part to be enlightened therein. The books of Ariſtotle, the Prince of Philoſophers, have Commentaries written thereupon; and upon the Maſter of the Sentences Palbertus hath written by way of Commentary at large; yea upon Horace and Ovid there are Commentaries, and how much more then then may it be justly expected that Theologus should write upon Gods book, and (because so many have written already, some of them differing from others to the confounding of the Reader, and so many Comments are by this means multiplied, that few can either have them for the great charge, or for their multitude make use of them, or because they are in a language, which they understand not) that some work should be made by way of collecting together, and judging the divers Translations and Expositions of divers for the more full information, (and that with more speed then could otherwise be done) of the studious Reader, especially knowing no more then the English tongue, touching all things, about which he might make scruple, or whereat he might stumble. In the like worke many both Greeks and Latines have formerly laboured, as Lippomannus in his Catena Graca, Oecumenius, Theophilact, Thomas Aquinas, Lyra, and Marlorat. But of our English none that I know of, except Doctor Willet, and Rabbinicall Mr. Ainsworth; the one upon Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Samuel and Romans; the other upon the whole Pentateuch, the Book of Psalms, and Song of Solomon. And as Christian Doctours, so Hebrew Rabbins, have some of them long since written in the Hebrew tongue, as Jonathan that made a Targum or exposition upon the Hebrew Bible, being contemporany and condisciple with the Apostle Paul. After him Rabbi Judah Haanasi Anno 150 made a Collation of divers Writers before him, Anno 230 the Talmud Hierosolym. was finished, Anno 500 the Talmud Babyl. And after all these Rabbi Maimony Anno 1200 collected all together into one in the Hebrew tongue; setting forth all traditions of the Jews, except many frivolous ones and absurd, and all Expositions and ancient Records of theirs so fully and exactly, that the Jews commonly say of him, from Moses the Prophet to this Moses the son of Maimony, there was none comparable to him. To supply therefore the defect that is amongst us English in our own language, in this kinde, I the most unable amongst many of my Brethren have long laboured, & by Gods assistance brought to perfection a Catena-like Commentary upon all, from the beginning of Genesis to the end of the Revelation: which had not the providence of God been singular towards me so infirm, and divers times dying; I could never possibly have effected. Look not then upon this Herculean labour, as mine, but Gods by me a most weak Instrument, in a very long tract of time brought forth for the common good, and make use of it accordingly. Hereby ye Students in Divinity may sooner become good Text-men, to give light into any place of Scripture; and to raise all sorts of holy and edifying instructions thereupon, then without it the most industrious of you all can be; and it is a true saying, Bonus Textuarius, bonus Theologus. And hereby ye that love to read Chapters daily in your families, as it were to be wished, that many more did, by perusing a little before what is here written upon the Chapter, may be enabled to speak somewhat effectually thereupon, to make a greater impression in the mindes of your children and servants for their edification, as some have confessed to me; that they have had much joy of some parts of this my work set forth here-heretofore in this regard, which before that they met herewith, they wanted. Lastly, ye that desire to know, whether your judgements have been either out of your own apprehensions mistaken, or by the teaching of others mis-informed touching some passages in the word, here ye shall meet with many learned Counsellours to manifest this unto you, and what is the main truth in every particular, that ye shall need to enquire after, so far forth as I by much reading, carefully studying, and fervently praying, could attein unto. One or two Counsellours in the Law are able to give a man good light into matters concerning the Law, but by more, or all the Judges in the land, he may yet be more assured what is law and right, and what not for his greater safety in respect of his wordly estate: so any holy and learned Writer upon the Scriptures may give you light into them, whereof ye may have much comfort, but look upon them brought altogether with further directions added for the more certain understanding of every passage, and then for your comfort through illumination hereby will be the greater, and ye shall more certainly provide for the assuring unto you of an estate in Heaven, according to that of our Lord, Iohn 5.39. Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternall life. The ancient Fathers, who gave the first light hereinto, and the best for most places, are now greatly despised by many, contrary to that of Iob 12.12. With the ancient there is wisedome, and in length of dayes understanding. But by this work the Reader may come to have the benefit of the labours also, which otherwise would lie buried in oblivion to the branding of this last age, with the note of grosse ingratitude for them, who were as fountains of light to all that have written or taught after them. Get you these Books then, and hereby search out the truth in all things, and as my Lord and Saviour; so I shall pray for you, Father, sanctifie them by thy truth, which thy word rightly understood is, but not perverted or wrested to a sense never by the Spirit of God intended. And do ye for all my labours so indefatigably persisted in for your good, pray for me, and give God the glory.

1 *Cor.*3.13.

John Mayer.

A Catalogue of 200 Authours made use of in this book upon the Pentateuch.

Augustinus Athanasius Ægidius Artopæus Avicen Albertus Anaximander Anaxagoras Albinus
Apuleius Ammianus
Aristotle Ainsworth Aquila Athenæus Adrianus
Aulus Gellius
Alexander ab Alex.
Æschines Antimachus Aureolus
Antonius Guevarra Adricomius
Apollinar. Cat. Græc.
Ælianus
Aben Ezra
Andreas Masius
Th. Aquinas
Basilius Beda Borrhæus Bellarmine Bonaventure Boetius Bernardus Berosus Brocardus
H. Bunting
Brissonius Brittenbaccus Brentius
Bayer Baal Hatturim Bercborius Budæus Chrysostom Calvinus
Comestor Catharinus
Cyprianus Cassianus Concil. Smyrnens.
Cornel. Tacitus Cæsars Comment.
Coganus Cleanthes Clarius
Carolus Magnus Cyril. Alex.
Cockerius Claudianus
Cornel. à Lapide Chytræus Concil. Aurel.
Cajetan
Chaldee Paraphrast
Cazkuni Concil. Trident.
Chrysologus Diodorus Damascen
Dionys. Areopag.
Dioscorides Demosthenes Darius Damianus Eusebius Epiphanius Eucherius
Eugubinus
Ephrem
Fagius
Ferus Fonseca Fenestella
Gloss. Ordin.
Gloss. Interlin.
Greg. Nazianz.
Gregor. Magn.
Gregor. Nyssen.
Godfridus Galatinus Gesnerus Genebrard
Gyraldus
Hugo de S. Victor.
Hippocrates Hesychius Homerus Herodian
Hugo Cardin.
Hilarius
Julius Pollex Isidorus
Justin Mart.
Justinian Junius Jeronymus Iosephus
Irenæus
Lyranus
Lombardus Lutherus Lactantius Lippomannus
Ludovicus Vives
Livius Lampridius Lorinus
Leo Magnus Lysander
Leo Africanus Magellanus Macrobeus Mercator Maimony
P. Martyr Marlorat
Musculus
A. Montanus Nicander Novatus
Numa Nauclerus Nicephorus Numa Pompil.
Nicolas Constant.
Osiander Origenes Oecolampadius
Oleaster Orosius Pererius
Pammachius
Joan. Picus Plinius
Plato Pagninus
Philo Plutarch
Palladius Porphyrius Philostratus
Pomponius Lætus
Procopius Pelicanus Pelusiota Pelagius Pausanias Parthenius
Rab. Pinhas
Rab. Jahai
Rab. Nehaianus
Rab. Eleezer
Rab. Judas
Rab. Hackados
Rab. Midrash
Rab. Joseph
Rab. Isaac
Rab. Elias Rab. Eliezer
Rab. Abraham
Rab. Saudias
Rab. Menahem
Rab. Simeon
Rab. Solomon
Rab. Nathan
Rab. Sepharadin
Rab. Moses
Rupertus
Rabanus
Russinus Sophocles Severus Scotus Strabo Suidas
Sedar olam
Simlerus
Sixtus Senensis Solinus Synod. Antioch.
Sanedrim liber
Solomon Jarchi Sanderus Serrarius
Seneca Theodoret
Tertullian
Tostatus
Targum Hierosol.
Tho. Anglicus
Tremelius
Targum Jonathan
Targum Babyl.
Tilmannus
Turrianus
Theocritus, Tollctus Virgilius Vincentius Ulpianus
Vatablus
Varro Willet Xenophon Zanchius

Ad

Ad fratres in Miniſterio de hoc Autorum Catalogo, & ſequentibus.

Bibliothecam libris omne genus refertam quis ſacræ Theologiæ ſtudioſus non ex animo deſiderat, per quam doctiſſimorum interpretum chorum de omnibus arduis regni Dei indies conſulat? Sed, proh dolor, apud plurimos hi ità vilipenduntur, ut cum Poeta dicam, Contemptæque jacent, & ſine luce faces; & ſuo quiſque ſenſu abundat, verus ſitne an erroneus. Et ſi qui adhuc ſint, qui hæc lumina mundi non pretio habent, tantâ pecuniæ penuriâ laborant, ut pro centum libris, quas in emendis libris multifariâ eruditione refertis quondam conferre ſolebant, vix centum ſolidi nunc ſuppetant. Gratum igitur vobis verè φιλομαθοῖς ſit hoc opus in tota ſacra Biblia, licèt per me indigniſſimum veſtrûm, & ferè inter vos anonymum compoſitum, & per longum temporis tractum completum. Et ut Auguſt. de libris Sybillarum myſteria Evangelii Jeſu Chriſti clariſſimè decantantibus dixit, Comparate vobis libros Sybillarum: ſic mihi liceat vos affari, Comparate vobis libros Patrum Sanctorum, Neotericorum, & Rabbinorum in hoc uno contextos ad majorem & citiorem illuminationem uniuſcujuſque veſtrûm in veritate Dei, ut omnes eadem ſentiamus & doceamus in Eccleſia Chriſti ad unitatem tam deſiderabilem in eadem conſervandam, & populum ejus à fluctuando in varias opiniones, ut exinde major gloria utrique reſultet, ad extraneorum converſionem & ſalutem æternam, quod Deus faxit.

Joannes Mayer.

ERRATA in the Pentateuch thus to be corrected.

PAge 5. for בן, בו. p. 6. f. Theoc, Theod. p 18. not expung. *p.*31. f. allowed, allayed. *p.*49. f. חנה, בנגד. *p.*58. f. אשני, אפכי. *p.*59. f. what he indeed, what he was indeed. *p.*65. f. לרח, רוח. *p.*75. f. ſmiteth, ſuiteth. *p.*138. f. inrans, ignorance. p. 145. f. Joves, Iones. p. 152. f. Ainus, Ninus. *chap.*11. *verſ.*5. f. viſere, videre, f. proprius, propius. *v.*6. f. diſſentiam differentiam. 12. f. Hippoman. Lippoman, page 213. f. tail us, make us tall. Leviticus, chap. 9. *verſ.*3. f. Serranus, Serrarius. *c.*10. *v.*11. f. Siera, Sieera. *c.*11. *v.*18. f. onocartalus, onocratalus. *v.*12. f. quamvis, ſquammis. Numbers, *chap.*4. *v.*28. f. being, bring. *c.*6. *v.*1. f. נהר, and נצר, נער. *v.*26. f. ſerved, preſerved. *c.*7. *v.*13. f. refer, preſerre. *c.*13. *v.*21. f. עבו, צבו. *c.*23.21. f. און, אין. *c.*31. *v.*34. f. by, the. *c.*33. *v.*9. f. reſpect, reſpit. Deuteronomy, *chap.*8. *v.*9. f. families, famines. *c.*18. *v.*1. f. beaſt, breſt. *c.*19. *v.*16. f. accurſed, accuſed. *c.*22. *v.*8. f. ſemiſti, ſerviſti. *c.*28. *v.*15. f. fundamentally, fraudulently. *v.*68. f. ſtripes, ſhips. *c.*34. *v.*5. f. ried, buried. In the Table of Exodus. *chap.*34. *verſ.*1. for allegory, table.

Other ſmall literall faults every Reader may eaſily amend.

Imprimatur,

EDMUND CALAMY.

THE

THE PREFACE TO the Five Books of MOSES.

BEfore we enter upon the expoſitions of the Pentateuch, or five Books of Moſes, ſome things are to be premiſed by way of Preface, as firſt when Moſes wrote them. Secondly, how he atteined to the knowledge of theſe things from the beginning, ſeeing he had no light from any precedent writings, and many ages paſſed from the beginning, before that he was born. Thirdly, Why the ſacred Hiſtories and Laws of God were now firſt written, and by what directions the Patriarchs went, that lived before, when they had no written word. Fourthly, whether theſe Books of Moſes, as now we have them, were thus written by him, for that he was the Author of them all, no man yet ever doubted.

Queſt. 1.

Touching the firſt, ſome hold, that he wrote the book of Geneſis, before the going of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, or at the leaſt before the giving of the Law, but others, not til after the giving of the law, whilſt they ſtayed ſo long about Mount Sinai, and Moſes made ſo long ſtays with the Lord, to have all things revealed unto him. And to this do I rather incline, becauſe that before the Lords appearing to Moſes in the Buſh, he was not endued with that propheticall ſpirit, to be able to write theſe Hiſtories, but then firſt is mention made of his writing any thing after that the Law was given: Exod. 24. 4. Here then moſt probably did Moſes write his firſt, ſecond and third books, and the fourth, and fift after this almoſt forty years in the Plains of Moab, Deut. 1. 5. And this was about 2500 years from the Creation, but yet ſo ancient are theſe Books, as that they were before all other Writings in the world. For Mercurius Triſmegiſtus, the moſt ancient Philoſopher of the Egyptians, was ſon to another Mercurius, the grand-child of Atlas, who lived in the days of Moſes, as Auguſtine ſaith, and therefore he was long after Moſes. And Homer, the moſt ancient Writer of the Grecks, was 100 years after the deſtruction of Troy, and that 400 years after Moſes. The Hebrews alſo, ſaith Euſebius, were firſt taught letters by Moſes, the Phœnicians by the Hebrews, and Caamus a Phœnician taught them the Græcians.

Euſeb. de præparat. Evang. lib. 7. Theod. quæſt. in Gen. Toſt. quæſt. 132

Auguſt. lib. 18. de Civ. c. 39. Joſeph contra Appion. Euſeb. de præparat. Evang. lib. 9

Queſt. 2.

Touching the ſecond, Moſes had means to know theſe things both ordinary, the traditions of the Fathers, who doubtleſs were careful to conſerve the memory of things paſt, and told their children hereof from generation to generation: for ſo Moſes urged the children of Iſrael to tel their children of their deliverance out of Egypt, and of the Ordinances and Laws made hereupon: and extraordinary by divine revelation, as he knew thoſe things, which he ſpake propheticallv.

Queſt. 3.

Touching the third, if they, that had lived in the generations paſt could attein to grace and ſalvation without a written word, it may ſeem to have now been unneceſſary. But indeed the caſe of the Church began now to differ from that it had been in former ages, becauſe till Jaacob, it had always been ſtil in one family, but of him came twelve Tribes, and of each tribe divers

Families, ſo that although before from the father to the ſon each one could inſtruct his family, according to the doctrine received by tradition, yet now, to avoid confuſion, and that there might be a certain rule of faith and good manners to the Church growing into a multitude it was neceſſary, that the wil of God, and the memory of his noble acts from the beginning, whereby his infinite power, wiſdome, mercy and care appear, ſhould be committed to writing. And becauſe Egypt was polluted with many foule Idolatries, that was no place to begin this ſacred Work in, and therefore it was put off, till their commiug into the Wilderneſſe, and to the Mount of God there. And ſince that time, all things happening to the Church, which are neceſſary to be known and believed unto ſalvation, have been from age to age by other holy ſervants of God inſpired with the ſame ſpirit likewiſe committed to writing, til that the holy Apoſtles had fully finiſhed this Work, to remain as a treaſury of the Church to the end of the World. So that whereas before this writing by Moſes, the people of God had only unwritten traditions, and revelations from God to guide them in the right way for means externall: now the written word only is the rule, by which we are to be guided, and out of which we are to learn all the doctrine of life, no traditions of Fathers being any further to be regarded, then as they agree herewith. And of all the written Books of Scripture, theſe of Moſes are the ground and foundation, all that follow tending only to illuſtrate the doctrine herein conteined, whether for matter of fact or of the faith of Jeſus Chriſt.

Queſt. 4.
Iren. l. 3. c. 25. Tertull. de habitu mulebri. Clem Alex. Strom. l 1 Euſeb. Chron. Hieronym contra Helvid.

Touching the fourth, the reaſon of this quære is, becauſe many learned Fathers have anciently held, that all the Books of Scripture were burnt at the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, and reſtored again by Eſdras, that of 2 Eſdras 14.22. &c. being brought for a ground of this. For there it is ſaid that he prayed to be enlightened to write things done from the beginning, and then he endighteth, and five Scribes write in forty days 204 books, all which he is bidden to ſet forth to the reading of al men, but ſeventy of them muſt be ſhewed onely to the wiſe, which they ſay, were the books of Moſes, and the Prophets, for thy Law ſaith he is burnt, v. 21. But both the books of Eſdras were Apocryphal upon which nothing certainly can be grounded. & the number agreeth not, and in ſetting down the time to come, to the end of the World the Writer of theſe books was manifeſtly a falſe prophet, ſee 2 Eſdras 14.11,12. Moreover, Athanaſius ſaith, that Eſdras kept all the Books of holy Scripture by him, when they were no where elſe to be found, and at length brought them forth, which was his reſtoring of them, being after a ſort deſtroyed before. That Jeremiah remained in the time of captiuity appeareth, becauſe Daniel is ſaid then to have read in him, and Iſaiah, becauſe, as Joſephus ſaith, that propheſie was ſhewed to Cyrus, wherein he was long before ſpoken of, upon the ſight whereof, he was moved to ſend the people back again to their own land. And as theſe books ſo it is not to be doubted, but that the books of Moſes, and all the reſt were by a ſingular providence preſerved in that moſt dangerous time, that we might ſtil have them, as at firſt they were written. For a further proof alſo of theſe books continuing in the originall language in their perfect purity without any corruption, ſee the very concluſion of this work at the end of Deuteronomy; and how the five books of Moſes have been of old diſtinguiſhed into 52 Lectures, conteining all together Peſakim, or Verſes 568. And in the Hebrew tongue, wherein they were written, each book hath to name the firſt words thereof, Geneſis Bereſhith in the beginning, Exodus Elle haſhemoth, theſe are the names, &c. The firſt book conteineth the Hiſtory of the Creation, fall of Adam, and deſtruction of the World in brief, and then of Abraham and his poſterity to Joſeph at large. The ſecond, third, fourth, their deliverances out of Egypt, travails, laws and ordinances made for them. The fift a reherſall and further illuſtration of theſe travails, occurrences and laws to the death of Moſes, the hiſtory whereof and of his praiſes, by whom they were ſupplyed; ſee upon Deut. 34.

Athanaſ. in Synopſi.

Dan. 9. Joſeph. lib. 11. Antiquit.

GENESIS.

GENESIS.

CHAP. I.

IN the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Touching the first words here Auguſtine maketh a queſtion, whether by the beginning Chriſt be not to be underſtood; and Ferus hath both this, and a ſecond, firſt of all, which he judgeth moſt ſimple; and 3 in the moneth, that is, the Spring, and 4 in Summer, as if he had ſaid, many have taught diverſly of the beginning: but this is the ſumme of all. Now although all things were made in Chriſt, Coloſ. 1. 16. yet I aſſent rather to others, who take this according to the letter, as if it had beene ſaid, when the World firſt began, God proceeded to the making of all things in this manner: firſt, he created, that is, made of nothing the heaven and the earth, that is, he laid a foundation of all his works, which he would make by rearing up an huge heap of matter, out of which they ſhould be framed. For if an allegory be in theſe words, Chriſt being meant by the beginning, there is no certainty in the Hiſtory, and ſo nothing can be concluded hence againſt the eternity of the World, or for the time ſince the Creation. Whereas by theſe words, In the beginning God created, three errours are together confuted. 1 Of Plato, who maketh Idea's, and ὕλη eternall, ſaying of ὕλη, God made the World. 2 Of Ariſtotle, who maketh two, matter and form. 3 Of Epicurus, who maketh two more. Touching the things ſaid to have been created, the heaven and earth; ſome think that the viſible heavens and earth only are hereby meant, and not the higheſt heaven, Moſes preferring to deal with the Jews, who were led by things ſenſible only according to their capacity, and therefore omitting to ſay any thing of that heaven, which was to be ſpoken of afterwards in times of more perfection, and ſeeking by theſe viſible things to ſcrue them up to the knowledge of the inviſible wiſdom and power of God. Becauſe David alſo ſpeaking of the ſame, the heavens and the earth are the work of thy hands, which thou didſt make in the beginning, addeth, that we might underſtand, what heavens he meant; they all ſhall periſh: from whence it is plain, that the viſible heavens onely are thoſe, which he ſpeaketh of, and not the inviſible which are everlaſting.

Others, again, by the heavens here underſtand both the inviſible and the viſible,

Verſe 1.
In the begin ning.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 1 tom. 6.

The heaven & the earth.

Hieron. Epiſt. 139. ad Cyprian.
Pſa 102. 25, 26
Baſil. Hom. 2. in Gen.

Zanchius. Pererius. Beda in Hexam. Rabanus. Alcuinus. Theodor. quæſt. 11. in Genel. Diodorus Epiſc. Tarſenſ. beda. geog. Cherſoſt. Lyran. magiſter ſententiarum, Scholaſtici.

viſible becauſe it is not probable, but that Moſes, the firſt Penman of the Scripture, would teach the creation of all things, and not of the viſible only.

But others more ancient, and a greater number have by heaven here underſtood the higheſt, or the empyrean heaven only, and by the earth all other things, or the matter and ſubſtance, out of which all this viſible world, conſiſting of heaven and earth was made, and all things in them, For the higheſt heaven together with the angels therein being the chiefe of Gods works, what could be more fitly placed: firſt, in this narration of the making of all things, then the making thereof: yea, it muſt be granted either to be meant here, or elſe nothing is ſet forth by Moſes touching the making thereof, and then it may be doubted, whether that heaven and the angels be creatures or no. For although this be taught by Saint Paul, Col. 1.16. yet it being a rule, that he went by in his teaching, to ſet forth nothing, but what the Prophets taught before, it is certain that he had reference to this hiſtory of Moſes, upon which his words are nothing, but as it were a Commentary, and therefore Moſes doubtleſs by heaven meant, the higheſt heaven, and the angels therein. The firſt expoſition then falleth to the ground, and the ſecond is againſt the current of the hiſtory following, which maketh it plain, that the viſible heavens were made out of that confuſed chaos, which is here called earth For both the Cryſtalline heaven, which is the ninth, and the other eight heavens are called the firmament, wherein were made the Sun, Moon, and ſtars; Verſe 8.14. wherefore the third only muſt needs ſtand, that the heaven here ſpoken of is the tenth and higheſt heaven, called elſwhere the heaven of heavens, and the third heaven; in reſpect of the aire, which muſt then be counted one, and the ſtarry and Cryſtalline heavens another, If by heaven and earth the huge confuſed chaos of this World had beene meant comprehending that, which by and by is made a firmament or heaven, earth, and ſea, he would not in the next Verſe; leaving out the word heaven, have ſaid; and the earth was without form, and void: but the heaven and earth were without form Wherefore the word heaven not being here repeated, it muſt needs follow, that an heaven made perfect at the firſt, and ſo divers from the heavens ſpoken of afterward is meant, which is the habitation of angels, and of all the faithfull after this life ended.

2 Cor. 12.

God אלוהים

Magiſt. ſenten. Scholaſtici. Zanchius. Calvinus.

God created, Hebr. ברא אלוהים, here a Nown of the plurall number is joyned with a Verbe of the ſingular, which many take to be done, to intimate the bleſſed Trinity, three perſons in one Godhead. But Calvin rejecteth this, as a wreſting, becauſe if by the word אלוהים three perſons be underſtood, they ſhould be without diſtinction, according to the errour of Sabellius, and therefore he rather thinketh, that the manifold vertue of God is hereby ſet forth. And Pererius argueth againſt it, becauſe not only this word, but others in the plurall number are often joyned with ſingulars; as Eſay 19,4. I wil deliver Epypt into the hands dominorum duri, Gen. 42.33. The Lord of the land ſaid to us, in Hebrew is, dixit nobis domini terræ. Exod. 21. If his maſter ſhall give him a wife, in Hebrew is, ſi domini ejus dederit illi uxorem: and therefore he ſaith, that it is rather a propriety of the Hebrew ſpeech in this place without any myſtery. And much like unto this is that expoſition, which Paulus Fagius ſaith, the Jews give hereof, that God is named in the plurall number for honours ſake, as Princes doe ſpeak of themſelves, and are ſpoken of by others, as in the places already cited. Moreover, neither Origen, nor Jerom, nor the Rabbins of the Jews, who have been moſt accurate in ſearchiug out myſteries, did ever find any herein, which it is not likely but they would have done, had there been any in theſe words. For mine owne part, I cannot ſee any ſuch weight in the reaſons brought againſt the myſtery of the Trinity ſet forth hereby, as not to imbrace that expoſition. For although plurall words be joyned with ſingulars ſomtimes alſo, when others are ſpoken of in reſpect of their manifold power, yet it followeth not, but that, when God is ſpoken of, his name may be put in the plural to intimate this and Pererius.

P. Fagius.

the

the mystery of the Trinity also. R. Simeon ben Jochai in Zoar saith, come and see the mystery of the word Elohim, there are three degrees and every degree by it self alone, and yet notwithstanding they are all one and joyned in one, and are not divided one from another. How the distinction of the three persons is hereby taken away, as Calvin objecteth; I cannot see, unless it be in the Creation, wherein it is not to erre, but to speak truth to say; that the three persons of the Trinity are undistinguished, as the Father, so the Son, and Holy Ghost being rightly held the Creatour of the World. Et omnia opera Trinitatis ad extra sunt indivisa. To conclude then, by אלוהים is set forth both the greatness and manifold power of God, and the great mystery of three persons in one Godhead, it being joyned with ברא a verb of the singular number, or at the least of two, the Father and the Son, the Spirit which proceedeth from them both, being reserved to be spoken of til the next verse. Zanchie mentioneth a conceit of the Trinity also, intimated in the word Bara alone, ב standing for בן the son, ר for רוח the spirit א for אב the Father: but this, he saith, is too curious.

Verse 2.

And the earth was without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. The words translated [without form and void] are תוהו ובוהו which are diversly rendred by divers. By the Septuagint invisible and uncompounded, in the vulgar Latine vain and empty; by Pagninus desolate and vain. But תוהו doth properly signifie vain, in which sense it is used twice, 1 Sam. 12. verse 21. and בוהו void and empty, the meaning is, that yet it was no earth in appearance, and not fit for the use, for which it was made, the waters covering all things, and so it wanting all trees, plants, beasts and other things, with which it was after replenished. Zanchie by the first word understandeth the want of al form externally and by the other, the want of internall vigour and vertue. But no man in short can describe it better then Ovid hath done, calling it rudis indigestaque moles, a rude and indigested heap. And because here were earth and water mingled together, and the water was the far greater part, having named it earth, he calleth it also the deep and waters. And the deep might this confused Chaos wel be called or abyssus bottomless, the bottom whereof could not be founded, because as Beda hath it, all was water then even to the Empyrean heaven. Now upon the face of this deep, he saith darkness was, that is, not darkness a created thing, as some would have it, but a want of all light, because light being made, this darkness was by and by chaced away. If that in Esay, I create light and darkness, shal seem to favour this opinion, it is easily answered, that by light and darkness there are meant nothing else, but good and evil, prosperity and adversity, and the word create is put for, bring in, or send. It is most probable, as Zanchie hath it, that the confused Chaos, that then was, was more earthy and thick in the lowest parts, being most an earthy substance and least watery, in the middle most watery, some earth being mixed withall, and in the highest a thinner kind of substance consisting of aire and water, which for the want of light, was all yet like a thick and black cloud, and out of this highest were the heavens made together with the contiguous aire, out of the second and third, the waters and the earth, the sea and land. But whilst these were all one confused heap, he saith, that the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. The word translated moved upon, is מרחפת signifying moving ones self, as a Hen doth sitting upon her egs to hatch them. So Basilius saith, that as a bird doth brood her egs, so the spirit of God did cherish and vivifie the nature of the waters preparing them for generation. And Jerome also expoundeth this word by [incubabat] And in this sense the same word is used, Deut. 32.11. But what is meant by the spirit of God, is not agreed amongst Expositors. The most generall received opinion amongst the Fathers and later Writers is, that the holy Ghost is to be understood, and so as the Father and the Son were said before to have created the World, in like manner the holy Ghost is here said to have created all things also, For the holy Ghost is expressly Zanch.

Ovid.

Beda in Hex. am.

Esa. 45.7.

Zanch.

Basil. Hexam.

Hieron. Tom 3. quæst. in Gen.

preſly ſpoken of, as he by whom the world was made Pſal. 104. 30. Job 26. 13. and Eſa. 40. 12, 13. ſpeaking of the making of all things, he asketh, who holpe the Spirit of the Lord, or who was his counſellour? that is, in the making of all things, whereby it is plaine, that the Spirit of God, that is, the Holy Ghoſt made the world, and put vitall vertue into all things. Moreover, that by the Spirit of God the Holy Ghoſt is meant here, is evident, becauſe it is not ſpoken of, as a thing created, as the earth, and the waters, which goe without any addition, vvhereas this Spirit is called the Spirit of God, and the word moved upon cannot agree to any creature but to the Holy Ghoſt only becauſe nothing elſe had then any vivifying vertue therein. Yet there have been, that by the Spirit of God here have underſtood the aire moved, not naturally then, but of God extraordinarily, and therefore called the Spirit of God. And ſo they have held, that as the elements of earth and water, in like manner the element of aire is here ſet forth to have been made in the beginning. And Chryſoſtom will have neither the Holy Spirit of God, nor the aire, but ſome divine vertue underſtood, whereby the waters had power to bring forth, as we ſee afterwards they did at the Word of God, and that by this vertue they vvere in continuall motion. And to prove, that the Spirit of God may be taken in this ſenſe, that vvhich is ſaid of the Spirit of God coming upon Samſon, is alleadged, and upon Saul. But I reſt in the firſt, as being ſufficiently proved and moſt countenanced by authorities. Who ſo deſireth to read more of it, let him look into Zanchy de oper. Dei.

Tertull. adverſ. Hermogen. Theodor. quæſt. in Gen.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 3 in Gen.

Judges 14. 1 Sam. 11.

Verſe 3.

And God ſaid, let there be light & there was light, &c. Here a great doubt offereth it ſelf, what light this vvas, ſeeing the lights of heaven, the Sun, Moon, and Stars were not made til the fourth day. The beſt and the moſt commonly received reſolution of this is that of Beda, Hugo, the Maſter of the ſentences, and of other Schoolmen, that it was a certain lightſom body after the manner of a ſhining cloud in the upper part of this world, which being carried about did make the day and night, as the Sun being made out of it afterwards did. But becauſe it was not ſo ſhining and energeticall as the Sun, and ſo not of that force to make the earth to fructifie and to ſend forth graſſe, plants and trees, and to cheriſh and comfort all terreſtrial things, it pleaſed the great Creatour, when he had upon the firſt day for an ornament to his worke, and for the diſtinction of day and night, made this lightſome body, to frame out of it yet a greater and more glorious light upon the fourth day to vegetate the world with the influence thereof continually. And this light thus made was carried round about from Eaſt to Weſt in twenty four houres, as the Sun now is, beginning the courſe and to be in all likelihood twelve houres after the firſt beginning of the Creation, till which time all was darke, in vvhich regard the evening is ſaid to have been firſt, and then the day to that part of the world, vvhere man vvas afterwards made. And this light being thus framed, as it did inlighten at the inſtant one part of the vvorld, ſo it left the other ſtill in darkneſſe, till that by the courſe, to which it was appointed, leaving this for a time, it inlightened that, and this is called here the diſtinction put betwixt the light and the darkneſs. Baſil ſaith, that by the light here, the nature of light is to be underſtood, and that the Sun vvas made the fourth day, that this light might be placed and carried about therein, as in a Chariot, being made lightſome and ſhining by this light vvithin it: and with him agreeth Nazianzen. Theodoret ſaith, that this light was the univerſall light, which being all together vvas of that wonderful brightnes, that it could not be beheld vvith eyes of men or of other earthly creatures, and therefore it vvas the fourth day made into the Sun, Moone and Stars, vvhich might be more accommodated to ſublunarian creatures, and further their generation. And to the ſame effect almoſt Auguſtine maketh a quære, vvhether the Sun, Moone and Stars vvere not made after this to inlighten the inferiour parts of the vvorld, this light being made to enlighten the ſuperiour and more remote parts, or whether the Sun were not added to make the day more lightſome? Vatablus ſaith, that this Bed. Hexem. Hugo de Sanctio Vict. l. 1 de Sacram. Magiſter Sentent. lib. 2.

Baſil in Gen. Hom. 6.

Theod. quæſt. 14 in Gen.

Auguſt. de Gen. ad literam.

this light was the very Sun, according to the opinion of the Hebrews, but ſpoken of again afterwards, when the fixed ſtars were made by way of capitulation. For it is not to be thought, that the firſt three days differed from the days following, but were ſuch, as they, and therefore they muſt be diſtinguiſhed by the light of the Sun, as the other days were. Vatablus.

Calvin ſeemeth to be for ſome extraordinary light, which God made to ſhine, when there were none organs of light, thus ſhewing, that he would not have us ſo to look at the means of any good, but to truſt in him for a ſupply, when all means fail. Damaſcen by this light underſtandeth the element of fire. And theſe be the differences betwixt them, that held this light to be corporal, others again have held it to be a ſpiritual light, as Auguſtine, who by the heaven ſaid to be created, underſtandeth the angelical nature, by the light made, their confirmation in grace, who were good Angels, and by the ſeparating betwixt the light and the darkneſſe, the caſting out of the angels, that fell. And to the ſame effect teacheth Eucherius and Rupertus. But the Angels, as hath been already ſhewed, were made the firſt day, as is ſet forth, when the making of heaven and earth is mentioned, and yet not underſtood by the word, Heaven, but hereby both heaven above, and the angels therein being meant, and this light was ſuch, as made the day, and therefore certainly no ſpiritual, but a corporal light, as for thoſe who are for a corporal light, let the Reader follow whom he pleaſeth, but of all, the firſt ſemeth to me moſt probable, neither can any elſe be admitted, but ſome abſurdity will follow thereupon. Now touching the general words uſed here, and afterwards [God ſaid] hereby is meant nothing elſe, but that God willed effectually that there ſhould be light, and ſo of other things, and his willing of this is ſet forth by this phraſe, becauſe when we would have any thing done, w declare our will by ſpeaking. Thus Vatablus, who alſo ſaith, that Servetus hereupon blaſphemouſly inferred, that the Son, who is the Word, was not eternal, but now began to be, becauſe it is not ſaid, till now, that God ſaid, but it is moſt likely that God is not brought in ſpeaking, till now, not becauſe the heavens and the earth were not made alſo by the Word, for all things, ſaith John, were made by the Word, and without it was made nothing that was made, but becauſe now firſt by the making of light a diſtinction of things cometh in, and ſo Gods wiſdome beginneth to be conſpicuous. Calvin. Damaſc. de fide Orthod. l. 2. c. 7. Auguſt. de Civit Dei l. 11. c. 9. Eucher. in Gen. Rupert. de trinit. & oper. c. 10 Vatablus. John 1.

And the evening and the morning were the firſt day. That is, a large day conſiſting of 24 hours, which the Hebrews hereupon call Gnereb Bocher Dan. 1. 14. and the Greeks νυχθήμερον 2 Cor. 11. 25. For the word day ſtrictly taken for the time of light, is but 12 houres, Joh. 11. 9. According to this deſcription of a day, the Jews begin their large day in the evening, Levit. 23. 32. And likevviſe the Athenians, the Caldees at the Sun-riſing, the Egyptians at noon, the Romans and all vveſtern parts at midnight. Verſe 5.

And God ſaid, let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, &c. The vvord tranſlated firmament is, רקיע an expanſion or extenſion, or ſpreading abroad, as a curtaine is dravvn out, for ſo this ſpreading abroad is compared Pſal. 104. 2. and of Gods ſpreading abroad of the heavens it is ſpoken, Iſa. 40. 22. Ch. 42. 5. The Septuagint render it by στερέωμα a firmament, becauſe by the povver of God, this ſpreading of a thing not ſolid but thin and penetrable, is made a means as if it vvere a ſolid body, to keep the vvaters above from flovving dovvn and drovvning the vvorld, as Calvin ſpeaketh. The great queſtion here is, vvhat is meant by this expanſion or firmament, becauſe although it be plain that it is heaven, as it is ſaid, God called the firmament heaven, yet forſomuch as it is ſet to divide the vvaters above, from the vvaters beneath, it may juſtly trouble the Reader to think, vvhether all that is called heaven, both ſtarry and aerean be meant, and if ſo, vvhat vvaters be above all theſe and for vvhat uſe they ſerve, or vvhether ſome part of this expanſion be meant onely, and vvhich this is, and vvhat the vvaters be, that are above it? Origen ſeeing this doubt hard to be reſolved othervviſe, fleeth to an allegorical Verſe 6. Calvin. Origen.

goricall ſenſe, underſtanding by the waters above the firmament, the good angels, and by the waters beneath, the evil, applying hereunto that of the Pſalmiſt, ſaying, let the waters that are above the heavens praiſe the name of the Lord, that is, ſaith he, the angels above all viſible heavens. But this is both recited by Epiphanius, and by Hierome and juſtly rejected, becauſe the Angels were not made out of this confuſed Chaos, neither can they for any reaſon be called waters. All other Ancients for the moſt part underſtanding by the firmament the heavens, wherein the Sunne, Moon and Starres are placed, hold that the waters above the firmament are thoſe above the eighth ſphear, and the heavens whereby they are ſtayed there, are a ſolid and firme body, either like unto cryſtall, which by art is made ſo ſolid out of water, or out of a fume being wonderfully ſolidated, and thickened; For according to the firſt of cryſtall ſpeaketh Beda, Theodoret, Magiſter Hiſtoriæ Scholaſticæ, Hugo, &c. according to the other, Baſil and Ambroſe, and the Maſter of Sentences, Gennadius, Philo Judæus, and Joſephus do not differ here from, Juſtin Martyr alſo ſaith, that the back of the heavens is all covered with water, and that of theſe waters there is a double uſe, one to mitigate and to temper the exceeding great heat of the ſtarres, the other, that the back of heaven being by their weight preſſed down might be kept from toſſing thither and thither by theoften and violent force of the winds. And Theodoret, Baſil, Philo, Joſephus, and Beda, yield the ſame reaſons alſo, but Beda thinketh that moreover from hence came the ſuperabundance of waters that drowned the world. And Ambroſe that when any great flouds ſuddenly happen, it is from hence, and when the Sunne appeareth, as if it were all drenched with water. Auguſtine ſpeaketh moſt confidently of theſe waters being above all viſible heavens, ſaying, after much diſpute hereabout, howſoever and what manner of waters ſoever they be, that are there, we doubt not, but that there are waters, for the authority of this Scripture is greater then all the capacity of mans wit. And he ſaith, that herein this great world is like unto man, who is Microcoſmos, or a little world; for above all the inward parts, which are hot, the brain which is cold, is placed, to cool the over great heat of them. And he further addeth a reaſon to prove the being of cold waters here, from the coldneſs of Saturn, the higheſt of the ſeven Planets, and the neereſt to theſe waters. There are alſo plain paſſages, whereby this is confirmed, Pſalme 148.4. yee waters that are above the heavens, and in the ſong of the three children, yee waters that are above the ſtarry skie.

Epiphan. Epiſ. ad Ioan. Ieruſ. Hieron. Epiſt. ad Pammachium.

Beda in Hexem. Theod. quæſt. 11 ſuper Gen. Magiſter Scholaſt. hiſt. l. 1. c. 4. Hugo lib. annot. in Gen. cap. 6. Iuſt. Martyr ad quæſt. 93 Orthodoxorum.

Aug. de Civit. Dei li. 11. c. ult. Quoquomodo & qualeſlibet aquæ ibi ſint, eſſe eas ibi minimè dubitemus: major quippe eſt Scripturæ hujus autoritas, quàm omnis humani ingenii capacitas lib. 2. ſuper Gen. ad lit. c. 5.

Calvin. Zanch. Pererius.

Yet both Calvin, Zanchy, Pererius, and many more new writers reject this opinion as falſe and improbable, holding, that theſe waters ſaid to be above the heavens are none other then the waters in the upper region of the ayr, from whence rain and ſnow cometh; and to prove this, they firſt impugne the former tenet, ſaying, that waters cannot be above the ſtarres, becauſe ſo they ſhould by miracle be held there, for ſo much as they are heavy, which is not to be thought; ſeeing in the naturall conſtitution of things nothing is miraculous, but each thing is placed, as doth beſt agree with the nature thereof. And again, there can be no uſe of waters there, either to temper the ſuppoſed heat of the ſtarres, becauſe God could have made them ſuch, as they ſhould not have needed any cooling, or to flow down to drown the world at ſuch time as God would have them, becauſe, neither can it be conceived, how this ſhould be through the ſtarry heavens being ſolid, and if ſo, a vacuum muſt needs be granted at that time to have been in their place. And laſtly, if there be waters there, the diviſion of waters ſhould not have been into two, but into three, viz. above the heavens, in the upper region of the ayr, and in the ſeas. Then this, that the waters above the firmament are in the upper or middle region of the ayr, the element of fire being in the higheſt, and the air wherein we breath and wherein the fouls fly, being the loweſt, is proved becauſe the holy Scriptures in many places do ſpeak of waters here in very great abundance, as Jerem. 10.13. Job 26.8. Mal. 3. it is ſpoke of opening the win-windows of heaven to ſend rain, Cataractas Cœli, as when the world was drowned. But let us unpartially conſider, whether theſe reaſons may not eaſily be taken away, and firſt that argument taken from the nature of waters being heavy may as well be urged againſt the being of waters in the ayr. For if it ſhall be ſaid, that theſe waters at the firſt are vapours, which be light and apt to aſcend, the ſame may be ſaid of the waters, which be higheſt of all: for being yet more attenuated and made lighter, why ſhould it be thought unreaſonable, that they ſhould be elevated to the higheſt? eſpecially ſeeing it is a maxime in Philoſophy, that every body may be rarified and divided in infinitum, and ſo be made lighter in infinitum, as Auguſtine alſo reaſoneth. Auguſt. Dialog. 65.quaſt.27.

For the next argument, although mans wit cannot enter into the reaſon of Gods actions, yet it becommeth every one with ſilence to ſubſcribe to that, which he hath taught. But ſuppoſe that none other reaſon be given, but that waters are held there to flow down, vvhen God vvill have them come upon the earth in greater abundauce to drovvn all, as he once did? This ſometime ſeemed good to Beda and Ambroſe, as hath been ſhewed, and Epiphanius alſo held the ſame, and good cauſe for thus both men might be kept the more in awe before the floud, being all in continuall danger of being drovvned, and ſince although it be promiſed, that all ſhall never be drovvned again, yet they may juſtly fear drovvning ſtill in particular places, as it hath befallen ſome ſuddenly at ſundry times. Epiphan. Epiſt. ad Ioan. Ieruſol. Epiſcop.

As for the ſolidity of the heavens, hindering this, I cannot herein ſubſcribe to Baſil or Beda, that the heavens are called a firmament, becauſe ſolid, but becauſe being of a thin and moſt rare ſubſtance, yet by Gods decree, they keep the vvaters above from the vvaters beneath, as if they vvere a firme and ſolid body. Thus alſo Rupertus. For the vacuum feared by this means, God can eaſily dilate the vvaters remaining, ſo that great abundance being poured dovvn, yet there ſhall be no vacuum notvvithſtanding. Rupert. lib.1.de Trinit.& ejus oper.c.22.

Touching the third argument, if the vvaters in the middle region of the ayr come of vapours exhaled, he is ſo farre from holding a diſtinction of vvaters in the Creation into three, contrary to Moſes, that ſaith, the upper vvaters here meant, are above all theſe heavens, as that he rather conſenteth vvith Moſes, and they, that are for the vvaters in the ayr, are againſt him. For vvaters ingendered in time of naturall cauſes vvere not diſtinct things at the firſt Creation, and by conſequence that doctrine denyeth that diſtinction, this affirmeth it. As for the Scriptures alledged, they prove not, but that the ayr may alſo be underſtood by this vvord Heaven, vvhich no man denyeth. I conclude then vvith the Ancients before named, that the vvaters above the firmament or heaven, are an huge heap of vvaters placed by God in the creation above all viſible heavens, and ſo by the firmament, I underſtand all the heavens both ſtarry and aerean. For that thoſe vvaters are exceeding great, appeareth in that God ſaid, let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, as great a quantity being above, as in all the ſeas, vvhereby again is overthrovvn this opinion of waters in the ayr, being here meant, and that all the heavens are meant by the firmament, and not the ayr onely, is plain, becauſe ſpeaking of the Sun, Moon and ſtarres, he ſaith immediately after, that they were placed in the firmament. It is an evident offering of violence to the words to expound them thus, God ſaid; let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, that is, part whereof may be in the midſt, viz. the nether region of the ayr, for if it had been ſo meant, it ſhould have been ſaid ſo. And laſtly the name firmament were improperly given to the ſtarry heavens, unleſſe it be in reſpect of the waters ſetledly divided hereby, and kept aſunder by the decree of the Lord. The name by which the firmament is called, is heaven שמים, that is, there are waters covering the ſuperficies thereof, as at the firſt the waters covered all things. And thus I have reſolved this moſt difficult queſtion. Some by the firmament dividing between the waters have underſtood only the eighth ſphear, or together with it the ſeven other ſphears, wherein the Planets are placed, holding that the waters above are none other then the Catharinus. Bonaventura Sent.2.diſtinct. 14. Ægidius. Nic.de Lyra. Teſtatus.

goricall ſenſe, underſtanding by the waters above the firmament, the good angels, and by the waters beneath, the evil, applying hereunto that of the Pſalmiſt, ſaying, let the waters that are above the heavens praiſe the name of the Lord, that is, ſaith he, the angels above all viſible heavens. But this is both recited by Epiphanius, and by Hierome and juſtly rejected, becauſe the Angels were not made out of this confuſed Chaos, neither can they for any reaſon be called waters. All other Ancients for the moſt part underſtanding by the firmament the heavens, wherein the Sunne, Moon and Starres are placed, hold that the waters above the firmament are thoſe above the eighth ſphear, and the heavens whereby they are ſtayed there, are a ſolid and firme body, either like unto cryſtall, which by art is made ſo ſolid out of water, or out of a fume being wonderfully ſolidated, and thickened; For according to the firſt of cryſtall ſpeaketh Beda, Theodoret, Magiſter Hiſtoriæ Scholaſticæ, Hugo, &c. according to the other, Baſil and Ambroſe, and the Maſter of Sentences, Gennadius, Philo Judæus, and Joſephus do not differ here from, Juſtin Martyr alſo ſaith, that the back of the heavens is all covered with water, and that of theſe waters there is a double uſe, one to mitigate and to temper the exceeding great heat of the ſtarres, the other, that the back of heaven being by their weight preſſed down might be kept from toſſing thither and thither by theoften and violent force of the winds. And Theodoret, Baſil, Philo, Joſephus, and Beda, yield the ſame reaſons alſo, but Beda thinketh that moreover from hence came the ſuperabundance of waters that drowned the world. And Ambroſe that when any great flouds ſuddenly happen, it is from hence, and when the Sunne appeareth, as if it were all drenched with water. Auguſtine ſpeaketh moſt confidently of theſe waters being above all viſible heavens, ſaying, after much diſpute hereabout, howſoever and what manner of waters ſoever they be, that are there, we doubt not, but that there are waters, for the authority of this Scripture is greater then all the capacity of mans wit. And he ſaith, that herein this great world is like unto man, who is Microcoſmos, or a little world; for above all the inward parts, which are hot, the brain which is cold, is placed, to cool the over great heat of them. And he further addeth a reaſon to prove the being of cold waters here, from the coldneſs of Saturn, the higheſt of the ſeven Planets, and the neereſt to theſe waters. There are alſo plain paſſages, whereby this is confirmed, Pſalme 148.4. yee waters that are above the heavens, and in the ſong of the three children, yee waters that are above the ſtarry skie.

Epiphan. Epiſ. ad Ioan. Ieruſ. Hieron. Epiſt. ad Pammachium.

Beda in Hexem. Theod. quæſt. 11 ſuper Gen. Magiſter Scholaſt. hiſt. l. 1. c. 4. Hugo lib. annot. in Gen. cap. 6. Iuſt. Martyr ad quæſt. 93 Orthodoxorum.

Aug. de Civit. Dei li. 11. c. ult. Quoquomodo & qualeſlibet aquæ ibi ſint, eſſe eas ibi minimè dubitemus; major quippe eſt Scripturæ hujus autoritas, quàm omnis humani ingenii capacitas lib. 2. ſuper Gen. ad lit. c. 5.

Calvin. Zanch. Pererius.

Yet both Calvin, Zanchy, Pererius, and many more new writers reject this opinion as falſe and improbable, holding, that theſe waters ſaid to be above the heavens are none other then the waters in the upper region of the ayr, from whence rain and ſnow cometh; and to prove this, they firſt impugne the former tenet, ſaying, that waters cannot be above the ſtarres, becauſe ſo they ſhould by miracle be held there, for ſo much as they are heavy, which is not to be thought; ſeeing in the naturall conſtitution of things nothing is miraculous, but each thing is placed, as doth beſt agree with the nature thereof. And again, there can be no uſe of waters there, either to temper the ſuppoſed heat of the ſtarres, becauſe God could have made them ſuch, as they ſhould not have needed any cooling, or to flow down to drown the world at ſuch time as God would have them, becauſe, neither can it be conceived, how this ſhould be through the ſtarry heavens being ſolid, and if ſo, a vacuum muſt needs be granted at that time to have been in their place. And laſtly, if there be waters there, the diviſion of waters ſhould not have been into two, but into three, viz. above the heavens, in the upper region of the ayr, and in the ſeas. Then this, that the waters above the firmament are in the upper or middle region of the ayr, the element of fire being in the higheſt, and the air wherein we breath and wherein the fouls fly, being the loweſt, is proved becauſe the holy Scriptures in many places do ſpeak of waters here in very great abundance, as Jerem. 10.13. Job 26.8. Mal. 3. it is ſpoke of opening the win-windows of heaven to ſend rain, Cataractas Cœli, as when the world was drowned. But let us unpartially conſider, whether theſe reaſons may not eaſily be taken away, and firſt that argument taken from the nature of waters being heavy may as well be urged againſt the being of waters in the ayr. For if it ſhall be ſaid, that theſe waters at the firſt are vapours, which be light and apt to aſcend, the ſame may be ſaid of the waters, which be higheſt of all: for being yet more attenuated and made lighter, why ſhould it be thought unreaſonable, that they ſhould be elevated to the higheſt? eſpecially ſeeing it is a maxime in Philoſophy, that every body may be rarified and divided in infinitum, and ſo be made lighter in infinitum, as Auguſtine alſo reaſoneth.

Auguſt. Dialog. 65.quaſt.27.

For the next argument, although mans wit cannot enter into the reaſon of Gods actions, yet it becommeth every one with ſilence to ſubſcribe to that, which he hath taught. But ſuppoſe that none other reaſon be given, but that waters are held there to flow down, vvhen God vvill have them come upon the earth in greater abundauce to drovvn all, as he once did? This ſometime ſeemed good to Beda and Ambroſe, as hath been ſhewed, and Epiphanius alſo held the ſame, and good cauſe for thus both men might be kept the more in awe before the floud, being all in continuall danger of being drovvned, and ſince although it be promiſed, that all ſhall never be drovvned again, yet they may juſtly fear drovvning ſtill in particular places, as it hath befallen ſome ſuddenly at ſundry times. As for the ſolidity of the heavens, hindering this, I cannot herein ſubſcribe to Baſil or Beda, that the heavens are called a firmament, becauſe ſolid, but becauſe being of a thin and moſt rare ſubſtance, yet by Gods decree, they keep the vvaters above from the vvaters beneath, as if they vvere a firme and ſolid body. Thus alſo Rupertus. For the vacuum feared by this means, God can eaſily dilate the vvaters remaining, ſo that great abundance being poured dovvn, yet there ſhall be no vacuum notvvithſtanding. Touching the third argument, if the vvaters in the middle region of the ayr come of vapours exhaled, he is ſo farre from holding a diſtinction of vvaters in the Creation into three, contrary to Moſes, that ſaith, the upper vvaters here meant, are above all theſe heavens, as that he rather conſenteth vvith Moſes, and they, that are for the vvaters in the ayr, are againſt him. For vvaters ingendered in time of naturall cauſes vvere not diſtinct things at the firſt Creation, and by conſequence that doctrine denyeth that diſtinction, this affirmeth it. As for the Scriptures alledged, they prove not, but that the ayr may alſo be underſtood by this vvord Heaven, vvhich no man denyeth. I conclude then vvith the Ancients before named, that the vvaters above the firmament or heaven, are an huge heap of vvaters placed by God in the creation above all viſible heavens, and ſo by the firmament, I underſtand all the heavens both ſtarry and aerean. For that thoſe vvaters are exceeding great, appeareth in that God ſaid, let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, as great a quantity being above, as in all the ſeas, vvhereby again is overthrovvn this opinion of waters in the ayr, being here meant, and that all the heavens are meant by the firmament, and not the ayr onely, is plain, becauſe ſpeaking of the Sun, Moon and ſtarres, he ſaith immediately after, that they were placed in the firmament. It is an evident offering of violence to the words to expound them thus, God ſaid; let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, that is, part whereof may be in the midſt, viz. the nether region of the ayr, for if it had been ſo meant, it ſhould have been ſaid ſo. And laſtly the name firmament were improperly given to the ſtarry heavens, unleſſe it be in reſpect of the waters ſetledly divided hereby, and kept aſunder by the decree of the Lord. The name by which the firmament is called, is heaven שמים, that is, there are waters covering the ſuperficies thereof, as at the firſt the waters covered all things. And thus I have reſolved this moſt difficult queſtion. Some by the firmament dividing between the waters have underſtood only the eighth ſphear, or together with it the ſeven other ſphears, wherein the Planets are placed, holding that the waters above are none other then the Epiphan. Epiſt. ad Ioan. Ieruſol. Epiſcop.

Rupert. lib.1.de Trinit. & ejus oper.c.22.

Catharinus. Bonaventura Sent.2.diſtinct. 14. Agidius. Nic.de Lyra. Teſtatus.

ninth heaven, called by Aſtronomers the Cryſtalline heaven. But this opinion is eaſily confuted, becauſe betwixt the waters above and beneath, there is beſides theſe a great ſpace of the whole ayr, and as the sky, ſo the ayr is plainly comprehended in this name, as appeareth verſe 20. Moreover they, which expound it thus, do not hold, that this Cryſtalline heaven is true water, but ſo called, becauſe in coldneſſe and perſpicuity it is like unto water, whereas by the text there are true waters, as there be under the firmament. And here becauſe I have ſpoken of the ninth heaven, I will ſet down what the Rabbins have taught touching theſe heavens. Maimony ſaith, there are nine ſphears or heavens, 1 that of the Moon neereſt to us, 2 that of Cochab, 3 of Nogah, 4 of the Sun, 5 of Maadim, 6 of Tſedack, 7 of Shabthai, 8 where all the ſtarres be that are ſeene, the ninth that which turneth about every day, being higheſt of all. And all theſe are one above another, but becauſe clear as Cryſtall, all the ſtarres are ſeen through the firſt. And although they ſeem blew, yet they have no colour, or other qualities, as heavy, light, &c.

Verſe 20.

Verſe 8. This dayes work being finiſhed, it is onely added, the evening and morning were the ſecond day, and not as at the end of other dayes works, God ſaw that it was good. Whereupon a queſtion ariſeth, why this clauſe is omitted here? Some of the Rabbins of the Jews, ſaith Muſculus, yield this as a reaſon, becauſe hell was made upon this day accordiug to Iſaiah 30. ſome becauſe diviſions are not good, and a diviſion was made upon this day: ſome becauſe by theſe waters thus divided, the world was afterwards drowned. Of the Fathers ſome ſay that the angels fell upon that day, and others, that the binary number not being pronounced to be good argueth, that contracts of marriage are not good: but this is contrary to chap. 2. 18. The beſt reaſon rendered hereof is, that no perfect work being yet wrought, it is deferred to pronounce that this diſtinction of waters, and making of the firmament is good, till the gathering of the waters, that yet covered the earth into one place. For this being done, the next day it is immediately added, God ſaw that it was good, and becauſe by ſaying ſo that is ſupplyed, which here is wanting, as belonging to this, it is again repeated in the end of this third dayes works, verſe 12. that no day might want this clauſe,

Muſculus.

Muſculus. Calvin. Zanchius.

When the Angels fell, and hell vvas prepared, the ſcripture ſpeaketh nothing in particular of the day, but that they fell before man, is evident, becauſe the devill in the ſerpent tempted Evah to eat of the forbidden fruit.

Verſe 9. And God ſaid, let the waters under heaven be gathered into one place, and let the dry land appear, and it was ſo, God alſo called the dry land earth, &c. Here a great queſtion offereth it ſelf, hovv ſo great vvaters vvere gathered together, and kept from overſpreading all the land, as they did before, ſeeing they are of a fluid nature, and hovv they can be ſaid to have been gathered into one place, ſeeing there are many great rivers in other places, and the Caſpian ſea is divided from the Ocean, having none intercourſe with it, ſo that it ſhould ſeeme, that the vvaters vvere not gathered into one, but into many places, or into tvvo at the leaſt? To the firſt part of this queſtion, ſome anſvver, that the vvaters vvere gathered and are kept together upon heaps by Gods Almighty Power, who did he but withdraw his hand which ſtayeth them, they would ſoon return and drown all the earth again, becauſe, as they imagined, they are higher than the earth, and greater in quantity. And to this end theſe places are alledged. Pſ. 104. 6. The waters ſhall ſtand upon the mountains. Pſal. 33. Gathering the waters of the ſea, as it were on an heap. Eccleſiaſticus 39. At his word the waters ſtood as an heap. But thus it muſt be granted, that God doth a continuall miracle, which in naturall things is not to be admitted. For the firſt place alledged, it ſheweth onely, what the ſtate of this world was before this ſeparating of the waters from the earth, as is plain by the words following, for then indeed the waters covered the higheſt parts of the earth, but not ſince, except onely in Noahs Floud. Touching the other places, the waters may be ſaid to be gathered on an heap, as it were in Baſil. in Hexem. Ambroſ. Thom. Aquin. part. 1. quæſt. 69 Zanch. &c.

places

places made low for the purpose, and yet not be higher, than the earth.

Others therefore resolve this question better, that the waters being thinner and so further dilated before, were now made thicker and so made fit to be continued in a lesse room, the earth which before was even, being also hollow in those parts were the water should run, and more high and mountainous about it. And to this is applied that of Psal. 104. where it is said, At thy Word, the Waters flee, the Mountains ascend, and the Fields descend: Thou hast set them bounds, which they passe not, neither do they return to cover the Earth.

Aug. lib. 1 de Gen. ad literam cap. 12. Bel. in Exem. Rupert. lib. 1. de Trinit & opera episc. c. 34.

It is an errour then, which is held by some that the earth was plain in all parts till the floud; for we doe both read of mountains then, the tops whereof where all covered, and this discourse of the Psalmist, is of mountains, as they were made at the Creation; to say nothing of the commodiousnes of hils and valleys for Springs and Rivers, and to make the Ayr more healthful.

The very Situation of the waters to which we are said to go down, evinceth that they are in hollow and low places of the earth. And it is to be noted that the word used here, which is translated Let them be gathered together, cometh of Kava, from whence the Latines derive their Cavare, to make hollow.

Psal. 107.

For the gathering of the waters together into one place, it is not so to be understood, as if they should all be concluded together in one, but these waters only which by and by are called the Seas. the Rivers which run here and there in divers parts were left to be continually flowing into the Seas, not being an hindrance, but a furtherance to the fertility of the earth which was by the Lord intended when he said, Let them be gathered together that the dry Land may appear. And yet these Rivers and Springs are fed again partly with waters sucked by the veins of the earth out of the Seas, thus waxing sweet, and partly with the rain distilling from the Clouds, as Rupertus elegantly setteth it forth saying, the waters were not so gathered into one place, that the earth appearing should be caste out of the wombe of the deep as an abortive, but drawing waters thence unceassantly into all the veins, it sucked the copious dugge of the deep, and receiveth the early and latter rain from heaven ascending thence, and descending again by the Clouds. If by the waters being gathered away from the earth it had been left quite destitute, it neither could have hung together: because without water, which, as glue holdeth the earth together, it would have been as small dust, neither could it have been fruitfull with grasse, corne, trees & plants. the nourishment whereof is the moisture of the earth. Touching the Caspian Sea, which alone seemeth to stand in another place, having none intercourse with the Ocean, Strabo, Pliny, Dionysius de situs Orbis, and Basil hold that this Sea hath intercourse with the Artick Ocean: others, as Herodotus, Aristotle & Ptolomie that although in every part it be included with mountains, yet being fed by high rivers, it exonerateth itself into the Euxine Sea, by secret passages within the earth. Howsoever, it may be said that this gathering together into one place is to be understood of all such places as into which God then brought the waters, that they might no longer cover the earth, the dry land thus being counted one place, and the place of the Seas another. And thus the waters which before flowed all over, were brought into a channel, compassing the earth round as a band. Now for the name יַמִּים given to the Seas, the reason is plain, but why the dry land should be called earth, it is not agreed The Hebrew word is אֶרֶץ, which some think cometh of רוּץ currire to run because the Seas run round about it, and all creatures go & run continually upon it, some of רָצוֹן bene placitum because, it is of the good pleasure of God, that being thus forced from the waters, it is made fit for habitation and fructification; one fetcheth the reason of the name further from the Caldee word, whereby the earth is called אַרְעָא pavimentum or solum, because of the neerenesse of the word אַדְ to it. I subscribe to the second not only because it is made thus of the good pleasure of God, but also because it is such, as that we Rupert. lib. 1. de Trinit. & ejus oper ca. 34. Non sic in unum locum sunt congregata ut terra apparens sic de utero Abyssi proiceretur ut abortivum: sed indisenenter trahens aquas in omnes venas copiosam fugit abyssi mammam, & ascendentem per nubes rursusque habentem temporaneam & serotinam accipit de cœlo pluviam Herodot. in Clio. Arist. in 2. Meteor. Ptolomis. in Geograph.

The earth why called so.

we and other creatures may be well pleaſed to inhabit upon it, as affording all comfortable things for this life. The Latine word is terra, à terrendo, becauſe we tread upon it with our feet, and certainly in giving the name, the expreſſing of the aptneſs for habitation is arrived at, as Zanchy hath it.

Zanch Verſe. 11. Aug. lib. V. de Gen. ad. lit. C. 4.

And God ſaid, let the earth bring forth graſſe, and herb yielding ſeed, and the fruit trees yeelding fruit, whoſe ſeed is in itſelf &c. St. Auguſtine giveth a ſtrange interpretation of theſe words, that God only gave virtue to the earth to bring forth theſe things, but that they were not brought forth till afterwards, becauſe Gen. 2. 5. it is ſaid, when God made the plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb before it grew. For theſe words ſaith he are to be expounded thus; when he put virtue into the earth to produce hearbs & plants before they grew and ſprang up, which was not till afterwards; and the reaſon is by and by rendered, for The Lord hath not cauſed it to rain upon the earth, The rain being the means to make thoſe things grow and flouriſh. But it is not only ſaid that God commanded the earth to bring forth, but ver. 12. it is added that the earth did the ſame day bring forth according to his Word. Wherefore Auguſtine was deceived by thoſe words of the 2. Chap. the meaning whereof is nothing elſe, but that the earth was void of trees & plants, till God by his Almighty Power, brought them forth before they grew; he ſaid, let them be, and immediately they came forth & adorned the earth; and thus it was provided to feed the Creatures againſt the time they ſhould be made. Touching the things here ſaid, he brought forth, graſſe and herb, the word דֶּשֶׁא translated graſſe, doth properly ſignify, that which groweth afterwards into a ſtalk, being yet young and tender like Graſſe, and the word עֵשֶׂב translated herb, the ſame being grown greater even to perfection and the bearing of ſeed, as Vatablus hath it, and after him, Zanchy. Thus the Lord ſaith, in the Parable, that the corn groweth firſt into graſſe, then into an ear, and ſo ripeneth. Hereby then is meant that God made out of the earth, immediately to ſpring up, all ſuch green things as the earth yieldeth even to perfection, which in time are wont to grow up, and bear ſeed, as corn and graſſe, for that feedeth alſo, and herbs, and flowers of all ſorts.

Vatablus. Zanchy. Marc. 4. 28.

And as he made the earth to bring forth theſe to perfection inſtantly, ſo did he make it to bring forth all ſorts of trees that bear fruit, being at the time full of fruit, ripe & ready for uſe, which fruit hath the ſeed within it

And if it be doubted touching ſuch trees as bear no fruit whether they be not alſo made now, ſome hold that they were, but are not mentioned, it being ſuppoſed that every man would underſtand them as ſubordinate; altho' theſe only which are the principal, and of greateſt uſe at the firſt are named. But haply they did only begin then to ſpring out of the earth being left to grow to more perfection in time. However, it is certain that this degree of the Lord, gave virtue to the earth to produce them, and from thenceforward to the end of the World, to yield herbs and trees growing & increaſing by degrees to perfection, each one according to the kind thereof as they do to this day. And if trees were made at the firſt with ripe fruit upon them, all growing things that yield ſeed were then ſeeded, it muſt needs follow, that the time of Autumn was the time wherein the World was made & ſo the moneth of September was anciently the firſt moneth of the year. For had it not been thus, how ſhould man and all other Creatures have bin ſuſteined till things had been grown to perfection: and moreover, God ſhould have herein proceeded otherwiſe, then in the making of all other things out of the earth & waters, as man, fowls and beaſts, ſeeing that there is none that denyeth them to have been made perfect at the firſt, man of ſuch perfection, that he had the wiſdom and underſtanding of a man, & fowls able to fly & to engender, and beaſts in their full ſtrength fit to multiply: Alſo Toſtatus therefore ſaith that the moſt ſkilful of the Hebrewes held that God began to make the World September 25. and ſo man was made Sept. 30. The Sabbath day then was the firſt of Oct; and ſo the Six days of Creation being cut off it was the firſt of the year, and October the firſt moneth, and unto this agreeth Lyranus, and Joſephus, And the old name of this moneth in the Caldee tongue Thiſri, ſignifying the beginning, maketh it moſt evident, that this was the firſt moneth. And the ſame is acknowledged by Jerome, who ſaith, that in all the eaſt, the moneth Thiſri, was counted the firſt moneth of the year. Indeed the moneth Thiſri was begun in September, and ended in October, & therefore it cannot certainly be ſaid what day the World was begun to be made, but onely in one of theſe two moneths. If it be objected that the Hebrews began their year in the month Niſan, which anſwereth to our March, Joſephus ſheweth the reaſon hereof, ſaying, that God appointed Moſes to order it ſo, becauſe they were, by a famous deliverance brought out of the Egyptiacall ſervitude; therefore he ſaith, that this ſhould be unto them the beginning of the year. But anciently the moneth Marſonone, which anſwereth to our October or November, was counted the ſecond moneth of the year, wherein Noah's floud began. And ſtill, ſaith he, but onely that in regard of feſtival times and ſacred things the moneths are otherwiſe counted, in regard of Fairs and other worldly things, the account was not innovated; but, went ſtill as in times paſt.

the

And that in Autumn, the year was then reckoned to begin in reſpect of civill things appeareth in that the feaſt of in-gathering the fruits of the earth is appointed to be kept immediately after the ſaid gathering in is ended, which is uſually in September, and this time is called the end of the year, & therefore the beginning of the next year muſt needs be yielded to have been then alſo. And that which is brought againſt this, maketh plainly for it, viz. that the moneth Niſan at their coming out of Egypt is commanded to be counted the firſt month to them. For if they had always reckoned that for the firſt, it ſhould not doubtleſs have been ſo ordained, becauſe they would in courſe have kept it as the firſt, without ſuch an ordinance. Wherefore it is plain that the moneths of the year were otherwiſe counted before that viz. from September or October, &c. And how could this have been ſo, but that even from Adam, who knew the beginning of the year, they were counted ſo? Yet moſt of the Ancients held that the Creation was in the Spring time. Euſebius ſaith, that it was counted the ſame day that Chriſt roſe again &c. March 25. ſo likewiſe Athanaſius and Cyril. Hieroſol. Catech. 14. Leo Papa Serm. 9. de paſſione Dominè, Gregor. Nazianz. in oratione in Novam Dominicam. Iſidorus Damaſcen. Rabanus &c. Whereof ſome yet have ſtood for the 15. of the Kalends of April, that is March 18. the day on which Chriſt ſuffered. And for this time they urge the Ordinance before mentioned that this ſhould be the firſt moneth, and that it is the moſt pleaſant time, and fitteſt for generation, as it is moſt likely the time of the Worlds beginning was. Others again have ſtood for the moneth of July; becauſe in Noah's time, it is ſaid to have been the 24th day of the 11th moneth, when the Dove returned to Noah with a green Olive-branch: For if it were the 11th moneth of the year, when the Olive-tree put forth leaves, which muſt needs be in May, for then, ſaith Pliny, the Olive-tree and the Vine do wax green: June was the 12th and laſt, and then, July muſt be the beginning of a new year, and as the year was counted then, ſo it is not to be doubted, but it was counted even from the time of Noah. But this is a moſt weak reaſoning, for both the ſame Pliny ſaith, the Olive leaves do never fall off, or looſe their green color & if the year be begun in September or October, who knoweth not but that then & therefore much more a moneth before all trees hold their leaves ſtill? And for the other opinion ſo generally received, the reaſons brought are not ſufficient to weigh againſt that which hath been ſaid for the beginning in Autumn. For ſo ſoon as Adam was made, to ſhew that they were in that State, that they are in Autumn, the fruit of the trees in Paradiſe is ſpoken of, any being allowed to him to eat of, but only of the tree in the midſt of the garden. So that either it muſt be ſaid, trees yielded fruit twice a year, in the ſpring and autumn

Exod. 23. 16.

Euſeb. omni modo Hiſtor. Athan. ad qu. 17. Antiochi.

Gerhard Mercator or Chronol.

Plin. lib. 16. c. 25.

tumn, which is not probable in a temperate, or else it was the ordinary time of fruit when the World was first made, viz. Autumn. But it may further be demanded here, why all these were made to spring up thus to perfection, there being yet no Sun nor Rain as is said Gen. 2.6. which are the ordinary means of producing them. To this Calvin answereth well, that God would hereby shew, that although he doth commonly work by means, yet he can, when it pleaseth him, without all means provide necessaries for us, that we may put our trust in him, even when ordinary means of sustentation fail. Now God having made the earth, to bring forth plants and trees of all sorts, it is added, He saw that it was good, and finally God looked upon all that he had made, and it was very good.

Calvin.

Ver. 13.

A Question therefore offereth itself, whether thorns and briars, and and other hurtfull and poisonous things, were not now brought forth? To this Basil saith, that the very thorns of the rose bush were not then, but afterwards added for a punishment of mans sinne. And Augustine saith, That for the sinne of man, the earth was cursed to bring forth briars & thorns, not that itself should feel these Thorns, for it is without sense, but that it might set the fault of mans sin alway before his eyes, that he might be admonished to turn from sinne, and to keep God's Commandments; and poisonous herbs were also Created for a punishment of sinne, because man, when he had sinned, began first to be mortall. To the same effect speaketh also OEcolampadius, as he could do no lesse upon these words Gen. 3. Briars also and thorns it shall bring forth unto thee, so that the earth did not at the first, out of its own nature bring them forth, but being accursed for sinne; yet some there are, that affirm these, and all poisonous things, to have been brought forth now, but man had that understanding to know the evil there of, and to eschew it; and to use the good of every creature; there is none but is good for some use, at the least for medicine.

Basil Hexem. Hom. 5. Aug. lib. 1. de Gen. contra Manich. c. 13.

OEcolampadius

But before that man had sinned, what use had he of medicinal things, being subject to no disease? And wherefore then could these hurtful things have served, and if man being in that state, they could not have been good for any use unto him, how could it have been said, that all things made then by God were very good?

Vers. 14.

And God said let there be lights in the firmament of heaven to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signes & for seasons, and for dayes and years. A question is first made here by Expositors, wherefore the lights of heaven, by whose influence plants and trees do grow, were not made first, but after the earths producing of these? But to this I have answered already out of Calvin at vers. 12. and the same answer in effect is made by Chrysost. Basil. Ambrose, Theodoret, &c. that God would not make the starres first, altho' more excellent and the causes of growing things, to teach us, that the Sunne Moon, and Starres, are not the only causes producing them, for they were before these, but God, that he alone might be by all nations, adored & worshipped, and not the hoast of heaven; notwithstanding the great Benefits, which we partake of by their meanes. For that men would be apt to fall to idolatry this way, lamentable experience did afterwards teach both in Jews and Gentiles. But it is further questioned why the Starres were made before other earthly creatures, all things being now made so upon earth, as that they might hereby have been sustained? To this Theodoret answereth that the light which then was, could not have been endured by the eyes of the creatures until such time as the piercing force thereof, was abated by distinguishing it into innumerable Starres, it was of so great brightnes. Others that the three last days of the Creation were spent in the making of things which were for ornament, and therefore it was meet, that the heavens which were the chiefe should first be replenished with lights. I do not think that of Theodoret so probable; because that light was so farre from being more bright then the light of the Sunne, as it is better compared by others to the light

Quest. 1. Chrysost. Basil. Ambros. Theodor. Bede.

Theod. Quest. 16 in. Gen.

in

in the morning, before the Sunne riſing. For God in making the world proceeded by degrees, every day adding ſomething to the perfection thereof, whereas if the light were more excellent at the firſt: when theſe lights were made, there ſhould have been a declining from that excellency, which was before, which is not to be imagined, but rather contrariwiſe, that the light being leſſe before, was now increaſed. I ſubſcribe therefore rather to the other reaſon, it being moſt meet, that the heavens which have the priority in all things, ſhould have it in the lightſome bodies, wherewith it was to be repleniſhed, before, that the earth was repleniſhed with thoſe, that feed and live thereupon. But it is further demanded, why, there being light before, God ſpeaketh here of lights, as if there had been none hitherto, and what uſe that light after this ſerved for? This hath been already cleared in ſpeaking upon the making of the light, and therefore the Reader may have recourſe again thither v. 3. Only it is to be conceived, that ſome parts of the heaven being thicker, and not now firſt condenſated, this light was diffuſed amongſt them all, but chiefly to the Sun and Moon, ſome great augmentation thereof being new made, that it might enlighten all.

Queſt. 3.

To divide the day from the night, &c. and for dayes and for years. How do theſe lights divide day and night, light and darkneſſe, making dayes and years? To this Zanchy anſwereth, that by light and day one and the ſame thing is not here to be underſtood, as neither by darkneſſe and night, and that dayes mentioned in the ſecond place, are not to be underſtood, as day in the firſt, becauſe there is a light of the Moon and Starres, and a day, as dayes are called, that make years, conſiſteth of 24 hours, whereas it being divided by the diſtinction of day and night, is ſometimes but half ſo much, ſometime more, ſometimes leſſe, this day being therefore called artificiall, the other naturall. To diſtinguiſh between the day and the night, then, ſaith he, is between the artificiall day and night, and between the light and darkneſſe, is between that light which is given by theſe lights of heaven by day or by night, and the darkneſſe which is when none of them appear, and by the revolution of the Sun, which is once in 24 hours a naturall day is made, and of ſuch days a year. In all which others conſent with him, but onely in his diſtinction of light and day, and of darkneſſe and night: for theſe words are promiſcuouſly uſed throughout this Chapter, yea it is expreſly noted verſe 5. that God called the light day, and the darkneſſe night, and in ſpeaking of the creation of the lights here, when he cometh to repeat the doing of that, which God is ſaid to have commanded to be done, verſe 14.15. inſtead of ſaying, to divide betwixt the day and the night, he ſaith, to divide betwixt the light and darkneſſe, verſe 18. uſing the worlds light and day, darkneſſe and night, as ſetting forth one and the ſame thing, ſo that it is plain, they are not divers but the very ſame.

Queſt. 4.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

But a greater queſtion is yet behind, what is meant, when he ſaith, let them be for ſignes and for ſeaſons? Touching ſeaſons or ſet times, the queſtion is eaſily reſolved. For by the word here uſed מועדים the feſtivall times of the Jews are ſet forth, as the Paſch, New-moons, and feaſt of tabernacles, and accordingly the Pſalmiſt ſaith, he hath made the Moon for ſet times. And thus the Rabbines of the Jews expound this word here, but others adde alſo the ſeaſons of the year, Summer and Winter, the Spring and Autumn, and alſo times politically ſet to keep Fairs, and for other meetings about affaires of the Commonwealth: for by the courſe of theſe lights of heavn, all ſet times for any purpoſe are diſtinguiſhed. Touching ſignes, it is more controverted, of what the Sunne, Moon and Starres may be looked at, as ſignes? The judiciary Aſtrologer beareth himſelf hereupon, as a ſufficient warrant, not only to prognoſticate of the weather, but of events, that ſhall happen to men and women by calculating their nativities by the poſition of the heavens, and the aſpects of the planets, and by having reſpect hereunto at the undertaking of any buſineſſe. But herein he hath all Divines that ever wrote, againſt him. For although the ſunne be ſet to rule over the day, and the moone over the night,

Queſt. 5.

Pſal. 104.19. Rabbini Calvin.

yet

yet over men he doth not ſay, that they or the ſtarres ſhall rule. Moreover the vanity of the Aſtrologer in this matter appeareth in that in one minute, they acknowledg ſuch variations to be in the poſitions of the heavens, as that he, which is born this minute ſhal be moſt fortunate, but he, which is born the next, moſt unhappy, ſeeing ſo ſmall a point of time, may eaſily be miſtaken, as Baſil reaſoneth. He, that wil, may read both Baſil more at large, and Ioan. Vicus Comes Mirandulæ, who hath written twelve learned books againſt this Aſtronomancy. Now as the Caldean and Aſtrologer, who by the ſtarres taketh upon him to divine of mens deſtinies, go too farre, ſo there are ſome that on the contrary ſide ſtreighten the ſignifications of the ſtarres too much, ſaying, herein they are ſignes, in that the ſunne being nigh ſetting ſheweth, that night is neer, and when the riſing thereof approacheth, that day is near, and when it cometh towards us, that the ſpring and ſummer are neer, and when it is going from us, that autumn and winter approach. But I rather hold with them, who underſtand the ſtarres to be ſet for ſignes, not onely in theſe reſpects, but that hereby we might conjecture of the weather, that ſo buſineſſes of husbandry may be ordered accordingly, and ſomtimes of judgments imminent, and of the laſt judgment, to be ſtirred up to repentance, and ſometime of mercy and grace approaching. For touching the weather, our Saviour Chriſt himſelf, alloweth by the Sunnes appearing red and clear at the going down, or red and lowring at the riſing together fair or fowl weather to be ſignified hereby. And for judgments, the Sunne being contrary to the courſe of nature in the eclipſe, when Chriſt ſuffered, and both Sunne and Moon three dayes together in Egypt, were certain ſignes of Gods anger: for mercies the Sunne and Moon ſtanding ſtill in the days of Joſhua, the Sunne going back upon the dyall of Ahaz in the dayes of Hezekiah, and the ſtarre appearing to the Magi, when Chriſt was born, were ſignes of Gods great grace and favour. Laſtly, touching the great day of Judgment to come, the Lord ſaith, that ſignes ſhall appear in the Sunne, Moon and ſtarres, and then he biddeth his to lift up their heads with joy, as Zanchy hath obſerved, and before him Baſil, Auguſtine, and Philo were of the ſame mind alſo. Now as there are ſignes vulgarly known, as the Sunne or Moon compaſſed about with a circle to be a ſigne of fowl weather, and the Moon being ſharp and thin upon the third day to be a ſigne of fair weather, but contrariwiſe, being obtuſe and thick: ſo there are ſignes known onely by more art and ſtudy to the skilfull, and more experienced, by the riſing of ſtarres; yet, as the weather doth not alwayes fall out, though moſt commonly, according to the ſignes vulgarly known, ſo it doth not according to the other ſignes; for which cauſe they cannot certainly be built upon, it being a thing reſerved to God alone to know certainly, what ſhall come, that the creature might not in any thing be reſpected onely, but our eys might be lifted up to the Creator, and he alone might he worſhipped and ſerved by us. But it is objected, that Aſtrology is condemned as vain, *Iſa.*47.12.13. and Jerem. 10. 2. I anſwer, Jeremy biddeth, that we ſhould not fear the ſignes of heaven, not meaning, that God did not thereby ſometimes ſignifie judgments to come, but that they had no power to hurt, for which they ſhould be adored, as the Virginians are ſaid to worſhip the devil that he might not hurt them. For when any evill is ſignified to come hereby, it is to be taken, as Gods commination for ſin, to ſtir us up to repentance, being thus aſſured, that either he, with whom it is free to do, or not to do, as by theſe ſignes he ſignifieth, will avert the evill, or provide that it ſhall not be evill unto us. And for that place in Eſay, it is plainly againſt the opinion of power being in the ſtarres, whereupon wicked people were ſometimes confident of good to come, although they went on in their ſinnes, and againſt conjecturing of the weather a year before upon imaginary grounds.

This queſtion being thus anſwered, another yet remaineth, whether the Moon and Starres, have any light of their own, or a light only borrowed of the Baſil. Hexem. Ioan. Picus Comes Mirand.

P. Artopæus. Calvin.

Zanch. de oper. Dei. Baſil. Auguſt. Philo.

Object. Sol.

Queſt. 6.

the Sunne, becauſe he calleth them all lights, implying, that they are ſuch originally and by their firſt creation, and yet it ſhould ſeem, that the Moon being ſo variable in the light thereof according to the poſition of it in reſpect of the Sunne, being ſometime leſſer, and ſometime greater, borroweth all the light therefrom, and that the ſtarres have their light from the Sunne alſo, becauſe whilſt it ſhineth, they never appear?

Anſw. Anſwer; Many learned Authours hold, that the Sunne onely hath light in it ſelf, but that the Moon and ſtarres borrow their light of the Sunne, as Albertus magnus, Avicenna, Beda, Plinius lib. 2. cap. 6. Ariſtotle lib. 2. de Cœlo, &c. But others think that the Starres, which are of the eighth ſphear, being above the Sunne, have a proper light of their owne onely, which alſo ſeemeth moſt probable, becauſe there is none appearance to the contrary. But that the Moon borroweth the greateſt part of the light of the Sun, all conſent, it appearing to be ſo by the great variableneſſe thereof, being ſometime leſſer, and ſometime greater. And whereas it is together with the Sunne ſpoken of, as a light of heaven, for it is ſaid, God made two great lights, this is, in reſpect of the light ſhining upon the earth, as Calvin ſpeaketh. For Moſes was nothing curious in ſetting down theſe things to rude and ignorant people, and therefore he ſpeaketh to their apprehenſion, leaving the ſecrets of Aſtronomy to the more acute and ſubtle to be pryed into, which alſo was the cauſe, why he calleth the Sunne and Moon two great lights; not in regard of their magnitude, the Moon is certainly known to be much leſſe, than one of the fixed ſtarres, but for the light, which cometh in moſt aboundance there-from; and the Moon is much greater to the ſight of the eye, than any ſtarre, becauſe it is by many miles neerer to the earth. Touching the greatneſſe of the bodyes of theſe lights that they are exceeding great all agree, and not as they appear to us being ſo farre diſtant from them. And this common ſenſe evinceth, becauſe if a man from an high mountain beholdeth men or beaſts, they ſeem as little as birds unto him, as Baſil reaſoneth. But how great they are, there have been divers opinions. Anaximander ſaith, that the Sun is as great as the whole earth, Anaxagoras greater then Peloponeſus, but Ptolomie ſaith, that the proportion of the Sunnes diameter compared to the diameter of the earth, is as 11 to 2, and therefore the body of the Sunne appeareth, if the terms of both be cubically multiplyed, to be as 166 to 1. The Moon is by Pliny held to be greater, than the earth, as he gathereth by the eclipſe of the Sunne, whereof that is the cauſe, and Baſil ſaith, that it cannot be leſſe than the earth, but others hold that it is no greater than the fourtieth part of the earth, as Zanchy ſaith. Moreover the ſtars in the eighth heaven, which be of the firſt magnitude, which are 15 are by Aſtronomers ſaid to be 107 times greater than the earth. But whether Venus and Mercury, two of the Planets be ſo great as the earth it is by ſome doubted. But to the exact knowledg hereof none can attein. Laſtly, whereas God is ſaid then to have made the Starres alſo, but not in what number, a queſtion may be, how many ſtars there are? But this is a thing not to be found out by mortall man, becauſe it is proper to God to number them all, and as for man, Abraham is bidden to tell the number of the ſtarres, if he can, it being promiſed, that his ſeed ſhould be as they in number, that is, innumerable to man. Yet of the fixed ſtars, where this infinite multitude is, there are numbered by Aſtronomers 1022 which are diſtinguiſhed into 41 conſtellations, repreſenting ſo many ſeverall beaſts and other living creatures, and therefore called accordingly 12 in the Zodiaque, 11 in the ſouth, and 18 in the north. But beſides theſe there are a great many more which cannot be numbered. The names of ſome of them are ſet down Job 38. 31. Amos 5. 8. 2 Kings 23. 5. As Ceſil, Cimah, Mazzaroth, which we call Arcturus, Orion, Pleiades, Planets, by the riſing whereof ſtorms, tempeſts and fair weather proceed.

Avicen. Albertus mag. Beda, &c.

Calvin.

Baſil. Anaximand. Anaxagoras. Ptolem.

Plin. lib. 2. c 11. Baſil Hexem. Zanch. de oper. Dei.

¶ Queſt. 7.

Pſal. 147.

Gen. 15. 5.

And God ſaid, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and foul, that may fly in the open firmament of heaven, &c. The Hebrew is a little different, the creeping creature of a living ſoul, that is, the creeping things of the water, conſiſting of ſoul and body; for fiſhes, becauſe they have no feet to go upon are called creeping creatures, according to Heſychius, their going is a kind of creeping in the waters, and therefore the word uſed is שרץ wich cometh of רץ to run, becauſe the fiſhes creep ſo ſwiftly in the waters, as if they did run, as Zanchy hath it. And touching the next words in the Hebrew, they are, and let the fowls fly in the midſt of the firmament, whereupon occaſion hath been taken to doubt, whether the fowls were made out of the waters or no, becauſe it is not ſaid, and the fowls which may fly, but [which] is put in in the tranſlation, as underſtood, it being left undetermined of what the fowls were made, and declared onely, where they ſhould be. Some therefore hold, that they were not made out of the waters, but the earth, which they think is alſo ſtrongly proved, Chap. 2.19. Out of the ground God formed every beaſt of the field, and every fowl of the air, and Ariſtotle numbereth them amongſt terreſtriall creatures, yet both amongſt the ancient fathers, and now moſt commonly it is held, that they were not made out of the waters. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that they were made out of the vapourous part of the water, or air, wherein they fly, which is full of watery vapours, becauſe of the neerneſſe to the water. Rupertus likewiſe ſaith, that they were made ex aquâ tenniori, & nebuloſâ, And Calvin and Zanchy, &c. hold the ſame. But Vatablus becauſe of that paſſage Chap. 2,19. ſaith, that ſome of them were made out of the water, as watery fowls, and others out of the earth. But he attended not to theſe words, every fowl, which Moſes ſaith, God made out of the ground. Saint Auguſtine, and they, that ſtand for the making of the water, ſay, that in Chap. 2.19. where the fowls as beaſts are ſaid to be made out of the ground, by ground both earth and water are to be underſtood, as making together one Globe. Or elſe, that thoſe words are not to be underſtood, as if the fowls alſo were formed out of the ground, but thus; when God had formed every beaſt out of the ground, and when he had formed every fowl of the air, it being not ſet forth, out of what the fowls were formed.

Verſe 20.

Heſych.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Queſt. 1.

Cajetan. Catharinus.

Auguſt. lib. 3. de Gen. ad literam. Rupert. lib. de oper. Trinit. c. 1. Vatablus.

But I cannot ſee, how either of theſe anſwers can ſatisfie, not the firſt, becauſe the ground or earth hath hitherto been ſet forth, as diſtinct from the waters, nor the ſecond; the matter out of which the beaſts were made being declared, when their making is again mentioned, what reaſon can there be, that the matter out of which the fowls were made, ſhould be concealed? For if they were made out of the waters, it had been eaſie to have added, and every fowl out of the waters, which becauſe it is not added, there is no evaſion left, but it muſt needs be yielded to be the ſame with the beaſts, viz. the earth. But it will be ſaid, if Moſes had not meant, that the fowls as well as the fiſhes were made out of the waters, he would doubtleſſe have ſet forth out of what they were made, as he did in ſpeaking of all other creatures. To this I anſwer; forſomuch as he hath not finally omitted, but taught this Chap. 2.19. it is in effect all one, as if he had ſet it down here, as the manner of making woman is omitted in this Chapter, but expreſſed in the next. And indeed why ſuch a repetition of making theſe creatures out of the ground ſhould be made there, a reaſon can hardly be rendered, but becauſe the originall of fowls had not been hitherto declared. If a reaſon be asked, why it was thus deferred, I know none other, but that it is not altogether left untouched in theſe words, and let the flying fowl fly over the earth, &c. for here, though obſcurely, the earth is pointed at, as the place from whence the fowls come. And indeed it were ſtrange when as all other creatures live where they were made; if the fowls were made out of the waters, that they ſhould live upon the earth. Object. If it be further objected, but why is the creation of fowls ſpoken of together with fiſhes, if they come not from one originall? Sol. To this we may anſwer that ſome of them live moſt in the water, and all the reſt for the moſt part in the air, wherein they fly from place to place, and the air and water were at the firſt all one, and therefore it was not unfit in ſpeaking of the Object.

Sol.
The fiſhes having been ſpoken of by two words coming from one root רוץ שרץ דג the fowls are alſo ſpoken of likewiſe, volatile volet, as meaning the creation thereof out of the earth, as of the other out of the water, and therefore a word ſignifying earth is added עוף ועופף על הארץ the creation of fiſhes, to ſpeak of fowls alſo. Moreover, they are in many things alike, as in levity and agility, and as the one hath finnes, ſo the other hath wings, as the one ſcales, ſo the other feathers, both want ears, and bladders to hold their water and dugs and milk, and their motion is a like very ſwift, the one flying in the air, and the other as it were flying in the water, and to either of them the tail is of great uſe to direct their courſe, and in fiſhes there is ſpawn like unto egges, as egges are in fowls, yet in their fleſh they are altogether unlike, the fleſh of fowls being, as that of other terreſtriall creatures, as their food is from the earth. So that howſoever for their great ſimilitude unto fiſhes, their creation might well be ſpoken of together, yet the ſolidity of their bodies ſheweth, that they came not from the fluid or watery vaporous ayr, but from the ſolid ground. My reverence of antiquity is ſuch, that I am not willing thus to go from common received expoſitions, but the evidence of reaſon herein rather beareth ſway with me, becauſe thus both places ſpeaking of fowls may well be reconciled, but otherwiſe, not poſſibly.

If it be further demanded here, why fiſhes and fowles are made before beaſts? Saint Auguſtine anſwereth, that the ayr and water are neereſt and moſt like unto the heavens, and therefore Moſes deſcendeth orderly after the narration of the making of heavenly bodies, to tell of theſe. Others that he doth thus by proceeding from things leſſe perfect to the more perfect, firſt, trees and plants being made, which have but a vegetative life, then fiſhes and fowls, which howſoever they be ſenſitive, yet they are not ſo ſenſitive as beaſts, amongſt which many come neer unto man.

Queſt. 2.
Auguſt. lib. 3. de Gen. adliteram.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

But it is ſingularly added, then God created great Whales: why are theſe ſpoken of by name, but none of the beaſts likewiſe, but onely in general? To this it is anſwered, that Whales are the greateſt of all other creatures in this World, whereby the mighty power of God is moſt ſet forth, as Job 41. and therefore good reaſon there was, that they above all ſhould be nominated. For in the Atlantick ſea, there are Whales ſeen like great mountains, as both Baſil and Theodoret have it, ſo that Mariners ſomtimes have thought them to have been little Iſlands. The word uſed for Whales is תנינם, whence the Latine word Thinni cometh, and it ſignifieth all very great, both fiſhes and dragons, but here it is taken by all for the greateſt, viz. Whales onely. And it is to be noted, that the word (created) is uſed, to ſet forth the making of theſe, which is not in ſpeaking of other creatures, but onely of the prejacent matter of all in the beginning of the Chapter, and of man. The reaſon doubtleſſe, is becauſe the power of God did moſt appear in making of the Whales, and therefore to ſet forth an extraordinary act of the divine power, this word is here uſed.

Queſt. 3.

Baſil. Theodoret.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Now the fiſhes and fowles being made, it is ſaid, God bleſſed them, &c. but vvhen the beaſts and creeping things of the earth are ſpoken of, no ſuch thing is ſpoken of them. What may the reaſon of this be? To this the Hebrevv Rabbines anſvver, that hereby vvas intimated, that the Serpent ſhould by and by tempt man to ſin, vvhereby a curſe and not a bleſſing ſhould come upon him and all other earthly creatures. Others, that hereby was ſignified the ſuperabundance, that ſhould be of fiſhes and fowls above beaſts and creeping things of the earth, according to the ſignification of the word firſt uſed, when the waters are bidden to bring forth fiſhes, for, as the word ſignifieth, it is is rightly tranſlated, let them bring them forth abundantly. Origen will have by the firſt word the exceeding great increaſe of their bodies ſignified, and by the other their multiplying: but the firſt word uſed is פרו fructifie (and ſo is the ſame in effect with the other multiply) theſe two words being uſed to ſet forth the ſame wonderfull multiplication of theſe creatures. Or elſe it may be ſaid, theſe words of bleſſing are omitted in ſpeaking of the beaſts for brevities ſake, as being underſtood from the former uſing of them ſo little before, or becauſe man being made upon the ſame day, for his excellency above the beaſts, it is omitted in ſpeaking of them, and ſo the more remarkably added in speaking of him. But certainly from Gods blessing the beasts have a power to multiply also.

Queſt. 4.

Rabbini.

Origen.

Verse 24. And God said, let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping things, and beasts of the earth, &c. when the waters were bidden to bring forth fishes, it was said before, let them bring forth the moving creature that hath life, but the earth must bring forth the living creature or the living soul, as it is in the Hebrew, but hereby is meant the whole compositum, consisting of soul and body, and so whether it be read the one way or the other, it cometh to the same, but yet in that the soul is spoken of, as brought forth out of the earth, Zanchyes note is true, that the soul of a beast and of other creatures is not, as the soul of man from above, but out of the corruptible earth or waters, as the body, and so when one perisheth there is an end of the other also. But what may be the reason of this diversity in speaking of the creatures brought forth out of the water and out of the earth? It is conjectured, that hereby is intimated more imperfection to be in the fishes, and more perfection in the beasts, which hath been touched before. But why is the beast made the same day with man? Answ. Because beasts keep together with man upon earth, as neither fishes nor fowls doe, and some of them are helpfull unto him in tilling of the ground, and for divers other uses. But if beasts be more perfect than fishes, why were they not made first? Answer; It hath been already shewed, that Gods order in making all things hath been from the beginning to proceed from things lesse perfect to the more perfect, the rude matter of all being first created, and then distinguisht, &c. But there is also another reason here yielded, it pleased God to replenish the superiour parts of the World, with creatures first, and then the inferiour, first heaven, then waters and lower Region of the ayr, and lastly the earth.

Quest. 1.

Quest. 2. Zanchius.

Quest. 3.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Quest. 4.

But in speaking of these creatures he calleth them by three names, beasts, creeping things, and cattle. What therefore is to be understood by either of these? Answ. The first word in Hebrew is בהמות translated jumenta, cattle, setting forth those that are usefull for man, and are made to serve him, being therefore so called à juvando from helping, such are horses and oxen, &c. and not onely the tame, but the wild, that live upon grasse, as Hares and Conies, &c. the last word חיה translated fera, a wild beast setteth forth those, that live in wildernesses, and are hurtful unto man, but yet to be subdued by him, as Lions, Beares, Wolves, &c. that live upon flesh, the middle word creeping things, setteth forth such as have no legs or very short ones, so that their bellies goe upon the ground, as all Expositours agree. Yet Luther saith, it may be doubted, whether these differences always hold or no, because verse 30. they are all set forth by one word beasts, to whom, as to the fowls, the Lord saith, he had given the green herb for meat, but there is onely one word used, so that this distinction may still hold, where more words are used. But the earth is bidden to bring them forth after their kind. Here then may be a question, whether any such beasts, as come of divers kinds ingendering together were then made; as Mules, that come of an horse and an asse, and the Leopard of a Lioness, and a Libard, and a Lynx of a Wolf and an Hart? To this Rupertus answereth, that these creatures are adulterine and begotten besides the course of nature, and therefore were not made at the beginning. In which answer, I cannot see, how any should but rest, because if every beast were made after their kind, there could not possibly be any mixt, comming of two kinds at the first, but this must needs happen in processe of time. Moreover, that God made not these, but that they came of a confusion afterwards displeasing to God, appeareth, because he forbiddeth the coupling of beasts with beasts of another kind, and it is noted, that Ana found mules first in the wildernesse many hundreds of years after the Creation. Yet some except here against, saying, that although mules were then found first by Ana, yet it followeth not, but they might be from the beginning, and touching that prohibition of the coupling together of divers kindes, that Luther.

Quest. 5.

Rupert. de oper. Trinit. c. 57.

Levit. 19. 19. Gen. 36. 24.

Pererius.

that this was onely allegoricall, as the not ſowing of ground with divers ſeeds, to ſhew that marriages were not to be made with the uncircumciſed, and not to ſhew the thing in it ſelf to be diſpleaſing unto God. But the firſt reaſon of every thing being brought forth after the kind, is not hereby anſwered, neither is it likely that mules ſhould ſo long a time after have been ſpoken of as ſo rare beaſts, but that they were new, neither had any man ever ſeen any ſuch before. For the allegory in that prohibition of divers beaſts coupling together, I acknowledge it, but yet if God had made any ſuch mixt creatures, I cannot ſee, how the very thing literally underſtood could have been by him forbidden, becauſe he never forbad any thing, but that, which was voluntarily done beſides the firſt naturall courſe for any ſignification. And ſuch alſo were the two other things in the forenamed place adjoyned, the plowing with an Oxe and an Aſſe, and the ſowing of the ſame ground with divers ſeeds: for theſe were things in time invented by men, and ſtrange copulations came from the ſtrange luſts of the creatures. If a queſtion be further made touching Monſters, and ſuch living things, as are bred of corruption, as lice, fleas, flyes, &c. whether there were any kinds of ſuch made at the firſt? Saint Auguſtine moveth and anſwereth one of theſe, that ſuch living things, as are bred of the corruption of other things were then made, but not ſuch, as are bred of dead bodies corrupted. But there is a like reaſon of the one ſort and of the other. And therefore Baſil without ſuch diſtinction ſaith, not onely the more perfect fiſhes were bred of the waters by Gods command, but alſo frogs, and gnats, &c. But I cannot ſee, how any thing coming of corruption ſhould have a being then, when there was nothing corrupted, but all very good. It is ſufficient, that God put into the creatures then a generative power, to produce ſuch things afterwards when they ſhould be dead or corrupted, ſo that it may be ſaid, they were then potentially, but not actually. And yet the world was not imperfect at the firſt no more then it is now, ſeeing new ſpecies of ſuch things are daily produced. Touching the other about monſters, Auguſtine was oppoſed herewith by the Manichees, who objected, that all things made by God at the firſt were not good, for theſe were not, and yet God made them, or elſe he made not all things. To this he anſwereth, Monſters cannot be reckoned amongſt thoſe creatures, of which Moſes ſaith, that they were very good, becauſe they all were without either the fault of exceſſe or defect, being in all things very perfect, ſo as monſters are not. And therefore it is certain, that they were begotten after the ſinne of man, but not without the will of God, and although they are not perfect, yet both in reſpect of their ſubſtance, and for ſome uſes they are good. For according to their name Monſtra, they do monſtrare ſhew things that may be profitable for us to know, viz. that ſin hath been committed, that we may be moved to repent, and how much we are bounden to God, that when he could have made us ſuch alſo, yet he hath dealt more graciouſly by us, to be ſtirred up to due thankfulneſſe therefore. For in that there are monſters both amongſt men and other creatures, the corruption of man appeareth to be very great, extending it ſelf even to the dumb creatures. If it be ſaid, but thus more kindes are ſtill created, it is anſwered, not ſo, but bodies are daily framed for creatures ſome of one ſort and ſome of another, as it muſt needs be to the worlds end, for monſters are not new kindes of creatures, but the ſame diverſified by exceſſes or defects, or miſplacing ſome members. All things then were made by God, and were neither eternall, as ſome Philoſophers have thought, that the kindes of them were, nor made by Angels, according to others, nor bred naturally out of the earth by vertue of the Sun, as Epicurus held.

Queſt. 6.

Auguſt. lib. 3. de Gen. ad literam, cap. 14.

Baſil. Hom. 7. in Gen.

Aug. de Civit. Dei li. 16. cap. 8.

And God ſaid, let us make man in our image, after our likeneſſe, and let them have dominion, &c. Verſe 26.

The dignity of man herein appeareth to be great above other creatures hitherto ſpoken of, that there is a conſultation about the making of him, and in the moſt excellent faſhion, that might be, in the image of God himſelf, more Man's dignity. Tertullian. lib. 2 contra Marcion. Homo à Deo conditus eſt, non imperiali verbo ut cætera, ſed familiari manu, blandiente illo verbo præmiſſo, &c. Ambroſ. Hexem. lib 6. c. 6. Docentur ut parvuli, ſerviunt ut famuli, adjuvantur, ut infirmi, verberantur ut timidi, & corriguntur ut ſubditi. Zanchius. James 3.

more particularly his dignity appeareth firſt, in that God conſulteth about the making of him, ſo as he did not about the making of other creatures, but onely ſaid, let them be, or be brought forth, and they vvere. Man vvas not made of God by an imperiall vvord, ſaith Tertullian, but by a familiar hand, that loving ſpeech, being premiſed, Let us make man, &c. 2. In that he vvas made after Gods image, and in his likeneſſe. 3. In that all other creatures in this vvorld vvere ſubjected unto him. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, that this was mans greateſt dignity, becauſe ſome of the creatures are far greater and ſtronger, then man, as Elephants, Lions, and Tigres, &c. who yet are by man ſubdued ſo, as he ſaith, that they are taught as little ones, ſerve as ſervants, are holpen as weak, beaten as fearfull, and corrected as ſubjects, &c. Zanchy, becauſe when Gods ſubjecting of the beaſts to man is ſpoken of, one word tranſlated jumenta cattle, onely is uſed, thinketh that the wild beaſts were not made ſubject unto him, but ſheep and oxen, &c as it is Pſalme 8. But both experience now teacheth, and Saint James affirmeth, that all beaſts are ſubdued by him. So that under this word here all are to be underſtood, though diſtinguiſht into three kindes before. 4. As all creatures were ſubjected unto man, ſo they were brought unto him to be named, it being intimated hereby, of vvhat great naturall knovvledg he vvas, and this bringing of the creatures unto him being, as it vvere an acknovvledgment on their part, that he vvas their Lord and Sovereign, and therefore they ought to obey and ſerve him. 5. Although he vvere made of the ſame earth, out of vvhich the beaſts came, yet it vvas not by being produced, as they, but by being formed, as it vvere vvith Gods hands, a ſoul being breathed unto him vvhich is immortall. 6. His very body alſo was made ſo, as to live for ever, if he had not ſinned. 7. He was ſet in a moſt delectable place, paradiſe, which abounded with all varieties of fruits for food and delight, when as no ſuch proviſion was made for other creatures. 8. He was indued with the ſpirit of prophecy to tell, whence Evah was taken, although he ſaw it not. 9. Laſtly, when God hath appeared at any time in any ſimilitude, he hath not been ſeen like unto any other earthly creatures, but like to man onely, this being a fore-runner of the joyning of man unto God afterwards in one perſon.

Queſt. 1.

But here a queſtion offereth it ſelf, to whom God ſpake when he ſaid, let us make man; for I ſhall not need to ſay any thing of the order of making him, being the moſt excellent, laſt of all others, becauſe it hath been already ſhewed, that this was done by proceeding from things imperfect to the more perfect, and this indeed addeth more yet to mans excellency, in that, like unto a great Lord, the houſe of this world is made fit for him, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries, before that he is brought into it. Now touching the queſtion upon theſe words, (let us make man) the Fathers generally agree, that this was a conſultation held by the bleſſed Trinity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, who are herein declared to be three perſons, but becauſe it is ſaid (after our image) that they are but one eſſence or ſubſtance. The Jews who will by no means acknowledg the Father and Son in the Godhead, have deviſed other expoſitions, ſaying, that God here ſpake to himſelf, after the manner of great men, who are wont to ſpeak of themſelves in the plurall number, and ſome, that he ſpake to the earth, as out of which the body of man was framed, others that he ſpake to the Angels whom he uſed as Miniſters to make the body of man and other earthly creatures, he onely breathing into him the breath of life. But the laſt of theſe is well confuted by Saint Auguſtine, ſaying, if God had ſaid onely, let us make man, it might have been underſtood, as ſpoken to the Augels, but becauſe it followeth after our image, and it is a wickedneſſe to believe, that man was made after the ſimilitude of Angels, and that the ſimilitude of God and of Angels is one and the ſame, therefore the plurality of the Trinity is rightly underſtood here, which Trinity yet appeareth to be one God, becauſe it is ſaid, fecit, not fecerunt.

Auguſt. lib 6. de Civit. Dei, c 16. Poterat illud, faciamus hominem de angelis intelligi, quia non dixit faciam, ſed faciamus, ſed quia ſequitur, ad imaginem noſtram, nefas eſt credere ad imaginem angelorum hominem factum, &c.

And

And Saint Amb. ſaith, that God could not ſpeak thus to his ſervants, becauſe it is not to be thought, that ſervants were conſorts with their Lord in his workes, or the workes with their author, and if this ſhould be admitted, that the worke were common to God and angels, yet the image was not common. The Son therefore is to be underſtood, who hath ſaid, I and the Father are one, and of whom it is ſaid, being the image of the inviſible God, &c. And touching the body of man, which they ſay was made by the angels, it is expreſly taught, that God made it out of the earth. For the reſt of the Fathers conſenting, that the myſtery of the Trinity is hereby ſet forth; ſee Rupert. lib. 2. de trinit. & oper. eius. Theodoret quaſt. 20. in Gen. Cyril. lib. 1. adverſus Julianum, Chryſoſtom. in Gen. 1. And therefore as God ſpake not to the Angels, ſo neither did he ſpeake to the earth, for that were abſurd, that the workman ſhould ſpeak to the dead matter, out of which he meant to frame any thing, nor to himſelf, becauſe man, who hath the uſe of reaſon, ſpeaketh not to himſelf, but to others. And of as little moment is that which Calvin commemorateth, that ſome have expounded the word עשה fiat: and which Muſculus ſpeaketh of, that he ſpake to the four Elements. And hitherto of the conſultation, Let us make man.

Ambroſ. Hexem. lib. 6. c. 7.

Coloſſ. 1.

Gen. 2.

Another queſtion followeth about the word, Adam tranſlated Man, what it ſignifieth? and whether the ſoul or body of man, or both be meant hereby, and whether man alone, or both man and woman? To this it is anſwered. Firſt, the word אדם Adam cometh of אדמה ſignifying red earth, ſuch as the earth was in the firſt purity thereof, as Euſebius hath it, who alſo addeth, that man is ſometime called by another name, viz. אנוש ſignifying forgetfull, becauſe the reaſonable nature being ioyned to a body is made forgetfull. Being incorporeall it is divine and reaſonable, not onely remembering things paſt, but having through the ſublimity of ſpeculation a precognition of things to come, but being joyned to the fleſh, it is ignorant and forgetfull. This name Adam in Greeke conſiſteth, as S. Cyprian and Aug. ſay, of four letters, ſetting fourth the four parts of the World, α ἀνατολὴν, the Eaſt, δ δύσιν, the Weſt, α ἄρκτον, the North, and μ μεσημβρίαν, the South, and therefore it was myſtically intimated by this name given to man, that his poſterity ſhould inhabit all thoſe parts. But ſeeing this name was not given in Greeke but in the Hebrew tongue, it is better to conceive as others have it, that he was thus called to put him in minde, from whence he was taken, that he might alwayes be humble, and ſubject to his maker. In Greek man is called ἄνθρωπος from the word ἄνω θεωρεῖν to look upward, as Plato hath it, and in Latine Homo, ab humo, from the ground. Secondly, By the word Man, ſome have thought, that the interiour man onely is to be underſtood, becauſe it is ſaid, after our Jmage, which cannot be ſpoken of the body, but of the ſoul onely. Thus Ambroſe, and Baſil, who to prove this opinion, alledgeth ſome places, wherein the inner man is ſpoken of, as 2 Cor. 4. Col. 3. And of this Saint Auguſtine maketh mention, that it was held ſo by ſome, but he confuteth it, becauſe God is ſaid, as to have made man after his own Jmage, ſo to have created them Male and Female, which diſtinction is not in the inner man, and moreover to have apointed his food, which neither can agree hereunto. And yet, as Auguſtine ſaith, they that held thus, brought ſome probable reaſon for it, becauſe the making of man is againe ſpoken of, Chap. 2. ſo that it may ſeeme, that here firſt, the ſoule is ſpoken of, and there the body, but who ſo ſhall look into the Text, ſhall ſoon ſee the vanity of this allegation, and that the whole man conſiſting of ſoul and body is meant by man here. Thirdly, Some have held, that by the word Adam woman was not meant alſo, but the man onely, but this is eaſily confuted, becauſe it is ſaid, God created man after his Jmage, both male and female.

Queſt. 2.

Euſeb. de preparat. Evang. lib. 11. c. 4.

Cyprian. lib. de Sinai & Sion. Auguſt. tractat. 9. 10. in Joan.

Plato in Cratylo de nominum Etymologia. Amoroſ. Hom. 10. in Gen. Baſil. in Hexem. lib. 6. c. 8. Auguſt. lib. 3. de Gen ad literam, cap. 22.

A third queſtion here is, what is meant by Gods image and ſimilitude, and whether the woman was not made after Gods image, as well as the man, becauſe ſhe is elſwhere ſaid to be the image of man, and man the image of God?

Queſt. 3.

God? To this divers anſwer diverſly. Some hereticks called Anthropomorphitæ, that man is ſaid to have been made in the image of God in reſpect of his body, having ſuch eyes, hands, feet and other limbs, as he hath, but this is ſo groſſe, as Calvin ſaith, that it is not worth the naming, forſomuch as God is plainly taught to be a Spirit, John 4,20. Others, as Calvin alſo ſaith, holding this image to be in the body, affirm, that to be ſo called, becauſe the wiſdome and power of God ſhine ſo much in the admirable framing thereof, but neither is this right, becauſe by the ſame reaſon not onely man, but the heavens and other creatures ſhould be after Gods image alſo, for in them the wonderfull power and wiſdome of God is no leſſe ſhewed, then in making mans body with the lineaments thereof. The ſoundeſt expoſitours therefore hold, that man is ſaid to be made after Gods image, not in body, but in ſoul, and yet not in ſoul onely, becauſe that is not man, but both in ſoul and body, whereof man conſiſteth, the ſoul underſtanding and doing acts of righteouſneſſe by and through the Organs of the body. So Zanchy, who further addeth that the body of man repreſenteth the manifold vertues of God in the members thereof, as mans eyes repreſent Gods providence, his hands and arms his ſtrength, and forſomuch as mans hands build and plant, and do all the wonderfull works of Architecture, and Husbandry, he may be ſaid herein to be the image of the great Creatour of all things. Yet properly in ſoul only, man is the image of God, in body ſignificatively as the members thereof, and the frame of it is a ſigne of the divine attributes. Thus Baſil and Ambroſe acknowledg that there is in mans body a certain property, viz. the erect figure thereof, which repreſenteth an heavenly God, being herein adopted to ſuch a ſoul, as ſhould always be lifted up to things above, and to ſeek them. And Auguſtine ſaith, that our body is ſo made, that it ſheweth us to be better than the beaſts, and like unto God.

Calvinus.

Baſil. in Gen. Hom. 10. Ambroſ. Hexem. lib. 6. c. 8. Auguſt lib. de Gen. contra Manich. c. 17.

Touching the two words here uſed image and ſimilitude, they greatly differ. For ſome will have onely one and the ſame thing meant hereby, the word ſimilitude ſerving to expreſſe further what is meant by image. Thus many of the Ancients, as Zanchy ſaith, and Calvin denyeth any difference to be betwixt image and ſimilitude, and Vatablus ſaith, that the adding of theſe words after our likeneſſe, is no more in effect, but moſt like unto us. Their reaſons are firſt becauſe the ſame thing being ſpoken of again, one word onely is uſed verſe 27. ſo God created man in his own Image, and not in his own image and ſimilitude. Secondly, becauſe the creation of man being elſewhere ſpoken of, he is ſaid to have been after Gods image onely, as Gen. 9. 6. 1 Cor. 11. Eccleſiaſticus chap 17. Coloſ. 3. Epheſ. 4, &c. but Gen. 5. 1. onely after Gods likeneſſe. To this Zanchy anſwereth, that when one of theſe words is afterwards uſed, the other is neceſſarily to be underſtood ſynecdochicè, one onely being uſed for brevities ſake. For as Auguſtine ſaith, to affirm any word in Scripture to be idle is blaſphemy. And therefore both he diſtinguiſheth betwixt image and ſimilitude, and ſo doth Baſil. Hom. 10. in Gen. and Origen. lib. 3. περὶ ἀρχῶν c. 6. and Ambroſe Hexem. lib. 6. c. 7. Gregor. Niſſen. Hom. de creat. homin. Euther. Victorinus, Theodoretus, &c. Now the difference held to be betwixt image and ſimilitude by all theſe famous Expoſitours, is, that the word image ſetteth forth the reaſon and underſtanding of man, wherein, he is alone the very image of God, other terreſtriall creatures wanting a reaſonable ſoul, but he onely having it. R. Moſes Maimony ſaith, the excellent reaſon and knowledge found in mans ſoul, is the forme of man, and therefore it is ſaid, (let us make man after our Image) R. Menahem; it is thus ſaid of man for the underſtanding mind, that is in him, ſuch as is not in any other earthly creature, and Proclus, the mind that is in us is the image of the firſt mind. The word ſimilitude ſetteth forth the gifts and graces ſpirituall, wherewith he was by his creation indued, he being perfectly righteous and holy, and ſo like unto God who is moſt holy. But againſt this it is objected, that the word image doth rather ſet forth righteouſneſs and holineſs, becauſe it is thus expounded being afterwards ſpo-

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Auguſt. quæſt. in Deut. qu. 4 Origen. Baſil. Ambroſ. Greg. Nyſſen. &c.

ken

ken of. Epheſ. 4. 24. Coloſ. 3.10. and therefore this diſtinction cannot ſtand. To this I finde not any thing anſwered, but only, as the fathers before alledged, ſo *Rabbi Moſes Ægypt. lib.*1. *cap.*1. affirmeth the foreſaid diſtinction, that image ſetteth forth the ſubſtance of the ſoul, and ſimilitude the vertuous qualities, alledging ſome paſſages of holy Scripture to prove this difference, and ſo likewiſe Damaſcen. For mine own part, I cannot ſee how any thing can be anſwered, and therefore by image I would rather underſtand mans ſpirituall gifts and graces, and by ſimilitude his reaſon and underſtanding, and ſo the meaning may wel be rendered thus, let us make man, who may repreſent our purity and holineſſe, yea, and that not being ſenſible onely, and ſo ignorant, as other earthly creatures, but wiſe and reaſonable, and having a ſoul immortall, that in all things he may be as like unto us, as a creature can be to the Creator, that in him our holineſſe and wiſdome may be beheld and reverenced, when all other creatures do ſubmit unto, and are ruled by him. Touching the woman, it is plain, that as the man, ſo ſhe alſo was created after Gods image. Thus *Auguſtine lib.*12. *de Trinit. cap.*7. and *Baſil. Hom.*10. in Gen. whereas the Apoſtle calleth her the image of the man then, it is not to be underſtood excluſively, as though ſhe were not the image of God alſo, but in ſome ſecondary reſpect. Both man and woman were made after Gods image in a primary reſpect, viz. as his image ſtandeth in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, in wiſdome and underſtanding, and in the immortality of the ſoul. But in a ſecondary reſpect, as the image of God ſtandeth in principality and rule, the man alone is Gods image chiefly, becauſe although the woman hath alſo dominion over the creatures, yet being weaker, neither doth ſhe ſo rule over them as he doth, neither is ſhe equall, but inferiour to the man, as being made out of him and for him, as all things were of God and made for him. Some there are, who have ſtood for man his being Gods Image in reſpect of the three perſons in the Godhead. For in reaſon he may aptly be ſaid to repreſent God the Father, in ſpeech, that cometh from this reaſon, God the Sonne, who is the Word; and in love, God the Holy Ghoſt. So *Auguſtine lib.*1. de Trinit. But this is rejected, as being beſides the ſcope by Calvin. Theodoret labouring much to finde out, what is Gods image, concludeth, that becauſe it muſt be ſomewhat in man, which is not in the woman, nor in any other creature, that it is uncertain. And Epiphanius, that it is not knovvn, in vvhat part this image is. But of all others, the Rabbines of the Jews have ſpoken upon this moſt fooliſhly, ſaying, that man is ſaid to be Gods image, becauſe as God filleth all the World, ſo the ſoul filleth all the body, as one God is over the vvorld, ſo one ſoul is over the body, as God is not defiled with any filthineſſe of the world, ſo the ſoul is not defiled with the filthineſſe of the body, and as God ſeeth all things, but is ſeen of none, ſo doth the ſoul: for all theſe agree to the ſoul of a beaſt alſo. Laſtly, there is another opinion recited and confuted by Saint Auguſtine, that by image and likeneſſe here is meant the likeneſſe of the Sonne of God, taking fleſh, after which they thought, that the firſt man was made, and ſo much the rather, becauſe he is ſaid to be the image of the Father, and as man is here ſaid to have been made after Gods image, ſo 1 Cor. 11. he is ſaid to be his image alſo. But Chriſt is not onely called the image, but the ſubſtantiall image of the Father being coequal and coeternal with him. That man was not made like unto the Son in his humanity appeareth, becauſe it is ſaid in the plural number, after our image, the whole Trinity being meant, not in the ſingular after thy image. Hitherto Auguſt. And of Chriſt made after the likenes of one of us men, we do ſomtimes read, but of man made after the ſimilitude or likenes of Chriſt never.

Queſt. A fourth queſtion followeth, becauſe having ſaid, So God created man in his own image, it is added in the image of God created he him, and male and female created he them, why the ſame thing is thrice repeated? Anſwer, This is not doubtleſſe without a myſtery, the meaning is, that God the Father, God the Son, and God the holy Ghoſt created man, and not one Perſon onely, the three

*R. Moſes Ægypt. Damaſcen. lib.*2. *cap.*29.

Auguſt. Theodoret.

*Epiphan. hær.*70. Raboini.

*Auguſt lib.*7. *de trinit. c.*6. Non a ſolis patris, ſolius filii aut ſolius S. Spiritus ſit homo, ſed ipſius trinitatis. Non enim ait ſi loquens, faciamus hominem ad imaginem tuam aut meam ſed pluraliter ad imaginem & ſimilitudinem noſtram aquâ pluralitate S. S. ſeparare quis audeat?

Verſe 27. Zanch. de oper. Dei.

three Perſons being yet declared to to be one, in that a verbe of the ſingular number is here joyned with a nowne of the plurall.

Queſt. 5. Verſe 28. Job 41. A fifth queſtion is, whether the dominion of all worldly creatures was here given to man without exception, becauſe the Whale, called Leviathan, ſeemeth to be excepted, and how the caſe ſtandeth with man ſince his fall in reſpect of this Dominion? Anſwer, Some have held, that although the fiſhes are here given to man to rule over, that the Whale is not ſubjected unto him, nor the wilde beaſts. So Theodoret, that all creatures are not here meant, but ſuch, as were made for mans vſes, as fiſhes, and tame beaſts, and creeping things for medicine, and not the Whale, or wilde beaſts, which neither are mentioned therefore Pſalm 8. and unto Theodoret Zanchy ſubſcribeth herein. But Baſil contrarywiſe ſaith, in ſpeaking to man, ſeeing ſuch force of reaſon piercing into, and overcoming all things is beſtowed upon thee, how ſhouldeſt thou not have power of ruling over the Whales alſo? I have ſeene the admirable cunning, and witty art of men in taking theſe Whales. So that the creatures which through their naturall ferity are not tamed, are through neceſſity compelled to ſerve man their Emperour. Whence it is plaine, that God hath given a power unto man to rule over all other creatures, and that the very Whales and other Monſters of the Sea, which are terrible to be named, are ſubject to the rule and dominion of man. Hitherto Baſil; to whom I rather aſſent, not doubting, but that by fiſhes Whales alſo are to be underſtood, and by beaſts, wilde beaſts, as well as tame. For both through his reaſon and underſtanding man is able to maſter any of them, and experience teacheth the ſame, when as they are often times taken by him. And to put this out of all doubt, Saint James ſaith, that every kinde of beaſts, birds, and things in the Sea are tamed by man. Touching the difference of mans dominion over the creatures before and after ſinne, it is generally held, that although by ſinning the image of God in man was defaced, yea loſt in reſpect of that, wherein it principally ſtood, viz. Righteouſneſſe and Holineſſe, and the knowledge of divine things: yet in reſpect of naturall reaſon, it remaining, he hath dominion ſtill over the creatures of all ſorts, although not in ſuch ample manner, as he had at the firſt. For then it is to be held, that they did voluntarily obey him, yea thoſe, that were moſt fierce and wilde. For God brought all ſorts to Adam to be named by him, implying his Lordſhip over them, and how at his naming of them or ſpeaking to them by name they ſhould be obedient. Of this obedience there have been ſome inſtances ſince, as when all ſorts of creatures lived with Noah in the Arke and were ſubject unto him, when the Ravens came ſo familiarly to Elijah to bring him food, and the Beares came out at the curſing of Eliſha, and deſtroyed the 42 children that mocked him. It is true, theſe things were done by miracle, and rarely, but before ſinne it is moſt probable, that it was ordinarily ſo. If it be ſaid, the creatures had not the reaſon to come and do ſuch obedience to man. I anſwer, God, that made ſome ſo obſequious, as we ſee ſtill by experience, as Dogs, and Cats, &c Did make them all doubtleſſe ſuch at the firſt, that they did not flee away, but came about man, and fawned upon him, and in their kinde ſhewed their willingneſs to yeeld him obedience. But man having diſobeyed God, as it was juſt, his dominion over the creatures became more laborious and difficult, and inſtead of voluntarily ſerving him, many of them now are become hurtfull to him and are ready to make a prey of him. He hath indeed a rule and dominion over them ſtill: for this is eſtabliſhed again, *Gen.*9.2. But his rule is not now ſo large, and with great travaile and paines. Hugo de Sancto Victore ſaith, that God hath taken away the dominion of man over two ſorts of creatures, the greateſt and fierceſt, as Lions, Tigers, &c. And the leaſt, as Flies, Fleas, &c. Which cannot be tamed, by the one giving him to underſtand, that he is deprived for ſin of his excellent power of domination, and by the other, how vile and baſe he is now become. Yet Chryſoſtom obſerveth, that God hath even in this particular dealt graciouſly with man, in that he hath not withdrawn from his Theod. in Gen. quæſt. 20.

Baſil. in Gen. Hom. 10.

James 3.7.

Object.

Hugo de Sancto Victor. annot. in Gen.

Chryſoſt. hom. 12. in Gen.

his obedience thoſe creatures, whereby he might have profit, but onely ſuch, as did ſet forth the excellencie of his power, thoſe, whereby he might have profit, helpe, ornament or delight, being ſtill left unto him, as Sheep, Oxen, Horſes, &c.

Verſe 29.

And God ſaid, behold, I have given you every herb bearing ſeed, which is upon the face of all the earth: and every tree, in which is fruit, to you it ſhall be for meate. 30 and to every beaſt, &c. Beda gathereth from hence, that before the fall of man, as no herbe was venemous, ſo no tree was without fruit: but this laſt was plainly an errour, becauſe ſome trees are naturally barren, yea and ſuch, as were in Paradiſe, as the Firre tree, the Cedar, &c. commemorated, Ezech. 31. And therefore to intimate ſo much in the Text, it is ſaid, in which is fruit.

Beda Hexem.

Queſt.

But a great queſtion here doth juſtly offer it ſelf, whether man might not eate fleſh at the firſt, but Hearbs, Seeds, and Fruits onely. And becauſe the other creatures are confined to hearbs and ſeeds, whether ſuch of them, as live now upon fleſh, were otherwiſe ſuſteined then, as Lions, Beares, Wolves, &c. Touching either of theſe divers Expoſitours are of divers opinions. Some thinke, that although hearbes and ſeeds and fruits onely are named, when mans food is appointed unto him, yet for ſo much as fleſh is not forbidden, and a dominion over the creatures to uſe them, as he thought good, was given unto him, he might at his pleaſure make food of that alſo. And they argue from this, that Sacrifices were to be made of the creatures, ſome part of which was to be eaten, and likewiſe that they were to be killed, that they might have their skins for clothing, wherefore it is moſt probable that they ate their fleſh. So that God in appointing theſe things to be eaten, did but appoint their ordinary food, there being a liberty to uſe fleſh for food alſo, when man ſhould thinke good. But others hold, that ſeeds and hearbs and fruits were mans onely food till the flood, becauſe none but theſe are mentioned and an expreſſe allowance is given to eate fleſh after the flood, as theſe things. Thus the Fathers generally, and moſt new Writers of all ſorts. And it ſeemeth to have been an ancient received opinion, by that which old Poets have left written, As Boetius. The former age was content with the faithfull fields, and ſatified their hunger with the Acorn, when they had faſted long. And Ovid; Men were content with meat growing without forcing, they gathered the fruits growing in mountainous places, and thoſe that grow upon thornes, &c, lib. 1. Metamor. And it ſtandeth with good reaſon, that man ſhould feed then onely upon ſuch things, they being ſuch as might well ſuffice nature, and moſt pleaſant at the firſt, and mens bodies being ſtrong and healthfull, and this was a moſt ſimple diet, and ſo moſt fit to be appointed at the firſt to rebuke the luxury of after times. Some alſo yeeld this for a reaſon, that man not being uſed to the ſhedding of blood might be better preſerved from murther. But this reaſon is weake, becauſe beaſts were killed for Sacrifice, and to have their skins for apparrell, and therefore Cain, the very firſt man borne into the World, fell into this damnable ſinne of murther. The reaſons before rendered therefore are beſt, and that the creatures not being killed up at the firſt, might the better be multiplied upon the earth. After the flood mens bodies grew weaker, and it is generally thought, that neither herbes nor waters were ſo wholeſome as before, but more corrupt through that Deluge, and therefore fleſh was now allowed to be eaten, and whereas waters were their onely drinke before, vines were now planted; that they might have wine for their infirmity. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that Noah and his ſons did forbear the killing of beaſts to eat for a time, that their increaſe might not be hindered. Calvin thinketh it beſt to ſuſpend, and not to determine this queſtion.

Muſculus.

Baſil. Beda, Damaſc. de fide orthod. lib. 2. c. ultim. Zanch. Gen. 9.

Boet. lib. 2. de de conſol. Philoſ. Fœlix nimium prior ætas contenta fidelibus arvis, Nec inerti perdita luxu, Facili quæ ſera ſolebat, jejunia ſolvere glande.

Zanch. de oper. Dei Gen. 4.

Calvin. Thom. Aquin. part. 1. q. 96. artic. 1. Cajetan.

Touching beaſts, that now live upon fleſh, ſome alſo thinke, that they did ſo at the firſt, becauſe the nature of a creature is alwayes the ſame, and that when God aſſigned hearbs and ſeeds for the beaſts to feed upon, he meant not all beaſts. But this is contrary to the Text, ſpeaking of all, wherein was the breath of life, and howſoever creatures never alter from their ſpecifical nature, yet they may alter from their individuall, uſing ſuch food at one time, as they uſed not at another, as children, who at the firſt are nouriſhed with milk, and eat no ſolid meat, yet afterwards they eat it. Others therefore more probably hold, that even thoſe beaſts that ſince have lived upon fleſh, and birds alſo, lived then all upon ſeeds and herbs, and that this diſcord and malignity of nature came upon them afterwards, ſince the floud, one bearing a kind of hatred to another, and ſo preying upon it, and tearing and eating the fleſh thereof. And this opinion hath both the preſent text plainly for it, and even at the time of the floud it muſt needs be yielded to have been ſo, becauſe all ſorts of creatures earthly living with Noah in the Ark, were ſuſteined without eating fleſh, for otherwiſe their number, being ſo few of each kind taken in, would not have ſufficed, ſee alſo for this *Eſa.*11.7. and *chap.*65.25. The clauſe of all added. And God ſaw all that he had made, and it was very good, ſerveth to ſhew that all things being approved of God, we ſhould not preſume to queſtion any, whether it be good or no. And whereas they are ſaid to be very good, which is more than hath been ſpoken hitherto, it is by reaſon of their perfection: ſo Calvin.

Beda. Baſil. Joſeph.lib.1. Iud.Antiq.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. THus the heavens and the earth were finiſhed, and all the hoaſts of them. This repetition may ſeem to be ſuperfluous to tell the ſame thing over again, but indeed it is to very good purpoſe, both to meet with ſuch as have held, that the world and all things therein were made in a moment, for ſix dayes were ſpent in the making thereof, and to give us occaſion more ſeriouſly to conſider of theſe works of God, who are ready ſlightly to paſſe them over, as Oecolampadius ſaith, and if God now had perfected his Heaven and Earth; in vain do Philoſophers diſpute of more Worlds. And laſtly, to ſhew that the World was now perfected on all parts, there being nothing wanting to the perfection thereof. And therefore the words may be read thus, the heavens and the earth were perfected, &c. the moſt wiſe Worker made all things in ſo great perfection, that there was nothing now wanting, that could be deſired; ſo Ferus. And according to this number of ſix dayes, ſaith R. Elias, the world ſhall continue ſix thouſand years, two thouſand empty, without the promiſe to Abraham, two thouſand under the Law, and two thouſand under Chriſt, and for our iniquities they that are paſt of theſe, are paſt: ſo that by his account the time of Chriſts coming is paſt long agoe. Touching the next words, and all the hoaſts of them. Fagius ſaith, that the Hebrews by the hoaſts of heaven here underſtand, the Sun, Moon and Stars, Angels and mens ſouls, by the hoaſts of the earth, man and all beaſts, and fowls, and growing things, which are ſo called, becauſe by theſe God doth his mighty and powerfull acts, as a King by an hoaſt of his men, in which regard, God is often called the Lord of Hoaſts. And not much different herefrom, Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the Sun, Moon and Stars are the hoaſts or ornaments of heaven, and trees, plants and other creatures here below, the ornaments of the earth. In the Septuagints tranſlation, πᾶς ὁ κόσμος αὐτῶν, the ornament of them.

Oecolamp.

Fagius.

Chryſoſt.hom.5. Perfecta eſt terra propter habitationem noſtram in hoc tempore, & cœlum propter futuram vitam. Præter hæc duo, nihil eſt quod amplius expectes. Ferus.

And on the ſeventh day God ended his work which he had made, &c. The Septuagints, whom alſo Chryſoſtome and ſome others follow, read it thus. And on the ſixt day God ended his work, fearing peradventure, leaſt if it be read upon the ſeventh day, it ſhould be thought, that he did ſomething upon it. And one indeed gathereth hereupon, that God made the woman the ſeventh day. But this is plainly contrary to the expreſſe text before, God created man, male and female created he them. The meaning is nothing elſe then, but that God on the ſeventh day ceaſed from doing any more towards the perfecting of the world, all that was to be done, to this end being fully performed upon the ſix dayes. Some labour otherwiſe about the reſolving of theſe words, as Verſe 2. Catharinus. Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Fagius

Fagius ſheweth, and Vatablus as the Hebrews, who ſay, that at the inſtant of the beginning of the ſeventh day God finiſhed all his works, or the ſeventh day beginning to appear, or before the ſeventh day. But the former ſolution is moſt plain, to make an end of working, being nothing elſe, but to break off, and to work no more. And therefore Jerome, who ſeemeth to have underſtood the words otherwiſe, as if God had done ſome work upon this day, argueth without a ground, when as he reaſoneth from hence againſt the Jews ſtrict reſting upon the Sabbath, ſaying, Here now we ſhall ſtreighten the Jews, who glory of the reſt of the Sabbath, becauſe in the very beginning it was broken, when God wrought upon the Sabbath, finiſhing his works therein. For the very adding of theſe words, (which he had made) ſheweth that all things were made before, and ſo doth the hiſtory preceding Chap. 1. and this, that he is ſaid now to have reſted, reſting and working being oppoſite. And Exod. 20. it is expreſly ſaid, in ſix dayes the Lord made heaven and earth, the Sea and all that in them is. Touching Gods reſting, it is ſpoken, according to the manner of men, not that he with all theſe great works was wearied, but that thenceforth he wrought no more. And he is ſaid to reſt, as an example to us men, ſhewing what we ſhould doe upon the ſeventh day, and what we ſhall do after the ſix dayes of the worlds durance ended, we ſhall keep an everlaſting Sabbath in heaven. Yet this reſting of God is not to be underſtood, but as it is here limited, from all the works that he had made, that is, ſo that after this time he added nothing to make the world more perfect, becauſe it was fully perfected in ſix dayes. For he worketh ſtill always, John 5. 17. in governing, upholding, and in making the creatures prolificous, and to multiply upon the face of the earth. Touching his ſanctifying of the ſeventh day, and bleſſing it. This was by ſeparating it from common uſes, from travail and labour in worldly works, which were to be done upon all the ſix dayes, and making it more excellent than them, as it is more excellent and of more honour to finiſh a work, then to be doing in it: ſo Theodoret. How excellent this day became hereby, appeareth, becauſe the Law was continually read upon this day, double ſacrifices were offered, poor ſervants and beaſts had reſt from their hard labour, the other dayes of the week were all denominated herefrom, as firſt and ſecond of the Sabbath, &c. after the ſimilitude of this day, the ſeventh moneth had in it an holy convocation, at the end of ſeven weeks was Pentecoſt, the ſeventh year was holy, and ſeven times ſeven years being expired, there was a Jubilee, by ſeventy weeks, the coming of the Meſſiah is ſet forth, and the number of ſeven is upon many other occaſions ſpoken of as ſacred. Thus Euſebius, Beda, Clemens Alexandrinus Auguſtine, &c. But here a queſtion is made, whether the ſeventh day were to be kept holy from the time of Creation, or onely from the time of the commandement given upon Mount Sinai? To this ſome anſwer that theſe words are put in here by the way of anticipation, the time, when this hiſtory was written by Moſes, being the time of giving the Law, untill which they hold, that men were not tyed to keep a Sabbath. Thus Beda, Juſtinus, Euſebius, Tertullian, Cyprian, and Toſtatus. And there be ſome arguments, which ſeem to confirm this. Firſt, becauſe the labour, that man took in the ſtate of innocency being eaſie, and little troubleſome to him, he had no need of a day to reſt upon. Secondly, Becauſe it is not probable, but that he would then daily without any appointment of a time peculiarly give himſelf to divine contemplation. Thirdly, Becauſe if the Sabbath had been then inſtituted, all men ſhould have been tyed unto it, whereas neither the Gentiles kept it, nor the holy Patriarks, that we can read of. Fourthly, In the commandment afterwards given Exod. 20. no mention is made of the practice of the Patriarks herein. Laſtly, it is a thing generally held by Divines, that Adam had but one precept given him at the firſt. Yet others hold, that the Sabbath was now appointed, and that all times and ages were bound from the beginning to keep holy one day of ſeven. And Zanchy goeth furtheſt of any, ſaying, that he doubted not, but Fagius.

Vatablus.

Hieron. de tradit. Hebraicis.

Auguſt. lib. 4. de Gen. ad literam, ſaith that God reſted, when he made the creatures to reſt.
Calvin.

Verſe 3.
He bleſſed the ſeventh day & hallowed it
The ſecond word here expreſſeth the firſt. This was the bleſſing of the ſeventh day, to ſet it a part for holy exerciſes.
Theod. quæſt. 21 in Gen.

Dan. 9.
Euſeb. lib. 13. de præpar. Evang. cap. 7.
Clem. Alex. Strom. 6.
Beda Hexam.
Auguſt. lib. 1. de civ.

Queſt.
Whether the ſeventh day was now appointed to be kept holy.
Euſeb. lib. 1. hiſt. c. 4. Juſtin. ad Dialog. cum Typh. Tertul. Cyprian, Toſtatus. Calvin, Vatablus, Pagninus, Zanch. Cathari but the Son of God did upon this day put upon him an humane ſhape, and converſed with our firſt Parents, inſtructing them in all divine knowledg, and touching the future happineſſe. For mine own part, although I dare not ſay with Zanchy, that the Son of God did ſo, yet our firſt Parents kept the Sabbath day, becauſe the reaſon of keeping it concerned them from the beginning as well as after the giving of the Law; God reſted, and bleſſed and hallowed it. For when was this bleſſing of this day, but at the beginning, at the very time when God reſted? And if ſo, how can it be ſaid, that it was not to be obſerved til two thouſand years after? For when God ſeparateth any thing, as holy, from thence forward, it hath always been uſed to be ſo accounted. Moreover to ſhew, that this day was not then firſt ſet apart for the worſhip of God, when the Commandement was given, but long before; it is begun with this word Remember, as having reference to a former inſtitution. And Exodus 16. the Sabbath is kept before the giving of the Law, which was not till Exodus 20. To the reaſons brought then to the contrary, I anſwer, that although Adam in Paradiſe had no need of a reſting day for his eaſe, or for divine contemplation, yet he being ſet upon the ſix dayes to work in the garden of Eden and to dreſſe it, there could not ſo fitting a commemoration have been made of Gods reſting from the works of Creation without appointing one day ſpecially for this purpoſe, neither could this bleſſed day have been ſo worthily kept, as by reſting from all works upon it, and not doing ordinary works of dreſſing the garden in part, and in part meditating upon divine things, but by being wholly ſequeſtred from all manuall works hereunto. Again, the Lord in appointing this Sabbath had reſpect, not only to mans preſent happy eſtate, but to that which he ſaw, he would ſoon fall into, when it ſhould be moſt needull. For the example of the Gentiles and Patriarks alledged, I doubt not, but howſoever no mention is made hereof in the ſacred hiſtory, yet the holy Patriarks did devoutly keep this day: for many things, that were done then, are not related. And for others, it is no marvel, if being ſo farre depraved all memory of a Sabbath was blotted out amongſt them. Yet Euſebius lib. 13. præpar. Evang. cap. 7. reciteth ſome paſſages of Linus, Homer, and Heſiod, the old Divines of the Heathen, wherein they ſpeak of the Sabbath day. As for the not mentioning of the Patriarks examples in the command: it is not to be marvelled at, all things being delivered in ſo great brevity, and Gods own example, which was moſt moving, being urged. Laſtly, it is true, that man in paradiſe had but one expreſſe commandement, this being a duty to be learned from example, and hearing God bleſſing this day, thus putting more excellency upon it, than upon any other day of the week, according to which it could not be ſpent, but by being more wholly devoted to divine worſhip and contemplation. Touching Gods bleſſing of the ſeventh day, the Rabbines in the book called Bereſhith Rabbah ſay, that it is received from the bleſſing that is on high, and is the abundant wealth of the world, as Gods bleſſing is ſaid to make rich. If it be applyed to the ſeventh thouſand year, he bleſſed it, becauſe then all ſouls ſhall be bound in the bundle of life. And to ſhew, that the Sabbath is all day, he ſaith not evening and morning.

Verſe 3. Becauſe in it he reſted from all the workes, which God created by making; Calvin and before him the vulgar Latine, and Marlorat read it, quæ creavit ut faceret. Auguſtine, quæ inchoavit facere. Our new tranſlation, which God created and made. But the Hebrew is לעשות which Zanchy expoundeth two wayes, either by making, or ad faciendum to do, intimating that the creatures ſhould not be idle, but produce from thence forward the like unto themſelves. Auguſtine followeth the Septuagint in his reading. The beſt interpretation is, to take it, as divers learned in the Hebrew tongue do, as an Hebraiſme, by making to make, the meaning being nothing elſe, but that God made and formed every creature in all the lineaments and parts thereof, and ſo the beſt reading is, he created by making, cauſing preſently all things by his Almighty Power power to be, which by his Word he commanded ſhould be. And in ſaying thus it is allowed to the creating of things before deſcribed, as touching the Firmament, God ſaid, let there be a Firmament. And immediately it is added, God made the Firmament. And again, God ſaid, let there be lights, and by and by God made two great lights, &c. They are then too ſharp ſighted, that finde out here an ordinance, that theſe things thus created, ſhould make others like to themſelves: for it is both very improper to ſay, that the creatures generating, is a making, and if it be thus taken, every one ſhould make the like, which is not ſo in any heavenly body, or ſpirit. And of the ſame ſort is that expoſition, wherby it is interpreted, to order and to diſpoſe thereof to a certain end, as ſome interpret it. But I reſt in the plaine meaning.

Chap. 1 6,7. Chap 1,14,16.

Verſe 4.

Theſe are the generations of the heavens and the earth, &c. Theſe words are a concluſion of the preceding Hiſtory, as if he had ſaid, thus were the heavens and the earth and all things therein contained made by Gods Almighty Power, at ſuch time, as it pleaſed God to create them, having no preexiſtence, but all made out of nothing. And the name יהוה is here firſt vſed, becauſe all things were now perfected, according to ſome Hebrewes, as Vatablus hath it, Whereas it is ſaid, in the day, by day it is to be underſtood, the time, as Eſa 29. c. 48. For they vvere made, not of one, but in ſixe dayes, ſo Ferus, of the name יהוה ſee, Exod. 3.15.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Fagius.

Verſe 5. Queſt.

And every plant of the field, before it was in the earth. Here a queſtion may be made, why next unto the heavens and the earth, plants and hearbs are mentioned againe, and not other creatures rather, vvhich are more excellent, and vvhy in ſpeaking of the Plants, he ſaith, before they were? To the firſt Zanchy anſvvereth, that his purpoſe here being to teach, hovv all things vvere in the beginning made by God, he ſingleth out theſe ſpecially, becauſe moſt doubt might be made of theſe, as being ſuch, that they might be thought to have been put forth by the proper vertue of the earth, or by mans induſtry helping the ſame. Wherefore that thy might plainly appear to have been made by God, he ſaith, that they vvere before that any raine had fallen upon the earth, and before there vvas a man in the World. To the ſecond, the Hebrewes anſvver eaſily, as Fagius ſhevveth, by reading it, as a nevv ſentence thus, And every plant of the field was not yet upon the earth, &c. For the Lord had not yet made it to raine. Whereas it is againſt this objected, the earth vvas made to bring forth plants and hearbes before this, upon the third day. Rabbi Solomon anſvvereth, that they vvere indeed brought forth, but ſprung no further, but to the ſuperficies of the earth, and ſo did not much appeare, till that by the falling of the raine they ſhot further out. Others of the Hebrewes ſay, that not all, but ſuch plants and herbes are meant, as grow in grounds husbanded by the art of man, and therefore they ſay, that they are called, plants of the field, שדה ſignifying a field manured and not of אדמה ſignifying the earth in Generall. But the ſolution of Rabbi Solomon is eaſily taken away: becauſe it is not ſaid in the Text, that they appeared not, but they were not, ſo that they were not ſo much as in the bud, and firſt beginning to appear. And for the other ſolution, it is improbable, becauſe although this diſtinction may be maintained, yet a field manured being part of the earth, and man not being able by his art to make any new ſpecies of plants, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that when it is ſaid, there were no plants of the field then, there were none at all, either artificiall or naturall, in all the earth. There is then a better ſolution, that this is ſpoken by way of capitulation, as it is plain touching man, who was made, chap. 1. But here it is ſaid, there was not a man, and ſo likewiſe of the woman, verſe 20. The meaning then is, in the firſt day, When God created the heaven and the earth, plants and hearbes were not yet, but all was as a confuſed Chaos covered over with water: yea, when there was a ſeparation of the waters from the dry land, they were not till God cauſed the earth to bring them forth, and this was done alſo by extraordinary meanes, no raine having yet fallen, till the Sun, Moon, and Zanchius.

Fagius.

R. Solomon.

Calvin.

and Starres were made, but the earth being otherwiſe watered and made fruitfull. But neither Calvin, nor any of ours, nor any of the ancient Fathers read theſe words thus, but as we tranſlate them, making one ſentence together with the former. And to make the ſenſe more plaine, one ſupplieth them thus. And in the day, that God made every plant, which was not before in the earth. And if the words be thus underſtood, there can no ſuch queſtion be further moved, as was made before: or as we read it, and every plant, before that it was. The meaning is plaine, that God made plants, and trees, and hearbs, and adorned the earth herewith, there being none before, nor naturall cauſes to produce them, as raine, and ſuch like, as now there be. And ſo the next words, for God had not cauſed it yet to raine upon the earth, are added, as a reaſon, why the making of plants, &c. Was aſcribed unto God, as his immediate worke.

Calvin.

Vatablus.

Verſe 6. And there went up a miſt from the earth and watered the ground. The Greek and Latine interpreters, for a miſt, read a fountain aſcended from the earth, and watered the ground. Whereupon a difficult queſtion hath been moved, how a ſpring or fountain could do this, the earth being ſo large? Auguſtine and other Latine Expoſitours after him, and Philo before, anſwere, that fountaine in the ſingular number is put for fountaines, wherewith being in all parts, the earth vvas vvatered, before that it rained: or elſe if it vvere but one, it overflovving at certain times vvatered all, as Nilus did the Egyptian grounds afterwards. And the interlineary gloſſe addeth, that till Noahs flood there vvas no rain, but the earth vvas thus vvatered. Albinus ſaith, that all the ground of paradiſe onely is meant, vvhich vvas compaſſed vvith great vvaters. But the ſpeech is more generall, it vvatered the whole face of the earth. And the vvatering of Eden is ſpoken of verſe 10. as a diſtinct thing herefrom. And that a fountain, or fountains ſhould ſvvell up to vvater all the earth is incredible, becauſe then ſome parts muſt be covered deep again vvith vvaters, vvhilſt they ſvvelled up to water the high mountains, and ſo the vvorld muſt for a time be brought again to the firſt conſiſtence, vvhen the vvaters covered all. As for that of the gloſſe, it cannot poſſibly be true, becauſe the Sun ſhining, and exhalations being made in thoſe dayes, as vvell as novv, vvhich are the cauſe of rain, there could not but be rain. The Caldee Paraphraſt therefore expoundeth it better by a cloud, but becauſe the vvord אד may beſt of all be tranſlated a vapour, our Traſlation is to be preferred, and it is alſo confirmed by Theodoret out of Aquila, Tranſlating it in like manner, a miſt or vapour, of vvhich clouds vvere aftervvards ingendered, which ſhoure dovvne rain.

Auguſt. de Gen. ad literam lib.5 cap.9.

Philo.

Gloſſ. interlin.

Albinus.

Cald. Paraph.

Theod.

Verſe 7. And the Lord God formed man of the duſt of the ground, &c. Moſes having briefly ſet forth the Creation of man, both male and female, in the firſt Chapter, now becauſe mans excellency above other earthly creatures doth require it, and that it may be underſtood, in what manner and order they were made, he returneth to the Creation of man again, to ſet it forth more diſtinctly. According to the Hebrew, the words are, God formed man, the duſt of the ground, the Septuagint tranſlate it, taking the duſt of the ground, the vulgar Latine, of the mud of the ground, becauſe the watering of all the earth was ſpoken of before by a vapour, which maketh duſt mud, or dirt. It is, as Vatablus hath it, an Hebraiſme, which is frequent, the prepoſition of, being placed after duſt, which ſhould go before. And yet, according to Fagius, the Hebrew words thus placed are moſt ſignificatiue, ſhewing that man indeed is yet nothing, but duſt, to make him humble. The word עפר duſt ſignifieth the ſmalleſt duſt, that is, which is to be conſidered to extoll the Almighty Power of God the more, in making out of it ſo goodly a body.

Vatablus.

Fagius.

Aug. Civit. Dei, lib. 13. c. 28.

The word, formed, is properly finxit, framed after the manner of a potter, but that, as Auguſtine ſaith, it being ſo neer that word, which ſignifieth to fain, the word formed, hath rather been choſen to expound it by.

And

And breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, and the man became a living ſoul. Here three queſtions offer themſelves. Firſt whether the ſoul and body of man were not made together, but the ſoul after the body, as here it ſeemeth? Anſwer; Some hold that notwithſtanding this order thus plainly ſet down; the ſoul was not made after, but together with the body, both becauſe it is ſaid, God made man of the duſt of the earth, whereas the body onely is not man, but body and ſoul together, and alſo becauſe at the time of creation, God made no work but fully perfect at the firſt. Thus Thomas Aquinas, and not he alone, but before him ſome ancient fathers, as Gregori. Nyſſen. and Damaſcen, and Auguſtine ſeemeth to have held the ſame, and generally all the Schoolmen. But on the contrary ſide Chryſoſtome is for the order intimated in the words Hom. 12. and 13. in Gen. and Gennadius, and Toſtatus, and Ferus, &c. And the ſame is plainly confirmed, 2 Eſdras 3.5. where it is ſaid, thou Lord gaveſt man a body without life, and then didſt breath into it, &c. As for the reaſons before alledged, they are of little force. It is true indeed, the body without the ſoul is not man, yet becauſe this is that which is ſeen, it is called man, being by it ſelf, and might well be ſo called, if we conſider the word tranſlated man, for it is אדם earth. By this name he is called before his inlining by a ſoul in reſpect of the matter, out of which he was made, and to remember this for his humiliation, the ſoul being infuſed into the body, he is ſtill ſo called. Again, the ſoul came by Gods breathing in his face or noſtrils, therefore the body with the face and other limbes was firſt made, and then immediately the ſoul. Touching the perfect ſtate of each creature at the firſt making thereof, I ſee no reaſon, why it ſhould be held neceſſary, that it ſhould be perfect at the firſt inſtant, but rather by degrees, before that the Lord left it. Becauſe ſome time was ſpent about the making of particular ſpecies of creatures, as ſix whole dayes about the whole work of Creation.

Queſt. 1.

Thom. Aquin. part. 1 quæſt. 9. Greg. Nyſſ. lib. de homine, c. 29. 30 Damaſc. de fide orthodoxa c. 12 Auguſt lib. de Gen. contra Manich. c. 8.

Secondly, what ſpirit was this, of vvhich the text ſpeaketh, that was breathed into him In Hebrew it is נשמת חיים the breath of lives, not רוח. Some have held the ſoul of man, becauſe God is ſaid to have breathed it into him, to be part of the divine ſubſtance; as Chriſt afterwards breathed and gave the holy Ghoſt to ſignifie, that it was of the ſame ſubſtance; as the fathers generally teach. But Lactantius onely hath been thought to have been in this errour amongſt them, that the ſoul of man is of the ſubſtance of God. Amongſt others many have held it, as the Manichees and Priſcillianiſts, as Auguſtine relateth and confuteth it. So likewiſe Plato and other heathen Poets, as Zanchy ſaith. But this opinion is moſt falſe, becauſe then a part of God ſhould be ſubject to ſin, and to be damned. Others are ſo farre from underſtanding by this breath of life a part of the divine ſubſtance, as that they will have ſo much of the ſoul of man onely underſtood, as whereby he liveth, the reaſonable ſoul not being meant here, but amongſt others the reaſonable ſoul of man is generally underſtood with all the faculties of it, vegetative, ſenſitive, and rationall. Zanchy reaſoneth earneſtly, as there is good cauſe againſt that opinion. For to underſtand that part of the ſoul onely, whereby a man liveth, were to divide that, which is indiviſible, or to affirm two ſouls to be in one man, or that Moſes ſpeaking of the inferiour part of the ſoul omitted to ſpeak of the principall. Moreover the words are moſt ſignificative to expreſſe the reaſonable ſoul with all the faculties, the breath of lives, in the plurall number; thus alſo Cajetan Others will have the word lives put thus in the plurall number, to ſhevv that he breathed into both his noſtrils, ſome, that he ſhould live a moſt long life, ſome, that man ſhould live a double life, here and hereafter, ſome, that hereby vvas intimated the double life of mans ſoul in the body, and vvhen it is ſeparated therefrom, others laſtly the naturall life, and the life of grace, but I reſt in the firſt and laſt but one. If any ſhal ſtumble at the vvord נשמה breath, vvhereby the ſoul of a beaſt is alſo ſet forth, it is alſo called רוח Eccleſ. 12.7. Moreover the Lactant. Inſtitut. lib. 2 c. 13. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. lib. 7 cap. 2.

Queſt. 2.

Oecolampad. Marloratus. Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Cajetan.

word נפש ſignifying the ſoul, is derived from breathing, and ψυχὴ in Greek, a ψυχάζω refrigero, and anima in Latine from ἄνεμος the wind, becauſe it cometh and goeth with the breath. Now this act of breathing, when God created the ſoul of man, hath been thought by ſome to have been done, as the words ſound, the Sonne of God taking a humane body to him, and both forming man with his hands, and breathing out of that body into his noſtrils. Zanch. Eucubinus, Oleaſter. But others more generally hold the ſpeech to be figurative, breathing being aſcribed unto God, when he created the ſoul of man, for divers ſignifications. Firſt, to ſhew, that God could as eaſily make the ſoul, as one of us can breath. Secondly, to ſhew, that the ſoul is not drawn out of any prejacent matter, but made of nothing, and therefore is immateriall and immortall. Theodoret. Thirdly, to ſhew, that the ſoul is created and infuſed together, according to that ſaying, Deus infundendo animam creat, & creando infundit. Laſtly, to ſhew that the ſoul of man is capable of grace, life, and wiſdome, which come out of Gods mouth. Thus Theodoret; I hold with the former opinion, both becauſe it is ſaid, that God breathed, and formed, and afterwards he appeared unto, and talked with Adam and Evah in the garden, which muſt needs be in a body. Neither is it any way abſurd to hold thus, and thus the words may be properly taken, whereas otherwiſe we muſt flee to an allegory, which we ought not to do, but where neceſſity inforceth to it. And being thus underſtood, here is nothing that maketh for the former errour, that the ſoul is of the ſubſtance of God, but againſt it. Becauſe as Auguſtine reaſoneth of the breath, which cometh from the ſpirit of a man is not any part of his ſpirit it ſelf, but the ayr raiſed thus by the power of his Spirit: ſo the ſoul infuſed in to man by Gods breathing, being none other, but a breath coming from God, cannot be a part of God, but ſome other thing made thus by him. Auguſt. de Gen. ad literam. lib. 7 cap. 2. But yet howſoever the ſoul was put in at the noſtrils, whereby we breath, it is not to be thought to be the breath, although it cometh and departeth herewith: for then it ſhould be nothing but ayr, and ſo diſſolved into the ayr, whereas being departed out of the body, it ſubſiſteth by it ſelf. It is then Gods breath infuſed into the body, which must afterwards return to be at his diſpoſing again, but not our breath, this being but an effect thereof. Eccl. 12.7. Auguſtine laboureth much in finding out, whether the ſoul were created of nothing, and becauſe if ſo, all ſouls of men muſt needs be yielded to be created likewiſe, and then God did not finiſh all his works of creation in ſix dayes; he diverſly examineth this point, but in the end concludeth, that it muſt needs be either made of nothing, or that, out of which it was made, is latent to us. But others generally hold, as was ſaid before out of Theodret, that the ſoul was made of nothing, being herein different from all things made of prejacent matter, that they are corruptible, but that eternall. As for the objection, that thus it muſt needs be yielded, that God did not in ſix dayes finiſh all his works of creation, it is eaſily anſwered, he created all the ſpecies, which is meant, when he is ſaid to have made all in ſix dayes, ſo that he maketh no more new ſpecies, but not all the individuals, theſe remaining to be made ſucceſſively to the worlds end. Some becauſe they have thought this objection could not be anſwered, have held, that a certain number of ſouls were made at the beginning, yea before the world, and kept by God in the heavens, but brought forth and infuſed into the bodies of men, as they were made. Plato.Orig. Hebræi. Thus Plato, and after him Origen, and divers of the Hebrews. But this cannot ſtand, if we reaſon either philoſophically, or divinely. For the ſoul according to Philoſophy, is an act of the body and the form thereof, wherefore it cannot be before the body: again, if ſouls were all in the beginning, they muſt be buſied about ſomething, before their infuſing into the body, which cannot but be either good or evil, yet it is ſaid of Jacob and Eſau, before they were born, that they had neither done good nor evill. And unto theſe we may adde, that if the ſoul had been made before the body, God ſhould have in the making of man proceeded in a diverſe manner from his pro-proceedings in all other workes of creation, because that therein he still proceeded from the lesse to the more perfect actions, other creatures being first more rude and imperfect, then perfected by the addition of that, which did chiefly conduce to perfection, thus Zancky. And to this we may add the order of making mans body first, and then the soul spoken of before. Zanch. de oper. Dei. Quest. 3.

Thirdly; how is man said to be made a living soul, and whether he were at the first perfect, in respect of the limbes and parts of the body? Answer, It is generally agreed, that the word soul, here is put for man. Adam was made a living man. For thus the word soul is commonly used, man being set forth hereby. Whereas this sentence, the first man was made a living soul, hath an opposite sentence set against it; 1 Cor. 15. The last Adam was made a quickening spirit, the meaning is not, that the last Adam Christ was all spirit, and had no true naturall body, but whereas the first Adam did live himself onely by vertue of the soul put into him, the second Adam putteth life into others also, and that not a naturall, but a spirituall life, the life of grace, so the first was made a living man, the second a man inlivening others. Touching the body of man, when he was first created, it was by consent of all, perfect in all the lineaments thereof, as other creatures then were: for being but newly made, they are bidden to increase and multiply. Some think, that they were, as we, about 30 yeers of age, but others, as at 50, because that must needs have been the juvenile age, when men lived so long. And if so, Adam living till 930. he was of the greatest age of any that ever lived, viz. 980. whereas Methusalem lived but 960. Touching the greatnesse of Adams body, some have thought him to have been as great as a Giant, yea the greatest of Giants, because, Iosh. 14. It is said, that Hebron was in times past called Chiriath-Arba, and that Adam the greatest, was there set amongst the sons of Anak, which were Giants. And unto this Jerem agreeeth, affirming Adam to have been buryed there. And Moses-Barcephas alledgeth sundry authors, affirming Adam to have been of so vast a body, as that he waded through an Ocean, when he went out of Paradise into the other parts of the world, where we now dwell. But although we cannot, but think Adam to have been of a very great body, yet a Giant doubtlesse he was not, because they are spoken of, Gen. 6. as springing up then in the world. And for that place, Josh. 14. howsoever the Septuagint read it so, yet according to the Hebrew, it is, this Arba was a great man amongst the Anakims, &c. For Adam is commonly held not to have been buried there, but upon Mount Calvary. See Cyprian, Serm. de risur. Christi. Epiph. lib. 2. Contra haref. c. vlt. August. serm. 70. de immolat, Isaac, &c. Touching the place, where Adam was made, some thinke it to have been in Paradise, but because God is said to have set him in Paradise, others hold, that he was made elsewhere, and brought and placed there by the Lord, after his Creation. Joan. Lucidus de Emendat. tempor. l. 1. c. 4. Hieronym. in Matth. 27. Moses Barcephas de paradiso. Zanch. de oper. Dei.

And the Lord God planted a Garden Eastward in Eden, and there he put the man, whom he had formed, ver. 9. And out of the ground the Lord God made to grow every tree, that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food, the tree of life also, &c. Verse 8.

For these words, The Lord God planted, Zanchy readeth it, the Lord God had planted, referring it to the third dayes worke, but it is mentioned here again, by way of capitulation, to come more particularly to the description of this most pleasant place. Thus also Calvin, Vatablus and generally all Expositours, except Basil, who speaketh of Paradise, as being made after the creation of man, but he was herein deceived by the placing of these words, for as the earth in generall, and all other things necessary for the use of man were made before him, that he might want nothing conducing to a blessed estate, at his first coming into the World, so that place in particular, wherein he was to dwell, was without doubt made and planted with all varieties also, as a most magnificent palace for him, so great a Lord, and so much tendered by his God and Maker. Zanch. de oper. Dei. Basil. de paradiso. Orat. 11.

A garden in Eden, the word גן translated garden, is by the Septuagint rendered dred παράδεισος, Paradiſe, and that not unfitly, ſeeing פרדס in Hebrew ſignifieth a pleaſant garden, and in the Perſian tongue, Paradiſus ſignifieth a magnificent garden of a King, as Calvin hath it. Now the Lord is ſaid to have planted this, the more to expreſſe the excellency of the place, becauſe when ordinary things are ſpoken of, nothing elſe is ſaid, but God ſaid, let ſuch or ſuch a thing be, but when any thing extraordinary is made, as man, God formed him, and of this garden it is ſaid, God planted it, a ſpeech uſed to the capacity of the common people. God being herein compared to man, digging and planting, when he doth not any ſuch manuall labour, as Oecolampadius ſpeaketh, but he planted, by commanding ſuch a pleaſant place to be, Chryſoſtome. And this place for the pleaſantneſſe thereof called a garden, was in Eden Eaſtward, The word Eden, as Zanchy hath it, ſignifieth either the beginning, or pleaſure. According to the ſecond, Jerom tranſlateth it, and ſo ſome gather, that Paradiſe was in no certain place of the world, but all over the earth, being repleniſhed, with ſuch variety of delightfull trees and plants, as that it was all over wonderfully pleaſant. And according to this thing ſignified hereby, viz. pleaſure, τρυφὴ in Greeke ſeemeth to take the name herefrom. But whatſoever the word Eden ſignifieth, it is certain, that a particular place properly called Eden is here meant, both becauſe it is ſaid to have been Eaſtward, and not in all quarters of the world, and becauſe thoſe rivers, which did compaſſe it about, did not compaſſe all, but one part of the earth onely. Moreover the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh of Eden, as one particular countrey, and of the children of Eden, and ſo doth Ezechiel. But what countrey this is, is a great queſtion, and where it is at this day.

Calvin.

Oecolampad. Chryſoſt. Hom. 13. in Gen.

Hieron.

Eſay 37.12. Ezech. 27.23.

That Eden is the name of one place in particular, almoſt all the Greeke Fathers agree, and the learned Rabbines of the Jews, Kimbi, Abraham, Ben-Ezra, and Solomon. Whereas the argument drawn from the quarter of the world, to which ward Paradiſe is ſaid to ſtand, viz. to the Eaſt, is illuded, by tranſlating מקדם from the beginning, as Jerom doth, hence labouring to prove, that it was made firſt, before the heaven and the earth, it is eaſily confuted becauſe the rivers here ſpoken of, do evince a particular place in the Eaſt, and ſo it is tranſlated by the Septuagint, Chryſoſtome, and Theodoret, Gregorie Niſſen, &c. And both Severus and Damaſcen yeeld this as a reaſon, why moſt anciently, in praying men turned their faces to the Eaſt, viz. As lamenting their ejection out of the earthly Paradiſe for ſin, and ſighing after a reſtitution to the heavenly.

Kimbi, Abrahan, Ben Ezra, Solomon.

Hieron.

Severus in Orat. Dam. ſc. lib. 4. de fide orthodox. c. 13.

Now for the queſtion, what countrey this Eden was, wherein Paradiſe ſtood. Some ancient writers have held, that it was beyond the Ocean, an huge tract of ground altogether unknown unto us, and others, that it was in ſome place elevated above the reſt of the earth, and out of all danger of winds and ſtormes, froſts and ſnowes, &c. But the moſt received, and moſt probable opinion is, that it was in that countrey, which is now called Meſopotamia, or neere unto it, both becauſe the deſcription of the rivers agreeth hereunto, and becauſe the eaſt ſpoken of in the Scripture, commonly ſetteth forth either Meſopotamia, or ſome other countrey about the Sinus Perſicus, as Perſia, Armenia, and Arabia. When Jaacob went into Meſopotamia, he is ſaid to have gone into the Eaſt countrey. And Balaam is ſaid to have been brought to curſe Iſrael from the mountaines of the Eaſt, which Moſes afterwards expoundeth of Meſopotamia. Job, that was an Idumean, is ſaid to have been of the Eaſt, and the Wiſe men, that came to Chriſt, were moſt probably Arabians, and yet they are alſo ſaid to have come out of the Eaſt. From whence we may gather, that whatſoever countrey lay from Judea towards the Perſian Gulfe, was in the Scriptures account the Eaſt, and not any part beyond that, as India, or ſome unknown part, further then India. For the Arabians, Idumeans, Amalekites, and Moabites, as alſo the people of Meſopotamia were Eaſtward between Perſia and Judea.

Ephrem. Damaſc. lib. 2. de fide orthodoxa c. 11.

Gen. 29. Numb. 23. Deut. 23.

That

That paradiſe was in ſome more remote part of the world ſeparate by the Ocean from all the reſt, is moſt improbable, becauſe man being caſt out could not then have come into theſe known parts as he did. And that it could neither be there, nor ſo high elevated, as ſome have imagined, the known rivers about it do plainly evince.

Moreover Cain is ſaid to have dwelt on the eaſt ſide of Eden, and to have built there, ſo that it is moſt probable, that man after his ejection out of paradiſe kept ſtill in thoſe parts, where paradiſe ſtood, and therefore it was not in another unknown world, but in the Eaſt Countrey, wherewith they were anciently familiarly acquainted.

Origen who turned this whole hiſtory into an allegory, hath expounded paradiſe onely ſpiritually and myſtically, as if there had never been any ſuch place upon earth, and after him Ambroſe and others: but the deſcription of the ſite and the bounding of it doth plainly ſhew them to have been in a great errour. But how great this pleaſant garden was, what uſe the reſt of the earth ſhould have been put unto, if man had not ſinned, why ſo delectable a place was made for man to dwel in ſo ſhort a time, and to be excluded for ever after, and to what uſe it ſince ſerved, and what reaſon there is, why no man could ſince finde out the garden, the entrance into which was denyed unto man for ever after, divers Expoſitours conjecture diverſly. Touching the firſt, Ephrem ſaith, that the place, where paradiſe was, was greater, than all the known parts of the earth; others not pitching upon any particular greatneſſe, that it was very great, becauſe it ſhould have conteined all Adams poſterity, if he had not ſinned. But Toſtatus gueſſeth, that the length of it was but about 12 miles, and the circumference 36 or 40. So large, as the firſt would have it, it could not poſſibly be, becauſe it was but in one countrey, Eden ſince called Meſopotamia, and onely a part thereof, and yet I think it not ſo little, as Toſtatus, becauſe what could ſuch a quantity of ground do towards the maintaining of Adam and his children, if he had ſtood, when they ſhould have been multiplyed into thouſands? But the Scripture being ſilent about this, nothing can be ſaid certainly; it might be ſo great, it might be greater, it might be leſſer, and ſo fit for a man to walk about and dreſſe and look to it, as Adam was appointed to do, there being a liberty for his poſterity, as they multiplyed, to go out into other parts of the earth, and to repleniſh them, which, had not man ſinned, ſhould all have been moſt fruitful and pleaſant to the inhabitants as paradiſe it ſelf, and ſo I have reſolved the ſecond queſtion alſo, that the reſt of the earth in time ſhould have been all inhabited by man, as God gave him dominion over all. Touching the third, ſome of the Ancients have held, that although man ſinning was caſt out of paradiſe never to be received in again in this life, yet it ſerveth ſtil for excellent uſe, viz. for Enoch and Elias to inhabit in, and for all the ſouls of the faithful til Doomes day, as appeareth by one in particular, the theif upon the croſſe, to whom being ready to die Chriſt ſaid, this day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe. Thus Juſtin Martyr reſponſ. ad Orthodoxorum Qu. 75. 76. & 85. and Tertullian in his Apologeticks, and Iſidorus de vita & obitu Patriarcharum, the Maſter of the Sentences, and divers Schoolmen. But this reaſon cannot ſtand, becauſe Elias is ſaid expreſly not to have been carried into paradiſe, but to have been taken up into heaven: and as for the ſouls of the faithful, and of the thief upon the croſſe in particular, although it were by the Lord ſaid unto him, this day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe, yet it is not neceſſary hereby to underſtand an earthly paradiſe, but rather an heavenly: for ſo paradiſe is expounded by Saint Paul, where he ſpeaketh of a man taken up into paradiſe or into the third heaven. And we do confidently hold, as the Preacher ſpeaketh, that when the body goeth to the earth, the ſpirit returneth to God, that gave it, and as the Apoſtle Paul, being diſſolved we go to Chriſt in heaven, which is beſt of all, and being uncloathed of our earthly tabernacle, we are no time left naked, but cloathed immediately with an heavenly. The para-

Origen.
Ambroſ.
See Chryſoſt. impugning this errour. Hom. 13. in Geneſ.

Ephrem.

Toſtatus.

Juſtin. Martyr.
Tertullian.
Iſidorus.
2 Kings 2. 11.

2 Cor. 12. 2, 3.

Eccl. 12. 1, 2.

Phil. 1. 17.

2 Cor. 5. 1, 2.

paradiſe then, wherein Adam was placed is not now uſed to receive ſouls into it. And as for that opinion touching Enoch and Elias living there, it is a meer imagination deviſed by thoſe, that will by no means admit, that any went bodily into heaven before our Lord and Saviour Chriſt, as limbus patrum was deviſed, becauſe they held, that no ſouls went thither, till that he by entring had made way for them alſo. For there is nothing in all the holy Scriptures, that giveth any hint of ſuch a matter, but onely to make it a colourable ground for this, the vulgar Latine Eccleſ. 44. hath theſe words touching Enoch: Enoch pleaſed God, and was tranſlated to paradiſe, that he might give repentance to the Gentiles: but in the Greek there is no mention of paradiſe, onely it it ſaid, Enoch pleaſed God and was tranſlated, &c. And therefore ſome Ancients who have held, that Enoch and Elias went not up into heaven, have rejected this opinion, as Rupertus, who ſaith. The Scripture doth no where ſay, that Enoch and Elias were tranſlated into paradiſe, where they might eat of the tree of life, and live for ever, but they were ſo taken away, that they were lead into ſome ſecret countrey of the earth, there to live in all tranquility, till at the end of the world they ſhall return again and dye.

Rupert. lib 3 de Trinit. & oper. ejus c. 33.

And to the ſame effect ſpeaketh Gregory, Hom. 29. in Evang. And Auguſtine ſaith, as it is certain, that Enoch and Elias ſtil live, ſo it is uncertain, whether they be in paradiſe or elſwhere. The true reaſons then, why God made this delectable place, out of which he knew that Adam for ſinning ſhould ſoon be ejected, were theſe. Firſt, that there being a place of ſuch happineſſe before his eyes, out of which he was caſt for ſinning, he might be pricked with the more ſorrow, when he beheld, what goodly things he had loſt by ſinne. Secondly, That this place might as an Embleme in ſome ſort expreſſe the bleſſedneſſe of the place, to which we ſhal come afterwards by faith and repentance, to be the more excited hereunto. Thirdly, man being made ſo excellent, it was fit, that he ſhould have a place to dwel in anſwerable to this his condition. Touching the laſt, why no man can tell at this day, where paradiſe is? If they may be heard, who wil have paradiſe to be in the unknown parts of the earth beyond all the Ocean, or ſo high that it is unacceſſible, the reſolution of this queſtion is eaſie, but they have been already confuted. Others there are who ſay, that there be ſo great Deſerts ful of ſuch cruel beaſts and poiſonous Serpents, and that there are ſuch high and ſteep mountains in the paſſage, and ſome places ſo infectious and killing all, that attempt to go over them, that none could ever come thither. But that of Chryſoſtome ſeemeth to me moſt probable, that before the floud the place, where paradiſe ſtood, vvas vvel knovvn unto men, onely they vvere prohibited entering by the Cherubin keeping the vvay, but vvhen the vvaters did overflovv all, the marks of that paſſage vvere demoliſhed, and all things vvere ſo confounded, that the certain place thereof, there being no evident ſignes of ſuch a place of pleaſure remaining, could never ſince by mortal men be knovvn any more. For that the foreſaid reaſons of the inacceſſibility of this garden are meerly imaginary appeareth, becauſe if men could not have come unto it, in vain had a guard been placed to keep man from entering. It vvas enough, that paradiſe continued til the floud, vvhen all earthly things, vvhich vvere made for mans uſe, vvere for his ſins deſtroyed again. From thence forvvard, although the plot of ground remaineth, yet God never meaning to make man ſo happy upon earth again, as he did Adam by his firſt Creation, it cannot be imagined, that he vvould replant that plot, and make it as delectable, as in times paſt, but let it lye novv, as other parts of the earth undiſtinguiſht by ſuch ſingularity.

Nuſquam Scriptura dat intelligi, quod Enoch & Eliam Deus tulerit in ipſum paradiſum, &c. Sed ità ſublati ſunt, & in ſecretam quandam regionem terræ ducerentur, &c. Auguſt. lib. 2. contra Pelag. c. 23.

Chryſoſtom.

Verſe 9. The tree of life.

Touching the tree of life, in the midſt of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evill.

It is ſaid, that God cauſed every tree, pleaſant to the ſight, and good for food, to grow in Paradiſe, and in particular, theſe two. So that man wanted

no

no content, but had the liberty of all deſirable variety, which aggravateth his ſin the more, in going notwithſtanding, beyond his bounds. As the tree of life, ſo that of the knowledge of good and evill was in the midſt of the Garden, Gen. 2.3. Whether they were two individuall trres onely, or two kindes of trees, Calvin maketh a queſtion here, but the Text is plaine, that they were onely two. The tree of life by the conſent of beſt expoſitours, was a tree, which yeelded ſuch fruit, that if the man had eaten thereof, he ſhould for ever have been free from all ſickneſſe, and from death it ſelf. Thus Auguſtine de civit. dei lib. 13.*c.*20. and after him Beda, who ſaith, it was called the tree of life, becauſe it received this vertue from God, that whoſo did eat of the fruit thereof, his body ſhould be confirmed in ſtable ſoundneſſe, and perpetuall ſolidity, neither ſhould he fall through any infirmity, or weakneſſe of age into a worſe eſtate, or dye. And to the ſame effect, Chryſoſtom. Hom. 13. in Gen. and Rupertus lib. 3, de trinit. & oper. eius cap. 30. Th. Aquin. part. 1. *quæ.*97. artic. 1. And Zanch. de oper. dei, &c. The other trees ſerved to nouriſh the body, and ſo to preſerve life, and for this end were to be eaten of from day to day, but this being once eaten of, made the man immortall, as appeareth by that, which is after the fall of man, added by the Lord; He ſtopt the paſſage to the tree of life, leſt man entering ſhould eat and live for ever. So the meaning is plain and evident, that this was a true materiall tree, as others were, and that by Gods appointment, it had this vertue to make a man live for ever. Touching which, we ought neither to make any queſtion, ſeeing God, who giveth to our ordinary food vertue to nouriſh, and preſerve this naturall life many yeers, could by his Almighty Power, if it pleaſed him, to ſome one edible thing being once taken, give vertue to preſerve it unto Eternity. And to ſhew, that in this tree there was ſuch vertue, it is ſaid, That by ſin death entered, ſo that, had not man ſinned, he had not been ſubject to dye at any time. Yet divers expoſitours there are, who not reſting in this, have deviſed other reaſons, why this tree was called the tree of life, Lignum Vitarum, the Wood of lives, in the Originall, by a phraſe uſually in Hebrew, putting the plurall often times for the ſingular, and the rather it is ſo here, becauſe of the long continuance of the life, which ſhould have been effected hereby, more than equivalent to many lives, as the lives of men have been ſince. Some will have this tree to have been onely intelligible, either divine wiſedome being meant hereby, which is called the tree of life, Proverbes 3. Or Chriſt the Lord, who is the Bread of life, or heavenly happineſſe, which is alſo called the tree of life, in Gods Paradiſe, *Revel.*2. Others acknowledging, that there was truly ſuch a tree, yet will have it onely a ſymboll, or ſigne of life received of God, which ſhould have continued ever, if man had not ſinned. Others, that it had vertue onely to preſerve life, for certain thouſands of yeers, after which men ſhould have been tranſlated to a more happy eſtate in Heaven, holding, that God would not put any more vertue into that tree, than was neceſſary, and therefore there being a time ſet, when this life ſhould have an end, it was ſufficient, if this tree preſerved it till then. But I reſt upon the former expoſition, being founded upon moſt certain grounds, and as for the tranſlation of man to an heavenly life, although it ſhould have been ſo, yet it is not neceſſary to hould, that then man ſhould have dyed, but contrarywiſe, that he ſhould have been taken up alive, and ſo have proceeded to live for ever, and therefore his life ſhould not have been preſerved by the tree of life, for a long time onely, but here for a long time, and in heaven upon his tranſlation, for ever. If it be demanded, whether, if man had not ſinned, all his poſterity muſt have had recourſe to this tree alſo, to live for ever, and how it could ſuffice for them all, inhabiting in all parts? It is to be thought, that God would have cauſed other ſuch trees to have grown elſewhere, as mankinde ſhould have been multiplied, it being as eaſie with him, to cauſe the earth to bring forth more, as one.

Calvin.

Auguſt.
Beda; Lignum vitæ dictum eſt, quia divinitus accepit hanc vim, & qui ex ejus fructu comederet, Corpus ejus ſtabili ſanitate, & perpetua ſolliditate firmaretur, nec ulla infirmitate, vel ætatis imbecillitate in deterius, vel in occaſum laberetur.
Gen.3.

Rom.5.

Origen.

Petrus Artopæus Auguſt. Eugubin. in Coſmopæia.
Hebræi.
*Scotus lib.*2. *Senten. diſt.*19. *quæſt.*1.

Touching the tree of knowledge of good and evill, there are alſo divers conjectures

The Tree of Knowledge of good and evil.

1 Ioſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. c 3.

2 Aug. lib. 8. de Gen. ad literam c. 6. 15.

3 Zanch. de oper. Dei.

4 Rupert. de Trinit. & oper. ejus lib. 2. c. 27.

5 Hebræi.

Fagius.

Pererius.

Video meliora proboque, deteriora ſequor.

jectures, why it was ſo called. Some becauſe there was vertue in the fruit thereof to acuate and ſharpen the wit, to know every good thing, and every evill. Others, becauſe man having eaten hereof knew, that it had been good to have obeyed God, in refraining from this fruit, but that it was evill to eat, and this he knew experimentally, ſo that by that which followed, they will have the name given to the tree, as the waters Maſſa, and Meribah, were called from the event, becauſe contention happened there.

Others, becauſe that tree did ſhew unto man, what was good, and what evill, viz. To obey God it was good, but to diſobey, evill. For to eate, or not to eate of the fruit of this tree, was in it ſelf nothing, but the command of God, made the eating, or not eating, good or evill. So that this tree being ſet to teach that onely to be good, which is agreeable to his will, and pleaſing unto him, and that evill, which is againſt his will, might well be called the tree of the knowledge of good and evill, becauſe it was then the onely rule, whereby good and evill might be known.

Others, that it was called the tree of knowledge, of good and evill, ironically, becauſe the Devil through his ſubtilty, made our firſt parents beleeve, that by eating thereof, their eyes ſhould be opened, and they ſhould know good and evill. For when they had eaten, God did but ironically ſay of them, behold man is become, as one of us, knowing good and evill, and if they had indeed attained to this knowledge, the Devill ſeemeth not to have been a lyar, as he is ſaid to have been from the beginning. As for the calling of this tree by this name, before the Devils ſuggeſting of ſuch a motiue unto Evah, it is anſwered, that this is done by Moſes, by anticipation, becauſe it ſtood afterwards as a monument of the Devils diſſimulation.

Laſtly others, that Adam and Evah were at the firſt, like little innocent children for knowledge, but by eating of the fruit of that tree, they came to underſtanding, like men and women, and hence the tree had this name, the tree of knowledge, of good and evill. Fagius ſaith, that ſome have held, that this tree was thus called, becauſe after the eating of it, man began to do things with judgement, election, will and pleaſure, doing all things before, out of a naturall power put into him in his Creation without ſin, as the heavens, and the heavenly Orbes do. And one there is, that ſaith, ſome have held, that this tree was thus called, becauſe God would hereby prove and try, whether our firſt parents would do good or evill, by obeying or diſobeying. Amidſt ſo great variety of expoſitions it is hard to judge, whether is the right, but when I do ſeriouſly conſider the circumſtances of this place, that they having eaten of this tree, had their eyes opened, Gen. 3.7. and God ſaid, Behold, Adam is become as one of us knowing good and evill. verſe 22. And they knew themſelves to be naked now, which they knew not before, I cannot incline to them, who thinke this to have been ſpoken ironically, or that God would hereby prove and know, whether they would do good or evil, but that this tree was ſo called, becauſe the eating of it, did avail indeed, to open mans eyes to ſee and know, how to do evil, and to forſake the good, whereas before he knew onely to do well. And that it was ſo, appeared by the ſequell of their eating, they knew that they were naked, that is, corrupt, and ſo thence forward, their privie parts eſpecially, ſhould be inſtruments of moſt ſhamefull luſts, which made them immediately to ſeek for meanes to hide them. Before they knew not, how to luſt, how to envy, hate, covet, or deceive, but having by this one ſin broken the ice, they are for ever after drenched in an ocean of ſins, as an hole being made through the roof of an houſe, or the ſide of a ſhip, water cometh in more and more, to the indangering both of the one and the other. They knew, what was good ſtill, but had no power to do it, but evil they knew ſo, of which they were altogether ignorant before, that they could not now any more but daily run into it, and ſpend their thoughts in wicked and vaine imaginations, according to that commonly known ſaying, I ſee better things, and approve them, but I follow the worſe, being the ſame with the the complaint taken up by the Apoſtle, *Rom.*7. And according to that, the imaginations of mans heart are onely evill continually. So that their eyes were opened, and yet they vvere more darkened in their eyes, as touching good, and by eating contrary to Gods command they laid a foundation to future blindneſſe, when as man by being accuſtomed to do evil had all ſenſe of goodneſſe taken away, as in thoſe, that for their ſinnes have been given over to a reprobate ſenſe: Or elſe becauſe the Lord ſaith afterwards; Man is become like one of us to know good and evill, haply this tree was called the tree of the knowledg of good and evil, becauſe having eaten of it, he knew the eating thereof to be evil by the fear and ſhame that immediately purſued him, but that to eat of the tree of life was good, both which it is moſt probable, that he knew not before, not the firſt, becauſe although the Lord threatened him, that ſhould eat of that tree, through the illuſion of the devill, he believed it not, nor the ſecond, becauſe otherwiſe he would ſurely have eaten of that tree firſt: for now ſo ſoon as he had eaten of the forbidden tree, the Lord maketh haſt to expell him out of paradiſe, leſt knowing the vertue of this tree, he ſhould put out his hand, and take of this fruit and live for ever. That our firſt parents were ignorant like innocent children before the eating of this tree, is eaſily confuted: for how then could Adam have given fit names to all creatures? Moreover it doth derogate much from Gods goodneſſe towards man to hold, that there being any means to make him come to more perfection of knowledge, he ſhould interdict this unto him, and thus the expoſition of Joſephus alſo falleth to the ground. And it is unreaſonable to think, that man being indued with a reaſonable ſoul ſhould without the uſe of reaſon, before this eating, do all things that he did. But for that of Auguſtine, it is followed by moſt, and favoured by the Expoſition of the Caldee Paraphraſt, where it is thus read, the tree, the fruits whereof they that eat, diſcern between good and evill, and in like manner it is rendered in the Targum Hieroſolymitanum. But becauſe it was called the tree of knowledge, before that man had eaten of it, it ſeemeth not to have been called ſo from the event, becauſe then, as the waters of Meribah, it ſhould not have been called ſo till afterwards, as Zanchy alſo reaſoneth. And again, man is ſaid now to have known as God, *Gen.*3.22. whereas in God there is none experimental knowledg of evill. As for the opinion of an irony firſt rejected, whereas in favour thereof it is ſaid, that if their eyes had been indeed opened, the devill had not lyed unto them, it followeth not, becauſe his lie was in that he ſaid, they ſhould not dye at all. Laſtly, for Zanchyes expoſition, although it be true, which he ſaith, yet it ſetteth not forth all here meant. That tree was indeed a mean to know good and evil, to ſtand in obedience and diſobedience, but all circumſtances make it plain, that not the beholding but the eating thereof effected this, and that muſt needs be, as hath been already ſaid.

Gen.6.5.

Rom.1.28. Gen.3.22.

Gen.3.22.

Cald.Paraphraſtes. Targum Hieroſolym.

And hitherto of the literal meaning, now beſides this there is by the conſent of moſt a myſticall ſenſe alſo of theſe two trees to be conſidered for our further inſtruction. The tree of life repreſented Chriſt, the tree of knowledg, the law. For by Chriſt is life, and by the law cometh the knowledg of ſin and of vertue, of good and evil. And as theſe two trees ſtood in the midſt of paradiſe, ſo the Goſpel and the Law are in the midſt of the Church, and as they which by the Law ſeek to partake of the glory of God, ſhall prove this a fountain of miſery and confuſion to their ſouls, ſo if any diſclaiming righteouſneſſe by the Law ſeek to Chriſt onely, by him they ſhal be made to live for ever. Thus almoſt Zanchy. But Auguſtine ſpeaking more fully of all things here, ſaith, that by paradiſe myſtically the Church is ſet forth, by the trees bearing all manner of fruit, the faithfull fructifying by good works, by the four rivers, the four Evangeliſts, by the tree of life, Chriſt, and by the tree of knowledg of good and evill, mans free-wil, allowing to any man alſo, if he hath any other more fit thing, to bring it forth for the explaining of this myſtery, always provided, that it be acknowledged a true hiſtory and a faithful narration of things done.

Rom.7.

Aug.Civit.Dei, lib.13.c.21.

Verſe 10. And a River went out of Eden to water the garden, and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads, v. 11. The name of the firſt is Piſon, &c. In that he ſaith, a river went out of Eden, it may ſeem, that the four rivers hereafter deſcribed were in their originall but one and that this aroſe in Eden. But that the words are not ſo to be underſtood, is plain, becauſe the firſt heads of Euphrates and Tigris are divers. Both, ſaith Strabo, ſpring from the mountain Taurus, which divideth Armenia from Meſopotamia, but their fountains are diſtant one from the other 2500 furlongs, that is 300 miles, but about Babylon they meet, and run both in one channel. Nearchus who was Generall over Alexanders Navy, ſaith, that from the firſt ariſing of Euphrates to Babylon was 3300 furlongs, as Arrianus writeth, but before it cometh at the city Babylon, it falleth into Tigris in part, and ſo they running together in a ſinuous manner hereby compaſſing in a plot of Ground, out of which there is but one way to paſſe, do ſoon after divide again, and then ſubdivide; the firſt diviſion being into two, which ſeem to be Piſon and Gihon, after which they meet again, & then divide again running ſo into the red ſea: thus Petrus Artopæus hath gathered out of Pliny, Pomponius Mela, and Arrianus. The River of paradiſe then is here ſaid to be one, becauſe theſe two a great diſtance from their fountains come into one, and this their coming into one was in the Countrey of Eden pointed at, when it is ſaid, a River roſe out of Eden; for hereby not their firſt ariſing, but their next place to paradiſe, where they were but one great river, is ſet forth, and ſo by their ſinuous winding firſt on the left hand many miles, then turning circularly again on the right, till they came right over againſt their firſt beginning thus to wind, this river compaſſed paradiſe about, all but at one place, where the going out was. And having fetched this bout, it was parted into four heads ſoon after that it left paradiſe, the one of which is Piſon, compaſſing the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold, &c. This Piſon hath been generally held to be Ganges in India, from whence ſuch ſtore of gold cometh, as by Joſephus, Epiphanius, Auguſtinus, Hieronymus, Theodoret, &c. Arias Montanus and Vatablus alſo ſay, that this was Peru: whence the Spaniards now fetch their Gold, called otherwiſe Ophir in the Scriptures, becauſe the word tranſlated beſt is פרוים, ſo that whereas we read, the gold thereof was good, by the Septuagints it is rendered, the gold thereof was de loco peruaim. But it is certain, that Ganges in India cannot be meant by this Piſon, becauſe one river here mentioned, viz. Euphrates is wel known, and the diſtance betwixt it, and Ganges is computed to be 70 degrees, every degree according to Ptolemie being 62 miles, and ſo together 4300 miles, and therefore it is impoſſible, that if Euphrates ſprang out of the river of paradiſe, that Ganges ſhould ſpring from thence alſo, as it muſt needs do, if it be the ſame with Piſon. Moreover the land of Havilah, which this River is ſaid to compaſſe, is between Paleſtina and Aſſyria. For Moſes in this hiſtory ſaith, the Iſhmaelites dwelt from Havilah to Sur, which is towards Egypt, as a man goeth to Aſſyria. So alſo 1 Sam. cap. 15. That opinion therefore touching Ganges is rejected by Peter Martyr, Junius, and Tremelius, Zanchy, and almoſt all others of later times. But what river then is this Piſon? Some ſay, that it is the ſame with the river Tigris, or Chiddekel, being in one place called Tigris, but in an other, Paſis or Paſitgris, which word might eaſily be made out of Piſon. But Moſes ſaith, that they were four rivers, and not two called by divers names in divers places. Others therefore better ſay, that it is moſt probable, that Piſon and Gihon were leſſer rivers branching out of the other two, and therefore are paſſed over by Geographers of after times without being named. And hence it is doubtleſſe, that Expoſitours are put to ſo much trouble about the finding out of theſe two rivers in particular, becauſe who ſo ſhal travail into thoſe parts, ſhal find none at this day ſo called. Yet I am not of their mind, who wil have theſe two rivers

Strabo Geogra. lib. 11.

Plin. lib. 6. c. 27.

Arrian. de geſtis Alexand. lib. 8.

Verſe 11.

Ioſeph. lib. 1. Antiq.

Epiphan. in Ancorat Auguſt. lib. 8. de Gen. ad lit. c. 7.

Ptolemæ.

Gen. 25.

Petr. Martyr. Iunius, Tremel. Zanchius

Quint. Curtius lib. 5

Plin. lib. 6. c. 27.

Steuch. Eugubinus in Coſmopœia.

vers not to have any beginning, till that Euphrates having run a certain ſpace of ground from paradiſe ſendeth theſe two forth, when it cometh to Syria and Arabia: for ſo Eugubinus deſcribeth them. For Moſes here ſaith expreſly, the firſt was Piſon, ſo that this muſt needs be the neereſt head to paradiſe, and not Euphrates, and next to Piſon is Gihon. Others there are, that going altogether from that which hath been ſaid of theſe four rivers branching from one that cometh out of paradiſe, hold, that two of them are divided, viz. Euphrates, and Chiddekel, before the coming of the river into paradiſe, and the other two after. And whereas the text is againſt this, becauſe it is ſaid, thence it is divided into four heads, they anſwer, in the text it is onely, thence it was divided, & became into four heads; that is, in the flowing from Eden into paradiſe, it was parted into two, & afterwards into two more alſo; thus at length making four. But reckoning even this way Piſon and Gihon ſhal not be the firſt and ſecond rivers, but the third and fourth, which is againſt this narration of Moſes. Piſon therefore without doubt, was the firſt branch of that united river, and ſo the reſt followed in order. And ſurely, when Moſes wrote this, theſe Rivers were wel known to the inhabitants of thoſe parts, but ſince in long continuance of time, theſe names are obſolete and forgotten: and it is but loſt labour to inquire further after them. Haply theſe two may ſince by making new channels for them to run another way, have been dryed ſeeing ſuch great works have ſometimes been effected by great men, and then it is no marvail, that their names were no more amongſt Geographers recorded. Here I wittingly paſſe over the ſtrange conjectures of ſome, as that of Rupertus, holding, that all water naturally is ſalt, but coming through paradiſe it becometh ſweet like milk, and ſo floweth all over the world, or of others holding, that paradiſe was all the world, for theſe are abſurd and ſwerve altogether from the Text. From Havilah, which the firſt river compaſſed, it is likely, that the Caulateans deſcribed by Strabo, as dwelling in Arabia, took their name; for from Havilath it is eaſie to make the name Chavilateans, eſpecially if it be read as in the Hebrew, Chavilah. Touching the gold of that countrey, we read nothing in other places of the holy Scriptures, but Pſalm 72.15. onely that the countreys near to Paleſtina abounded in times paſt with gold we may gather from the huge maſſe of gold, that came in yearly to Solomon, not onely by his Navy, but in way of tribute and gifts ſent unto him. The Bdellium here ſpoken of, and the Onyx ſtone were, the one, according to Pliny, a little black tree like an Olive tree, the leafe like thoſe of an Oake, and the fruit like a vvild figge, grovving in India, Arabia, Media, and Babylon, and the other, viz. the Onyx ſtone, had the name from the nail of a mans hand, becauſe it vvas like unto it, the place vvhere it grevv, vvas alſo both India, vvhere theſe ſtones vvere vvith ſtreaks of red and vvhite, and Arabia, vvhere they vvere black, the vvhite compaſſing them about like girdles, as the ſame Pliny ſaith. The Septuagint tranſlate this, carbunculus, and praſinus, Joſephus calleth it a Sardonyx. Novv Moſes is thus punctual in ſetting theſe things dovvn, that vve might be aſſured, that paradiſe vvas a place, that had a true reall being upon earth, leaſt vve ſhould be deceived by them, that vvould aftervvards ſay, that there vvas never any ſuch place indeed, but ſomething elſe vvas allegorically ſet forth hereby.

Junius. Tremelius.

Rupert. de Trinit. & oper. ejus

Strabo geogr. lib. 15.

1 Kings 10.

Plin. lib. 12. c. 9.

Plin. lib. 37. 6.

The ſecond River is Gihon, the ſame is it that compaſſeth the whole land of Ethiopia. This River is by many held to be the river Nilus in Egypt, becauſe that compaſſeth the the land of Ethiopia, and Epiphanius alledgeth Jeremiah to prove it, vvhere he ſaith, what haſt thou to do with the way of Egypt to drink the troubled water, for this is by the Septuagint rendered the waters of Gihon, but the Hebrevv vvord there is שיחור vvhich ſignifieth black, or troubled, and not Gihon. Moreover if the originall of Nilus be conſidered, vvhich of old indeed vvas not knovvn, but ſince hath been diſcovered to come from the ſpacious mariſhes neer the mountains of the Moon not farre from the Cape of Good Hope ſouthvvard, being ſo contrary to the firſt riſing of theſe Rivers, vvhich vvas northvvard, it cannot poſſibly be that Gihon ſhould be Nilus. As for that argument of compaſſing Ethiopia, which Nilus doth, it is to be underſtood, that there is an Ethiopia meridionall, and an Ethiopia orientall, the firſt of which is indeed compaſſed by the river Nilus, but not the other which is the Ethiopia here meant, being neer to Arabia and Meſopotamia: of this double Ethiopia ſee Strabo, and Pliny. Novv that the oriental Ethiopia is meant here, is plain, becauſe that lay in theſe parts, vvhere the rivers here mentioned did run, viz. In Meſopotamia, and Arabia, neer to the land of Paleſtina. And therefore it is often ſpoken of, as being thus ſituated, as *Pſal.*87. Behold Philiſtia, thoſe of Tyre and of Ethiopia, 2 Chron. 14. Zara the king of Ethiopia is ſaid to have come againſt Iſrael with 1000000 men, and *Chap.*21. God ſtirred the Philiſtines againſt Joram, who were near to the Ethiopians. And more particularly, the Madianites are ſet forth to have been thoſe, who are otherwiſe called Ethiopians: for the wife of Moſes, who was of Madian, is called an Ethiopian, but theſe Madianites, otherwiſe called Arabians were near to Paleſtina. Others therefore will have Gihon to be a little river not far from Jeruſalem, where Solomon is ſaid to have been anointed King, for both the name agreeth, and Euphrates not being far thence, this might well be a branch thereof. But how then ſhould it compaſſe the land of Ethiopia, when as the beginning of this Gihon, could not but be very near, as appeareth, in that Hezekiah is ſaid to have ſtopped the upper Fountain of Gihon, againſt the coming of the King of Aſſhur, and other ſprings, that he might not finde any water? Yet it may be anſwered, that this river might paſſe, as ſome others do, after that ariſing from the common head near Paradiſe, it had run along by Ethiopia through ſubterranean places, till that it roſe up again near to Jeruſalem, and at this head, it might at that time be ſtopped by Hezekiah, and the courſe of it diverted another way. The firſt opinion touching Nilus cannot ſtand, for the reaſons before alleadged, and becauſe that was well known to be a river of Egypt, and therefore Moſes would doubtleſſe, rather have called it by the common known name, if he had meant it, and by the compaſſing of Egypt. The moſt probable opinion than is, that this river was the Gihon at length, touching upon the land of Canaan, unleſſe with others we ſhall ſay thus, that in generall onely, it is to be held to have ſprung from Euphrates but is no where now to be found by this name. Touching the third river Chiddekel, which runneth towards the Eaſt of Aſſyria, all conſent, that it is Tigris, called Chiddekel, from the ſharpe taſte of the waters thereof, which this word in Hebrew ſignifieth, according to David Chimhi; Vatablus ſaith, that ſome will have Chiddekel to come from two vvords ſignifying, rapidum & velox, and Tigris from the ſwift running, becauſe Tigris in the Median tongue ſignifieth an Arrow, as Strabo hath it, or from that ſwift beaſt called a Tigre, as Iſidorus, and Rupertus. But Plinie is for the denomination from an arrow alſo. lib. 6. c. 27. Euphrates, becauſe it vvas a river ſo well known, is onely named, in Hebrew it is called, פרת from fructifying, becauſe it overfloweth the bankes, after the manner of Nilus, and maketh the grounds about it fruitfull. It ariſeth in Armenia the Greater and paſſing through Meſopotamia, and Seleucia falleth into Tigris, and after in a part branching therefrom, on the right ſide it runneth into Babylon, as Pliny ſaith. But this river and Tigris, ſaith Curtius, run the one on the one ſide of Meſopotamia, and the other on the other ſide, from whence, the countrey hath the name of Meſopotamia, quaſi ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ποταμῶν. And is ſo fruitfull, that men drive their cattell from feeding, leaſt they ſhould fill themſelves too much and dye.

Verſe 12. Epiphan. in anchoratu. Jer. 2.

*Strabo lib.*1. *Geogr. Plin. lib.*5. *c.*7.

Exod 2. Numb.12.

1 Kings 1.

2 Chron.32.

Verſe 14.

David Chimhi.

*Strabo lib.*11. *Iſidor lib.*13. *Etymol. c.*21. *Rupert de Trinit. lib.*2. *c.*29.

*Plin. lib.*5. cap. 24 & 26.

*Qu. Curtius l.*5

Verſe 15.

And the Lord God took the man and put him into the Garden of Eden to dreſſe it and to keep it, Before it is ſaid, *v.*8. the Lord God put the man in the garden, but not what he ſhould there do, wherefore the ſame is here repeated again, and his implciment is added.

Queſt. If it be demanded, how the Lord took the man and put him there? It is anſwered, anſwered, that either he took him by his Spirit, and brought him into this garden, or by his Angel, taking a body upon him, and tranſporting him thither, and by his Angel it is moſt probable, that he walked afterwards in the garden, or God the Son taking an humane ſhape upon him, did all this, and ſpake with Adam. For an Angel, is Auguſtine, for the Son of God, Zanchy, to whom I rather ſubſcribe.

Anſw.

Auguſt.
Zanch.

If it be demanded, why he was not made in Paradiſe, but out of it, and then brought in: the reaſon of it may eaſily be conceived to be, both that having ſeen other places, he might be the more affected with the pleaſantneſſe of this, ſo far excelling, and praiſe God the more for his mercy herein, and alſo that he might not live in Paradiſe, as his naturall place, but as in a place in great favour given him of God, being therefore the more carefull to ſerve and obey him.

Queſt.

If it be further demanded, what dreſſing Paradiſe needed, being doubtleſſe in every part a moſt compleat place of pleaſure, and all things naturally growing therein, both for uſe and delight, and from what he ſhould keep it? It may be conceived, that although every thing was then moſt perfect, yet it was ſo ordered by the Divine Providence, that the trees without cutting and pruning, would doubtleſſe have growen out of order, and more unfruitfull, and the walkes, that were ſo pleaſant, without keeping, would have been overgrown, the ſeeds and corn alſo, without husbanding the ground, would not ſtill have come up in ſuch abundance, and the beaſts of the field, if they had not been kept out, would have come in, which would much have diminiſhed the beauty of that place.

Queſt.

But it will be ſaid, then it ſeemeth, that man muſt have laboured, although he had not ſinned, whereas this was impoſed upon him, as part of his curſe for ſin, to live upon the ſweat of his brow: To this Saint Auguſtine anſwereth. The labour here appointed unto Adam was without all pain, and full of delight and pleaſure. For even now, ſome husbandmen take great delight in the workes of husbandry, ſo that they cannot by any means be taken from them to other things. But then it was much more, when there was no adverſe accident, either in the earth or the heaven. For there was none affliction of labour, but exhilaration of the will, when as thoſe things, which God had created, did more fruitfully, and pleaſantly come forth by the helpe of mans labour, that the creation might be more largely praiſed, who had given unto man the reaſon to do thus, and ability for ſo much, as was ſufficient for a willing minde, and not that, which the want of the body did compell him, being unwilling unto, &c. Man could not alwaies buſie himſelf in divine contemplation, and therefore to avoide idleneſſe, God appointed him to be daily doing of ſomewhat, ſo that to be idle, and to ſpend the time in doing nothing, is not any part of mans happineſſe upon earth, but a baſe and bruitiſh kinde of living, and ſo altogether unfit for ſuch as are indued with reaſon, of what eſtate or condition ſoever they be.

Object.
Auguſt. de Gen. ad lit. lib. 8. c. 8. Quicquid delicium nunc habet agricultura, tunc utique longe amplius erat, quando nihil adverſi accidebat vel in terra, vel in cœlo. Non enim erat laboris afflictio, ſed exhilaratio voluntatis, cum ea, quæ Deus creaverat, humani operis adjutorio lætiùs, feraciúſque provenirent, &c.

Note.
Verſe 16.
Verſe 17.
Queſt. 1.
Zanch. de oper. Dei.
Muſculus.

And the Lord God commanded the man ſaying, of every tree of the garden thou mayeſt freely eat, but of the tree of knowledge, of good and evill thou ſhalt not eat of it: for in the day, that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely die. What the tree of knowldege was, and why ſo called, hath been already ſhewed, and wherefore it it was interdicted to Adam, viz. That he might be kept from the knowledge of doing evil. But hereunto ſome add another reaſon, that he might by this interdiction take notice, that he was not abſolute, and of himſelf to do what pleaſed him, but under the Lord, whoſe will onely, and not his own imagination, was to be unto him the rule of righteouſneſſe. For this maketh the doing, or not doing of any thing a ſin, and a great ſin, becauſe it is againſt the will and command of the Lord, neither, if we vvill rightly vveigh, vvhat manner of ſin, this or that is, muſt vve go ſimply by conſidering the thing it ſelf prohibited, but the command of God, vvhich is againſt it, to ſleight vvhich is moſt heinous. To this effect Auguſtine

Auguſt. lib. 8. de Gen. ad literam cap. 15. Nec melius, nec diligentius potuit commendare, quantum malum ſit ſola inobedientia, cum ideo reus iniquitatis factus eſt homo, quia eam rem tetigit contra prohibitionem, quam ſi non prohibitus tetigiſſet, non utique peccaſſet. Tertull. lib. adverſ. Iudæos.

Queſt. 2. How Adam died the death. Iuſtin. Martyr dialog. cum Trypbone. Iren. lib. 5. Hæreſ. Auguſt. lib. 13. de Civit. Dei, c. 23. Theodoret. qu. 38. in Gen. Hieron lib. tradit. Hebr. in Gen. Symmach. Gregor. Hom. 37 in Evang. Ipſe quotidianus defectus corruptionis quid aliud eſt, quàm prolixitas mortis? corpus enim Adæ poſt peccatum paulatim cœpit diſſolvi, corrumpi, & ad interitum fluere, & ex eo tempore mors ei cœpit dominari. Vatablus. Nebamides.

Calvin.

guſtine ſaith, It could neither more diligently, nor better be ſet forth, hovv great an evil onely diſobedience is, ſeeing man vvas therefore made guilty of iniquity, becauſe he touched that thing contrary to command, which if he had touched, there being no command againſt it, he had not ſinned at all.

And Tertullian ſpeaking of this prohibition, ſaith, This one law did in effect contain in it all the lawes of the Decalogue given afterwards, and therefore the breaking of it was a moſt foul ſin, and worthy to be puniſhed with death. For what do all lawes of God preſcribe, but to love the Lord with all the heart, and a mans neighbour, as himſelf? Novv if Adam had loved God, he would not have done againſt his will, if he had loved his neighbour, that is, himſelf and his poſterity, he would not by doing againſt Gods will, have brought a vvoe upon himſelf and us all. More particularly, if the law now forbiddeth to kill, hereby he was forbidden to kill himſelf, and his poſterity, in ſoul and body, if to ſteal, hereby he was forbidden, by ſtealth to take of this fruit, and then to ſeek to hide himſelf, if to covet other mens goods, what was this, but to covet a thing reſerved by the Lord, as his propriety, and if to lye, he made himſelf guilty hereof, by aſſenting to the Devils lye, when he told him, that he ſhould not dy at all.

The next thing to be queſtioned here is, how this threatening was verified, in the day, that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt dye the death, ſeeing Adam lived 960 yeers after? To this divers anſwer diverſly, ſome, that a day is with the Lord as a thouſand yeers, wherefore Adam dying before the expiration of a thouſand yeeres, may be ſaid to have dyed the ſame day. Some, that the meaning was nothing elſe, but that he ſhould become mortall, a neceſſity of dying, growing upon him, after this eating, whereas before he was immortall. Symmachus to make this the more plain, tranſlateth it, in the day, that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt be mortall. Some, that he did indeed dye the ſame day, in that his body was ſmitten with corruption, tending to death, ſo that his life thenceforth was no true, but a dying life, or lingering death. For the daily defect of corruption, ſaith Gregory, vvhat is it elſe, but a certain prolixity of death? Wherefore after ſin, immediately the body of Adam began by little and little to be diſſolved, and corrupted, and to flow to deſtruction, and from that time death began to have dominion over him.

Some again have held, that theſe words, In that day, are to be reſtrained to theſe, that thou ſhalt eat thereof, the meaning being nothing elſe, but vvhat day ſoever he ſhould preſume to eat of this fruit, his puniſhment ſhould be death, the time vvhen this death ſhould be inflicted, not being ſet dovvn. Some have underſtood it, of the ſpirituall death onely, which is a privation of grace. Others, that hee ſhould have been puniſhed with death preſently, had he not repented. And Vatablus ſaith, that one Nehamides expoundeth it thus, thou ſhalt dye ſooner, then othervviſe thou ſhouldeſt have done. But ſo it muſt be granted, that man ſhould have dyed, although he had not ſinned. Amongſt all the preceding expoſitions I preſer that, vvhich reſtraineth theſe vvords, In that day, to theſe, that thou eateſt thereof. For it is not neceſſary alvvaies to underſtand ſuch a threatening as this, as if the puniſhment threatened, ſhould be inflicted vvithout any further delay, for there is a plain meaning, being othervviſe underſtood, viz. Thou ſhalt dye, and it ſhall be in my povver, vvhen I pleaſe, at any time from thence forward, to take thy life from thee, or if it be underſtood, preciſely of the day, the meaning may be, thou ſhalt receive the ſentence of death irrevocable, for he, upon vvhom the ſentence is paſſed by the Judge, is novv but a dead man, And that this was the meaning, ſeemeth by the ſequel, Chap. 3. 19. Duſt thou art, and unto duſt thou ſhalt return. Yet Calvin hath another ſence, thou ſhalt be involved vvith all ſorts of miſeries both of ſoul and body. But howſoever if to be deſtitute of grace and ſo to be miſerable in ſoul, be to be dead, to be oppreſſed vvith deadly miſeries is not, and therefore if this ſhould be admitted, the death death through a deprivation of grace muſt needs be meant, according to an expoſition mentioned before, as the chief thing intended. But that this is not ſo, appeareth both by a ſpeech following after, leſt man take of the tree of life, and live for ever, &c. verſe 22. where certainly the bodily life is meant, and in that Saint Paul ſpeaking of this death incurred by ſinne, is plain for the bodily death. That Adam ſhould have dyed preſently, had he not repented, is but a conjecture: for if by repenting death were delayed, why might he not by repentance have been altogether ſet free from it again? That of a day with the Lord as a 1000 years, is farre fetched, and needeth no confutation, for although God be ſo unvariable, that he changeth no more in a 1000 years than in a day, yet when a day is ſpoken of with reference to man, it is no where in all the Scriptures ſo underſtood. As for the other expoſitions, if we adjoyn them to the expoſition here admitted, they may altogether wel explain the words more fully thus, whenſoever thou eateſt, thou ſhalt inſtantly receive the ſentence of death, becoming thus always from thence forward ſubject unto it, yea, the ſtroak ſhal be begun to be ſtricken in thy body by infirmities, and in thy ſoul by my withdrawing of my grace from thee immediately, neither ſhalt thou eſcape everlaſting death after this miſerable life ended. For that man is by Chriſt upon his repentance and faith ſet free from this again, hindereth not, but that we may underſtand it, as abſolutely threatened here, ſeeing there is none exemption herefrom, but there was a neceſſity of the dying of one man, becauſe God could not otherwiſe have been juſt, in expreſly ſetting down this as the puniſhment of his ſin.

Rom. 5.

But it may be further demanded, how Evah came to be bound by this command, ſeeing ſhe was not yet made, and how ſhe came to have any knowledg of it? for that ſhe knew it, and took her ſelf alſo to be bound by it, appeareth, Gen. 3.3. Anſwer; ſome there are, that think that Evah was made, before the giving of this precept, although the making of her be recorded after, becauſe Gen. 1.29. the Lord ſpeaking both to Adam and Evah firſt giveth them the liberty of all trees and herbs in the world to eat of them, and then after this having placed them in paradiſe, he reneweth that liberty of eating of all, one onely excepted. For that they were made before the liberty of eating of all trees given, is plain, becauſe they are ſpoken to in the plural number, and this precept here muſt needs come after that, becauſe if otherwiſe this had been given firſt, and that after, this might wel have been thought to have been reverſed thereby.

Queſt. 3.

Ruper. lib. 1. de Trinit. & oper. cap. 32.

And of this mind Gregory ſeemeth to have been, that he rendereth theſe words in the plurall number that, ex omni ligno paradiſi comedite, de ligno autem ſcientiæ boni & mali nè tetigeritis. And the Septuagints tranſlation is partly in the ſingular and partly in the plural number: of all the trees thou ſhalt eat, but of the tree of knowledg of good and evil thou ſhall not eat; for in the day that ye eat thereof, ye ſhal die the death. But in the Hebrew and Caldee, the whole ſentence runneth in the ſingular number onely. Others therefore hold, that this precept was given onely to Adam before the making of Evah, and by him imparted to her, as concerning them both alike, both becauſe in the order of the hiſtory it is thus ſet down, firſt the precept is given, and then the making of Evah related, and alſo becauſe it is not to be thought, but that God would give Adam this precept immediately upon his bringing of him into paradiſe, leaſt haply ſome time intervening, he might eat of this tree, before the precept giving. But touching the order of the hiſtory, it may be ſaid, as the making of Evah is ſpoken of after this precept, ſo it is mentioned before together with the making of Adam Gen. 1.27. wherefore nothing can certainly be concluded from the order, but onely it may be thought, that Moſes having ſet forth the creation of man & woman in general Chap. 1. he falleth in this 2 Chap. to make a more particular relation of the ſame, & firſt of the creation of the man, whereunto he addeth his being taken Greg. Moral. lib. 35. c. 10.

Auguſt. de Gen. ad liter. l. 8. c. 17 Toſtatus.

ken and placed in paradiſe, the deſcription of paradiſe and this interdiction, as was moſt convenient: for theſe do ſo follow the one the other, and ſo hang together, as that they could not wel have been ſevered. Then the relation of the mans creation with the appurtenances being ended, he ſetteth forth in particular how and upon what occaſion Evah was made, not that theſe things were done juſt after the words of interdiction delivered, but becauſe now it was a fit time to ſpeak of the woman, that we might have the whole hiſtory touching her together, as by this means we have. And if ſo, Adam might wel have this precept given him at his firſt coming into paradiſe, and yet vvithal it might be given at the ſame time to Evah alſo, vvho vvas not made, as is ſuppoſed, after the bringing of Adam into paradiſe, but before, in the place vvhere Adam vvas made. I do therefore ſubſcribe rather to the firſt opinion, the reaſon brought for, vvhich indeed is unanſvvered and unanſwerable, viz. that the liberty of eating of all trees vvas given to them both, but this could not be after this interdiction; vvherefore they muſt needs both be before it. Evah then vvas not made in paradiſe and Adam out, as many hold: for then ſhe ſhould not have been ſo much bounden to God for paradiſe, as Adam, for it vvould have been her natural place, and idle ſhe might vvel have been, as not being appointed to do any thing about the dreſſing and keeping of the garden, as Adam vvas. But both Adam and Evah vvere made out of paradiſe, and then brought in together, this moſt happy place being a further grace conferred upon them, after their making, according to others.

Evah not made in paradiſe. Baſilius Hom. de paradiſo. Scholaſtici. Rupert. de Trinit lib. 2. c. 32. Ioſeph. Antiq. lib 1. c. 1. Tertull. lib. 2. cont. Marcion.

One queſtion more novv onely remaineth, viz. vvhy the Lord gave Adam a precept, vvhich he knevv he vvould not keep, and if both were charged alike herewith, why it goeth in the ſingular and not in the plural number? Anſwer; To this it may be ſaid, that God did not give man this precept to entangle him, but becauſe it was fit, that the creature ſhould have ſomevvhat propounded, vvherein to obey the Creatour, and to ſhevv his duty tovvards him. Now the wonderfull goodneſſe of God appeared ſufficiently in that he propounded ſuch a precept, as man might moſt eaſily have kept. Ob. If it be further ſaid, but God could have preſerved him from falling, and why then did he not, if he had ſo great a love unto him? Anſwer; Becauſe then it would not have appeared, what mans power had been, when he was left unto himſelf, even when he had free will, and Gods mercy could not have been ſo much magnified in redeeming man again by Chriſt. It is true, that man is bound to keep any other from ſinning, if he can, becauſe he is under a law requiring this, neither may he do any thing, which he knoweth wil be an occaſion of offending. But God is not under, but above all laws, and therefore it is juſt with him to do whatſoever he pleaſeth in either kind, becauſe otherwiſe there would be no place for his mercy to ſhine in the ſalvation of ſome, nor for his juſtice in the damnation of others. And whereas God is ſaid to have forbidden man the eating of this tree in the ſingular number, it is an uſual thing in giving any precept for the Lord to ſpeak but as it were to one. For thus the decalogue runneth, thou ſhalt have none other gods but Me, &c. ſeeing all in reſpect of Gods lavvs are but as one man bound alike, and originally but one, ſeeing all come of one, and that a man, he being thus the chief That God in ſpeaking of man might mean both man and vvoman appeareth, by that vvhich is ſaid after their eating; man is become as one of us knowing good and evill. for not onely the man but the vvoman alſo vvas novv become ſuch. As for that reſolution of ſome, that to Adam the precept vvas directed, becauſe he vvas principally bound hereby, ſo that if he had not eaten, though Evah had eaten, his poſterity ſhould not have been intangled, vvhereas contrarivviſe, although Evah had refrained, yet he alone eating ſhould together with all his have been condemned. I cannot ſee, how this may be admitted: for in another like caſe, the vertue of the man or of the wife alone is made alike in reſpect of poſterity, the unbelieving wife is ſanctified

Queſt. 4.

Gen. 3. 22.

Peterius.

fied the beleeving husband, and the unbeleeving husband, by the beleeving wife, otherwise were your children unholy, but now they are clean: and therefore it may be thought rather, that if one of them had stood, the man or the woman onely, it should have been to their children likewise. As for the words, of the tree of knowledge, in the Hebrew, of the wood of knowledge, it is an usuall metonymy, the tree or wood being put for the fruit, and in dying thou shalt die, is an hebraisme so common, that it needeth no explication, it being hereby meant, that he should most certainly die. 1 Cor. 7.

And the Lord God said, it is not good, that man should be alone, &c. Here beginneth the particular history of the womans creation, the reason whereof was, because man before this was alone, so as no other sort of creatures was, and being thus he wanted society, neither could he increase, as the rest of the creatures might, which the Lord saith here, was not good for him, and therefore he propoundeth to make him an help. And this being further amplified, first, by relating, how all beasts and fowls were brought to Adam to be named, and that amongst them all, there was not one found, that might be a meet helpe for him, the manner of making the woman is next declared, v. 21.22, &c. The Apostle Paul, 1 Cor. 7. saith, it is good for a man not to touch a woman, this seemeth to be contrary to the words here delivered. But as Cyprian saith, we must distinguish between the times, when God saith thus, the world was emptie, and without inhabitants, and therefore the conjunction of man and woman was necessary, for the increase of posterity: but now the world being full of people, a single life is to be commended to all, that are capable of it, that they may be the lesse troubled in their way to the Kingdom of heaven. The Apostle denieth it not to be good for any man to marry, yet: for he saith, he that marrieth doth well, onely in such, as have the gift, he preferreth continencie. Wherefore the popish sort debasing marriage so much, and commending the vowing of perpetuall virginity, as the onely perfect estate, do plainly oppose themselves herein against God, who saith, it is not good for man to be himselfe alone, never excepting again, but in the case of having the gift of continency. But of this I have spoken more upon, 1 Cor. 7. Verse 18. Verse 29,10 Cyprian. Tractatu de habitu virgin.

I will therefore make, the vulgar Latine readeth it, we will make, but this is contrary to the Hebrew; in that the making of woman is propounded first, and then God maketh her, this sheweth the excellency of this work, as the consultation about the making of Adam sheweth his excellency above other creatures.

An helpe meet for him, that is, as Augustine saith, in respect of Generation and nourishing up of children, a man being in all other things a fitter helpe to man, than a woman, which is true indeed, if we respect the labour of Husbandry, but in household businesses a woman is an helpe much fitter then a man, it properly belonging to him to go abroad, and to do things perteining to the fields, and contracts, and politicke governments, and to her to keep at home, to order and guide things there. The words translated, an helpe meet for him, are in the Hebrew, an helpe against him. But the word against, is here put for before, as in many other places is usuall, it being hereby intimated, that the woman should be at hand alwayes to her husband, to helpe and to do for him, as belongeth to her sex. Some, because of these words, against him, have gathered, that the woman was made from the beginning contrary to man, and apt to crosse him, and oppose him in many things: but this is a corrupt exposition, for the debates and oppositions between man and wife were doubtlesse brought in by sin, there being all unity, and good concord before. Others, that the woman is said to be against the man, because there must needs be some contrary between them, as between the agent and patient, seeing if they were in all things alike, and there were no difference, there could not have been any generation. But our English version doth fully set forth the sense of this word, כנגדו as it were over against him, that is so framed, as is most fit and meet for him in every respect, and Augustin. lib. 9. de Gen. ad lit. ca. 3 Hebrai. Tostatus.

set over against him, as the object of his delight alwayes in his sight.

Verse 19. The Lord God therefore formed every beest out of the earth, &c. This is not spoken of here, as now done, for the beasts and fowles were made before man, Chap. 1.20. But by way of capitulation, as other things in this Chapter are spoken of also, that he might thus come to declare their names imposed by man. Whereas here may seem to be a contradiction to that, about the fowles making out of the waters, because they are here said to have been made out of the ground, see the resolution of this upon these words. The word translated, brought, is ויבא, he made to come: for the Lord did not bring the beasts and fowles, as it were, in his hand to Adam, but by his command made them to come unto him as to their Lord, for thus at the first the creatures did not shun man, but come familiarly unto him, till that by sin the case was altered.

Zanch. de oper. Dei. To see, what he would call them, that is, as Zanchy hath it, that Adam might see and behold them, and so consider of fit names to be imposed upon them, according to their severall natures, and not that God might see, how he would call them. The fishes were not brought to be named by him, because they could not be numbered amongst those, that might any way be thought to be helpes unto him, seeing they live altogether in the waters, and not upon the earth with man, as the beasts and fowles do. From this giving of names, when Adam had seen into the nature of the creatures, so the Hebrews have gathered, that Adam had most exact skill in Physiognomy, for otherwise he could not have given fit names unto them, as doubtlesse he did, but upon what reason each beast and fowl was called by such or such a name, we cannot now tell, as all confesse.

Hebræi. And what Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof. Some, saith Zanchy, will have these words understood, as spoken by Moses, intimating, that even to his time the creatures were called, as Adam had named them at the first, but this is not by him allowed, but he will rather have these words understood, as spoken, touching God, that he approved of Adams naming of the creatures, and that he would have them so called, as he had brought them to Adam to be named. But then the words must in a little different manner be rendered. That what Adam called every living creature, that might be the name thereof, and so indeed Zanchy, and some others, as Vatablus. Vatablus saith, read them, and this sense is most probable.

But for Adam, there was not found an help meet for him. That is, amongst all these creatures, whereof many were made for helpes unto him, there was not yet any meet, or that might be set, as it were against him, as being like to himself, in the lineaments and proportion of body, all but wherein there must needs be a difference, in an immortall soul, in the faculty of speaking, and talking together, in helping to breed, and to bring up children, and to manage domesticall affaires, and to lie in his bosome, to delight him with the sweetnesse of the society thereof, and to converse continually with him, which is meant by these words כנגדו.

Verse 21. And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, &c. There are in the Hebrew tongue three words signifying sleep, תרדמה שנת תנומה of these תנומה, as Aben-Ezra sheweth, is the least sleeping, שנה it is somwhat deeper, and תנומה the deepest sleep of all, and by this word is the sleep of Adam here set forth, wherefore Symmachus translateth it κάρος, a great and deep sleep, and the Septuagint ἔκστασις a transe. Why he was now cast into so deep a sleep, divers render divers reasons. Some, that whilest his rib was taken out, he might not feel any pain, as Chrysostome, and Ephiphanius, and Theodoret in speaking hereof reasoneth thus: If Adam had been waking when this vvas done, he must either have felt no pain, or have felt paine, if none, he might have thought it to have been a phantasy, and not a thing really done, if pain that would have been very hard, and unbefitting the state of innocency before any sin committed. But Zanchy reiecteth this, as a frigid reason, because God could have taken a rib out of Adam, vvithout putting him to pain, as vvell waking as sleeping, and therefore he yeeldeth tvvo other reasons, first,

Aben Ezra.

Chrysost Hom. 15. in Gen. Epiphan. Hæres. 48. Theod. quæst. 30. in Gen.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

that that in his ſleep he might reveal unto him, from whence the woman had her beginning, and the great myſtery of the Churches being made out of Chriſt dead and pierced in his ſide. Secondly, that every man might learn in ſeeking a wife, to let his affections ſleep and to depend wholly upon Gods providing one for him, who will if we commit the matter to him, provide better for us than we can for our ſelves. Yet I ſubſcribe rather to the firſt: for although I grant, that God revealed theſe things to Adam ſleeping, as he did afterwards to Abraham, ſomething touching his poſterity, when he ſlept a great heavy ſleep, and morally ſuch an uſe may be made of Adams ſleeping, whilſt Evah was formed: yet the principall reaſon of his being caſt into this ſleep, muſt needs be, becauſe all ſenſe for the time being thus taken from him, that was a naturall way to make a breach in his body, he not feeling any pain in the mean ſeaſon. Thus alſo Vatablus and that he might acknowledg the woman to be a gift coming freely from God, and ſo be the more thankfull. For as touching the Revelations in the time of his ſleep, God could as well have told him all this waking, as have revealed it unto him ſleeping, and therefore no neceſſary reaſon of his being caſt into ſuch a ſleep, can be herein. And to the firſt aſſenteth the Maſter of the Sentences, as the firſt and chief reaſon, adding indeed this alſo as another, that herein there might be a type of the Church taken out of Chriſt aſleep by death.

Gen. 15.

Vatablus.

Magiſt ſentent. lib. 2. diſt. 18.

He took one of his ribs) the word צלע tranſlated a rib, doth as well ſignifie a ſide, and therefore ſome Hebrews have held, that man was made at the firſt with a double body, an ἀνδρόγυνος being both man and woman, back being joyned to back, but now one ſide was parted from the other, woman being made thereof, which they ſeek alſo to prove by the conſideration of the back parts, which ſhew ſtill, as if they had formerly been joyned to ſomewhat elſe. Thus alſo Plato, and this is followed by Eugubinus, holding that therefore it is ſaid in the creation of man. In the image of God created he him, male and female created he them, becauſe the firſt man was made ſo, as that he was both man and woman. But this opinion is generally rejected and that worthily, becauſe the word צלע although it ſignifieth a ſide, yet it ſignifieth not either a fore-part or a back-part, as it muſt needs do according to this interpretation. Again, Evah is ſaid to have been formed of that which was taken from man, therefore ſhe was not ready formed before, and wanted onely dividing. Wherefore it was not a part of Adams body having already a face, and other lineaments, that God took but a rib out of one ſide of one ſide of his body, whether right or left we cannot tell, and if the word be tranſlated ſide, it is to be taken Synecdochically, the whole being put for the part. But why did the Lord make the woman of a rib of man, and not of the earth or of ſome other part? Anſwer; She was not made of the earth, leſt man being of a more noble ſex ſhould contemn her. She was not made out of any ſuperiour part, leaſt ſhe ſhould think to have dominion over her husband, nor of an inferiour, but out of the middle part, that man might not debaſe her, but moderately eſteem of her. And out of the ſide next the heart to ſhew the love, that the man ſhould bear unto her, and ſo it is probably thought, that it was the left ſide to ſhew the weakneſſe of this ſex. And as the ſides are under the arms, ſo the woman is under the protection of her husband. But above all ſhe was made out of the ſide of the man to prefigure the piercing of Chriſts ſide with a ſpear making bloud and water to flow out, ſetting forth the two Sacraments, out of which the Church is erected. But it may further be demanded, what manner of rib did God take, whether the bare bone onely, or fleſh withall? Anſwer; He took both, as appeareth by the ſpeech of Adam here following. This now is fleſh of my fleſh, and bone of my bone. He took bone and fleſh withall, and ſupplyed fleſh again, that there might be no breach, ſo woman partaketh of ſome of the ſtrength of the man, and man of ſome of the tenderneſſe of the woman, as Zanchy noteth. It was but one bone that was taken, not two or more out of each ſide, as Oleaſter

Hebræ.

Plato in Sympoſio. Eugub. in Coſmopœia.

Queſt.

Queſt.

Zanch. de oper. Dei

Oleaſter.

fondly conceived, holding, that the places to this day, where theſe bones were taken out, remain ſoft and fleſhy neer the paunch, being called for the want of ribs vacuum: for it is ſaid in the text, God took a rib, not ribs, and if Adam after this wanted a rib on one ſide, it followeth not, that other men vvho came of him ſhould all vvant one likevviſe, no more than, that he, vvhich is begotten of a man vvanting a leg or an arme ſhould alſo vvant this member, for experience ſheweth that he doth not. For the making of an vvhole body out of one rib, this vvas by adding more fleſh and bones in the framing thereof, as God could eaſily do, that the vvoman not having all her being of man, but the greateſt part of God, man might not inſult over her, as being all his ovvn, but be thankfull to God for her, and yet becauſe ſhe is but a rib in compariſon of man, ſhe muſt acknovvledge the perfection of man above her, ſhe being but as one member to the vvhole. Hugo de Sancto Victore, and ſome others hold, that vvoman vvas not made of this rib, by adding any other matter to it, but by the extenſion of the ſame matter to ſuch a greatneſſe, as might ſuffice to make her, becauſe otherwiſe ſhe could not have been ſaid to be made of the rib, but rather of ſomething elſe, being her greater part. But Thomas Aquinas is for the former, and rejecteth this, becauſe ſo this rib muſt be rarified, and then the body of woman would not have been ſo ſolid, as now it is, and as for that objection againſt the former, ſo the woman could not have been ſaid to be made of the rib, he anſwereth, that ſhe might wel yet be ſaid to be made of it, becauſe that was firſt taken, although more matter were immediately added to increaſe it to ſuch a quantity. But this is not worth the contending about.

Hugo de Sancto Victor. lib. 1. de Sacrament.

Th. Aquin. part. 1. quæſt. 92.

And the rib which the Lord had taken from man, made he a woman: a woman in hebrew is אִשָּׁה and אִישׁ is man, twoletters י and ה in this word ſignifie God, but being taken out, it is אֵשׁ fire, to ſhew, that if a wife be not godly, ſhe is as a fire or torment to her husband, ſo Zanchy. In the Hebrew, it is, built he a woman, which hath given occaſion to diverſity of reaſons, why this phraſe is here uſed, and not (formed) as before in ſpeaking of man. But the true reaſons are onely theſe two, both becauſe the woman is, as it were an houſe, conteining inhabitants, for ſo in her womb are children conteined, according to Zanchy & Cajetan: and alſo becauſe as an houſe is firſt a rude kind of matter, and then it is by the art of the builder framed into a form, ſo here a rib is taken, & by a divine art made into a woman, the man, who was made of clay being ſaid by a word proper to things made of ſuch matter, to be formed, but woman to be built, according to Chryſoſtome. Others ſay, that this phraſe is uſed becauſe the work of creating mankind was now finiſhed, or man grew now into an Oeconomy, & Zanchy hath a reaſon alſo which is taken out of R. Solomon, becauſe the lower parts of a womans body, viz. her legs and thighs are greater, as made to ſuſtain the building, than thoſe of man: but experience will eaſily confute this, and for the other, it is coincident with the firſt.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.
Cajetan.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 15. in Gen.
Vatablus.
R. Solomon.

Queſt. Touching the womans ſoul.

But here is nothing ſpoken of the womans ſoul. What may be the reaſon of this? Anſwer; it is moſt likely, that this was omitted, as being a thing, that muſt needs be underſtood; ſeeing the Lord had ſaid before, he would make man an help meet for him, ſuch as none other creature was, therefore as in the ſhape of the body, and in ſpeech ſhe muſt be more excellent, than other creatures, and like unto the man, ſo ſhe muſt be in a reaſonable ſoul alſo, or elſe ſhe could not be meet for him. But forſomuch as the breathing of a ſoul into her is not ſpoken of, a queſtion hath been moved by ſome, whether the ſame ſoul, that was in Adam were not communicated unto her: but I finde it not reſolved by any. If I may freely utter my conjecture, I think, that the ſoul of them both was one, the woman being no ſooner made, but ſhe was a living ſoul, as the fleſh and bone of Adam, ſo his ſoul being communicated to her alſo. For the ſame power, that could make a perfect body of a rib, Eucherius.

could

could as eaſily withall communicate the ſoul of that body, out of which that rib was taken unto this new made body. And in conjecturing thus, I do not imagine, that ſtill the ſoul of each man is communicated to his wife, for no woman more is thus brought into the world in a miraculous manner, but Evah onely, and therefore every one after both male and female hath a diſtinct ſoul infuſed in the womb. Onely this building the Lord would have thus to be for a myſtery, as the making of one body into two, to ſet forth that man and wife are one fleſh, ſo this, to ſet forth that they are and ought to be as one ſoul in two bodies. And as there is a great myſtery in making two bodies of one to ſet forth the faithful to be as members of Chriſts myſticall body, ſo in the communicating of the ſame ſoul to two, there is as great a myſtery of the unity of the ſpirit in Chriſt, and in his Church.

And brought her unto the man. This is generally underſtood of the marriage of Adam and Evah, and not onely, that he moved her, as other creatures, to come to Adam. And Zanchy ſaith, that he doubteth not, but the Sonne of God in the ſhape of a man, after that the woman was made, lead her about the garden to ſhew her the fruits thereof, Adam yet ſleeping, and then brought her unto him at his waking, and with ſolemn Matrimoniall words joyned them together. But this is onely a conjecture, yet that he joyned her unto him, (he being willing after he ſaw her, and ſhe declaring her willingneſſe by her coming to him) and did not bring her to him onely as the other creatures, is plain, becauſe our Saviour ſpeaking of thoſe, that are joyned together in Matrimony, ſaith, thoſe whom God hath joyned together, let no man put aſunder. Wherefore God is rightly affirmed by us in our ſolemnization of marriage to be the inſtituter thereof in paradiſe. And the joyning of Adam and Evah together in marriage is well ſet forth by theſe words, he brought her to him, to ſhew firſt, that man is the chief, and that the woman was made for him, therefore ſhe is brought to him, not he to her. Secondly, that the woman ought to come to her husbands houſe to dwell with him, and not he to hers. Thirdly, that Marriages ought not to be made, but the parties being preſent, and not in their abſence, or the one having not ſeen the other.

Zanchius.

Verſe 23.

And Adam ſayes, this now is bone of my bones, &c. Theſe words, ſaith Fagius are generally read by all ours, hac vice os ex oſſibus meis, but the Hebrews referre זאת to the woman, and read it thus, this, that is, this woman is now bone of my bones, and this is plaineſt. But here a queſtion is moved, to what, this word now hath reference? Some ſay to the narration going before of all the creatures upon earth brought before Adam, as if he had ſaid, hitherto I have ſeen no creature meet for me, becauſe they are all unlike unto me, but now I ſee one meet indeed, even fleſh of my own fleſh, &c. others referre it to other women that ſhould afterwards be born into the world, as if he had ſaid, this, that now is made, is taken out of my body in an admirable manner, but ſuch women, as ſhall come into the world afterwards, ſhal not be brought forth in this manner, but ordinarily by generation. The firſt doubtleſſe is moſt genuine, and this farre fetcht. How Adam came to know this, ſeeing he was aſleep, when it vvas done, may eaſibly be conceived by Gods revealing of it unto him in his ſleep, ſhe ſhall be called Woman, the vvord vvoman in hebrevv is אישה of איש ſignifying man, as if it had been ſaid mans female.

Fagius.

Zanch. de oper. Dei.

Peterius. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that ſome tranſlate the word, now once, as if this had been done but this one time onely, but the like ſhould never be more. Hom. 15.

Therefore ſhall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife. Some vvill have theſe vvords taken as a lavv, and as a lavv made by God, although uttered by Adam, becauſe our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaketh of it, as a lavv from the beginning, urging it againſt divorcements. And in this lavv they vvill have three lavvs comprehended. Firſt, for the taking of a vvife by every one, that is fit for generation, and hath not the gift of continency. Secondly, for cohabitation. Thirdly, for the giving of mutuall due benevolence by being coupled unto her for generation. Novv although I acknovvledg that, vvhich is here ſaid, to be of God, as it muſt needs be, becauſe Adam vvas aſleep, and knevv knew nothing of theſe things, but as God by his Spirit revealed them unto him, thus making a Prophet of him, as Chryſoſtom obſerveth, yet for the law herein ſet down, I cannot ſee, how it ſhould be for any more, than cohabitation, and cleaving to his vvife in affection, all others being neglected, in compariſon of her: namely, for ſuch as have vvives. But for ſuch as have none, it is left to their ovvn liberty to marry, or not to marry, as they are moved in their ovvn mindes. It is true indeed, that by the lavv of God every one ought rather to marry, than to yeeld to fleſhly luſts, ſwaying him to incontinency: but for ſuch, as vvill not be ſvvayed hereby, but ſubdue them, it is free to uſe a ſingle life. For if this were a precept, it muſt either at ſome time be abrogated, as it never vvas, or elſe virginity could never have been preferred, as novv it is, before marriage. For this, he ſhall leave father and mother, the Rabbines have, following the Chaldee: he ſhall leave the bed of father and mother, &c. expounding it as a lavv againſt all inceſtuous marriages, and theſe vvords, he ſhall cleave to his wife, againſt adultery, ſodomitry, and buggery. And they ſhall be one fleſh, Man and wife are ſaid to be one fleſh: Firſt, for their living together, as one upon the ſame means being common to both. Secondly, for their mutuall povver over the bodies of one another. Thirdly, for the fleſhly iſſue that cometh from them both: The Septuagints read it, they two ſhall be one fleſh, and ſo doth the Lord repeat it, becauſe two onely, and not more can be one fleſh, by Gods firſt inſtitution. He that joyneth himſelf to an harlot, is hereby ſaid to be made one fleſh with her, becauſe he is in the fleſhly copulation joyned unto her, having now loſt the power of his own body, and made it over to her, which approveth the thing before ſpoken of their being made one fleſh, by the mutuall power over one anothers body. Verſe. 25. And they were both naked, and were not aſhamed. Theſe words are added to ſhew the innocency and freedom from ſin in our firſt parents. For even as little children are naked, and are not aſhamed, for want of judgement, what is comely, and what is filthy, ſo Adam and Evah, although they were of ripe judgement for their innocency, were not aſhamed, as appeareth, becauſe having ſinned, it is immediately ſaid, that they were aſhamed. By ſin then it is brought about, that many hath need to be aſhamed, vvhich ſhevveth, what a filthy and ſhamefull thing ſin is. So that now to be aſhamed, is rightly held to be a ſigne of grace, and of an heart not obſtinately ſet upon ſinning, but touched with repentance, contrariwiſe, to be impudent, and brazen faced, is a ſigne of an heart hardened in ſin. Hence cometh the nakedneſſe of the Americans, a moſt rude and barbarous people at this day, ſome of them in ſome parts having nothing upon them, to cover ſo much as their privities, and hence that Sect called Adamites bluſhed not to go naked, men and women together, as Epiphanius ſheweth, after the manner of Adam. But to return again to Adam and Evah, they loved doubtleſſe without luſt, uſing their members of generation, as reaſon willed, and not having the heat of luſt in them blinding reaſon, and immoderate delight, as at this day. For as God had made their bodies ſuch, that they might have lived ever free from corruption, why may we not think, ſaith Auguſtine, that before ſin they could ſo command over their genitall members, for the procreation of children, as they did over other members, which the ſoul moveth in any work without any trouble or itching of pleaſure? For if amongſt the moſt minute creatures there be ſome, as the Bees, which do work the generation of their young, as Waxe and Honey, why ſhould it ſeem incredible, that God made our firſt parents ſuch bodies, as that they could as eaſily command over their genitall members, as over their feet to goe, and their hands to do this or that, and to ſow vvithout ardour, and to bring forth vvithout pain? And if ſo, there vvas no reaſon, why yet they ſhould be aſhamed. Some there are and thoſe ancient and learned, who have held, that if Adam and Evah had not fallen, man ſhould not have had iſſue by the carnall knowledge of his wife, but ſome other vvay after the manner of Angels.

Verſe 24.

Zanch. de oper. Dei. Matth. 19.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 15. in Gen.

Man and woman one fleſh. 1 Cor. 7.

1 Cor. 6.

Verſe 25.

Gen 3. Note.

Epiphan. Auguſt. de Gen. ad liter. l. 9. c. 11 Cur non credamus, illos homines ante peccatum ità genitalibus membris ad procreationem imperare potuiſſe, ſicut cæteris, quæ in quolibet opere anima ſine ulla moleſtia & quaſi pruritu voluptatis movet? &c. Chryſoſt. Hom. 15. in Gen. Greg. Nyſſen. li. de homine, c. 28. Damaſcen. de fide orthodox. lib. 4. c. 25. Euthym. in Pſal. 50.

gels, but is vvell confuted by Thomas Aquinas and others, because the genitall members were so formed at the first, and therefore generation must needs be hereby, and because the Lord commandeth them being made to increase and multiply, teaching Adam to say, that they were one flesh, which the Apostle sheweth, is by carnall copulation, so that by this means, it vvas the Lords vvill even at the first, that they should increase and multiply. The onely difference then vvas, as hath been already said, they had not in them that heat of lust overcoming reason, but by the moderation of reason did that, vvhich pertained to generation, as vvell as any other action.

1 Cor. 6. 16.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1.

NOw the Serpent was more subtile than any beast of the field, which the Lord God had made, &c. A great question ariseth here, how that, which is spoken of the Serpent, ought to be understood, whether it were a Serpent indeed, or the Devil in the Shape of a Serpent? To this divers answer diversly. 1 Some, that it was a true Serpent, having at the first the faculty of speaking, as man and woman had, although for this it were deprived thereof, and poison instead of speech fixed to the tongue, and as the Serpent, so they say, the rest of the beasts lived in good agreement together, having the use of speech, neither did the Serpent go upon the belly, but erect, untill that for mans sin, to which it tempted him, it was thus punished. And the reason, why the Serpent sought to make him sin, was the envie thereof, at the mans excellent estate, wherein he should have remained, if he had not sinned.

Ioseph. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 1. Basil. Hom. de paradiso.

2 Some, that the Serpent could not speak ordinarily, but by the Devil it was obtain'd of the Lord, that it should speak at this time to tempt them, as sometime he obtained liberty to tempt Iob. Thus Moses-Barcephas saith, that Ephrem Syrus, who was of the same time with Basil held, and so his faculty of speaking was but like to that of Balaams Asse.

Moses Barceph. lib. de paradiso, cap. 27. Cyril. lib. 3. contra Iulianum. Chrysost. Hom. 10. in Gen. Theod. quæst 31 and 32. Rupert. lib. de Trinit. & oper. Damascen lib. 2 de fide orthodox, cap. 10. Magist. Sentent. lib 2. dist. 21. Aug. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 21 Calvin. Pagius. Vatablus. &c. Cajetan. in Gen.

3 Some, that it was no true serpent, but the likenesse of a Serpent, wherein the Devil came to Evah.

4 Some, that the Devil spake in the Serpent, the Serpent it self not being able to utter any voice, for the Devil could use what beast he would, as his instrument to speak and to reason thereby, that instrument so used in the mean season not understanding, what is said, as in men, that are rapt with an evill spirit. And this seemeth the more probable, because Serpents are still moved strangely at incantations, which are of the Devil, above all other creatures, not that they understand them, but by a diabolicall power, as Augustine reasoneth. And this is most generally followed by the ancient Fathers, and by the Commentators of these times, R. Menahem saith, it was the unclean spirit Samael in him, and likewise Eliezar.

5 Lastly, others hold, that neither any true Serpent here spake, nor the Devil in a Serpent, neither that any audible voice was heard, or shape seen, but that this temptation was onely a motion suggested by the Devil into the minde of Evah, because it is usuall in the holy Scriptures to speak of the Devil by the name of the Old Serpent, and the Dragon, and of Behemoth.

Apoc. Job 40

I would vvillingly now, having related the divers expositions, go vvith the common stream of expositours: for there are many considerations inducing unto it, as that nothing had the faculty of arguing rationally, besides the Devil, except God, Angels, and men, and therefore it seemeth, that it could not be a meere Serpent, but the Devil in the Serpent, and that the Devil is said to have been a lyar, and a murtherer from the beginning, vvhich could not have been spoken, unlesse he had been the agent in this temptation, and in another place it is expresly said, through the envy of the Devil, came death into the world. Lastly, he is called the old Serpent, the Devil, as noting this Serpent here spoken of

John 8.

Wisdom 2. 24.

of. Yet there are two things, both or one of vvhich, I thinke unanſwerable, that may be objected. Firſt, that the Serpent is ſaid to be more ſubtile, than any of the beaſts, which muſt needs be underſtood, as a preparative to the enſuing relation, and ſo that through his ſubtilty and cunning, and not onlyby the Devils uſing him, as an inſtrument, the woman was deceived, to which effect alſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 2 Cor. 11.3. For to what purpoſe had it been to tell of the Serpents ſubtilty, unleſſe this communication had proceeded therefrom, and not from the Devils altogether, ſeeing the ſimpleſtof the beaſts might as well have been uſed, as an inſtrument of temptation, as the moſt cunning? Neither will it helpe, that ſome ſay here, that it is not meant that the Serpent in it ſelf was the ſubtilleſt, but the Devil in the Serpent: for Moſes compareth not Devils with beaſts, but one beaſt vvith another, amonſt which the Serpent is ſaid to be the moſt ſubtill: For if he had meant it of the Devil, he might better have ſaid, more ſubtile, than either the beaſts or the man, which God had made, becauſe in ſubtilty the Devil being a ſpirit exceedeth all.

Secondly, this temptation being ended and man ſeduced, the author thereof, the ſerpent being found out, he is curſed to go upon his belly, and to eat duſt, being in this debaſed more than any beaſt elſe, when as in ſome reſpects, he was more excellent at the firſt. Now it cannot be juſt with God, thus to puniſh a creature, wherein there was no fault, as it muſt needs be confeſſed that he did, if the Serpent in this action was a meer patient, and theſe ſpeeches were forced from his mouth by the Devil, he not knowing, vvhat he ſaid. For as that man is faultleſſe, whom the Devil poſſeſſing uſeth, as an inſtrument of blaſphemy, he not knowing what is ſpoken by him, ſo the Serpent, if the Devil onely ſpake in him and by him, he conceiving nothing muſt needs be without fault alſo, and ſo this puniſhment could not juſtly have been inflicted upon him, whereas this puniſhment is juſtified by Calvin and Muſculus, becauſe the Lord hath power over his creatures, to deal with them for his own ends, as ſeemeth good unto him, aud therefore this dumb and unreaſonable creature being made an inſtrument to pervert man, whereas hemade all things to ſerve him, he might juſtly, to ſhevv his horrour of ſin, that man might be the more affected, ſtrike him in this manner, as a father breaketh the ſword wherevvith his chlilde vvas ſlain. I grant that this reaſon may ſatisfie indeed, for puniſhment inflicted vvithout a reaſon rendered, but here the cauſe is expreſſed, becauſe thou haſt done this thing, and ſo no liberty is left to excogitate any other reaſon, and to this the ſerpent might have anſwered, I did not, but the Devil ſpake in and through me, if he had been a mere paient. He did it then voluntarily at the Devils inſtigation, as he now biteth the heeles of men, or of curſed corruption, wherefore I cannot for my part ſubſcribe to this expoſition, and much leſſe to any of the other four. For the firſt is moſt improbable, becauſe if all the beaſts could have ſpoken familiarly at the firſt, there had been no reaſon to deprive them all of ſpeech for the fault of one, and it is ſtrange, that even this one ſhould be herein puniſhed, when as his doom toucheth it not, but onely going upon his belly, and eating of duſt. Touching the ſecond, it is not likely, that the Serpent would have been ſo pliant to the Devils minde, a liberty of ſpeaking being obteined, as to uſe it to ſeduce man, whoſe ſubject he was made, and not the Devils, eſpecially all things in the terreſtriall creatures, being now very good and right, and ſo no leven of malice or envy againſt man, being in any of them. Again, had God granted the Serpent liberty to ſpeak thus, he had not faulted, and ſo had been unworthy of puniſhment therefore. For the third, it cannot ſtand, becauſe then a phantaſme, and not the ſerpent ſhould have been puniſhed, and the thing being done, for which the Devil took this ſhape upon him, he would have immediately depoſed it again, and not have been found in the ſame, when the Lord came to puniſh the author of this miſchief. And for the fift, it perverteth the truth of the hiſtory, and turneth it into an allegory, and if we may

ſo

ſo do for this particular, Origen like, we may do ſo for all things preceding, and ſo this whole narration of the creation ſhall be nothing certain. Beſides, it is proper to the Serpent literally underſtood, which is after ſet down for the puniſhment thereof, and not to the Devil, whoſe ſuggeſtion onely, if this had been, he onely ſhould have been rebuked. Theſe objections againſt all the expoſitions hitherto brought, being conſidered by ſome, they have thought the doubt of this place indiſſoluble, vvhat therefore, if we ſhal eſſay the reſolveing of it another way, by taking ſomething from one of them, and ſomething from another, thus? A very Serpent this was, and full of wit and ſubtilty, but naturally without the faculty of ſpeaking, neither did he of himſelf apply his minde to ſeek the hurt of man, his Lord and maſter, but the Devil perſwadeth the Serpent to this out of his envie, and finding him tractable, as he could eaſily gather by any little ſigne, he helpeth his tongue to ſpeak, and putteth vvords into him, inſtructing him, how to take the opportunity, and at that time the Serpent vvas a goodly creature and went upright, ſo that the vvoman being but nevvly formed and not knovving, vvhether it vvere an uſuall thing for Serpents to ſpeak or no, might vvell vvithout ſuſpition enter into communication vvith him, as a fit companion to parley vvithall. If it be doubted here touching the vvit of the Serpent, becauſe this is proper to a reſonable ſoul, ſuch as beaſt had not, but man and vvoman onely, it may be ſaid, that the Serpent had not indeed ſuch vvit as man, but vvas the vvittieſt of beaſts, and in ſome things is ſo vvitty and ſubtile, as that he may put man novv adayes to ſchoole: for ſo the Lord ſaith. Be ye wiſe as ſerpents, and innocent as doves, vvhich vve may vvell oppoſe againſt all authorities of Philoſophers, vvho vvrite of the Serpents ſubtilty, as if it vvere not ſo great, as that of ſome other beaſts. For be it, that vvhat Moſes ſaith here of the Serpents ſubtilty, may be evaded, by ſaying, that he meant it of the Devil, yet that which is ſpoken by Chriſt of the Serpents wiſedome, I am ſure cannot be thus evaded, wherefore the Serpent doubtleſſe is moſt intelligent for a beaſt, to this day. If it be doubted touching the erect going of the Serpent then, becauſe as man having ſinned was not changed in any naturall faculty of the body, to be apparantly divers from that, vvhich he was before, ſo it is not likely, that the Serpent ſhould be changed, the very doom pronounced may reſolve it. For why ſhould this be denounced, as a curſe for that thing done, if it were ſo before? And it is no good arguing to reaſon from man to the Serpent, for to each of the three offending is aſſigned a divers puniſhment, ſo that although in man there vvere no alteration in reſpect of the figure of his body, yet there might be in the Serpent. But that the Serpent could not ordinarily ſpeak, beſides that, which hath been ſaid to this already, it is probable, becauſe the Lord having queſtioned with the man and the vvoman about their ſin, as ſpeaking to thoſe, that could anſvver him, vvhen he cometh to ſpeak to the Serpent, vvithout all queſtioning he proceedeth to judgement. Objections more againſt this expoſition, how any may be made I cannot ſee. And thus the Devil appeareth to be guilty by moving the Serpent, and helping him to ſpeak, and the Serpent guilty by being drawn by the Devil to uſe his vvit to ſo bad a purpoſe, and ſo worthily judged, and ſo we ſee, for what end the Serpents ſubtilly is ſpoken of before the temptation. And if any man maketh a queſtion, how the Devil could help the Serpent to ſpeake? I anſwer, as the Angel ſometime holpe Balaams Aſſe to ſpeak by opening his mouth, and as the horſe of Achilles ſpake and foretold him of his death, according to Homer, and as the river Cauſus ſpake to Pythagoras, according to Porphyrius ſaying, Salve Pythagora, which examples with ſome others are brought by Cyril, lib. 3. cont. Julian. Thus I have been bold to adventure my imagination amongſt others, and if any yet ſhall be able to bring better, or to confute this, I ſhall be ready to recant and to ſubſcribe unto him.

Other things here are not ſo hard to be reſolved: for if a queſtion be made, why the Serpent came rather to the woman, then to the man? it is eaſily anſwered Cyrill. lib 3. contra Iulianum. Magiſt. Sentent. and Toſtatus ſay, that the newnes of the thing, and the want of experience in Evah, and that ſhe had not ſuch perfect underſtanding, as the man, was the cauſe, that ſhe knew not, but the Serpent might be able naturally to ſpeak. Matth. 10. 16.

swered that she was the weaker, and so the more easie to be perswaded. And thus Augustine, He began with the woman, the inferiour part of that humane society, that he might come by degrees to the whole, thinking not the man to be so credulous, or that he would erre by being deceived, but in yeilding to the error of another.

Aug lib.14.de Civit. Dei,c.11. A fœmina, parte scilicet inferiore illius humanæ copulæ incepit, ut gradatim perveniret ad totum, non existimans virum facilè credulum, aut errando posse decipi, sed dum alieno cedit errori.

And herein others consent also. But how doth the Serpent begin? Hath God indeed, or yea hath God said, a speech, that seemeth to hang to some-what spoken before, was there not then some communication between the Serpent and the woman before this? Ans. Rabbi, David, Chimhi saith, that certainly some speeches were had between them before this, the Serpent calumniating God in other things, as not dealing so well by them, as he might have done, and Fagius saith, that the Hebrews constantly hold, that the particle אשכי here used is never wont to be placed at the beginning of a speech, but after some things spoken before, being as much in effect, as quanto magis, or as Vatablius hath it, multò magis miror, much more do I wonder, that God should forbid you to eat of the Trees in the Garden. The Caldee Paraphrast hath it, is it true, that God, &c. And this seemeth to be rightest unto Calvin, but it is most generally held, that some speeches were had between them before, as an introduction to this, whereby the Serpent sought to work in the woman an hard opinion touching the Lord, and this seemeth most probable, because it had been strange for him to have begun thus abruptly, and the woman might so have well suspected his plot.

Quest.
R David Chimbi.
Fagius.
Vatablus.
Caldee Paraphrast.

Touching the question hath God said ye shall not eat of every Tree of the Garden? This is understood by some, as if the meaning were, is there some one Tree, which God hath forbidden you to eat of, or doth he not without difference allow you to eat of every one? by others, as if he had said, Hath God forbidden you to eat of any of the Trees in the Garden, or is he possessed with such envy against you, that he will not have you to eat of any of these delicate fruits but that you must seek your food else-where, out of the Garden? Calvin mentioneth both these, and confirmeth them, but rather approveth the former, and so doth Musculus, saying, that the Serpent did herein seem to be more for the good of man, then the Lord, in that he made a shew, as if needlesly he had forbidden them the eating of any Tree, but by Evahs answer, the other exposition is rather approved: for she defendeth Gods liberality in allowing all the Trees unto them, but one only, which she needed not to have done, but might rather have shortly answered, yes, there is one Tree that he hath forbidden us to eat of. Some note here, that he would make her believe, that God did not say so, but she was mistaken, because then some reason could have been rendred of this prohibition, and according to this the vulgar Latin readeth it, why hath God said, &c. But it is better to understand it, as a simple inquiry into the thing, his purpose being, by and by to strike at her faith, in telling her against Gods expresse word, ye shall not dye at all.

Calvin.
Musculus.

Calvin.
Vatablus.

Verse 2,3. And the Woman said, we may eat of the trees of the Gaoden, but of the tree in the midst of the Garden, God hath said, yee shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it least ye dye. Rupertus saith, that Evah sinned in thus speaking three wayes. 1 In that she made the commandement stricter then God had made it, he having forbidden only to eat, she saith, he forbad also the touching of it, so that first she sinned by adding. 2 By diminishing, in that God having said, yee shall surely dye, she saith, least yee dye, as doubtful. 3 By changing, in that God having forbidden to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evill, she saith not so, but of the tree in the midst of the Garden: That this precept was given both to the man and to her together. I have already shewed, so that I shall not need to inquire here againe, how she came to know thereof. Some hold, that Adam told her of it, and that in these words, as Ambrose sheweth, and some that God delivered it in these words to Adam, but that Moses not having setit down thus precisely before, now doth it in these words of Evah. But the Father approveth of none of both these, neither are they to be approved Rupert. lib.3.de Trinit. & oper. ejus.

Ambros. lib.de Adam & Eva, cap 12.

of

of, not the firſt, becauſe God ſpake himſelf to them both, nor the ſecond, becauſe ſo Moſes ſhould have imperfectly related the Commandement, which it muſt be far from us to think. Evah therefore as the ſame Father ſaith, began even now to ſin in thus ſaying, for ſhe ſhewed a mind already exaſperated againſt God, in making his command more greivous then it was, even as a woman, as one compareth it, who being forbidden by her Husband to go abroad to other folks houſes, where there may be ſuſpition of incontinency, to aggravate her Husbands auſterity, telleth her Neighbours, that ſhe is forbidden ſo much as to ſet her foot out of doores, or to look abroad,

Now to add to Gods Commandements, or to take ought there from is a ſin, and threatned with judgement, and therefore Evah ſinned herein; Moreover, ſhe ſinned by unbeleife, becauſe ſhe made it doubtfull, whether in eating they ſhould die or no, when God had ſo expreſly threatned death. Laſtly, it was a fault alſo in her, that there being two Trees in the midſt of the Garden, ſhe ſpake ſo indefinitely of this by that circumſtance, and not as it had been deſcribed unto them, the Tree of the knowledge of good and evill, in the Lords words, as if ſhe could not well tell, whether of the two was prohibited, by which ſome advantage was given to the Serpent to proceed with her. But Calvin excuſeth Evah, holding, that ſhe was in no fault, till that in the end of her anſwer ſhe ſpake doubtingly: for firſt, in ſaying that a liberty was granted them to eat of all the Trees, except one, ſhe magnifieth the bounty of God, and then in ſaying, that they might not touch that Tree, ſhe expreſſeth a pious affection to Gods Law, being averſe from the leaſt degree of entring upon the breach thereof. But howſoever the firſt part of her ſpeech may be well conſtrued, yet upon the reaſons before alleaged, it is more probable, that ſhe faulted immediatly, and that which is turned to the magnifying of Gods bounty in her anſwer, may be better underſtood, as a ſimple relation of the truth, ſhe yeilding what ſhe muſt needs, but preſently caſting ſuch an aſperſion upon Gods bounty, in that ſhe ſaith, he forbad them to touch one Tree, as that, all being conſidered together, God was little beholding to her for that which ſhe ſpake of the Trees by him allowed.

Deut. 4. Revel. 22.

Calvin.

Verſe 4,5.

Then the ſerpent ſaid to the woman, ye ſhall not dye at all: But God knoweth, that what day ye ſhall eat thereof, your eyes ſhall be opened, &c. The woman having anſwered doubtingly, the Serpent now taking advantage hereby, is bold to tel her, that they ſhall not die at all, ſo that, if there be in us the leaſt doubting of Gods Word, the Devil wil attempt preſently to root all faith quite out of our minds. All the ſpeech of the Serpent here is a moſt groſſe lye. 1 That that they ſhould not dye. 2 That God in policy forbad the eating of that Tree, as whereby their eſtate ſhould be bettered, as impatient of compeers. 3 That the eating of that Tree would open their eyes and make them more happy. 4 That as he ſaid, ſo God knew all this to be true, but concealed it from them. And what he indeed, he would make the woman beleeve that God was, viz. a lyar, in that he ſaid, they ſhould dye, when they ſhould not, as he knew well enough, and envious, becauſe he would hereby keep them from, riſing in dignity. But in all this he ſpeaketh ſo, as that he is altogether ambiguous, ſo that every paſſage may in ſome reſpect be juſtified to be true. For, 1 they ſhould not dye the bodily death inſtant. 2 They ſhould be as ſome gods, or angels, as the word אלהים is ſometime uſed, viz. evil angels. 3 Knowing good and evil, but to their coſt. 4 God alſo knew all this. The Devil not long before had aſpired to be as God, and hence came his woe, wherefore he ſeeketh to intangle the woman in like manner, but as one ſaith, She might eaſily have replyed, if eating of this Tree will make one like unto God, do thou (O Serpent!) eat firſt of it, and as I ſee it take effect in thee, ſo I will do. The words, ye ſhall be as Gods, the Caldee Paraphraſt rendreth, ye ſhall be as Princes, others, as Angels, and the tempter might mean it ſo, as the angels that fell, from their great knowledge called Dæmones, and from their power principalities, although the woman underſtood Ruptert. lib. 3. de Trinit. & oper. ejus. c. 7.

Fagius.

ſtood it of the bleſſed Trinity. But I prefer that of Calvin and others underſtanding it, as meant of God, thus he made her believe, that they ſhould partake of the divine nature.

Verſe 6. Then the woman ſeeing, that the Tree was good to eat of, and pleaſing to the eye, &c. took of the fruit thereof, &c. When the Serpent had thus tempted Evah, ſhe looketh upon the Tree with more ſerious conſideration, whether that which God had ſaid, or that which the Serpent had ſaid, were moſt likely to be true, and ſeeing it to be a goodly Tree and the fruit pleaſant, and withall weighing that, which had been ſpoken by the Serpent of getting knowledge by eating thereof, ſhe taketh of the fruit and doth eat. To this effect, Rupertus ſaith, She ſaw, that is, ſhe conſidered and diligently beheld, and more curiouſly attended, and would her ſelf be judge of thoſe things which ſhe had heard both from God, and from the Serpent, but thoſe inward eyes, wherewith ſhe ſhould have judged of this, were hindred by the luſt of the outward eyes, that they ſaw not a double death about to be brought upon her by this eating, not by the nature of the Tree, but by the tranſgreſſion of the Commandement. And thus ſeeing nothing dreadfull, but all things deſirable, ſhe thought that more true, which the Serpent had ſaid, then which God had ſaid, and thus by a ſacrilegious temerity ſhe took of the fruit and did eat. For by the eye, as by a window, ſin is let into the ſoul: By the ſenſes of the body, as Gregory ſaith, As by windows, the ſoule looketh upon outward things, and by looking, luſteth after them, whence it is, that Jeremiah ſaith, death hath aſcended by the windows : Jer. 9. 21. For the ſoule being inviſible cannot be moved with things corporall, but becauſe being in the body, it hath the ſenſes thereof, as certaine poares, whereby it goeth out. The Seeing, Hearing, Taſting, Smelling, and Touching, are certaine wayes of the mind, whereby it goeth forth and luſteth after thoſe things, which are without the ſubſtance thereof. From this example of Evah, we learn to refraine our eyes from ſeeing, if we would keep our hearts from luſting. There are here three degrees, firſt, her intentive beholding of that, which before ſhe feared to touch, or once to conſider, whether it were good to eat of it or no. Secondly, her delighting in it being ſeen. Thirdly, her judging of it, according to the Serpents ſuggeſtion, to be a Tree deſirable to get knowledge, thus proudly beginning to conceive that ſhe ſhould now upon the eating hereof be, as God, knowing good and evill. And by theſe degrees we offend to this day, by the luſt of the heart, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life. We look and conſider, then are delighted and apprehend more pleaſure or good to come by the acting of that, to which we are moved, and ſo adventure to do the thing forbidden. Targum Onkeli, as Fagius hath it, readeth the laſt words here, quod ſanitas eſſet oculis, which is an Adage amongſt the Caldees, as if it had been ſaid, to feed the eyes, whence ſome have gathered, that it was medicinable to the eyes: but the word is להשכל to get underſtanding, and this anſwereth better to the temptation preceding, and therefore is to be preferred.

Rupert. lib. 3. de Trinit. & oper. cap. 9. Vidit, id eſt, conſideravit, diligenter intuita eſt, curioſius attendit, & index eorum, quæ audiverat ipſa eſſe voluit, &c.

Greg. lib. Moral. 21. cap. 2. Per hos corporis ſenſus, quaſi per feneſtras quaſdam exteriora quæque anima reſpicit, & reſpiciens concupiſcit.

Note.

1 John 2. 15.

Fagius.

Calvin.

The ſinnes of Hevah in all this were firſt Pride, in that ſhe palpably aſpired after an higher condition. For, as Auguſtine ſaith, No ſin can be, but where the will is depraved, and the will is firſt depraved by pride, and pride is nothing elſe, but an appetite unto perverſe celſitude. and this perverſe celſitude is, leaving that principle, viz. Gods will, to which the mind ought to cleave, and becoming after a ſort a principle to himſelf. Secondly, diſcontent at the Lords prohibition, as being made to keep them from coming to a better eſtate. Thirdly, lying, becauſe ſhe ſaid God forbad to touch that Tree, which he did not, Fourthly, an adding unto, and altering of the word of the Lord. Fiftly, infidelity, in that ſhe firſt ſpake doubtingly, and then fell altogether from the faith. Sixthly, intemperance, in that ſhe yielded to her appetite further, then was allowed. Seventhly, diſobedience. Eightly, ſhe laid a ſtumbling-block for her Husband, inticing him to eat alſo. Touching Adams eating, Auguſt. lib. 11. de Civit. Dei, cap. 13.

Calvin ſaith, it is a common received opinion, that Adam ate not at the intice-ment of the Serpent, but onely of the woman being won by her flattery, but not deceived as ſhe was, for which alſo that of the Apoſtle is brought, the man was not deceived but the woman: but this is ſpoken onely comparatively, in regard of this, that ſhe was the firſt deceived. For afterwards, the Lord ſpeak-eth of the man, as being drawn by the ſame perſwaſion, becauſe the man is be-come as one of us, upbraiding him, that he thought by eating to become as God. And the ſame Apoſtle elſewhere is plain, for the man being the fountain of ſin to us all: hitherto Calvin, who alſo conjectureth, that Adam was abſent from his wife, when the Serpent tempted her, but came when the colloquie was now ended, and ſo ſhe told him, what the Serpent had ſaid unto her, he being intangled by the ſame meanes that ſhe, was, although ſome from this vvord with her, gueſſe, that he was preſent at the temptation. But this were a forcing of the words, there being no more meant hereby, but that as ſhe had eaten, ſo he being thus perſwaded, ate of the ſame fruit together alſo. Saint Auguſtine ſeemeth to be of a contrary minde to this of Calvin, holding, that Adam ate, not being deceived, but perſwaded by the woman, when as he knew he ſhould offend in ſo doing. For as Solomon, ſaith, he vvas brought to ſerve Idols, not being ſeduced by errour, but forced by vvomens flatteries: and as Aaron conſented not to make the golden calves being induced, but gave vvay hereunto being forced, ſo it is to be thought, that Adam believed not her, as being ſeduced by that vvhich ſhe told him, as thinking it true, but obeyed her by a ſociall kinde of neceſſitude, and thus he ſinned wittingly, that he might not be parted from her, to whom he had been joyned, no not in the communion of her ſin, & therefore he was no leſſe guilty then ſhe. Yet herein he might be deceived, in that having no experience yet of Gods ſeverity, he might think this ſin veniall, and happily he might think, that it vvould be a good plea for him, The woman whom thou gaveſt me, did give unto me, and I did eate. And all this, Auguſtine groundeth upon that ſaying of the Apoſtle, the man was not deceived, but the woman. Moreover, it may be thought that he conſidered, hovv ſhe having eaten, was yet alive, and not ſmitten vvith death, as it vvas threatened, and therefore he might think, notvviſtanding the Lords threatening of death, to eſcape. But Ambroſe holdeth, that Adam was de-ceived, as vvell as Evah, thinking by eating, to become like God, vvhich he proveth from the vvords of God unto him, Adam is become, as one of us; as if he had ſaid, thou thoughteſt, that thou ſhouldeſt have been like unto us, therefore, becauſe thou wouldeſt have been vvhat thou wert not, thou haſt ceaſed to be what thou waſt. And touching that place of the Apoſtle, he ſaith, as Calvin, That the woman is ſaid to have been deceived, and not the man, be-cauſe ſhe vvas deceived firſt, and was the author of errrour to her husband, and not he to her. Proſper, likewiſe ſaith, That Adam loſt his faith, becauſe he believed the words of the Serpent more, than the words of God, and vvith Ambroſe, agree Epiphanius alſo, Heraſ. 38. and Hilarius, Chap. 3. in Matth. and many others, and to this do I rather ſubſcribe, and he might vvell be de-ceived, becauſe he was more ſtrongly tempted, ſeeing her eat before him, and yet not ſmitten vvith death, and becauſe there vvas not onely the beaſt his ſubject, but the woman, his fellow to perſwade him, as Chryſoſtome reaſoneth, who alſo brought of that fruit unto him in love, becauſe ſhe would have him partaker with her of the ſame felicity. And in this ſin of Adam, as in that of Hevah concurred many ſins. 1 Pride, in that he aſpired to be like unto God. 2 Infidelity, 3 An inordinate love of his wife, in that he was moved more hereby, then by the love of God. 4 Intemperance. 5 Curioſitie to try, what lay hid in that fruit. 6 Ingratitude for the liberty of eating of all other trees granted unto him. 7 Diſobedience to the expreſſe command-ment of the Lord. But if the queſtion be, vvhether of them ſinned moſt? I anſwer, in ſome reſpects Evah, and in ſome other Adam. The ſinne of Hevah vvas greateſt. 1 In that ſhe began unto him, in which reſpect it is agravated ſo

Calvin.
1 Tim. 2 14.

Rom. 5.

Aug. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 31 Sicut Aaron erranti populo ad idolum fabricandum non conſenſit inductus, ſed ceſſit obnixius, nec Salomonem credibile eſt errore putaſſe idolis eſſe ſervien-dum, ſed blanditiis fœminæ cis ad illa ſacrilegia fuiſſe compul-ſum, ita credendam illam vi-rum (cæ fœmi-næ ad Dei legem tran gredien-dam, non tan-quam verum loquenti credi-diſſe ſolutum, ſed ſocialis ne-ceſſitudinem paruiſſe &c.

Ambroſ. lib. de Elia & jeun. c. 4 Putabas te ſi-militer fore vo-ſtri, ergo quia voluiſti eſſe quod non eras deſiſti eſſe quod eras.

Ambroſ. lib. de paradiſo cap. 21

Proſper. lib. ad verſ. Caſſian. c. 19

Chryſoſt. Hom. 9 in Epiſt. Corinth.

ſtood it of the bleſſed Trinity. But I prefer that of Calvin and others underſtanding it, as meant of God, thus he made her believe, that they ſhould partake of the divine nature.

Verſe 6. Then the woman ſeeing, that the Tree was good to eat of, and pleaſing to the eye, &c. took of the fruit thereof, &c. When the Serpent had thus tempted Evah, ſhe looketh upon the Tree with more ſerious conſideration, whether that which God had ſaid, or that which the Serpent had ſaid, were moſt likely to be true, and ſeeing it to be a goodly Tree and the fruit pleaſant, and withall weighing Rupert. lib. 3. de Trinit. & oper. cap. 9. Vidit, id eſt, conſideravit, diligenter intuita eſt, curioſius attendit, & index eorum, quæ audiverat ipſa eſſe voluit, &c.

that, which had be thereof, ſhe taket
She ſaw, that is, ſh tended, and would from God, and fro ſhould have judge that they ſaw not a ing, not by the na mandement. And t thought that more ſaid, and thus by a
For by the eye, as body, as Gregory things, and by lool death hath aſcended ſible cannot be mov hath the ſenſes ther Hearing, Taſting, S whereby it goeth f ſubſtance thereof.
from ſeeing, if we w degrees, firſt, her i touch, or once to condly, her delighti the Serpents ſuggeſt beginning to conce
God, knowing goo

Greg. lib. Moral. 21. cap. 2. Per hos corporis ſenſus, quaſi per feneſtras quaſdam exteriora quæque anima reſpicit, & reſpiciens concupiſcit.

Note.

1 John 2.15. by the luſt of the hea
ſider, then are deli the acting of that thing forbidden. T here, quod ſanitas eſſ had been ſaid, to feed the eyes, vvhence ſome have gathered, that it vvas medicinable to the eyes: but the word is להשכל to get underſtanding, and this anſwereth better to the temptation preceding, and therefore is to be preferred.

Fagius.

Calvin.

The ſinnes of Hevah in all this were firſt Pride, in that ſhe palpably aſpired after an higher condition. For, as Auguſtine ſaith, No ſin can be, but where the will is depraved, and the will is firſt depraved by pride, and pride is nothing elſe, but an appetite unto perverſe celſitude, and this perverſe celſitude is, leaving that principle, viz. Gods will, to which the mind ought to cleave, and becoming after a ſort a principle to himſelf. Secondly, diſcontent at the Lords prohibition, as being made to keep them from coming to a better eſtate. Thirdly, lying, becauſe ſhe ſaid God forbad to touch that Tree, which he did not, Fourthly, an adding unto, and altering of the word of the Lord. Fiftly, infidelity, in that ſhe firſt ſpake doubtingly, and then fell altogether from the faith. Sixthly, intemperance, in that ſhe yielded to her appetite further, then was allowed. Seventhly, diſobedience. Eighthly, ſhe laid a ſtumbling-block for her Husband, inticing him to eat alſo. Touching Adams eating, Auguſt. lib. 11. de Civit. Dei, cap. 13.

Calvin

NOTE

This volume tight binding ar effort has been duce the centre result in acad microform

Calvin ſaith, it is a common received opinion, that Adam ate not at the inticement of the Serpent, but onely of the woman being won by her flattery, but not deceived as ſhe was, for which alſo that of the Apoſtle is brought, the man was not deceived but the woman: but this is ſpoken onely comparatively, in regard of this, that ſhe was the firſt deceived. For afterwards, the Lord ſpeaketh of the man, as being drawn by the ſame perſwaſion, becauſe the man is become as one of us, upbraiding him, that he thought by eating to become as God.
And the ſame Apoſtle elſewhere is plain, for the man being the fountain of

Calvin.
1 Tim. 2 14.

Rom. 5.

that Adam was abſent me when the colloquie nt had ſaid unto her, he though ſome from this tation. But this were a eby, but that as ſhe had ıit together alſo. Saint of Calvin, holding, that the woman, when as ı, ſaith, he vvas brought d by vvomens flatteries:
ılves being induced, but
:, that Adam believed as thinking it true, but he ſinned wittingly, that en joyned, no not in the uilty then ſhe. Yet herein ɛt of Gods ſeverity, he nk, that it vvould be a lia give unto me, and I did ying of the Apoſtle, the nay be thought that he not ſmitten vvith death, ıotvviſtanding the Lords eth, that Adam was de-ıe like God, vvhich he become, as one of us; as have been like unto us, ou wert not, thou haſt
e of the Apoſtle, he ſaith, ıved, and not the man, be-

Aug. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 31 Sicut Adam erranti populo ad idolum fabricandum non conſenſit inductus, ſed ceſſit obſtrictus, nec Salomonem credibile eſt errore putaſſe idolis eſſe ſervicendum, ſed blanditiis fœmineis ad illa ſacrilegia fuiſſe compulſum, ita credendum illum virum (quæ fœminæ ad Dei legem tranſgrediendam, non tanquam verum loquenti credidiſſe ſolucium, ſed ſocialt neceſſitudinem parvuiſſe &c.
Ambroſ. lib. de Elia & jejun. c. 4 Putat Adam te ſimil cum fuiſſe offerri, ergo quia voluit, eſſe quod non erat deſiſti eſſe quod erat.
Ambroſ. lib. de paradiſo cap. 21
Proſper. lib. adverſ. Caſſian. c. 19
Chryſoſt. Hom. 9 in Epiſt. Corinth

cauſe ſhe vvas deceived firſt, and was the author of errour to her husband, and not he to her. Proſper, likewiſe ſaith, That Adam loſt his faith, becauſe he believed the words of the Serpent more, than the words of God, and vvith Ambroſe, agree Epiphanius alſo, Hæreſ. 38. and Hilarius, Chap 3. in Matth.
and many others, and to this do I rather ſubſcribe, and he might vvell be deceived, becauſe he was more ſtrongly tempted, ſeeing her eat before him, and yet not ſmitten vvith death, and becauſe there vvas not onely the beaſt his ſubject, but the woman, his fellow to perſwade him, as Chryſoſtome reaſoneth, who alſo brought of that fruit unto him in love, becauſe ſhe would have him partaker with her of the ſame felicity. And in this ſin of Adam, as in that of Hevah concurred many ſins. 1 Pride, in that he aſpired to be like unto God.
2 Infidelity, 3 An inordinate love of his wife, in that he was moved more hereby, then by the love of God. 4 Intemperance. 5 Curioſitie to try, what lay hid in that fruit. 6 Ingratitude for the liberty of eating of all other trees granted unto him. 7 Diſobedience to the expreſſe commandment of the Lord. But if the queſtion be, vvhether of them ſinned moſt? I anſwer, in ſome reſpects Evah, and in ſome other Adam. The ſinne of Hevah vvas greateſt. 1 In that ſhe began unto him, in which reſpect it is agravated
ſo

ſtood it of the bleſſed Trinity. But I prefer that of Calvin and others underſtanding it, as meant of God, thus he made her believe, that they ſhould partake of the divine nature.

Verſe 6. Then the woman ſeeing, that the Tree was good to eat of, and pleaſing to the eye, &c. took of the fruit thereof, &c. When the Serpent had thus tempted Evah, ſhe looketh upon the Tree with more ſerious conſideration, whether that which God had ſaid, or that which the Serpent had ſaid, were moſt likely to be true, and ſeeing it to be a goodly Tree and the fruit pleaſant, and withall weighing that, which had been ſpoken by the Serpent of getting knowledge by eating thereof, ſhe taketh of the fruit and doth eat. To this effect, Rupertus ſaith, She ſaw, that is, ſhe conſidered and diligently beheld, and more curiouſly attended, and would her ſelf be judge of thoſe things which ſhe had heard both from God, and from the Serpent, but thoſe inward eyes, wherewith ſhe ſhould have judged of this, were hindred by the luſt of the outward eyes, that they ſaw not a double death about to be brought upon her by this eating, not by the nature of the Tree, but by the tranſgreſſion of the Commandement. And thus ſeeing nothing dreadfull, but all things deſirable, ſhe thought that more true, which the Serpent had ſaid, then which God had ſaid, and thus by a ſacrilegious temerity ſhe took of the fruit and did eat. For by the eye, as by a window, ſin is let into the ſoul: By the ſenſes of the body, as Gregory ſaith, As by windows, the ſoule looketh upon outward things, and by looking, luſteth after them, whence it is, that Jeremiah ſaith, death hath aſcended by the windows : Jer. 9. 21. For the ſoule being inviſible cannot be moved with things corporall, but becauſe being in the body, it hath the ſenſes thereof, as certaine poares, whereby it goeth out. The Seeing, Hearing, Taſting, Smelling, and Touching, are certaine wayes of the mind, whereby it goeth forth and luſteth after thoſe things, which are without the ſubſtance thereof. From this example of Evah, we learn to refraine our eyes from ſeeing, if we would keep our hearts from luſting. There are here three degrees, firſt, her intentive beholding of that, which before ſhe feared to touch, or once to conſider, whether it were good to eat of it or no. Secondly, her delighting in it being ſeen. Thirdly, her judging of it, according to the Serpents ſuggeſtion, to be a Tree deſirable to get knowledge, thus proudly beginning to conceive that ſhe ſhould now upon the eating hereof be, as God, knowing good and evill. And by theſe degrees we offend to this day, by the luſt of the heart, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life. We look and conſider, then are delighted and apprehend more pleaſure or good to come by the acting of that, to which we are moved, and ſo adventure to do the thing forbidden. Targum Onkeli, as Fagius hath it, readeth the laſt words here, quod ſanitas eſſet oculis, which is an Adage amongſt the Caldees, as if it had been ſaid, to feed the eyes, whence ſome have gathered, that it was medicinable to the eyes: but the word is להשכיל to get underſtanding, and this anſwereth better to the temptation preceding, and therefore is to be preferred.

Rupert. lib. 3. de Trinit. & oper. cap. 9. Vidit, id eſt, conſideravit, diligenter intuita eſt, curioſius attendit, & index eorum, quæ audiverat ipſa eſſe voluit, &c.

Greg. lib. Moral. 21. cap. 2. Per hos corporis ſenſus, quaſi per feneſtras quaſdam exteriora quæque anima reſpicit, & reſpiciens concupiſcit.

Note.

1 John 2. 15.

Fagius.

Calvin.

The ſinnes of Hevah in all this were firſt Pride, in that ſhe palpably aſpired after an higher condition. For, as Auguſtine ſaith, No ſin can be, but where the will is depraved, and the will is firſt depraved by pride, and pride is nothing elſe, but an appetite unto perverſe celſitude. and this perverſe celſitude is, leaving that principle, viz. Gods will, to which the mind ought to cleave, and becoming after a ſort a principle to himſelf. Secondly, diſcontent at the Lords prohibition, as being made to keep them from coming to a better eſtate. Thirdly, lying, becauſe ſhe ſaid God forbad to touch that Tree, which he did not, Fourthly, an adding unto, and altering of the word of the Lord. Fiftly, infidelity, in that ſhe firſt ſpake doubtingly, and then fell altogether from the faith. Sixthly, intemperance, in that ſhe yielded to her appetite further, then was allowed. Seventhly, diſobedience. Eightly, ſhe laid a ſtumbling-block for her Husband, inticing him to eat alſo. Touching Adams eating, Auguſt. lib. 11. de Civit. Dei, cap. 13.

Calvin

Calvin ſaith, it is a common received opinion, that Adam ate not at the intice-ment of the Serpent, but onely of the woman being won by her flattery, but not deceived as ſhe was, for which alſo that of the Apoſtle is brought, the man was not deceived but the woman: but this is ſpoken onely comparatively, in regard of this, that ſhe was the firſt deceived. For afterwards, the Lord ſpeak-eth of the man, as being drawn by the ſame perſwaſion, becauſe the man is be-come as one of us, upbraiding him, that he thought by eating to become as God. And the ſame Apoſtle elſewhere is plain, for the man being the fountain of ſin to us all: hitherto Calvin, who alſo conjectureth, that Adam was abſent from his wife, when the Serpent tempted her, but came when the colloquie was now ended, and ſo ſhe told him, what the Serpent had ſaid unto her, he being intangled by the ſame meanes that ſhe, was, although ſome from this vvord with her, gueſſe, that he was preſent at the temptation. But this were a forcing of the words, there being no more meant hereby, but that as ſhe had eaten, ſo he being thus perſwaded, ate of the ſame fruit together alſo. Saint Auguſtine ſeemeth to be of a contrary minde to this of Calvin, holding, that Adam ate, not being deceived, but perſwaded by the woman, when as he knew he ſhould offend in ſo doing. For as Solomon, ſaith, he vvas brought to ſerve Idols, not being ſeduced by errour, but forced by vvomens flatteries: and as Aaron conſented not to make the golden calves being induced, but gave vvay hereunto being forced, ſo it is to be thought, that Adam believed not her, as being ſeduced by that vvhich ſhe told him, as thinking it true, but obeyed her by a ſociall kinde of neceſſitude, and thus he ſinned wittingly, that he might not be parted from her, to whom he had been joyned, no not in the communion of her ſin, & therefore he was no leſſe guilty then ſhe. Yet herein he might be deceived, in that having no experience yet of Gods ſeverity, he might think this ſin veniall, and happily he might think, that it vvould be a good plea for him, The woman whom thou gaveſt me, did give unto me, and I did eate. And all this, Auguſtine groundeth upon that ſaying of the Apoſtle, the man was not deceived, but the woman. Moreover, it may be thought that he conſidered, hovv ſhe having eaten, was yet alive, and not ſmitten vvith death, as it vvas threatened, and therefore he might think, notvviſtanding the Lords threatening of death, to eſcape. But Ambroſe holdeth, that Adam was de-ceived, as vvell as Evah, thinking by eating, to become like God, vvhich he proveth from the vvords of God unto him, Adam is become, as one of us; as if he had ſaid, thou thoughteſt, that thou ſhouldeſt have been like unto us, therefore, becauſe thou wouldeſt have been vvhat thou wert not, thou haſt ceaſed to be what thou waſt. And touching that place of the Apoſtle, he ſaith, as Calvin, That the woman is ſaid to have been deceived, and not the man, be-cauſe ſhe vvas deceived firſt, and was the author of errrour to her husband, and not he to her. Proſper, likewiſe ſaith, That Adam loſt his faith, becauſe he believed the words of the Serpent more, than the words of God, and vvith Ambroſe, agree Epiphanius alſo, Heraſ. 38. and Hilarius, Chap. 3. in Matth. and many others, and to this do I rather ſubſcribe, and he might vvell be de-ceived, becauſe he was more ſtrongly tempted, ſeeing her eat before him, and yet not ſmitten vvith death, and becauſe there vvas not onely the beaſt his ſubject, but the woman, his fellow to perſwade him, as Chryſoſtome reaſoneth, who alſo brought of that fruit unto him in love, becauſe ſhe would have him partaker with her of the ſame felicity. And in this ſin of Adam, as in that of Hevah concurred many ſins. 1 Pride, in that he aſpired to be like unto God. 2 Infidelity, 3 An inordinate love of his wife, in that he was moved more hereby, then by the love of God. 4 Intemperance. 5 Curioſitie to try, what lay hid in that fruit. 6 Ingratitude for the liberty of eating of all other trees granted unto him. 7 Diſobedience to the expreſſe command-ment of the Lord. But if the queſtion be, vvhether of them ſinned moſt? I anſwer, in ſome reſpects Evah, and in ſome other Adam. The ſinne of Hevah vvas greateſt. 1 In that ſhe began unto him, in which reſpect it is agravated

ſo

Calvin.
1 Tim. 2 14.

Rom. 5.

Aug. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 31 Sicut Aaron erranti populo ad idolum fabricandum non conſenſit inductus, ſed ceſſit obſtrictus, nec Salomonem credibile eſt errore putaſſe idolis eſſe ſervicendum, ſed blanditiis fœmineis ad illa ſacrilegia fuiſſe compulſum, ita credendum illum virum (cæ fœminæ ad Dei legem tranſgrediendam, non tanquam verum loquenti credidiſſe ſolutum, ſed ſocialiter neceſſitudinem paruiſſe etc. Ambroſ. lib. de Elia & jejunio c. 4 Data haſta ſimilem cauſam vo-ſtri, ergo quia voluiſti eſſe quod non eras deſiſti eſſe quod eras. Ambroſ. lib. de paradiſo cap. 21 Proſper. lib. ad verſ. Caſſian. c. 19 Chryſoſt. Hom. 9 in Epiſt. Corinth

1 Tim.2.14. ſo by the Apoſtle, that Adam is ſaid not to have been in the tranſgreſſion in compariſon of her. 2 In that by her flatteries and inticements ſhe drevv her husband to ſin, for this is to become not onely a ſinner, but an inſtrument of Satan, yea, a very Devil, for ſo much as he hath this name, becauſe hee is a Tempter. The ſinne of Adam was greateſt. 1 Becauſe he was wiſer, and more able to reſiſt temptations then the woman. 2 Becauſe he was more obliged to God for greater benefits beſtowed upon him, and therefore he ought to have been more obſervant of Gods commandments. 3 Becauſe he was the head of the woman, and ſo ſhould have inſtructed her wherein ſhe was ignorant: have reformed her wherein ſhe was erring, confirmed her wherein ſhe was weak, and erected her whereiu ſhe was falne. But yet forſomuch as the Apoſtle aggravateth the womans fault, as greateſt, it muſt needs be yielded, that not Adam, but ſhe ſinned moſt, for which cauſe alſo ſhe was moſt curſed. But yet in time God had again mercy upon her, to honour her by making her the inſtrument to bring forth another Fruit unto us, whereby we may be ſaved. And as for Adams wiſedome, although it vvere as great, as any mans naturall wiſdome could be, yet he wanted hitherto all experience, ſo that to avoid dangers, and traps ſet for him, he had not that knowledge and underſtanding, that the ſervants of God, that are grown to any antiquity, now have.

Adam ſinned when.

Touching the time, when theſe things were done, all are not agreed, becauſe it is not ſet down, and ſo cannot by any man be certainly determined. Some have held, that they lived as long in Paradiſe, as Chriſt did upon earth: ſome as long as he faſted, viz. Forty dayes, his faſting being an expiation of mans intemperance, ſome till the eighth day after their creation, viz. upon the Friday, and ſo the time of the coming in of ſin into the world, and of the expiation of ſin by Chriſts death doth well agree. Some that they fell and were caſt out upon the Sabbath day, and ſome upon the ſame day, wherein they were created, for which opinion many ancients have ſtood, as Irenæus, Epiphanius, Cyrillus, Ephrem, &c. Maimony a Rabbin ſaith, all our Wiſemen hold, that this whole matter was done upon the ſixth day, for they ſay, that Adam was created the firſt hour of the day without Paradiſe, and brought into Paradiſe the third, ſinne the ſixth, was found out by the Lord the ninth, and caſt out in evening, before the ſun ſetting, and if ſo, the ſecond Adam, Chriſt in ſuffering did notably anſwer to that vvhich befell the firſt Adam. For upon the ſame day Chriſt ſuffered, the firſt hour of the day he vvas arraigned, and abuſed, the third hour he was condemned and led away, the ſixth hour he was crucified, the ninth hour he gave up the ghoſt, and finally, before the ſame day fully ended, he brought man into Paradiſe again, viz. The thief upon the Croſſe. The authors of this opinion argue alſo from the malice of Satan, who vvould, doubtleſſe, immediately attempt their deſtruction, from this time being moſt fit, before they vvere more confirmed, and from the Serpents queſtion, hath God forbidden you to eat of the trees of the garden? Whereas, if he they had ſtood, till they had eaten of other trees, he could not have propounded it ſo. Others yet are of opinion, that they fell not the ſame day, but ſtood ſome longer time, but hovv long they ſay not, & as a ground hereof, they urge the many things done upon the ſixt day, as firſt, the making of all earthly creatures, then the making of man, the caſting of him into a ſleep, the forming of vvoman, the bringing of the creatures to him, and the bringing of the man into Paradiſe, and placing him there, for all which, ſo much time vvas requiſite, as that none could remain for temptation, falling and ejection out of Paradiſe: again, it is improbable, that ſo ſoon as they vvere made, the Serpent vvould begin to tempt them to eat, eat, becauſe there muſt ſome time come between; firſt, that they might be hungry, as he vvaited, till Chriſt vvas hungry, before that he began to tempt him to make bread of ſtones. Of this opinion therefore was Joſephus, Baſilius, Damaſcen, vvho ſaid, that the Devil obſerving the Serpent to come often to, and to converſe with Adam and Evah, and Pererius.

Toſtatus.

Iren. Hæreſ. lib. 5
Epiphan.
Ephrem. in Gen.

Matth 4.
Joſ. Antiqu. l. 1.
Baſil. hom. de paradiſo.
Damaſcen lib 2. de fide orth. c. 10.

and to converſe daily with them, choſe him, as a fit inſtrument to deceive them. And Auguſtine ſaith, that howſoever they ſtood not long, yet they continued more then one day in Paradiſe. Amongſt all theſe opinions, that of their abiding in the Garden 30 years, or 40. dayes is moſt improbable, becauſe the devils envy would certainly not ſuffer them to go untempted ſo long, nor yet would he ſuffer them, until the eighth day, and upon the day, wherein they were made. I cannot think for the reaſons already alleaged, that they fell, and ſeeing there was a ſpace between their falling and the Lords calling them to an accompt therefore, wherein they gathered Fig leaves and ſewed them together, and in the evening, as being a good ſpace after, it is ſaid, that God came into the Garden to call for them. And upon the Sabbath day, which was the next, it could not be, becauſe at that time it is moſt likely, that they were wholly intent to divine contemplations, and would not have admitted of any parley with the Serpent, and moreover it is ſaid, becauſe the Lord reſted then, he ſanctified and bleſſed that day, which would not have been ſaid, if he had done this work of curſing, and ejecting man out of Paradiſe. It remaineth then that this was done upon ſome other day, and becauſe no reaſon can be yielded, why it ſhould not have been done the next day after the Sabbath, for my part, I hold that it was the day. They making themſelves ready then in the morning for the work of the Garden, and to this end gathering food, Adam in one place and Evah in another, the Serpent cometh to Evah, and perſwadeth her to eat of the Tree of knowledge alſo, from which ſhe had hitherto refrained. And thus the allegory will hold as well from Adam to Chriſt, as any other way, the day of Adams fall and dying being the day of Chriſts riſing from death to life, and as he fell the third day after his creation, ſo Chriſt roſe the third day after his being made a ſacrifice for ſinne.

Aug. de civit. Dei. lib. 20. c. 26

If it be objected, the Serpent could not have ſaid, as he did, hath God ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of the Trees of the Garden? if they had eaten of them formerly: I anſwer, he might queſtion thus very well, notwithſtanding, as ſeeming to think, that although they ate of ſome, yet they did herein more then was allowed them. For the anſwer of Evah ſeemeth to make it plaine, that they had not hitherto gone without eating, but had eaten of other Trees before, and uſed ſo to do a day or two at the leaſt: for, ſhe ſaith, we eat of all the Trees in the Garden, but of the Tree in the midſt, &c. And their eyes were opened, and they knew, that they were naked, and ſowed Figleaves together, and made themſelves Aprons. Some Rabbins of the Jews have upon theſe words taught, that our firſt Parents were blind, till now, but this is abſurd: for they ſaw one another, and Adam beheld the creatnres to give them apt names. They were not therefore their bodily eyes, but the eyes of their minds, that were opened. Muſculus ſpeaking of theſe two kinds of eyes ſaith, that the opening of the bodily eyes in the holy Scriptures is three wayes to be underſtood. 1 Of blind to be made to ſee, 2 When as a man ſaw not before ſome things before him, although he ſaw others, is made to ſee theſe alſo, as Balaam, whoſe eyes were opened to ſee the Angel that ſtood in his way, whom he ſaw not before. 3 To be made to know that, which a man ſeeth, as the enemies of Eliſha, who being led into Samaria knew not that it was Samaria, till their eyes were opened, & the two Diſciples, that travailed towards Emmaus, knew not Chriſt, whom they ſaw, to be Chriſt, till their eyes were opened. Again, the opening of the eyes of the mind is three wayes alſo. 1 By the preaching of the word, to be inlightned in the truth: 2 By miſeries and adverſities, to be brought to ſee into our ſins. 3 When we have ſinned, to be touched in conſcience, therefore, as Judas was, and thus the eyes of Adam and Evah are ſaid to have been opened. And to this agreeth the teaching of St. Auguſtine who ſaith, that they were not blind before in their bodily eyes, but knew not, what the grace, which they had, was, whereby their members were kept from rebelling againſt their mind: but now this being removed, a kind of impudent novity came Object.

Verſe 7.

Muſculus.

Numb. 22.
2 Kings 6.
Gen. 21.

Luke 24.

Auguſt. lib. 14. de Civit. c. 17.

came upon them to be attent unto, and to look upon the members of one another to luſt, and ſo to be aſhamed, they ſaw alſo the good which they had loſt and the evill that they fell into. And yet Rupertus commeth nearer to the ſame, ſaying, that this opening of their eyes was a demonſtration, and agnition of great confuſion, that they were ſpoiled of the honour, wherein they were created and made like unto the beaſts for ſenſuall luſt, and ſo they could not but be greatly aſhamed, and ſeek a covering: For whatſoever is ordained of God being pleaſed or angry, mans nature cannot be ignorant of, and therefore as he cannot but have reaſon, which God being pleaſed hath given unto him, ſo it is impoſſible for him to be ignorant, that the paſſion of concupiſence is a thing to be aſhamed of. And Artopœus more fully ſaith, this opening of their eyes was the ſeeing of their conſcience, when as the guilty mind ſaw the greatneſſe of the ſin committed, and the horrible ſequel of all puniſhments and evils. Thus alſo Calvin and others. Their eyes then were opened, not as the *S*erpent promiſed, and they expected, to the filling of them with more underſtanding, and to the making of them more excellent, but it was a miſerable kind of opening of their eyes to ſee their own folly and ſhame, for now in their conſcience they ſaw a moſt horrible ſin committed by them, and the vengeance of God hanging over their heads therefore, they ſaw themſelves out of the ſtate of grace, which before had been, as it were, a moſt comly clothing unto them, ſo that to have their privy parts ſeen then, was no more to them, then to have their hands or face ſeen; laſtly, they perceived a ſenſible alteration in them, they not having before any violent paſſion of luſt carrying them to the mutuall deſire of carnall copulation, but being able herein to do, according to the dictate of right reaſon, yet novv feel carnall luſts abounding in them, as in the bruit beaſt, the reins of reaſon being ſhaken off, all vvhich being ſeen, they vvere filled vvith ſhame and confuſion, and ſo ſought to cover and hide themſelves, and ſpecially thoſe parts, which were now moſt violently carryed to ſinning, and over which now reaſon began to have the leaſt command. We may here ſee, as Calvin well noteth, what the power of a guilty conſcience is, when there are no witneſſes to accuſe and no Judge appearing to condemne, that alone doth the part of all, when Hevah had eaten alone, it is not ſaid, that her eyes vvere thus opened, but vvhen Adam had eaten alſo, the conſcience is not preſently opened, but ſome time after the ſinne committed, aud yet not then to repentance, neither in many, as it vvas not in them. For their ſevving of Fig-leaves together, almoſt all Expoſitours generally hold, that they took not of theſe leaves rather then any other, becauſe they vvere the leaves of that Tree, of vvhich they had eaten, and ſo neareſt at hand, but becauſe they vvere very broad and fitteſt for a covering. For the myſticall things ſet forth hereby, divers ſpeak diverſly. Irenæus ſaith, that hereby they ſhevved their penitency, in that they took and applyed Fig-leaves, vvhich vvere rough and pricking, and did more then others, rebuke the petulant force of the fleſh, ſo that they uſed theſe, as a bridle of continency, fearing the comming of the Lord to puniſh them for their ſinne, and thus they vvould have gone alvvayes, had not the Lord in mercy taken them avvay and given them skins inſtead thereof, vvhich were more ſoft and ſmooth. Auguſtine alſo ſeemeth to incline to this, that Fig-leaves did hurt and afflict them, but that they did not therefore make choice hereof, but ignorantly took of them, purpoſing nothing but to cover themſelves therewith, and yet thus it was ſignified, that they deſerved ſuch a puniſhment. But that they took Fig-leaves for chaſtiſement is contrary both to Auguſtine, and Ambroſe, and Calvin, and all other Expoſitours, who do generally interpret this fact, as a ſigne of impenitency, ſeeing that to repentance, the laying open and confeſſing of ſin to God is moſt neceſſary, and therefore to cover and hide it, being here ſet forth, argued an unrepentant heart yet in them. Ambroſe from hence draweth an allegory touching thoſe, that excuſe and hide their ſinnes, ſaying, Rupert. lib. 3. de Trinit. cap. 10.

Pet. Artopœus. Calvin.

Note.

Iren. lib. 3. cap. 37. Hæreſ. Aug. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 31

Adam

Adam took of the Fig-leaves, when as he should have taken of the fruit, so the just take of the fruit, and sinners of the leaves, The fruit is Love, Joy, Patience, Benignity, Modesty; Continency, he had no fruit, that had no joy, he had no Benignity. that transgressed the Commandment, he had no continency, that refrained not to eat the fruit forbidden: the leaves are excuses, when a man transgresseth and is made naked and filthy to himself, he will cover himself with certain Fig-leaves, happily with certain vain and umbratile speeches, which with made lies, he sewing together, and adding word to word, maketh a covering to hide the conscience of his mind & fact, as by saying, that the Devil tempted him, or he was led by the flesh, or some other was the author to him of his sin, or else he will bring examples out of the holy Scriptures, of the best that have faulted likewise. The Master of the Scholast. History saith, that Fig-leaves being bruised, and the juice of them taken, and the flesh of man being anointed therewith, there is presently stirred up a certain voluptuous itching, and therefore he saith, the lustfull motions of the flesh beginning after sin, were signified by their using of these Fig-leaves. I think with Augustine, that whatsoever end God in his Providence directed them to in this action, yet they intended nothing else, but to take of such leaves, as were most large, and fit to cover their privities, whereof they were, & might well be now ashamed. Now Gods ends, notwithstanding, were such, as have been already touched. First, to shew the shamefull foulnesse of sin, in that they make haste, having sinned to get them a covering, as being much ashamed. Secondly, the way of sinfull man, being without guidance of grace, whereas having sinned, he should, to be delivered again, confess it to God, he contrariwise hideth it from God, as much as he can. Thirdly, the foolish conceit of a sinner, he thinketh, that having done evil; he may hide it yet, and so not be found out to be punished. Fourthly, that all excuses that can be brought for sin, are but the sewing of Fig-leaves together, that is, meer vanity. Fifthly, that for the pleasure of sin, galling and piercing with pain is due, man himself that sinneth, being made judge in this matter. They made them breeches, The word חגורות signifieth any kinde of thing, that girdeth about, but it is generally taken by all for a covering of the privie parts, and hence all their posterity, even in the most barbarous countreys, where they go naked, have taken this custome up, as it were, by an instinct of nature to cover these parts. But why these, rather then any other? why not the eyes and the hands, that were instruments of this sin? To this Calvin answereth, that it was enough to set thus a brand of the shamefulness of sin upon any part of the body, & yet herein a respect was had to the parts most corrupted, that they specially should be thus branded, and that hereby a demonstration of the shamefulnes of sin should be made for ever. Julius Pollux telleth of three parts, that women were wont to cover, 1 Their breasts with a thing called fascia. 2 Their belly with a thing called περιζωμα. 3 Their privities. And this may serve to shame Gentlewomen now a dayes, that in the midst of this light will go with open breasts.

Ambros. lib. de paradiso cap. 13 de ficus foliis fecit sibi subligacula, qui de fructibus ejus magis gustare debuerat. Justus fructum elegit. folia peccator, &c. Peccator vult cooperire quibusdam ficus foliis, fortasse quibusdam in anilibus & umbratil. sermonibus, quos compositis mendaciis assuens, & verbum de verbo struens ad operiendam conscientiam suæ mentis & facti velamen intexit, &c.

Magist. Thol. hist. in Gen. c. 23

Calvin.

Julius Pollux.

Note.

And they heard the voice of the Lord God, walking in the garden in cool of the day, &c. A great question is here made, how the Lord is said to walke in the Garden, and what voice this was, which they heard? Some passe these things over, as spoken after the manner of men. But the Lord did doubtlesse appeare in these times in a bodily shape, conversing familiarly, and talking with man, as one man talketh with another, as I have shewed before, when God gave the command, not to eat of this tree. Fagius saith, that some referre walking to Adam, as if he walking in the Garden, had heard the Lords voice. For the voice heard, I do neither hold with those, that think this to have been the voice, whereby he called to Adam, for he fled from this voice, but at that he came forth, nor with those, that think it to have been some mighty winde, who also apply, that which followeth, in the cool, or the winde of the day, as the word רוח signifieth, hereunto, as if that were an expression of this Verse 8.

Musculus.

2 Kings 19. voice, what was meant thereby: For although the Lord coming by Elijah, a mighty wind went before, yet the thunder and not the winde is called the Lords voice, and when the Lord hath come at

Acts 2. any time with a winde, it is expressed, as when the Holy Ghost came upon the Disciples, there was a rushing heard, as of a mighty winde, wherefore no such thing being expressed here, I rather hold with them, that are for the sound of the Lords walking, because amongst the Hebrewes any sound

Fagius. is called a voice, as the the sound of thunder, the sound of waters, the sound of a trumpet, &c. They heard then the voice of Lord walking is, they heard the sound of him walking. And they were afraid, that is, out of the guiltinesse of their conscience: For I do not thinke that God as yet appeared in

Pererius. any terrifying manner as some have delivered, because yet he speaketh familiarly to Adam as not taking notice of any thing done amiss. In the cool of the day, these words are by divers rendred diversly, by Aquila, in the winde of the day, by Symmachus, in the spirit of the day, by Theodotion, in the spirit, which is to the cooling of the day, in some Latine translations, in the evening, in others,

Hieron. in quæst Hebr. in Gen. after noon, of all which Jerom speaketh. The Caldee Paraphrase saith, at the rest of the day, when the heat is over, Vatablus, ad auram diei, at the aire of Caldee Paraph. ast. the day, or, ad ventum diei, post meridiem. Fagius, according to this last,

Vatablus. saith, that the winde of the day is spoken of to describe the evening, when as Fagius. the winde in those hot parts was wont to begin to rise. Calvin differing from

Calvin. all others, after mention made of the readings of some, taking the word לרוח for a part of heaven, and of others, noting a time least obnoxious to terrours hereby, which they say is spoken of, to shew the terrours of an evill conscience, in that they now feared, as the Psalmist saith, where no fear was, he saith, that the aire of the morning to be understood, not of the Evening, which would have been improperly called, the aire of the day, and he saith, at the rising of the sun a winde cometh withall being thereby stirred up. Herein I cannot subscribe to this learned Expositor, because so Adam should not have been so much as adjudged to death, in the day of his eating, as he must needs be, according to Gods threatenning, if, as he saith, he had been let alone to sleep in his sinne all night, and the Lord had not come to finde him out till the morning following. I do therefore with others, rather understand the aire, or cool of the evening, when; the sun being ready to set, vapours arise, and specially because in parts near the Sea, such as Canaan was, a winde is wont then to arise, wherefore the Jewes used this phrase ברוחהיום for in the Iren. lib. 5. Hæres. evening. And at this time, God cometh to finde out man sinning to judge him, to prefigure his coming, by taking flesh to deliver him as it were, in the evening of the world, as Irenæus noteth. And Adam and his wife hid themselves, &c. This fleeing away of our first parents from Gods presence is generally expounded of their fleeing, through the terrour of an evil conscience after sin committed, into the thickest and most obscure place of Paradise, hoping, that although their Fig-leaves could not hide them, yet there they might lie close, and not be seen of the Lord, who they feared, now came to take revenge upon them for their wickednesse. So foolish doth man grow, when his understanding is darkned by sin, that he thinketh, his wickednesse may be covered, and

Note. he may be coucealed by some meanes, or at the least he hath no minde, but of Psal. 139. fleeing from God, & not of coming to him to crave pardon. But all this is vain, sith there is no hiding of any thing from his Al-seeing eye, as David teacheth. The cursed fruits of sin then are many, first, the opening of the eyes to see the horrour of sin. 2 Nakednesse, by being stript of all the goodly ornaments of Calvin. grace, see Exodus 32. Hosea 2. Revel. 3. 3 Shame and seeking to meanes, wherein there is no helpe of the shame that cometh by sin, see Rom. 6. Ier. 33. 4 An accusing conscience turning now to be utterly against the man, in whom it is. 5 Terrour and trembling that insueth hereupon. One observeth hence, that a sinner having sought to excuse his sinne, one way resteth not, but still deviseth new wayes to hide it, when leaves will not suffice, he fleeth to whole whole Trees. This is that, which cometh of ſinne, they that do evill hate the light, but the juſt love it, and are delighted in Gods preſence, being merry and chearfull through a good conſcience. St. Auguſtine ſpeaking upon this ſaith, that ſinners being troubled in conſcience do like mad men through over much ſhame and feare, they know not what, ſomething yet being ſignified hereby, which others may afterwards make a profitable uſe of. Amongſt all Expoſitors, Iecrnæus alone will have this done by way of penitency and humiliation. For Adam fled, ſaith he, not as though he could goe from God, but being confounded, becauſe he had tranſgreſſed, he thought himſelf unworthy to come into his ſight, and to have conference with him. But becauſe to do thus is of grace, whereof Adam was now altogether deſtitute, it is not to be thought, that he did it in humility, but through terrour, as hath been ſaid. That of the Pſalmiſt is here elegantly applyed by Rupertus, God awoke out of ſleep as a mighty Gyant refreſhed with Wine, and ſmote his enemies on the hinder parts. He was gone, as it were to take his reſt a little in the heat of the day, at what time the Serpent cometh, and ſeduceth Adam and Evah, but as a man in the cool of the evening cometh forth, ſo doth he, and ſmiteth the Serpent, as a man doth his enemy, to ſlay him, by damning him everlaſtingly, but Adam and Evah, as a man doth his ſon or his ſervant, to bring them waxing proud to humility, which is the way to ſalvation.

Calvin. Note.

John 3.20.

Aug. lib 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 33

Iren. lib. 3. Hæreſ. c. 22. Non quaſi poſſet effugere Deum, ſed confuſus, quoniam tranſgreſſus erat, indignum ſe putavit venire in conſpectu, & colloquium ejus.

Rupert. lib. 2. de victor. verb. Dei, c. 14.

And the Lord God called to Adam, and ſaid, where art thou? Here the Lord inquireth not, in what place Adam was, as being ignorant, for he knew that very well, but in what ſtate, to what have thy ſinnes brought thee, that thou ſhouldſt flee from thy God, whom thou ſoughteſt before? as Ambroſe ſpeaketh. It is, as Ocolampadius hath it, as if he had ſaid, into what pit haſt thou caſt thy ſelf, whither haſt thou run head-long? from what felicity art thou falne? And yet it may be ſaid, that the Lord inquired here of the place, although not ignorant of it, as if he had ſaid, how happeneth it, that thou keepeſt not, where thou wert wont to be, in open places, but fleeſt into thickets? For although the Lord knew all things well enough, he dealeth yet by interrogations, that man and woman might for their ſinne be out of their own mouthes condemned. Thus he inquireth afterwards about their eating, when he knevv it, and I ſee no reaſon, but that he may be underſtood as vvell here, as inquiring about the place vvhere he vvas. Yet, as he doth inquire of this, ſo he doth it by vvay of inviting him to come forth, and not to be ſo deſperately fearfull, as a Father, that ſeeketh up his prodigall ſonne. For the manner how the Lord ſpake, whether internally to the mind or externally to the bodily eare, St. Auguſtine ſaith, that although before he might ſpeak ſpiritually to him, yet now it is rather to be held, that he ſpake appearing in a bodily ſhape, and Gregory likewiſe, that he ſpake by an Angell aſſuming a body, as alſo at ſundry other times. For when God ſpeaketh by himſelf, ſaith the ſame Father, he ſpeaketh only to the mind by an internall motion, and the heart is taught his word without letters and ſyllables, becauſe his vertue is known by an intim kind of ſublenation. It is a ſpeech without noiſe, that openeth the hearing and yet knoweth not, how to heare a ſound. It vvas not ſo vvith Adam novv, but he heard a ſound of vvords, and thereby vvas brought out of his lurking place.

Verſe 9.

Ambroſ. de paradiſo. cap. 14.

Oecolam.

Aug. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. c. 33

Gregor. in Job 38.

And he ſaid, I heard thy voice in the Garden, and I was afraid, and hid my ſelf, becauſe I was naked. Some here upon conjecture that Adam and Evah then firſt made them Breeches of Fig-leaves, when they heard the Lords voice: but this is falſe, both becauſe that is plainly recorded to have been done ſo ſoon as they had eaten, ſeeing their own nakedneſs, and alſo becauſe there was no time: now upon the ſudden for ſuch a buſineſſe. They did therefore now only hide themſelves being aſhamed to be ſeen naked of the Lord.

Verſe 10.

But had they not heard the Lords voice before, and yet kept their ſtanding, or could they not have recounted, how both they and all creatures were made naked? why then were they now aſhamed of this? Luther ſaith, that they ſhewed their folly herein, to plead this as the cauſe of their fleeing, which ſimply in it ſelf could be no juſt cauſe of fleeing. And ſuch fools are all ſinners, they look not to their ſinnes to be aſhamed, but to ſome outward ignominy, or blemiſh coming hereby, to be grieved and aſhamed for that. But how is it, that they were ſtill aſhamed, having covered their more ſhamefull parts with Fig-leaves ſowed together? This ſheweth, that when man hath done, what he can to cover his ſinnes, and to be juſtified here, from by his own righteous actions, ſo that for a time he reſteth herein, yet this will not alwayes hold, but the time ſhall come, namely, at the laſt day when God cometh to judgement, that he ſhall find and feel all this to be nothing worth, becauſe dread and terrour ſhall remaine unto him notwithſtanding, if he hath nothing elſe to be a defence and covering unto him.

Luther.

Note.

Muſculus.

Verſe 11.

Calvin.

And he ſaid, who told thee, that thou waſt naked? haſt thou eaten of the Tree? &c. The Lord, doth hereby obliquely confute and reprove that, which Adam had ſaid: for he added to his former ſinne by laying the fault of his being aſhamed upon God, who made him naked. And ſo it is, as if the Lord had ſaid, thy nakedneſſe is not the cauſe of thy fleeing and hiding thy ſelf: for then I had created thee with ſome great blemiſh upon thy body, and thou ſhouldeſt have been aſhamed to ſtand before me ſo ſoon as thou wert made, but this was not ſo, for they were then both naked, and were not aſhamed, as vvas declared before. Haſt thou not therefore ſinned by eating contrary to my command? and thus the Lord ſpeaketh, by vvay of queſtion, and not plainly charging him, becauſe he vvould vvring an accuſation of himſelf out of his ovvn mouth, vvho did not hitherto ingeniouſly acknovvledge his ſinne, but ſought by all means to hide it.

Verſe 12.

Calvin.
Muſculus.
Oecolamp.

And the man ſaid, the woman, that thou gaveſt to be with me, gave me of the fruit and I did eat. Adam hereby layeth the fault of his ſinning upon God, by ſaying, the vvoman vvhom thou gaveſt me, thus ſtill agravating his ſinne more and more, and vvhen the Lord cometh to queſtion vvith Hevah, ſhe doth likevviſe: for ſhe ſaith, the Serpent beguiled me, as if ſhe had ſaid, if thou hadſt not made a Serpent to be here vvith me, I had not eaten. Where upon Gregory ſaith excellently. They, Who had heard from the mouth of the deceitfull Serpent, ye ſhall be as gods, becauſe they could not be like unto God; to make up the heap of their errour, attempted to make God like unto themſelves in faulting. And thus vvhileſt they go about to defend their guiltineſſe, they add hereunto, and being ſifted it becometh, more heinous, then it vvas being committed. But the Lord, as the ſame Father hath it, dealt more graciouſly vvith them, he queſtioneth vvith them about their ſinne, as vvilling to bring them to repentance, that they might yet be ſaved, vvhereas coming to the Serpent, for vvhom there vvas no revoking to be pardoned, he is not once asked touching his offence. And here vve may obſerve by vvhat degrees man proceedeth to this day in ſinning, as they are ſet forth by divers, but one melliſluous Bernard, ſhall ſpeak for all. There are four degrees of ſinning, ſaith he. 1 The invvard conſent. 2 The outvvard performance. 3 A cuſtom. 4 A defence or excuſation: The increaſes of ſinne, Job myſtically deploring ſaith, why dyed I not in the womb, or ſo ſoon, as I was come forth: why was I ſuſtained upon the knees, or ſuckled with the breaſts? For, firſt, ſin lyeth hid in the thought. 2 It cometh forth into Act. 3 It is confirmed by cuſtom. 4 It is ſuckled and uouriſhed by excuſing and defending. And by this excuſing Gregory ſaith, man hideth not, himſelf from God but God from him: for as Lazarus is bidden, not to revive but to come forth, ſo to the end that we may be delivered from ſinne, we muſt come forth of our ſelves by confeſſion, but by denying we keep God as it were, aloof from us, ſo that although we cannot be hidden from him, yet the light of his countenance is hidden from us, neither can we haveany comfort thereof. Beſides the Greg. Moral. li. 22. cap. 13. Qui ore diaboli fallentis audicerant, erit is ſicut dii, quia deo eſſe ſimiles requiverunt, ad erroris ſui cumulum, Deum ſibi ſimilem facere in culpa conati ſunt. Sic ergo reatum ſuum dum deſcendere moliuntur, addiderunt, ut culpa eorum atrocior diſcuſſa fieret, quam fuerat perpetrata.

Bernard. Feſt. omnium Sanct. Serm. 1.
Gregor. Moral. lib. 22. c. 13.

the fault, that was in Adam in respect of God in thus excusing his sinne, there was a great fault against his Wife, in this thus saying, as Bernard also observeth. Consider we, that as indulgent, as Adam was to his wife in sinning, so cruell was he against her in undergoing the punishment. For by transferring the fault from himself to his wife, he would also have transferred the deserved punishment to her alone. O perversnesse! doest thou refuse to undergoe punishment for her, and refusedst not to sinne with her? Thou wert pernitiously mercifull, whereas thou oughtest to have been severe, but more perniciously cruel, wherein thou oughtest to have been mercifull. For we ought never to sinne for others, which is a point of injustice, but we ought willingly to bear the sinnes of others, which is a point of mercy. We may see here the case of a sinner, having offended once, he stayeth not here, but proceedeth to add sinne to sinne, without end or measure. He hateth the punishment due to him therefore, and so hateth God the author thereof, and spareth not to break out into blasphemy against him, and into cruelty against those, that are any way an occasion of evill unto him, although most nearly linked unto him.

And the Lord God said unto the woman, what is this that thou hast done? and she said, the Serpent beguiled me and I did eat. Calvin sayth, that these words, what hast thou done? are rather to be turned, as the speech of one admiring, how cometh it to passe, that thou hast done so foule and so heinous a thing? He examineth both the Delinquents, before that he proceedeth to punishment, as good Magistrates ought to do. But as the Man so the Woman excuseth her self, and layeth all the fault upon the Serpent, and consequently, upon him that made him so subtle.

And the Lord God said to the Serpent, because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all Cattel, &c. upon thy Belly shalt thou goe, and Dust shalt thou eat, &c. He questioneth not with the Serpent, as he had done with them, because the Serpent could not answer, and was uncapable of repentance, an occasion whereof the Lord gave to them in mercy by questioning with them about their sinne, sith he sought thus to drive them to the confession thereof, playing the part herein rather of a Physitian, then of a Judge. The Serpent is first punished, because the first that offended. But here it is demanded, whether the Serpent indeed were he, whom the Lord meant, or the Devill, because the Serpent wanted reason, and so had done what he did only, as an instrument, so that it may seem unreasonable to punish him, and for the punishment here spoken of, going upon the Belly, &c. How can this be said to have befalne the Serpent, as a puuishment, which was naturall unto him from the beginning? To these things divers answer diversly. Some, that the beast called a Serpent only is here meant, and not the Devill, because he is plainly thus described, and it agreeth to him and not to the Devill to goe upon his Belly, and to eat Dust, and that before this, the Serpent went upright, but now was made to go thus, as the Devill for his sinne was turned from a glorious angel to an unclean spirit, and Lots Wife into a Pillar of Salt. And more over, that the Serpent wanted not reason, as some say, or if he did, yet God might justly punish him thus, partly to vex Satan, whose iustrument he was, partly to shew his hatred of sinne, as other beasts and Fowles were drowned in the Floud for the sin of Man, and partly that man might be more affected in seeing this punishment inflicted upon a beast for their offence, as others say. By this exposition, how far forth I have been led, see before. verse 1. Yet I do not think, but as the Devill had an hand in that, which the Serpent did to seduce Man, so althongh first and liberally the Serpent be meant here, yet mystically the Devill is meant also, as Calvin and others consent, even as when the brazen Serpent is spoken of, those things, that were done thereby were truly done by that Serpent, but mystically Christ Jesus was set forth hereby. But what is meant here literally and what mystically? Literally the Serpent goeth upon his Belly drawing all the rest Considerandum ad annum, quàm fuerat indulgens uxori in culpa, tam fuisse in eam crudelem in pœna subeunda. Nam transferendo culpam à se in uxorem, pœnam quoque meritum voluit in eam solam transferre. O perfidas, pœnam pro ea suscipere refugis, & tamen culpam admittere non recusasti? pernicioso misericors fuisti, ubi severus esse debuisti, sed pernicioso crudelis, ubi misericordiam impendere. Numquam enim propter alium peccare debet quod est injustitiæ, libenter tamen aliena peccata portare decet, quod est misericordiæ.

Verse 13. Calvin.

Verse 14. Calvin. Tapius.

Moses. Bonaventura. Ephrem.

Calvin.

reſt of his body after him, and to ſhew his baſeneſſe more, licketh up the duſt, as none other beaſt doth, for they live upon the fruits of the earth, as God at the firſt appointed. Moreover the Serpent, with whom the woman was ſo familiar before, is now at greateſt enmity with the woman, & her ſeed, of all other beaſts of the field, and againe, the woman and hers doemoſt hate Serpents. Men indeed doe alſo generally by an inſtinct of nature hate Serpents above all, and kill, and deſtroy them, whereſoever they find them, but women ſpecially are ſet againſt them. And it is remarkable, which Ferus hath, that if a woman with her naked foot preſſeth the Serpents head but a little, he dyeth forthwith, but if he biteth, but her Toe firſt, ſhe is poiſoned and dyeth, which is the more admirable, becauſe, if a Serpent be ſtricken many blows on the head, he is hardly killed otherwiſe. Laſtly, Serpents lye lurking in the Graſſe, and are ſtill ready to bite at our heels, and to poiſo nous, but we ſtrike at their heads and ſo kill them up. Myſtically the Devill goeth upon his Belly, ſaith Gregory, or upon his Belly and Breſt by Cogitation, and Luxury, whereby he doth rule over mens hearts, becauſe Luxury followeth thoſe, that are given to the appetite, and he eateth duſt, that is wicked men, whom he hideth in the belly of his malice, and thus he is refreſhed, as by meat, whileſt he is delighted in their evill works. Wherefore he is compared by Saint Peter to a Lion, that goeth about ſeeking, whom he may devour; and thus Rupertus, and ſome others of the Fathers alſo, For his enmity againſt us, it is notorius, if by the woman and her ſeed we underſtand the godly, of whom Chriſt, that came of a woman is the head, and by the Devils ſeed, the wicked, of whom the Lord ſaith to the Jews, ye are of your father the Devill. For as betwixt Cain and Abel deadly enmity began, ſo it is ſtill and will be continued betwixt the wicked and the godly throughout all generations, as is partly touched, Gal. 4. and St. Auguſtine ſetteh it forth at large in ſpeaking of two Cities, the one of God, and the other of the Devill: but the comfort is, that in the end the victory ſhall fall to the godly, which is ſet forth by the head and the heel, whereof the one, that ſhould be ſmitten, is ſuperiour, and the other inferiour, ſo that hereby is ſet forth, that the godly ſhall at laſt be ſuperiour to the wicked, and their rather the Devill, and they ſhall be made inferiour, whatſoever dominion they atteine to in the mean ſeaſon. Gregory hath another elegant application of this ſaying. For as the heel, ſaith he, is the end of the body, ſo by the heel is meant in this place the end of our actions. When the old enemy ſtriketh not in the beginning of our intention, nor in the journey of our actions intercepteth, he layeth worſe ſnares in the end, which he doth the more eagerly attempt, becauſe he ſeeth that only left for him to aſſault. To obſerve the head of the Serpent is to behold the begiunings of his ſuggeſtions, and utterly to root them out from the entrance of the heart with the hand of ſolicitous conſideration, who notwithſtanding being thus put back attempteth to ſmite the heel, becauſe although he ſtriketh not by his ſuggeſtion the firſt intention, yet he eſſayeth to deceive in the end. But if once the heart be corrupted in the intention, the middle and the end of the followving action is ſecurely poſſeſſed by the ſubtle adverſary, becauſe he ſeeth that Tree, vvhich he hath vitiated vvith the tooth of his poiſon vvholly to beare fruit for him. But by the ſeed of the vvoman is generally underſtood Chriſt Jeſus, as Calvin noteth, but diſliketh, becauſe the vvord Seed is a Novvn Collective, more being meant hereby, and not one only, and becauſe a perpetuity of enmity is here ſet forth Generation after Generation. And therefore he rather underſtandeth here by mankind, that is, ſo many, as are faithfull, who notwithſtanding becauſe they are not ſuperiour to the Devill and his Inſtruments in themſelves, muſt be conſidered in their head Chriſt Jeſus, in whoſe triumphing over Satan they triumph alſo, whereupon it is, that the Apoſtle ſaith, God ſhall, ſhortly tread Satan under your feet: with Calvin agree many other of our moſt learned writers, and both

Auguſtine

Gregor. part 3. Cur. poſt. admonit. 20. In Pſal. 110.

2 Pet. 5.8.

John 8.

Calvin. Muſculus.

Greg. cap. 1. Iob Quia calcaneus eſt finis corporis, quod per hunc ſignificatur, niſi terminus actionis. Cum antiquus hoſtis neque in exordio intentionis ferit, neque in itinere actionis intercipit, duriores in fine laqueos tendit, quem tanto nequius obſtaet, quanto ſolum ſibi remanſiſſe ad decipiendum videt &c. Calvin.

Rom. 16. 20.

Augustine, Chrysostom, Gregory, and other of the ancients, when they speak of this, apply it unto mankind, amongst whom some alwayes are found fighting against and overcoming the Devill.

Some understand Lucifer by the Serpent and other evil spirits that fell with him, by his seed: if we understand them and wicked men also, as Musculus doth the sense will be more full. But by the seed of the woman certainly, as when Abrahams seed is afterwards spoken of, Christ specially is meant, so by the womans seed in this place. For otherwise there had been nothing to intimate Christ to come, by whom mankind hath redemption and deliverance from sinne, till the dayes of Abraham, and so neither could our first Parents for the want of the knowledge of him, nor any of the ages succeeding, til Abrahams, have been saved. It is a truer tenet therefore, which is held by most, that Christ, who was to come of a woman, by his death should strike the head of the Devill, and destroy it, that is, the power of sin and death, which he had over all, is meant in this place. And so that saying, the Lamb of God slaine from the beginning of the World, is verified, because even now he was mystically promised to be slaine, for the subduing of Satan, and by his vertue it is effected, that the Devill can doe no more to him, but nibble at his heel, that is, by his cursed instruments persecute, and for a short time take his bodily life from him, and all his power is against the body only, and the flesh, and not against the soule, and the mind in any of his faithfull members.

Musculus.

Oal. 3 16.

And thus it appeareth, that no sooner had man sinned, but a Saviour is promised, and therefore in all ages from the beginning of the world Christ hath been preached and set forth, which Saint John also affirmeth, and the Apostle Paul somewhat more obscurely, saying, Jesus Christ, yesterday and to day, the same also for ever. And in particular sometimes, as here, to come of a woman, as Esa. 7.14. Jer. 31.22. And Evagrius saith, that Jeremiah gave the Egyptians this for a signe of the falling of their idols, when a Virgin should bear a Son, for which cause they kept the image of a Virgin, with a childe in her armes, in a more secret part of the Temple, in the Targum Hierasol. The seed is exponded of the King Messiah, and R. Menahem saith, all souls are unclean through the corruption now entering, and so must needs dye, till the Messiah cometh. As some therefore are for the beast, called the Serpent onely, as meant here, so others are for the Devil onely, as the subject of this curse, making the speech altogether allegoricall, as Augustine, Beda, Rupertus, Hugo de Sancto Victore, &c. Because the Devil is commonly set forth by the name of a Serpent, and there is something analogical to be found in him, to those things which are in base Serpents. And whereas one word is onely used, upon thy belly shalt thou go, they have two, upon thy breast and belly, by the breast understandig pride, or folly, or the cogitation of evill, because the breast is the seat of these, and by the belly, the putting of the same in execution, as hath been partly touched before. But a Serpent properly understood hath been so plainly described, as that this exposition can by no meanes be admitted, and as for the Devil, he was accursed before this. Lastly, others therefore first, and literally understand the serpent, & mystically the Devil, according to the discourse already made hereupon: but that they differ from us in two things. First, in that they will not have any allegory in the former words, upon thy belly shalt thou go, &c. But onely in the latter, I will put enmity betwixt thee and the woman, &c. Secondly, in that they censure the opinion of the Serpents going erect before this, and that touching his having any subtilty to deceive, because then one kinde of serpents onely should have been thus punished and not all. But touching the first, I oppose the authrity of so many ancient Doctours, and that of the same judgement there must needs be in all likelihood the same reason of mysticall expounding, and not of one part of it onely, because it is no pain, but a pleasure to the Devil to devour men, and to rule in their breasts and bellyes by evill cogitations and actions. Touching the second, I have said some

1 John 2 7.

Heb. 13.8.

Evag. lib. 4.

August. de Gen. contra Manich. lib 2.

Calvin.

ſome what before, ſpecially, that if the Serpent went thus in times paſt, it could be no puniſhment, and beſides the Authors there alleaged, I may here alſo cite one of the moſt orthodox and ſound; Chryſoſtome, who ſpeaking of this thing, ſaith to this effect. As I caſt the Devil down from heaven, who wrought by thee, becauſe he would be wiſer, then was meet, ſo I command, that thou alſo from henceforth goe in another figure or forme, creeping upon the ground, and being fed therewith never once looking up any more. As for the objection, that all kinds of Serpents ſhould not then have been thus puniſhed, it is eaſily anſwered, that God hath ſovereign power over all creatures, and therefore although one kinde of Serpents onely aſcended, out of the deteſtation of the fact, he might as well puniſh all kindes, as all the living things of Amaleck for the ſins of the men therein. But be it, that Serpents went all upon their bellies before this, yet there was no enmity betwixt them & mankinde, how then happened it, that they ſhould all ſorts alike be now hated of men? for herein I am ſure they participated with that kind, which was made an inſtrument to work the woman to ſin, and thus much Pererius, who is for, and if in this, why not in the other, confeſſeth their gate alſo. The reaſons, I confeſſe, which are brought to juſtifie the Expoſition oppoſed, that the Serpents manner of going, howſoever he went upon his belly before, yet now onely it became a puniſhment unto him, are of ſome force; As firſt, that the nakedneſſe of man was before ſinne, but after ſinne committed, onely it becometh ſhameful, man was by nature at the firſt mortall, viz. So that he could dye, and there was a naturall antipathy betwixt man and Serpents, but both this was reſtreined by the Lord from breaking out, till now, and death was kept away from man: and why then might not the Serpents going upon his belly be naturall, and yet now be made a puniſhment. Secondly, the Rainbow cometh of naturall cauſes, and yet the Lord ſaith, after the Floud, that he ſet it for a ſigne, when as indeed it was before: ſo the Serpent might be thus appointed now, being yet ſuch before alſo, upon thy belly ſhalt thou goe, is no more, ſaith Calvin, then as if the Lord had ſaid, d eſt thou thus lift up thy ſelf to bring down man made after my image, and a Lord over all Cattel? thou ſhalt no more exalt thy ſelf in this manner, but ſhalt goe upon thy belly, &c. like a baſe creature as thou art: for the Prophet Eſay ſpeaking of the Serpent in the time of the reſtauration of all things to their perfect natural condition, ſaith, that the duſt ſhall be food to the Serpent. But this place of Eſay ought not to move us, becauſe although other creatures be reduced to a better condition, yet it is contrary to the doom againſt the Serpent, to have his caſe ever altered, and for the other reaſons, if there were any neceſſity to follow that Expoſition, they might ſerve in ſome ſort for the juſtification thereof, and yet of nakedneſſe, the Lord doth not ſay to Adam and Evah, for this cauſe ye ſhall goe naked, as he doth to the Serpent: Thou ſhalt goe upon thy belly, becauſe thou haſt done this thing, ſo that whatſoever mans nakedneſſe was now unto him, yet for ſo much as it is not an expreſſe puniſhment, as this of the Serpent was, the reaſon holdeth not ſo well from the one to the other: for any enmity in any meaſure in any beaſt at the firſt againſt man, I cannot ſee, how it may be affirmed, becauſe all things made by the Lord were very good: Laſtly, although the Rainbow was before, yet it was not ſet for a ſigne, ſo that this was plainly a new matter, whereas no ſuch thing is expreſſed touching the Serpents going upon his belly, that his baſeneſſe ſhould henceforth appeare by this, and therefore the ſimilitude betwixt theſe two doth not well hold, to prove that the Serpent might goe upon his belly before. And if the Serpent had been in the ſame ſtate before, and nothing had been newly impoſed, here had been a leſſe puniſhment for the Serpent, than for man, to whom a new vexation was added, beſides that of his nakedneſſe becoming ſhameſull, and ſo a vile beaſt, the beginner of all the miſchief ſhould have been leſſe than he. There is one ancient, Dydimus, who ſaith, that the went

Chryſoſt. Hom. 17. in Gen.

Pererius.

Gen. 9.

Calvin.

Eſay 65.25.

Dydimus.

Serpent at the firſt went upon his belly, but was erected by the Devill, that he might in this forme come & parley with the woman, but now he is againe caſt down by the Lord: but becauſe this were no puniſhment great enough for ſo great an offence, to be brought only to that ſtate, wherein he was created, this cannot by any means be admitted. Having thus cleared the greateſt queſtion of this Text, little more remaineth to be ſaid for the full underſtanding of all things. Becauſe thou haſt done this, (ſaith the Lord) thou art curſed above all cattel, that is, becauſe thou haſt bin the author and perſwader to ſo great a ſin, whereas the earth, the Mother, and all other cattel, the children thereof ſhall beare a curſe therefore, being ſubjected to vanity, thou ſhalt be curſed above them all: for upon thy belly ſhalt thou go groveling; as thou didſt talke to the woman of an high condition to be atteined by eating, thou ſhalt be made low enough, and Duſt ſhalt thou eat: whereas thou didſt cauſe the woman to eat pleaſant fruit, thy food ſhall be moſt courſe and unpleaſant, and in the holes of the ground and in the Duſt ſhall be thy habitation, as by tempting to ſinne, thou haſt brought mankind to that, that he muſt returne to the Duſt and to the grave: where we may note, how ſin is puniſhed in the kind, and ſo it was both in the woman and in the man alſo. I will alſo put enmity betwixt thee and the Woman, &c. That is, inſtead of the wicked amity and familiarity, that hath been betwixt you, there ſhall henceforth be deadly enmity, not that it ſhall not be ſo betwixt the Man and the Serpent alſo, but the woman and her poſterity are ſingularly ſpoken of, becauſe it was with the woman and not with the man, that the Serpent had converſed in ſo much ſeeming love. That amity, which is in ſinne amongſt the wicked ſhall not long hold, but be turned into the greateſt enmity. And myſtically by the woman we may underſtand the Church, for thus ſhe is ſet forth in the Revel. 12. And by her ſeed Chriſt, and by the Serpent and his ſeed all the Devils in hell and wicked men, becauſe no one thing is more adverſe to another, then Devils and wicked men to Chriſt and the Church, and they to them. He ſhall break thine head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel; in the vulgar Latine it is, ſhee ſhall break thine head, which is falſe and blaſphemous, and yet it hath paſſed from time to time, as Calvin noteth, without correction, being applyed to the Virgin Mary: whereas the words are commonly read with ſome variation, He ſhall break thine head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel, and in the vulgar Latine, tu inſidiaberis calcaneo ejus, the ſame Calvin noteth, that in the Hebrew there is no difference, but the ſame word coming of שׁוּף or שָׁפַף, is uſed in both places, which cometh from the ſame root with that, which ſignifieth a Serpent, viz. שְׁפִיפֹן, and it ſignifieth to cruſh or to break in pieces, conterere, whereby therefore he turneth it in both places. Ille conteret caput tuum, & tu conteres calcaneum ejus: They ſhould mutually do the greateſt hurt, that they could, the one unto the other, but the man, according to the erect ſtature of his body, ſhould ſtrike at the head, and ſo more deadly, and the Serpent lying low, at the heel, not to do the man ſo much hurt. In the Serpents head lay the ſubtlety, from whence that temptation to ſin came, and therefore that ſpecially ſhould by man be ſtricken at as moſt hateful, and ſo we ſhould ſpecially look to the root of ſinne within us, viz. evill concupiſcence, to ſubdue and mortifie it, and the heel the Serpent ſtrikes at, becauſe lying under the feet of men, and able to reach no higher. Myſtically Chriſt diſſolveth the power and head-force of Satan, and Satan hurteth him, what he can in his inferiour part, the body, vvhileſt h vvas here, and in his members in reſpect of the body, and of the fleſh, but as it did not him, ſo it ſhall not put them to any great detriment, but only ſuch, as ſhall turne to their greater future advancement.

Rom. 8. 20.

Note.

Note.

Calvin.

And unto the woman he ſaid, I will greatly multiply thy ſorrow and thy Conception, &c. Here three doubts offer themſelves. 1 How the multiplying of the womans Conceptions is ſpoken of, as a puniſhment of her ſin. 2 Whether to bring forth with pain be not naturall, becauſe it is another puniſhment here inflicted, and the cauſes of paine in women ſeem alwayes to have been the ſame. 3 How this is to be underſtood, that the womans deſire ſhould be ſubject to her Husband, and that he ſhould rule over her? Touching the firſt, ſome ſay, that by her Conception is to be underſtood the time of nine Moneths, that ſhe ſhould now go, before her deliverance, whereas if ſhe had not ſinned, ſhe ſhould preſently after conceiving have been delivered: but this is abſurd, it being alwayes requiſite in nature, that the young ſhould ſtay in the womb a certaine time, before it cometh out. Others therefore by conceptions here underſtand both thoſe of the body and mind, which are accurſed in that they are the Conceptions of death, till that they be againe delivered by Chriſt, yea moſt, ſay ſome, of thoſe, that are conceived, be veſſels of wrath; but this is little to the purpoſe, ſeeing not moſt but all the Conceptions of women are here ſpoken of, and in conceiving ſuch as ſhall periſh, there is no ſenſible paine in that reſpect, becauſe they that conceive ſuch, know them not, whereas here the paines felt in conceiving and bringing forth are meant. We muſt not therefore thus expound it, nor yet as ſome doe, by the pinching with want, that is to ſome in having many Children, or by the grief that is when they prove naught and unruly, nor by the many abortives, nor yet by the deformed, which are ſome-times brought forth. For theſe words are plainly expounded by the words following: in ſorrow thou ſhalt bring forth children: ſo that I will multiply thy ſorrows and conceptions, is no more but as if he had ſaid, I wil multiply the ſorrows of thy conceptions, it being uſuall in the Hebrew tongue to put two Subſtantives together with a Conjunction copulative, whenas the latter of them is to be rendred by the Genitive caſe.

Verſe 16.

Hieron. Oleaſter.

Rupert. lib 3. de Trini. c. 22.

Vatablus.

2

Touching the ſecond, although the vvoman ſhould have conceived, as novv ſhe doth, and have brought forth children the ſame vvay, that is, by a paſſage too narrovv, for vvhich cauſe there muſt neceſſarily at that time have been a dilating thereof, yet, had ſhe not ſinned, it ſhould have been without all paine and grief. This is by Auguſtine excellently ſet forth thus; When the fruit of the vvomb had novv been brought to maturity, it ſhould then have come to paſſe, that the Mothers bovvels ſhould have been ſo far forth looſened, that they ſhould have given a fit paſſage to this fruit vvithout the paine of the Mother. So that God at the firſt had ordained children to come forth, as it were by the inforcement of maturity, and not by the ſtruglings and painfull labouring of the mother. But now, by multiplying I will multiply thy ſorrows, ſaith the Lord, that is, by an Hebraiſme, I will certainly fill thee with many pangs, both in conceiving, bearing in the womb, and in bringing forth. In conceiving, the tenth day, ſaith Pliny, there are pains in the head, darkneſſe in the eyes, and ſickneſſe in the ſtomack, the fourtieth day there is a change of the colonr, although it be better for Males, worſe for Females, the ninetieth, when the child beginneth to ſtir, and the haire beginneth to grow, there is much languiſhing of the members, and ſpecially every full of the Moon, and after all this the ſmell of a Candle put out, cauſeth abortion, and yauning death in the very travail, ſo that it pittieth me, and I am aſhamed to think, how frivolous is the beginning of the proudeſt of the creatures. In bringing forth, how full of pangs women are above all creatures, both experience teacheth, and the holy Scripture ſpeaking hereof, as the greateſt of all pangs, confirmeth.

Auguſt. de Civit. l. 14. c. 26. Cùm fœtus in utero jam partui fuiſſet maturus, tunc fore, ut materna viſcera in tantum laxarentur, ut commodum fœtui ſine matris dolore tranſitum præberent. Plin. li. 7. c. 6, 7. Miſeret atque etiam pudet æſtimantem, quàm ſit frivola animalium ſuperbiſſimi origo.

3

Laſtly, for the womans deſire being ſubject to her Husband, ſome expound this, as being the ſame with that, which is ſet forth in the next words, he ſhall rule over thee, as if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt no more be free, as hitherto thou haſt been, thy ſubjection to thy Husband being nothing voluntary and free, as it was before ſinne, as God made thee for an help unto the man, and he being then towards thee in every reſpect, as an Husband ought to be towards his wife, that together ye might have, as loving yoak-fellows, alwayes led a moſt ſweet and pleaſant life: but now thy ſubjection ſhall be

Calvin. Muſculus.

neceſſary

neceſſary and conſtreined, there being no further liberty left unto thee to do what thou wilt, but what he alloweth or appointeth, although happily he may now be churliſh and harſh. Some againe expound it as a different thing, as Artopœus remembreth, but he followeth the former, viz. as if by deſire were meant the womans affection, which ſhould ſtill be moſt earneſt to company with her Husband, notwithſtanding all her pangs by his means formerly ſuffered. For as if all her ſorrows in child-bearing formerly had, were forgotten, ſhe ſoon after deſireth the company of her Husband againe, and accordingly Symmachus turneth it, Ad virum appetitus tuus, and the Hebrew word here uſed, properly ſignifieth deſire or luſt, and of this it is by the Hebrews underſtood. Some againe, as the ſame Artopœus ſaith, expound it of help, which the weak and infirme woman deſireth of the man. Pet. Artopœus.

Amongſt theſe, I preferre the middlemoſt: for it ſeemeth to be an addition to that of her ſorrows, that having ſuffered them ſometimes, ſhe ſhould ſeek to bring them upon her ſelf againe and againe, not being able by reaſon of this malediction layed upon her, to do otherwiſe. For thus the woman is here puniſhed two wayes; both in that ſhe is put under the dominion of the man, and alſo in that her very affections are ſubjected to him, whereby a preparative is made to the renewing of her ſorrows againe: whereas, if it be expounded according to the firſt, as Chryſoſtom alſo and Rupertus expound it, and many others, the puniſhment will be but ſingle, and the word, deſire or luſt, doth not ſo well agree either to it, or to the laſt. The Septuagint turne it, Ad virum erit converſio tua. Whereupon Chryſoſtom ſaith, thou haſt turned after the Serpent, whilſt thou wert equal to thine Husband, and hadſt together with him principality over the creatures: wherefore ſeeing thou couldſt uſe thy liberty no better, thou ſhalt novv turne after him, and he ſhall rule over thee. Thou didſt then vvithout feare ruſh headlong into danger, becauſe thou couldſt not then rule thy ſelf better; I vvill novv have thee to be ruled by him, vvherefore as the body is ruled by the head, ſee that thou henceforth ſweetly acknovvledge and follovv him thine head. Chryſoſtom. in Gen. Hom. 17.

Many think, as was touched before, that the woman was under the man from the firſt, but then freely, finding no paine therein, but now to her grief oftentimes and trouble. But Chryſoſtom is againſt this, and by the Text it ſeemeth that inferiority came in only by ſin, yet for ſo much as ſhe was made for the man, as Saint Paul teacheth: I muſt needs rather aſſent to thoſe, that are for a kind of inferiority before, but altogether differing from that which now it is: yet the man is not now to rule over his wife, as over his ſervants or children, but as over his moſt deare and beloved companion, his ruling over her being mixed with a giving of honour to her, as is commanded, love as of his own fleſh, moderating in all things, and bitterneſſe by ſtriking, and by Lord-like ſpeaking, as is uſed to other inferiors, being put away. And for the woman, whatſoever Husband ſhe hath, let her learne with patience to be ſubject to him, as the Lord hath appointed, oppoſing obedience to her Husband, and patience, as the chief of vertues, to that diſobedience of the firſt woman unto God, as the chief of vices, and ſo ſhe may have comfort yet of being one day exempt from this ſubjection, and reſtored to an equality with the man in Dominion and Glory in the Kingdom of Heaven, as the Apoſtle hath plainly taught. As for thoſe women, that marry not, but live alwayes Virgins for the Kingdom of Heaven, they are by their continency freed from this ſubjection and ſorrow, which is only to the married, and yet not altogether, becauſe they come of Hevah, that ſinned: for they are troubled with their monethly flowers, and are reſtrained from that authority which men have: for I permit not the woman, ſaith the Apoſtle, to teach, or to uſurp authority, &c. 1 Tim. 2. 1 Pet. 3. 7. Epheſ. 5. 1 Tim. 2. 13. 1 Cor. 14.

Now the puniſhment here inflicted upon the woman ſmiteth with her ſin. In that ſhe was carryed by pleaſure to eat; wherefore ſhe is firſt adjudged to paine. 2 In that by eating, ſhe brought death upon her ſelf and her children, therefore at all times of her bearing children ſhe ſhould ſuffer pangs like to the pangs of death. 3 Becauſe ſhe by her flattery drew her Husbands deſire alſo to this curſed fruit, and contrary to her condition as his Maſter taught him to ſin, therefore her deſire now ſhould be to him, and he ſhould be her Maſter, and ever after rule over her.

Verſe 17. And to Adam he ſaid, Becauſe thou haſt hearkned to the voice of thy wife, and haſt eaten of the tree, touching which I commanded thee, ſaying, Thou ſhalt not eat thereof, curſed is the ground for thy ſake, &c. As the earth was made principally to affoard food & habitation to man; ſo man having ſinned, it is juſtly accurſed unto him. The old tranſlation, ſaith Calvin, hath it, Curſed be the ground in thy work. Being deceived by the ſimilitude of the word, to that which ſignifieth to till the ground, for it is בעבורך and עבד ſignifieth to till the ground, but כעבורך for thee is written with ך this will And curſed is the ground

Calvin.

Verſe 18. by ſterility of good things now befalling it inſtead of fertility. And yet it is not ſo ſterill of good fruits, but that it bringeth forth abundance of them ſtil, but much labour of man is novv required for this to extirpe briars and thorns, and other noiſom redundancies meant hereby, vvhereunto it vvas not lyable from the beginning. So that the earth vvas novv changed in this, that before it yielded all things only profitable of the ovvn accord for mans uſe, there being no need, that he ſhould labour, but moderately, and vvith pleaſure rather, then paine, as hath been already ſhevved; but novv Briars and Thorns, and the like begin to over-ſpread the ground, to the choaking of Corne and Graſſe, and to the hindring of good fruits, inſo much, as if man toileth not upon it continually to keep the gronnd clear from theſe, he cannot have ſuſtenance therefrom. Some hold, that Thorns and Briars grevv upon the ground before, but novv more abundantly: but ſo the ground vvould in time have been overſpread vvith them, although man had not ſinned, and he muſt have toyled in cleanſing the ground, vvhich is abſurd. This then cometh novv, firſt of the curſe upon ſinne: Thorns alſo and Thiſtles it ſhall bring forth to thee, and thou ſhalt eat of the hearb of the field. The laſt vvords here Calvin ſaith, ſome underſtand, as if man vvere novv reſtrained from all other food, but hearbs vvith the beaſts, but this he taketh to be too ſtrict an Expoſition, underſtanding it rather, as ſome reſtraint of the plenty, vvherewith he was fed before, ſo that he had need now to ſeek a ſupply by hearbs, or as a comfort, that yet he ſhould have hearbs to feed upon, as at the beginning. Ferus underſtandeth the earth here, as oppoſed to Paradiſe; the hearbs of the curſed earth, for thoſe of the bleſſed Paradiſe, being baſe in compariſon of them. To me the words ſeem neither to be reſtrictive at all, nor yet ſuch, as tend to comfort, but only, as if he had ſaid, although the ground ſhall be full of briars and thorns choaking the hearbs of the field, yet thou ſhalt not any new way be fed, but with theſe hearbs preſerved to grow, and gotten with much labour & difficulty. For as he ſpeaketh of hearbs, ſo he Perevius.

Calvin.

Verſe 19. ſpeaketh v. 19. of bread, In the ſweat of thy brow thou ſhalt eat bread, &c. whence it is plaine, that he reſtreineth him not to graſs only, neither did he meane, that hearbs ſhould be uſed, as a ſupply more now then at the firſt, but in the want of corne, becauſe then he appointed for the food of man, hearbs and

Gen. 1. 29. fruits of trees alſo; and leaſt of all can it be conceived, that in puniſhing him he would ſpeak any comfort unto him. The laborious life, that man ſhould henceforth lead then, is hereby ſet forth, vvhich is furrher expreſſed by ſpeaking of his ſvveat, and vvith ſuch travil and labour ſhould he get his living, till that he returned to the duſt: for, Duſt, ſaith the Lord, thou art, and to the duſt ſhalt thou returne: and vvithall, his baſe food, vvith vvhich he ſhould be ſometimes glad to ſatisfie his hunger, vvas meant, viz. graſſe vvith the beaſts, to vvhich Nebuchadnezar vvas aftervvards adjudged for his pride, Dan. 4. For at the firſt hearbs bearing ſeed, and fruits vvere appointed for man, and graſſe for the beaſts, Ch. 1. 29. 30. Hovv man vvas made out of the duſt

duſt vvas ſhevved before : novv having ſinned , he muſt dye, and his body be reſolved to duſt againe,although his ſpirit goeth to God,that gave it, as is taught,Eccl. 12. 1. But the body only is ſpoken of here as Duſt,to beat down the pride of man, wherein he had gone ſo far. Of this reſolving to duſt the time is ſet down only indefinitely, to make man alwayes to be thinking upon it , and preparing for it , as being a thing , that ſhall certainly come, bnt how ſoon he cannot tell. The puniſhment of man conſiſteth in three things: Firſt , the ground is accurſed to him,to bring forth briars and thornes, as he had abuſed the delectable Trees and pleaſant fruits (which it brought forth before)to intemperance , not keeping to thoſe , unto which the Lord had reſtrained him. 2 The getting of his food is made laborious; as the fruit of which he ate, came to him without all labour , being brought and given to him by his wife. 3 The ſentence of death is denounced againſt him, whereas he expected hereby to have been made as the immortall God.

Verſe 20.

And Adam called his wives name Evah , becauſe ſhe was the mother of all living. There is a queſtion here amongſt Expoſitours, To what time this is to be referred , becauſe it ſeemeth unreaſonable , that the man ſo ſoon as he was ſmitten with the ſentence of Gods judgement , ſhould turne himſelf to his wife , the cauſe of this miſchief , and give her ſo high and magnificall a title , yet ſome will have it done in that order , wherein it was ſet down. For Adam conceiving now by Gods ſentence ſome hope of living ſtill , yea not believing that he ſhould dye at all, doth thus proudly in contempt of God call his wife , life, ſo Rupertus : but others , that he called her thus in reſpect of that , which the Lord had foretold of her ſeed, that it ſhould break the Serpents head , meaning that Chriſt ſhould one day come of her , in whom alone we all live : others againe, that he called her thus by a bitter irony, becauſe ſhe brought death to all men, as the furies of hell are in Greek called Eumenides , eaſie to be intreated, by a contrary name, when as they are inexorable. And there are not wanting , who think Ave , the vvord uſed by the Angel to the Virgin Mary,here aimed at,being made out of this vvord Evah by a little alteration. Laſtly,ſome hold , that he gave her this name as who would hereby celebrate Gods mercy in prolonging their lives , who had deſerved to dye preſently. And this, I take it , cometh neareſt to the right reaſon : for Adam having heard the Lord to ſpeak of her conceptions and bringing forth of children , and before that, of her ſeed, which ſhould break the Serpents head , could not but in the midſt of his perplexities be ſomewhat comforted, hoping of good that ſhould yet come by her, tending to life and to the propagation of mankind , as there had come evil by her to make him and them all ſubject to death; and therefore rouſing up his drooping ſpirits , he ſettleth a name upon her ſutable to that , which hath been ſaid, חַוָּה living, that whenſoever this name ſhould be mentioned , Gods mercy might be remembred in making her fruitfnl , though with great paine, and fruitfull to bring forth ſuch a living ſeed, as ſhould at length ſubdue the Devill. Others expound it , as if it had been ſpoken by the Preterpluperfect tence , and ſo remembred here only , but that he called her thus before. I reſt in the former , as moſt excellently agreeing; Becauſe ſhe was the mother of all living, that is , of all men living when Moſes wrote this, and of all that ſhould be to the worlds end. This denomination then is authenticall , becauſe Scripture, and ſo the denominations made by ſome Hebrews are but vaine imaginations, as thoſe two remembred by Fagius , the one , that ſhe was called חוה, life, to ſet forth her corruption, miſery and mutability, as it is with this life , the other , that ſhe was ſo called by the Chaldee word חוה ſignifying to tell , becauſe ſhe inconſiderately told her Husband of the Serpents ſpeech , whereby he was ſeduced. Ferus beſides the good ſenſe , in which he ſayth this may be taken, premiſeth another, as if Adam did this out of ſtupidity , not regarding Gods threatning of death , and ſaith , this his naming of her is mentioned here, to ſhew his Dominion over her,accord-

Ruper.lib 3 de Trinit. cap.26.

Ferus.

Calvin.

Fagius.

before

ing to the ſentence, v. 16. For thus his dominion over the creatures was before ſet forth, Ch. 2. 19.

Verſe 21. Fagius. Unto Adam alſo and his wife the Lord made Coats of ſkins, &c. Theſe words, ſaith Fagius, are diverſly read; by the Chaldee Paraphraſt thus, The Lord God made for Adam and his wife Veſtiments of honour upon the skin of their fleſh: by others, Coats taken from the skin, that is, of Wooll. But both theſe are from the purpoſe; for neither doth Moſes ſpeak of their skins, but of the skins of beaſts, nor of that which grew upon skins, but of the skins themſelves. Origen. Origen, Gregory Niſſen, and ſome other Ancients, becauſe it is abſurd to hold, that God wrought upon garments to make them, after the manner of a Taylour, underſtand this only allegorically, that he cloathed them with mortal bodies full of many miſeries. Gregor. Nyſſen. Auguſt. lib. 11. de Gen. ad lit. cap. 39. But Auguſt. and Chryſoſtom, Chryſoſt. hom. 18. and others that are more ſound Expoſitours, underſtand it literally firſt, howſoever ſome after the literall ſenſe add a myſticall underſtanding alſo. But ſo a great queſtion ariſeth, both whence theſe skins came, and how it is ſaid, that the Lord made them Coats thereof, and to what end? For to have skins, ſome beaſts muſt neceſſarily be killed, and ſo ſome kinds of creatures muſt have been wholly deſtroyed againe ſoon after they were made, if there were made but two of a kind at the firſt, as is moſt likely. Againe, for the Lords making them Coats, how may that be thought of, ſeeing he is not like man to ſew and to make Garments? Nazianzen. Genadius. Some anſwer, that they were not skins, but barkes of trees; but thoſe were unfit for ſuch a purpoſe, and the word tranſlated skins doth no where ſignifie ſuch a thing. Others therefore ſay, that more beaſts were made of every kind, and that they were the skins of ſome of theſe being killed not for meat, but for the uſe of Garments. Chryſoſt. Hom. 18. And as for the Lords making them, ſome ſay, that he did this by his word, as he did other things, and ſome by teaching them, the neceſſity of their naked bodies, now urging them to it, to kil of the beaſts and to make them of their skins, or that he did it by the miniſtrey of Angels, as Hugo de Sancto Victore But what need is there to diſpute of the Lords doing herein? Rupertus. Calvin. Ferus. He could by his power have skins without killing of beaſts, cloathing the beaſts againe with new skins immediately, as ordinarily the Serpent putteth off the old skin ſometime, and a new then ſucceedeth, and theſe skins he could by his word immediatly make into Coats, and put them upon their bodyes, yet I rather think, that they gave them the wit; thus to cloath themſelves: Touching the cauſe why, he ſaw that they had ſewed Fig-leaves together, and yet were not ſufficiently cloathed, and that now their need was great of cloathing to cover their ſhame, and to keep them from many injuries of the weather and other occurrences; wherefore, although he were greatly offended with their ſinne, yet out of his infinite goodneſſe, whereby he maketh the Sun to ſhine, and the Rain to fall upon the juſt and the unjuſt, he would provide thus for their preſent neceſſity, teaching them hereby, how to cloath them and theirs afterwards. Calvin. That God put it into their mind to take skins and make themſelves coats, and this was his making of them, is the more probable, becauſe they of their own heads made themſelves Aprons of Fig-leaves; but now being better taught by God; they made themſelves Coats of skins.

Pſal. 49. In that the skins of beaſts are taken to cloath man, his degenerating to a condition, like that of a beaſt, is figured out, after his eating, contrary to his expectation, which was to be made like God, as the Pſalmiſt partly teacheth. For now in his luſts he became like a beaſt, and in his affections, and mortality before his nakedneſſe put him in mind of his ſinne, now his cloathing. Calvin. So that they do altogether pervert the uſe hereof, that turne it to pride and vaine glory as if a Thief condemned to dye, ſhould yet for a time be ſpared, and for penance be made to weare an Halter continually about his neck, and having done ſo a while, in time adorne it with Silver and Gold, and ſilk, and ſo wax proud thereof, as Muſculus hath it. Muſcu'us. Againe, this was done done to teach man frugality in his cloathing, as both Elias and John, that we ſet for patterns to others, took it, cloathing themſelves likewiſe in skinnes. Some will have the uſe of them being skins of dead beaſts alſo, to ſingifie, that death is mans due, that he might alwayes think upon it. Laſtly, the providence of God over men being ſinners is here ſet forth, that we may alwayes truſt to be provided of neceſſaries, although we be a ſinfull generation. And myſtically, that man cannot by any thing that he can do, cover the ſhameful nakedneſſe of his ſinne, but God only doth that, as Pſ. 32. ſo Ferus. Calvin. Muſculus.

And the Lord God ſaid, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evill, &c. In that theſe words are uſed after the judgement given againſt man, and this cloathing put upon him, it is plaine, as all Expoſitours agree, that there is an Irony in them, as if the Lord had ſaid, do all ye, that read or heare of the ſtate, to which man hath brought himſelf by his aſpiring, ſee and conſider, how like unto God he is now become by his knowledge of good and evil; of naked and not aſhamed, he is become ſhamefully naked; of a labourer upon pleaſure, he muſt now neceſſarily labour with great toyle and paines, and of one in the likeneſſe of God, he is made like a beaſt, with a beaſts skin upon him: loe all this, like a wretch, hath he brought upon himſelf. Knowledge indeed he hath, which before he wanted, that is, he knoweth now experimentally, that it was a great ſin to eat of this Tree, and this is all the likeneſſe to God, which he hath thus atteined to in the knowing of good and evil. Like one of us, is generally underſtood, as ſpoken of the Trinity, although ſome think otherwiſe. Now, therefore, leſt he put forth his hand, and take of the Tree of life, &c. This ſpeech is eclipticall, and thus to be ſupplyed, Now therefore let us put him out of the Garden, and keep him out for ever, that he may not at any time take of the Tree of life: which is ſpoken, not as if man could uſe any means to live for ever, whether God would or no, contrary to his decree, but as noting, that he would be ready to do this, if he were not kept from it, and therefore the Lord having adjudged him to dye, haſteneth to deprive him of the means of prolonging his bodily life unto eternity. Whence we may note, that man having by ſinning expoſed himſelf to the danger of death, ſpirituall and temporall, is not ſo much affected with the ſpirituall, but with the temporall, and ſo chiefly intendeth the ſeeking of deliverance therefrom. And againe, that where God taketh away the means of life for ſin, from ſuch as have formerly had them, they are certainly thus excluded from life it ſelf. But Ferus ſaith, that God's expelling of man, that he might not eat of this Tree and live, was in great mercy, becauſe if he ſhould live here now alwayes, he muſt live miſerably, and through that deſire which he hath of this naturall life, he would be well pleaſed with it, never ſeeking after a better: wherefore, in mercy, he is kept from eating of this Tree, that he might ſeek for the beſt life. Verſe 22. Note.

And he placed at the eaſt of the Garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming Sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the Tree of life. Divers expoſitions are by divers made upon theſe words, but firſt, it is to be underſtood, that the Septuagint read them ſomewhat otherwiſe thus. And the Lord caſt out Adam, and placed him before Paradiſe, and ſet Cherubims, &c. But both in the Hebrew, and the Chaldee Paraphraſe it is read as before, yet no man doubteth, but that Adam was ſet to till the ground neare Paradiſe, that ſeeing the place, from vvhich he vvas caſt out, nd the pleaſures thereof, he might be touched vvith the more penitency. But for the meaning of theſe vvords, ſome expound them only Allegorically, as if hereby vvere ſet forth tvvo ſorts of things, that hinder us from obteining of eternall life, againſt vvhich vve muſt continually fight, the firſt inviſible, ſuch, as are the internal ſpirits, of them it is ſpoken, Eph. 6. 12. the other ſenſible, both pleaſures ſet forth by a flame, and terrours, ſet forth by a Svvord, ſo that vve are hereby taught, that vve muſt by force and violence, as it vvere, fighting and vvarring Verſe 24.

ring take the Kingdome of Heaven, or elſe we ſhall never attaine unto it. Now although that which is here ſaid, may thus be profitably applyed; yet this being a true Hiſtory, the literal ſenſe is firſt and chiefly to be reſpected. But for this, ſome will have by the Cherubims and the flaming Sword the torrid Zone underſtood, becauſe that burneth, as a flame, and the Sun, which is the cauſe hereof, is moved by the Angels of God: but this is a thing natuiall and ſo not now ſet, but where it was from the beginning. Others think, that a great quantity of fire was made by the Lord to break out of the earth at the entrance of Paradiſe, and made a continuall flame there: but what then were the Cherubims? Others underſtand it of the fire of Purgatory, through which all muſt paſſe, being herein purged from the remainder of their corruptions at the laſt day, before that they enter into the Paradiſe of God: for thus that of the Pſalmiſt is verified, We have paſſed through fire and water, that is, the water of Baptiſme, and this fire, wherewith Chriſt ſhall Baptize all his at the laſt day, as it was ſaid by John, He ſhall Baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, and he ſhall throughly purge his floore. Thus Ambroſe. And Rupertus likewiſe compareth this with the fire ſpoken of, 1 Cor. 3. 13. in which the Cherubims ſhall diſtingniſh through their fullneſſe of knowledge, as the word ſignifieth, betwixt the good and the bad, and then and not otherwiſe the tryed thus ſhall have entrance into Paradiſe given them. But theſe things are altogether from the purpoſe; becauſe not Heaven, but a Paradiſe in this World; and not eternall life in another World, but a corporall life in this is here ſpoken of: and ſo to expound it thus, is to turne it into an Allegory, which hath been already taxed.

Tertullian.
Thom. Aquin.

Epiphan.
Lyran.

Ambroſ in Pſal. 118.
Pſal. 66.

Luke 3.
Rupert. lib. 3. in Gen. cap. 32.

Theodoret ſaith, that theſe Cherubims, and flaming Sword were ſome mighty terrifying viſions, which were made to appeare there, that man might not dare any more to come neare the entrance of Paradiſe, becauſe, if they had been Angels indeed, they had been inviſible, and the terrour had not been ſenſible; and by Cherubims it is uſuall in the holy Scriptures to ſet forth whatſoever is indued with great power. And this doth not much differ from the common received opinion, that theſe Cherubims were Angels appearing like men with bright Swords in their hands, bandied hither and thither, at the ſight whereof any man vvould be afraid to come nigh. Yet the vvord Cherub ſignifieth a ſimilitude, although the Angels; becauſe they have appeared oftentimes in likeneſſes, are ſo called, and ſometimes Seraphim. I hold rather vvith Theodoret, that they vvere not Angels, but terrible ſimilitudes, like unto armed men, through vvhich yet it vvas impoſſible for man to paſſe vvithout certaine deſtruction. becauſe the Angels are Gods Meſſengers, not fixed to any place upon earth, but paſſing and repaſſing, as God thinketh good to imploy them in any ſervice. The thing generally ſet forth hereby is, that man ſhould not by any means after this live in the fleſh for ever, althongh to the faithfull after this life ended a ſpirituall life everlaſting is reſtored by Chriſt, to take place after the reſurrection. But through the terrours and ſtriving vvith death vve muſt come to this, and to have part in Chriſt the true Tree of life, there are alvvayes ſet to ſtop our paſſage dreadfull apparitions of fire and ſvvord, vvherevvith vve are ſubject to be perſecuted, and of ſpirituall temptations invvardly affrighting: but through them all muſt vve break, by the ſtrength of faith reſiſting the Devill, and not ſetting by our lives, ſo that vve may vvin Chriſt, and through him live for ever in the vvorld to come. It is a ſtrange conceit of ſome here, that theſe Cherubims vvere ſet, as to keep man, ſo Devils from entring into Paradiſe, leſt they ſhould take of the Tree of Life and bring it to man: for both the Devils nature is ſuch, as that he could not only by the entrance, but any vvay have come into Paradiſe, ſeeing he is a ſpirit, and his envy againſt man is ſuch, that he vvould never give him any thing to live, but if he knevv any means to bring him to his death vvith the moſt ſpeed, he vvould certainly have given him that rather: R. Menahem ſaith, although man be yet excluded Theodoret. quæſt 40 in Gen.

Theodor. Heracleæ Epiſc.

Calvin.
Vatablus.
Muſculus.

Note.

Peterius.

ded from the Tree of life, yet it ſtandeth not in vaine; for the men of the reſurrection ſhall eat thereof, and live for ever: but hereby Maimony ſheweth that the injoying of everlaſting happineſſe, and not eating properly is meant; for our wiſe men, ſaith he, have taught, that in the world to come, there is neither eating nor drinking, nor ſitting, nor lying, nor ſleeping, but wearing of Crowns, and the fruition of the Glory of God for ever.

CHAP. IV.

AN'd Adam knew Evah his wife, and ſhe conceived and bare Cain, and ſaid, I have gotten a man from the Lord, &c. When Adam went into or knew Evah firſt, whether in Paradiſe, or not till he was caſt out of Paradiſe, may juſtly be inquired here, becauſe ſo ſoon, as they were made, they were bidden to increaſe and multiply, and therefore it may ſeem improbable, that Adam would not preſently obey the Lords command, by going into his wife to this end and purpoſe. But his ſtay in Paradiſe was ſo ſhort, and there were then ſuch other occaſions to take up Adam otherwiſe for a time, as that it is generally held, that he knew her not, till after his ejection out of Paradiſe, according to the order here followed by Moſes. And herein it is to be held, that God moderated by his ſpeciall providence foreſeeing the fall of our firſt Parents, that not one man might be begotten in Paradiſe, as none was made there, and ſo none ſhould be able to challenge a better place, as his birthright, then the common accurſed earth, and if he atteineth to better hopes, of an heavenly Paradiſe to be hereafter injoyed, it is to be aſcribed altogether to the grace of God, and he only is to be magnified therefore. For the phraſe, Adam knew his wife Hevah; becauſe it is ſo modeſt, ſome obſerve, that the Hebrew tongue is rightly called the holy tongue; becauſe nothing obſcene is ſpoken therein, and that the coming together of man and wife is ſpoken of by this word knowing, becauſe the ſeed of generation cometh from the braine by the Spina dorſi, which is the ſeat of knowledge: or, as others, becauſe reaſon ought to moderate in this action. Notwithſtanding the order followed by Moſes, and reaſons formerly ſet down evince, that this was not done, till after their fall, yet ſome Hebrews tranſlate theſe words by the Preterpluperfect tenſe, as if Adam had known Eve immediately after her creation: but this were to hold him to have been, as apt then to be inflamed with luſt, as young men now adayes are, which abhorreth from all right underſtanding. For the time, when Cain was begotten, it is not ſet down. But a counterfeit Methodius, as the Maſter of the Eccleſ. Hiſtory relateth, ſaith, that it was revealed to him being in priſon for the Goſpell, that our firſt Parents lived in Virginity 15 years after their fall lamenting their ſinne, but after that coming together they had Cain and Calmanan, his ſiſter, and 15 years after that, Abel and Delbora his Siſter, and that Cain ſlew Abel, Anno Mundi 130. whoſe death they having lamented 100. years, after that had Seth. But who can doubt at the firſt hearing of theſe things, but that they are fabulous, ſeeing both their mutual love, and the neceſſity of the world being then emdty of men, would not doubtleſſe ſuffer them to conteine, for any ſuch time, and according to this Sheth was not borne till Anno 230. of Adams age, whereas Gen. 5. he is ſaid to have been born Anno 130. This was therefore the invention of ſome Frier rather to magnifie Virginity, as amongſt them, that ſaying of Jerom upon this, that Adam is not ſaid to have known his wife, till his ejection out of Paradiſe, is highly extolled, Virginity filleth Paradiſe, but Marriage the Earth. Hevah having brought forth a Son calleth his name Cain. The word קנה ſignifieth to get any kind of way, and not only to buy: it may be tranſlated alſo, ſaith Vatablus, I have poſſeſſed, but the common tranſlation agreeth beſt, Cain from getting, becauſe

Verſe 1.

Note.

Auguſt. Marlorat.

Fagius.

Hier. Scholaſt. in Gen. 25.

Hieron. contra Iovin. Virginitas replet Paradiſum, nuptiæ terram.

Arioſæus. Vatablus.

Fagius. becauſe of the next words, of the Lord, or from, with, or by, or to the Lord, as divers read it, as if ſhe meant either, that it was Gods bleſſing towards her, when ſhe had deſerved to dye, to live to have a ſonne, or as if ſhe meant to dedicate him to the Lord, or made account of him, as the ſeed promiſed to break the Serpents head, but they, which underſtand the words ſo, read them, I have gotten a man of the Lord, meaning an extraordinary and ſingular man. I doubt not, but Hevah rejoycing much looked up to God, and thankfully beheld this her ſonne, as his great bleſſing, and by ſpeech and the name giving expreſſed her ſelfe herein.

Verſe 2. Again ſhe brought forth his Brother Abel, &c. Theſe two, ſaith Vatablus, Vatablus. were twinnes, and the manner of Moſes his telling of this Abel ſheweth no leſſe, becauſe he ſaith not, Adam knew her again, and ſhe conceived, but having brought forth one, ſhe ſoon brougnt forth his Brother; and it is moſt likely, that then the woman was ſo fruitfull, that ſhe commonly brought twinnes. For the name, no reaſon is rendered hereof, as of the name Cain, but the word ſignifying vanity, or miſery, or mourning; ſome have thought that ſhe called him ſo, as if ſhe thought him ſuperfluous, and that her trouble ſhould be but encreaſed by having him, and becauſe Abel was a good man, Calvin. they taxe her for giving him ſuch a name. But both Calvin and other judicious Expoſitours reject this, as improbable: for how could ſhe poſſibly, being but even now ſo joyfull for one ſonne, when another came forth to vilipend him? eſpecially, ſeeing in that time of the want of men, the more were borne, the more joy muſt there needs be. He is not then thus called, as vain and needleſſe, but rather Hevah beginning to thinke now, that many in time ſhould come of her, and be ſubject for her ſinne to much vanity and miſery in this world ſhe calleth him by this name for admonition both to him and to all poſterities, to make none other account of their eſtate here then as vain and tranſitory. Ferus ſaith, that ſhe called him ſo; either becauſe the murthering of him ſhould cauſe much ſorrow to her, or becauſe ſhe brought him forth with much ſorrow, or laſtly, becauſe he was the firſt of the bleſſed mourners, *Matth.*5. Abel was a ſhepherd, and Cain an husbandman: both neceſſary callings, and no doubt, but to theſe they were ſet by their Father Adam, whereby his care is commended, and theſe callings eſpecially, as moſt needfull and honeſt to all generations, thus then they both began well.

Verſe 3. And in proceſſe of time Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering to the Lord, &c. It may be queſtioned here; wherefore Cain and Abel offered, and who taught them ſo to do? many thinke, that Adam taught them, and that Calvin. he was commanded by God: but Chryſoſtome ſaith, that they had none in- Fagius. ſtructer to direct them herein, but their own conſcience. I thinke, that al- *Chryſoſt. hom.*18 though by the light of nature they might conceive, that all coming from God, it was meet, that ſomething ſhould be brought, as a gift to God again in way of thankfulneſſe; yet they could not, without inſtruction, underſtand the end of ſacrificing; which was to ſet forth, that neceſſarily an oblation muſt be made, bloud muſt be ſhed, and there muſt be burning of the creatures in the fire for the expiating of ſinne, and to be delivered from the fire of God's wrath by ſinne deſerved: and yet that this was not done meerly by the ſacrificing of beaſts and ſuch things; but by Chriſt ſet forth hereby, who was afterwards to come into the World, to be offered upon the Croſſe, to have his bloud ſhed, and to be put, as it were, into a burning fire of extream paſſions, as he was; when being in an agony he ſweat ſo wonderfully. For how could it poſſibly enter into the heart of man without inſtruction, that a ſtinking fume made with the fat of a beaſt could afford pleaſing ſmel upto the Lord? and how can it be thought, but that Adam did ſo before them, although it be not recorded; becauſe there was none occaſion, as here, that the cauſe of Cain's enmity againſt Abel might appear, ſith it pleaſed the Lord to have the hiſtory of the things happening between them two to be recorded?

ed? And if Adam sacrificed before, he did doubtlesse teach his sonnes to do the like; and God set him a worke at the first so to do, that, as he had made a comfortable promise of the womans seed to come, that should break the Serpents head; howsoever he was shut out from the Tree of life, yet he might have something continually before his eyes, figuring out this seed to come, and to suffer for the expiation of all his sinnes. Some observe, that amongst all the Patriarchs, Adam's sacrificing and Isaac's is passed over in silence; of which they render this reason: Adam was the fountain of sinne, and therefore God would not have him set forth, as the fountaine of piety also; and Isaac was himselfe a figure of Christ, in that he was taken to be sacrificed, and therefore he is not propounded, as sacrificing beasts, then whom he was a farre more excellent type: but the best reason hath been rendered before, there was none occasion to speake of their sacrificings, and therefore they are not set forth, as those of others be.

In processe of time: In the Hebrew this is, in the end of dayes מִקֵּץ יָמִים, that is, because יָמִים is commonly taken for a year consisting of many days, at the end of the year, or after certain years, as one hath it. But (at the end of the yeare) agreeth best, because it is likely, that every year, when they had reaped the profits of that year, they offered some of them to the Lord, who sent all, thus dayes are put for a year, Levit. 25.29,30. compare Exod. 34.22. with 1 Sam. 1.20. and afterwards it was commanded at the end of the year to bring offerings to the Lord, Exodus 23.16. and from hence it is certaine, that the custome of sacrificing came in use amongst the Heathen, and not by a naturall instinct; but God having taught the first man to do thus, they held this custome still, though not to God, but to Devils, when they had degenerated to idolatry. Fagius.

But whither did they bring their offerings? some say, to the place of publique meetings, to the worship of God unto Adam, who was then the onely Priest of God, and offered them for them. Saint Paul to the Hebrews, saith: By faith Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice, than Cain: whereby it seemeth rather, that each one then offered for himself: but to this it may be answered, he is said to offer, who bringeth the thing offered, although it be laid upon the Altar by another, as Solomon is said afterwards to have offered a thousand burnt-offerings, but it is certain, that it was done by the Priests hands, and it is not to be doubted, but the God of order would have an order held in his service from the beginning, and therefore the eldest of the family being the Priest, Adam now was he, and it is most likely, that their offerings were presented by his hands. Maymony saith of the place, it is a tradition, that it was the same where Noah built his Altar, and Abraham prepared to offer up Isaac, and David offered to stay the pestilence, 1 Sam. 24. and Solomon built the Temple. Marlorat. Heb.11.4.

Now in telling of Cain's bringing of his gift, Moses speaketh not so magnifically, as of Abel: for Cain, he saith, brought of the fruit of the ground: something, as is thought by most, which came next to hand, not making choice of the best, but Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof, that is, the principall, and amongst them of the fattest, for this see the Laws made afterwards, Levit. 3.16. and 7.25. yet, as some note, this was not the thing, that made Cains sacrifice to be neglected, and Abels accepted; but, as was said before, the faith and piety in the heart of the one, which was wanting in the other. Abel was a good man, and so his heart was right towards God, when he brought his offering, but Cain was wicked. And although Hypocrites, whose hearts are evill, do sometimes make as glorious a shew outwardly, as the best, yet it was not so here: for Abel excelled every way, the last was first, and the youngest excelled the eldest. See here, it is no certain true piety to do the duties of Gods worship, wicked Cain offereth as well as righteous Abel: and to bring somewhat to God, but not making a conscience to bring his due, of the chief and best out of a free and hee- Ebr. post. Calvin. Fagius. Note.

rall mind is to ſerve him like Cain, it ever argueth an heart not right. The word tranſlated offering here, is מנחה, of which read Levit. 2. but it ſetteth forth any kind of oblation, coming of נחה to bring, to comfort, to pleaſe, or to reſt. And God had reſpect to Abel and to his offering, &c. He was well pleaſed therewith, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, and praiſed it, and ſo made it known to be pleaſing to him, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, but how or by what meanes Cain knew this, I finde none to have declared, but Jerome, who ſaith, that fire coming down from the Lord, burnt up Abel's offering, but left Cain's untouched: and according to this Theodotion tranſlateth it; inflammavit Dominus ſuper Abel. The perſon of Abel is firſt accepted, and then his offering: ſo that as the ſtate of the man is, ſo is that accepted of, or not accepted, which he doth in the ſervice of God, as Calvin noteth; and therefore, till a man be juſtified by faith, which maketh God to be well pleaſed with him, his actions cannot pleaſe God. And hereby we may ſee, that although God would have his ſervants bring ſheep and other ſuch like things unto him, yet he never delighted in theſe things, but the faith and integrity of the heart of the offerer was that, which pleaſed him, as Chryſoſtome reaſoneth: thoſe ſmels were not pleaſing in themſelves, but being perfumed with the ſweet ſmell of an holy and ſanctified ſpirit. Laſtly, from hence alſo, it is manifeſt, that the Lord appointed theſe offerings to be made, becauſe otherwiſe Abel himſelfe could not have brought one in faith, ſeeing the ground of faith is Gods Word. For that opinion of Gods anſwering Abel by fire, it is not improbable; becauſe we know he hath often ſhewed his acceptance thus at other times, as Levit. 9. 24. Judges 6. 1 Chron. 21. 2 Chron 7. 1 Kings 18. and yet Muſculus and Calvin are altogether againſt it, holding rather, that in time Gods favour appeared by ſome outward bleſſing.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.
Chryſoſt. Hom. 18.
Hieron. lib. tradit. Hebr. in Gen.
Theodotion.
Calvin.
Note.
Chryſoſt.

Verſe 5. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell. There were two things that moved Cain againſt Abel: firſt, that he being his elder Brother; ſecondly, offering firſt, yet Abel was preferred before him; ſo envy wrought afterwards in Joſephs brethren againſt him, and it is an evill affection, that commonly worketh upon occaſion of anothers preference. Fagius obſerveth, that the word חרה, here uſed to ſet forth Cains wrath, is but one word of eight of the ſame ſignification; and yet the moſt ſignificative ſhewing one all on a fire with anger. And this bewrayed the great pride of his heart, and that he thought moſt highly of himſelfe and baſely of his brother, as ſome note, as if he were greatly wronged, when as he was moſt worthy. For had he been humble, inſtead of being thus ill affected, he would, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, have thought, that there was ſomething amiſſe in him to have ſearcht it out, and to have been moved with penitency therefore. But the Lord, to ſhew, what he expected he ſhould have done, calleth to him, Why art thou angry? &c. as he had ſought to bring Adam to repentance by calling to him, Adam, where art thou? ſo he doth to Cain. How is it that thou conſidereſt not, that I ſee into every mans heart, and therefore not finding thee to have come with a right heart to offer unto me, I have ſhewed thee no ſigne of favour. The fruit of the ground, which thou haſt brought, is nothing to me, but a faithfull and humble heart, with this Abel came, but thou not, which ſhould have affected thee with grief and ſorrow, and have beaten down this pride in thee, and if yet thou wilt repent and be humbled, I ſhall be ready to receive thee to grace, and thou ſhalt ſtill hold thy birth-right over Abel, but if not, be aſſured, that judgement is not farre from thee. To this effect Chryſoſtome paraphraſeth upon theſe words. If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? but if, ill, ſinne lyeth at thy doore, and his deſire ſhall be to thee, and thou ſhalt rule over him. In the Hebrew, it is a little otherwiſe: If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not be forgiven? and his ſociety ſhall be to thee, but do thou rather rule over him, as Jerome hath tranſlated it. The Chaldee Paraphraſt, If thou amend thy workes, ſhall it not be forgiven thee? but if thou amend them not, thy ſinne is kept to the day of judgement, that thou mayeſt be puniſhed there-

Fagius.
Chryſoſt.

Verſe 6.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 18. in Gen.

Verſe 7.

Hieron. l. quæſt. Hebr. in Gen.
Chal. Paraphra.

therefore. The Septuagints translation, Hast thou not sinned in not dividing rightly, although thou offerest rightly? Be quiet, his turning shall be to thee, and thou shalt rule over him. And this is followed by Chrysostom, and by Ambrose, August. and many of the other ancients likewise. And they labour much in expounding these words: Hast thou not sinned, although thou offeredst rightly, by not dividing rightly? Saint August. saith, A man offereth rightly, when to God, but divideth not rightly, when he discerneth not rightly the time, the place, the things that are offered, the person offering, or to whom, or those, amongst whom the offering is to be distributed to feed upon it. Now Cain divided not rightly, because he used not right discretion, offering his gift unto God, but not himself, because, as John saith, his works were evil, and so whatsoever gift he brought unto God, could not be accepted: to this effect, August. in many more words. And Ambrose seemeth to lay the fault of his division in the time; because he did not first and before all things offer to God. And touching the other words, be quiet, his turning shall be to thee, &c. they will not have them understood of Abel, but of his sinne: against the understanding of them of Abel, Augustine is so far, as that he saith, absit, God forbid. And therefore he expoundeth it of his sin, the turning of this sinne shall be to thee, &c. that is, take it upon thy self, and lay not the fault in any other, accuse thy self therefore, and in so doing, and humbly confessing, thou shalt bring thy sin under and get the mastery over it, whereas otherwise it will have the dominion over thee. But Ambrose in a different manner. Be quiet, say nothing to excuse thy sin, but rather stand mute as ashamed, thy Brother is in no fault, that thou shouldest be wroth with him, but thy self only, thou hast been to thy self the author of offending, and so maist rightly be called the Prince of this sinne. Thou hast not been drawn unwittingly or against thy will, but wittingly and willingly thou hast run into this mischief. Rupertus speaking upon the same words saith, Because thou hast a purpose in thy mind to do a work of sin, behold I tell thee, before thou doest, that when thou hast done it, thou maiest not excuse thy selfe of ignorance. Knowest thou not, that if thou doest well, thou shalt receive, and if ill, thou shalt receive too, for sinne will by and by be at thy door, that whithersoever thou turnest thee, and whatsoever thou doest thence forward, it may be a Companion to thee in the journey, and a Prince in the work, and then truly it shall be above thee, and rule over thee, because he that commiteth sin, is the servant of sinne. Now before thou dost it, whilst it is yet in thy desire, the desire thereof is under thee, and thou mayst master it, as a King not yet crowned is under the people, so that they may refuse him, if they will.

After the same manner also Bernard, shewing from hence that a man needeth not to yield to temptations, unlesse he will, but may be Lord and Master over them: but he concludeth by an Epanorthosis, But what are we, or what is our strength to resist so great temptations? This is that indeed, which God seeketh, and to which he indeavoureth to bring us, that seeing our own want, and that we have none other aid, we might in all humility flee to his mercy. They that are for free will, do greedily lay hold upon this place, and upon such Expositions, but very vainly, because, although it be thus understood, God doth but, as Bernard saith, hereby teach us what we should do, that finding our selves unable we might flee to him for aid, saying as Augustine hath it, Give Lord what thou biddest, and then bid what thou wilt: for according to the Hebrew it is, do thou rule over him, teaching, what he should do, and not what he was able to do without grace; of sin, according to the foregoing Expositions, and not of Abel, as amongst many it is commonly taken, Vatablus saith, almost all Expositours understand this, yet Calvin rather followeth Chrysostom, understanding it of Abel; because the Pronouns his and him, are of the Masculine Gender are in Hebrew, and not of the feminine, as sin is. And indeed as we read the words, any man would take Septuagint.

August. lib. 15. de civit Dei, c. 7

1 John 3.12.

Ambros. lib. 2. de Cain & Abel. c. 6, 7.

Rupert. lib. 4. in Gen. 3. Statim in foribus peccatum aderit, ut quacunque te verteris, quicquid agere volueris tecum sit comes in itinere, princeps in opere, &c.

Bernard. Serm 3 de Quadrages.

August. Da Domine, quod jubes, & jube quod vis.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

take them, as ſpaken of Abel. But when I conſider, that in the whole ſpeech of the Lord, nothing is ſaid of Abel, but againſt Cains envy and malice, and that there was no reaſon thus to puffe up a wicked man too proud already, and to ſubject a man better unto him, contrary to the courſe taken with others, as with Iſaac and Iſhmael, Jacob and Eſau, David and Eliab, &c. I think it unreaſonable to expound them of Abel, and therefore do rather preferre that of the moſt, as if the Lord had ſaid, why doſt thou thus ſenſleſly boile with malice in thy breaſt, againſt thy Brother, by thy downward look bewraying, that thou meditateſt upon ſome great miſchief againſt him, shere is no juſt cauſe of being thus incenſ'd againſt him, but to turne all thine anger againſt thy ſelf; becauſe although thou haſt brought me an offering, yet thy heart was not right, neither haſt thou therefore done well: for hadſt thou come with a good and humble heart, thou alſo ſhouldſt have been reſpected. But neither haſt thou done ſo, and now inſtead of turning and craving pardon, which I expected thou ſhouldſt have done, I ſee thee in thy mind plotting the murthering of thy Brother, which if thou proceed to do, adding ſo great an evil to thy former wickedneſſe, thy ſin will become moſt heinous, and then vengeance ſtands ready at thy door to light upon thee, (for thus ſin may rightly be ſaid to be at the door, vvhen ſome great judgement is ready to be ſent upon the ſinner for the ſame:) ſubject this rebellious malice then unto thee in time, and ſuffer it not to get the dominion over thee, as it will certainly do, and bring thee to confuſion, if thou proceedeſt in this thy mad mood, but quell and keep it under, and ſo get the dominion over it. For theſe words, the deſire to thee, are by the common uſe of the Hebrew tongue put to ſet forth ſubjection, and the word, rule, is of the ſecond future, which is in the force, of an Imperative. So that according to this ſenſe, I would render the words thus, and they will well beare: therefore ſubject it unto thee, and do thou rule over it. As for the Maſculine Pronoune, which ſeemeth to hinder from thus expounding it, we may take it, as a neuter, which in the Hebrew is all one, for this thing, and ſo it may as vvell have reference to that vvhich Cain vvas then led by, as to any man.

As for the difference amongſt Expoſitours about theſe words, ſhalt thou not be accepted? ſome underſtanding them, as if he had ſaid, ſhall not thy countenance, which is now caſt down, be lifted up again, thou being made glad and cheereſull? others, ſhalt thou not be remitted or pardoned? others, ſhalt thou not be accepted and had in honour alſo, as well, as thy brother Abel? All theſe varieties ariſe from the various ſignifications of the word נָשָׂא here uſed, which, as Vatablus noteth, is ſometime put for elevare, or attollere, ſometime for parcere, or remittere, and ſometime for ſuſcipere, or acceptare. The reader may follow which he will, but I do with Calvin, as we commonly read it, prefer the laſt. Ferus ſaith that ſome expound the words thus, ſhould his deſire be ſubject to thee, and wouldeſt thou rule over him in matter of conſcience, that he ſhould follovv thee in doing ill, and be no better then thou art? Now one doubt onely more remaineth here, How the Lord ſpake unto Cain? To this Calvin briefly anſvvereth, even as to Adam before, and as he uſed to do in thoſe firſt beginnings, aſſuming ſome ſhape, and ſo ſpeaking unto men, before that the Arke of the Covenant vvas ſet up and the Oracle, at vvhich they aftertervvards received anſvvers. Let the ſpeech of the Lord to Cain be an admonition to us all, vvhen things ſucceed better to others, then to our ſelves, vvhereupon vve are ready to be diſcontented, or when vve are in any want, or any way dejected, to conſider that we have not certainly done well, but there is ſome evil in us, vvhich muſt be repented of & reformed, and ſo we ſhall be reſtored again: but if vve vvill not thus conſider, our ſtate will ſtill grovv vvorſe and vvorſe, greater judgements lye at our doore, as who do carry our ſelves unvvorthily in not maſtering our unruly affections, but ſuffering them to get an head over us and to bring us under their dominion.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Note.

Verſe 8. And Cain talked with Abel his brother, and when they were in the field, &c. If it it be rendered word for word, it is, Cain said unto Abel, but it is not set down, what he said, onely the vulgar Latine addeth, prodeamus foràs, the Greeke hath it, into the field, and so Ambrose readeth it, but in the Hebrew and Chaldee there are no such words. Jerom thinketh, that Cain told him, what the Lord had said unto him, others that he spake flatteringly, till he saw his opportunity to strike him. No man can tell certainly, what he said, and therefore that must be left doubtfull. It is most probable, that he spake so unto Abel, as that he might least suspect, what he went about, that taking him at an advantage, he might strike him unawares the more deadly: for when one man will not speak to another, it is plain that he hateth him, wherefore in speaking he feigned to be in love and charity with him, and not in any hatred. Some Hebrewes say, that he spake unto him in a quarrelling manner, after which they went to blowes, and Abel having overthrown Cain spared him, but he rising up again killed Cain, because it is said, He rose up against him. But this is frivolous, for this phrase doth not always imploy one being down before, but simply an hostile invading and setting upon another. Ferus addeth further out of the tradition of the Hebrewes, that Cain said to Abel, there is no judgement to come, nor reward in another life, which Abel gainsaying he fell out with him, &c. And no better is that of theirs touching the kinde of death, to which he put him, viz. by biting and tearing him with his teeth. It is more likely, that he strooke him unawares with some cudgell, and thus shed his blood. And when he had done, Josephus saith, he hid his body, thinking that it should never be known. And to all the wicked maligning, persecuting and slaying the godly, is Cain thus made a ring-leader, it being the common case of the godly to expect such usage at the hands of the wicked ever, whilst this world lasteth.

Ambros. Hieron. Joseph. Antiq. Iudaic. 1. Note.

And the Lord said unto Cain, where is Abel thy brother? Luther saith, that some will have this interrogation propounded by his parents, but is plainly made by the Lord, with whom it was no unwonted thing to speak to men of old, good or bad, by a lively voice, as since he hath done by his Word. The Lord sheweth himself here to be a discoverer of murther especially, above other sins, and that how secretly soever it be done, it shall not go unpunished. He inquireth not, where Abel was, as being ignorant, but as before of Adam, touching his eating of the forbidden fruit to wring out of him a confession of his own sin. But Cain is so far from this, that he both denyeth to know, where Abel was, and also carrieth himself most unreverently towards the Lord, saying, Am I my brothers keeper? Shewing himself hereby to be grown to the greatest height of sin that could be. But the Lord suffereth him not to go on thus, in facing out the horrible sin, which he had committed, but bringeth testimony against him, saying, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brothers bloud cryeth to me from the earth. In the Hebrew it is, the voice of bloods, whereupon the Hebrewes, as one noteth, say that it is meant of the seeds of generation, which should have come from Abel, for these being thus prevented cried. But he saith better, who expoundeth it by the drops, that are in blood, every one of which cryeth against a murtherer. A voice is ascribed to blood-shed by a Prosopopœia, to set forth, how that, when sin is committed, and no sound is heard thereof any more amongst men, yet there is a loud cry made hereby in the eares of God for revenge. The stones and the timber out of the wall cryeth against him, that buildeth his house by deceit, and the sin of the Sodomites committed without noise in the dark, cryed up to heaven. When a man is dead by wicked hands, so that he can speak no more, yet his blood cryeth, especially the blood of Gods Saints, which is most deare in the sight of God: For he careth for them not onely living but dead, which may be a comfort against the fear of death any way.

Verse 9. Luther.

Verse 10. Musculus. Oecolampadius. Note. Habac. 2.11. Gen 2.19.

Now therefore thou art cursed from the earth, &c. In that God pronounceth Cain cursed from the earth, but not from heaven, one saith, that some hold, that this was thus spoken to keep Cains posterity from despaire: but the simple Verse 11. Oecolampadius.

Calvin.

ple meaning is rather, as others have it, the earth was polluted by bloodſhed, and therefore the Lord would that Cain ſhould firſt have his puniſhment from the earth, this one act of murther ſo tainting the ground to him, as that he ſhould toil in his husbandry, as his calling was, but have little ſtore of fruit, and this ſhould be a perpetuall puniſhment unto him. But Chryſoſtome and others ſeem to make theſe two diſtinct puniſhments, one upon his ſoul, curſed art thou of all upon the earth, de terra : מִן־הָאֲדָמָה ſetting forth others upon earth alſo above all vvhom he vvas accurſed, as the Serpent before above all beaſts, to whom he was moſt like, firſt, in that hee ſought out of envy by fraud to deſtroy Abel, a moſt happy man for that faith and piety in him, as the Serpent ſought to overthrow Evah being in a moſt bleſſed condition. 2 In that he was to this end an inſtrument of the Devil, and his firſt inſtrument amongſt men, as the Serpent amongſt beaſts: the other puniſhment upon his outward eſtate, it ſhall not henceforth yeeld nto thee her ſtrength, that is, any great, but a poor increaſe. And unto theſe is a third added in his body, a fugitive and a vagabond ſhalt thou be on the earth, thou ſhalt go ſighing and trembling, ſaith Chryſoſtome, becauſe thou haſt abuſed thy bodily ſtrength unto ſo foul a murther, that others ſeeing the trembling of thy members, and thy continuall moſt ſorrowfull life far worſe then death, may for ever fear to do the like. But there are two words uſed, one from נוּעַ ſignifying to wander, the other from נָדַד ſignifying to flee, ſo that out of an inward terrour riſing from a guilty conſcience, he ſhould alwaies be unquiet and fear, either when he ſaw any man, or was ſolitary. For ſimply to wander and to flee is no curſe, it being the common condition of the godly, but they having God every where with them, are ſtill joyous and comfortable ; Cain having God againſt him in all places, could not but be ever full of horrour : a good conſcience in them is a continuall feaſt, an evill conſcience in him a continuall racke, yea when he had built a city and dwelt therein. Thus Calvin. So that the tranſlation of the Septuagint followed by Chryſoſt. trembling and ſighing, ſetteth not forth ſo much the proper meaning of the words, as the effect of the curſe inwardly. By Cains reply, Thou haſt driven me from the earth, it ſeemeth that to be curſed from the earth is to be reſtleſſe in any part of it. Rupertus notably maketh a compariſon here betwixt Cain killing Abel, and the Jewes killing Chriſt. For as the earth received Abels blood, ſo the intelligible earth receives Chriſts blood, that is, the faithfull; and as Abel blood cryed, ſo Chriſts blood ſpeaketh, for it ſpeaketh better things, then the blood of Abel, for that ſpake to accuſe one, this to excuſe many; as Cain tilled the ground, but had none increaſe, ſo the Jewes til the ſpiritual ground of the Law and Prophets without profit; and as he was made a vagabond, ſo are they to this day. Adam was not thus accurſed, for to him, Curſed only, is the earth, ſaith the Lord, for thy ſake, but to Cain, Curſed art thou, &c. A man being deceived and ſinning, may by repentance yet be exempt from Gods curſe, but the malicious, blood-thirſty and deceiving are ſo involved in the curſe, as that they are ſeldom ever exempted again.

Calvin.

Rupert. lib. 3. in Gen. c. 6.

Verſe 13.

And Cain ſaid to the Lord, My puniſhment is greater then I can bear. v. 14. Behold, thou haſt driven me this day, &c. Theſe words are read three wayes, firſt, by the Hebrewes, as an interrogation, Is my ſin greater, then can be pardoned? 2 In the Septuagint and vulgar Latine, My ſin is greater, then can be pardoned. 3 My puniſhment, &c. As before word for word out of the Hebrew. For here is no word ſignifying pardoning, but bearing ; and the word עָוֹן tranſlated, iniquity, is by Pagninus and others skilfull in the Hebrew tongue rendred puniſhment, which it more properly ſignifyeth. This is generally underſtood by all Expoſitors, as the voice of one deſpairing: for although it ſhould be rendred by the word iniquity, and ſo he be taken, as confeſſiing his ſinne, as Chryſoſtome will have it, yet in that he ſaith it is greater, then can be pardoned, he ſheweth his deſperation It is ſomewhat ſtrange, that Chryſoſtome finding a confeſſion here to be made, anſwereth that queſtion, Why then was he not pardoned, by ſaying, that the ſentence was paſt, and therefore it was now too late late for him to confeſſe, as it will be for the wicked at the day of iudgement, or being in Hell. For whilſt a man liveth, no time is too late to confeſſe and repent, but onely after this life ended, we may rather anſwer with Calvin, he was not pardoned, becauſe the horrour of the puniſhment wrung his confeſſion from him and ſorrow, as from Iudas, and not the ſence of the foulneſſe of his ſin, and therefore he was not truly penitent. But this be ſaid, if we read it by the word iniquity, which alſo the Hebrew word עון ſignifieth. But if we render it by puniſhment as we do, and as is moſt proper here, and is confirmed by his expreſſing of himſelf in the next words, thou haſt driven me this day from the face of the earth, &c. And whoſo ſhall finde me, ſhall kill me. His deſpairing is, that he made no confeſſion of his ſin, nor put up any petition for pardon, as who thought himſelfe altogether given over of God to periſh for ever, without all deliverance by his mercy.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 19. in Gen.

Calvin.

Behold, thou haſt driven me out this day, &c. Here Cain expoſtulateth with the Lord, ſaith Calvin, as if he were dealt too hardly withall, thou alloweſt me no place upon earth to reſt quietly in, and thou art angry with me, which is meant by ſaying, and from thy face ſhall I be hid, ſo that thou wilt take no further care of me to protect me from danger, and thus I ſhall go in continuall hazard of my life, alwayes perplexed, affrighted, and troubled through the diſquiet of my conſcience; ſo that it were far eaſier for me now to be ſtricken, and to dye preſently by thine hand. If it be demanded of whom Cain ſpeaketh, when he ſaith, every one, that findeth me, ſhall ſlay me? Ambroſe anſwereth, he meaneth either the beaſts of the field, or his own Parents; becauſe there were at that time none other upon earth, but they. But others think better, that Evah was not without many other children, by that time Cain was grown up to be a man, and this murther was committed; which may be probably thought, not to have been much before the birth of Sheth, which was Anno 130, Gen. 5.3. becauſe he was called thus, as put in the ſtead of Abel, whom Cain ſlue: ſo that he was (doubtleſſe) the next male, that Evah had after this, unto which it could not be long in thoſe dayes, wherein the Lord made women extraordinarily fruitfull for the peopling of the World, and therefore of ſome of the men upon earth, of whom there were many, it is rather thought that he ſpeaketh this; but it may be underſtood of the beaſts alſo, ſeeing all things are enemies to them, with whom God is at enmity. But Ambroſe obſerveth one thing here very well, that Cain is ſolicitous for his bodily life, and to think of loſing that much troubleth him, but for his ſoul he taketh no thought, ſo wicked men are greatly affected with outward things, but they are ſenſeleſſe of ſpirituall, their mindes are never exerciſed in conſidering, what ſhall become of their ſouls another day.

Verſe 14.

Calvin.

Ambroſ. lib. 2. de Cain & Abel, c. 9.

Gen. 4.25.

Note.

And the Lord ſaid unto him, he that killeth Cain, vengeance ſeven-fold ſhall be taken on him, &c. Why the Lord would not that Cain ſhould be preſently killed, hath been already touched, his will was, that he ſhould live ſuch a life for example, as was worſe, than any death in toil and labour without profit, being thus forced to remove from place to place, having never any reſt, but travail and inward vexation and diſquiet, and feares for his horrible murther committed, ſighing and crying out, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, and giving warning to all others to take heed of doing the like. But Calvin holdeth not this to be the genuine reaſon, but becauſe the Lord would not have any man at his own will dare to kill him, or any other, as he had done Abel, leſt thus men ſhould have grown to an habit of bloud-ſhedding in thoſe firſt beginnings, which would have tended much to the waſting of mankind. For although afterwards, Gen. 9. the Lord maketh a law for the killing of thoſe, that kill, viz. by the Magiſtrate armed with his Authority, yet now he would not give to any a commiſſion ſo to do, and if any without authority from him ſhould do it, vengeance ſeven-fold ſhould be taken of him. For mine own part, I can ſee no ſuch difference between the ſtate of the world in Noah's time, when there were but eight persons, and of these times, when there were probably many more, that now men should be altogether inhibited from doing execution upon a murtherer, but then commanded it. There must then certainly be somewhat else in it, and that is, the Lord would not have Cain killed, not in favour of him, or that by this charge touching him, men might learne to feare to put any to death, that should commit murther afterwards, but that living still in such a case he might be a continuaal living admonition to all to take heed of murther above all sinnes. For the sevenfold vengeance here threatened, because it seemeth strange, that one act should have more than one punishment, and an act of killing the wicked, vvho had shed innocent bloud, Expositour are much troubled about giving the sense hereof. Some say, the Pererius. vvords are to be divided thus, whosoever killeth Cain, there being a stop made here by an Aposiopesis, to be thus supplyed; shall be punished, and then they will have the next words to be spoken of Cain, a seven-fold revenge shall be taken upon him, according to his seven-fold sinning by envy, by flattery, by plotting murther, by murthering, by doing the first murther, by murthering a Brother, & by lying to the Lord, when he was called in question therefore; thus Chrysostome numbreth them, but not in this sense: others that are for this, number them thus. 1 He sacrificed ill. 2 He envied his Brother. 3 He contemned Gods admonition. 4 He cunningly plotted his death. 5 He acted it. 6 He denyed it by lying. 7 He despaired of mercy.

Verſe 15.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 19.

Calvin.

Symmachus. R. Solomon. Lyranus. Others read the latter words thus, Septimus punietur, so Symmachus. Whereupon it is gathered, that Cain should not be slain, till the seventh generation from him, which was in a Son of Lamech, of whom he is said to have been slain: others, as Calvin noteth, referre it to the floud, which was in the seventh generation. But thus to expound, is rather to darken, then to give light to the holy Scriptures. The speech is plaine, he that killeth Cain, and not Cain, shall have vengeance taken on him sevenfold, that is, shall be most severely punished, the number of seven being usuall to set forth many, not because Cain was not worthy to dye, but because it was against Gods Vatablus. Aquinas, &c. will, that he should be yet taken away, by whom others might be deterred from murther. For when God maketh an expresse decree, for any man to go against it, in what kind soever it be, it is intolerable: yet some say, it may also be otherwise understood, that he shall deliver Cain from the seven punishments at once inflicted upon him for his seven sins before named: but this is plainly against the sense; because Gods care is altogether here to keep Cain from being killed, unto which what force could there be in saying, that who so killed him, should exempt him from many punishments at once? Chrysost. Hom. 19. in Gen. Chrysostome saith, that a seven-fold punishment is set for him, that should kill Cain, because in taking him away from bearing the punishments laid upon him for his sin, he made himself guilty of the same seven-fold sinne, and so was worthy himself to bear a seven-fold revenge, which reason is not to be disallowed.

Therefore he that killeth Cain, the word therefore is לכן compounded of לא Vatablus. and כן as some will have it, signifying not so, or it signifieth surely as Vatablus rendereth it. And God set a mark upon Cain, &c. what this mark was divers have conjectured diversly, some of the Hebrews will have it to be an horne fixed upon his forehead, others a Dogg, that ran every where before him, others a Letter of his name, wherewith he was branded, others Munsterus. a truculent aspect, and others a continuall trembling, as Munster relateth: but all these are vaine; because it is only a mark, but not expressed what. It was therefore some outward visible mark set upon him conspicuous to all that lookt upon him, and admonitory to refreine from laying hands upon him, but undeterminable in particular what it was, as Ferus saith a mark making him infamous amongst men for ever. It is a fond conceit, that Josephus Ioseph. Antiq. lib. 1. uttereth here, that God being pacified with Cains sacrifice would have his life spared, and as fond is that of some others, that he was spared to repent; for this this is against that which was said before of his case differing from that of Adam, and for his sacrifice, it is plainly said, that the Lord gave no respect unto it.

Verse 16.

Cain therefore went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the Land of Nod. As he had said, from thy face shall I be hid, so Cain now having received his judgement, goeth from before the face of the Lord, that is, not so, as if God did not see him any more in the place, to which he went, for all places and things are manifest to his sight, but from those parts, where God used to appeare and to talke with men, and in going from hence, he went also from under his protection to lead a miserable fugitives life in other places of the earth, according to the doom upon him; and it is not to be thought, but although he became thus, as it were, a banished man, yet he preferred thus to go away, avoiding the presence of an angry Judge; thus almost also Calvin. Ferus saith, he went from his Parents and their family, where the Word of God was, which he could no more endure, and so he went from the presence of God, for where the Word of God is, there is God, or he thought happily, although the earth was there cursed to him, yet in other places it was not, and therefore he might till it more profitably elsewhere: And dwelt in the Land of Nod, in the vulgar Latine: Habitavit profugus in terra; he dwelt a fugitive upon earth, for Nod, saith Jerom signifieth, profugus, vagus, instabilis, & sedis incertæ. But it is most likely, that the place, where he kept wandring up and down, was hence called Nod; because all places come to have names upon some occasions in time, being before not so named. Josephus saith, that he built a town called Naid after that he had long wandred in many parts, being a most wicked man, and falling to new devices to cozen and beguile other men, whereby he was inriched. And thus the judgement of God took effect upon him, the same word being used to name the tract of ground, where he wandred, that was used in the sentence against him, from נדד to flee. He had not then any certaine aboad a long time, his dwelling being but a keeping within a certaine compasse, wherein he was alwayes going and coming: that place at length atteining the name of Nod there from, on the East from Eden, not from Edom, as Musculus saith, some Greek copies have it, but erroneously, who also well observeth, that the way to be of an uncertaine and unstable life alwayes turmoiled and tossed about without comfort, is to be wicked, and so out of Gods protection, and to do; as one hidden from the Lord, but to live as in his presence, righteously and holily, is contrariwise to be in a firme and most stable condition.

Calvin.

Hieron. tradit. Hebr.

Joseph. Antiq. Jud. lib. 1. c. 11.

Musculus.

Note.

Verse 17.

And Cain knew his wife, who conceived and bare Hanoch, and he built a City and called it by the name of his Son Hanoch. Here it may be demanded, how any woman durst adventure to marry with Cain being so accursed? Ans. It is most likely, that he was married before, although it be not mentioned, and so he took her in his travaile along with him if it be demanded, where he had a wife, seeing there were yet no women that we read of: it is answered, Adam had many children both Sons and Daughters, which are not spoken of, and one of these Daughters being his Sister as the necessities of those times required he had to wife. But why is his generation set forth, before any other, that was better? To this Luther answereth, that it is done so, because the wicked are before the Godly in this world: first, is that which is naturall, and then that which is spirituall. But Cain being the eldest Son of Adam, order requireth to speak of his geueration first, as the generation of Esau is afterwards spoken of before Jacobs. But whether was this the first Son of Cain, Answ. Happily he had other children before, although they be not spoken of: for the purpose of Moses being only to set forth his line in one to Lamech, concerning whom he had some remarkable things to write, he passeth over all others. For the name, Hanoch, it signifieth to instruct, or to season, this Son being so called; because he was instructed and seasoned with conditions most like his Father. But how doth this History

Calvin.

Luther.

Gen. 36.

Fagius.

agree with his curſe, he is condemned to be a fugitive and yet buildeth a City firſt of all others? Anſw. It is to be thought indeed, that he firſt built a City and houſes to dwell in, the more Godly dwelling in Arbours, or Cottages in the open Fields, as who were not afraid of hurt, having God on their ſide, but this wretch being full of fear deviſed the building of a defenced City, firſt for his greater ſafety, and happily, that therein, as Joſephus ſaith, he might have all his wicked brood together, to teach them, and to ſend them out to exerciſe Robberies upon others. But what inhabitants could he have to put in this City, or builders to build it, if Hanoch were his firſt Son, and ſoon after his birth, he fell to building of it, becauſe there ſeem to have been no more now with him, then his wife and this child? To this St. Auguſtine anſwereth, that it is not neceſſary to hold, that he was his firſt, although none other be ſpoken of before; becauſe many are by Moſes paſſed over in ſilence, which belonged not to the courſe of his Hiſtory, and we know, that ſometimes the younger have been moſt beloved, as Joſeph by Jacob, and ſo though this were youngeſt, Cain for his love to him ſpecially might call his City after his name. But it being granted, that he was his firſt-borne after his baniſhment, yet it is not neceſſary to hold, that he fell immediatly after his birth to building, but certaine hundreths of years after, in which time his poſterity might become moſt numerous. Thus Auguſtine. And it is no wonder, that Cain, before he dyed, had people enough, that came of him to repleniſh a City, ſeeing Jacob had in leſſe then 400 years 600000 that came of him, and in latter times, mans life grovving much ſhorter: Ludovicus Vives vvriting upon Auguſtine de. civit. Dei ſaith, that in Spaine there vvas an old man, that lived to ſee an 100 Houſholds, that came of him. Here vve may ſee, vvhich vvas the firſt City in the vvorld, viz. Hanochia, and that as cloaths, ſo Cities are Monuments of ſin. And as Cain built the firſt City, ſo Romulus, vvho like another Cain ſlue his Brother Remus, built Rome, the chief City of the World. The Greeks held, that Cecropia built by Cecrope vvas the firſt built City in the vvorld, and the Egyptians, that Thebes vvas the firſt, but erroneouſly, for the one vvas not, till the time of Moſes, and the other vvas built by Miſraim the Grand-child of Noah. One Annianus ſaith, that this City ſtood neare the Mount Libanus on the Eaſt of Damaſcus, and vvas the habitation of Giants, the ruins vvhereof remained to his time, the Inhabitants thereabouts ſaying, that it vvas Cains City. The vaine glory of Cain amongſt other vices of his did not a little hereby appeare, that by calling this City after his Sons name, and by building it, he ſought immortall fame to his poſterity, but this is a poor honour to ſuch as are appointed to perdition, to have their glory blazoned upon earth, vvhen they are in the mideſt of helliſh torments.

Calvin.

Aug. lib. 18. de Civit. c. 8.

Ludovicus Vives.

Ber. Annianus.

Note.

Verſe 18. And unto Hanoch was born Irad, &c. v. 19. And Lamech took to him two wives, Adah, and Zillah, &c.

The poſterity of Cain is here onely lightly touched unto Lamech, who was the ſixt from him, and then ſomewhat is ſpoken onely of his ſons, in whoſe time it is ſuppoſed the flood came, when his ſtock was quite cut off, and therefore his line is drawn no further, but haſte is made to ſpeak more largely of thoſe, that were better, both how long they lived, at what age they had each one the ſon nominated, and unto one ſonne ſtill is added a mention of more, both ſons and daughters, none of which is done touching Cain and his iſſue, to ſhew in what little account the wicked are with the Lord. Touching Lamech, the Hebrewes ſay, that before the flood it was a common thing for a man to have two wives, one for the procreation of children, who ſo ſoon, as ſhe had conceived, was put apart in widdows aray to live ſolitarily, till ſhe vvas delivered, and the other for pleaſure, vvho was gorgeouſly apparrelled, and had ſomething given her to drink to keep her from conceiving, that ſhe might alvvaies keep her husband company, and ſuch vvas Zillah taking her name for this from צל ſignifying a ſhadovv, becuſe ſhe lived continually under der the shadovv of her husbands vving. But this is vain and confuted by this very text, because as the one, so the other is said to have borne children. It is noted by some of ours here, that Lamech vvas the first, vvho sinned by Polygamy, contrary to Gods first Ordinance of joyning one onely woman with one man, his licentiousnesse and wickednesse appearing the more hereby, so likewise Ferus. But whether Polygamy in elder times were a sin or no, is much disputed amongst the learned, being by some defended, and by others impugned. Peter Martyr argueth strongly for the defence of the lawfulnesse of Polygamy, alleaging Chrysostome, and Jerome, who held it tolerable in times past, and Augustine, who argued, that it was neither against nature, nor against any law, nor against custome, and that holy men were not led unto it by carnall lust, but by a desire to increase mankinde. And even in these Evangelicall times he alleageth Socrates, relating, that Valentinianus a godly Emperour had two wives together, neither was he reproved by any of the Fathers therefore; and of Charles the Great it is reported, that he had four wives besides concubines. But, whatsoever may be said for Polygamy of old, it is strange, that any living by rule should be so far overseen, as to use or tolerate it under the Gospel, wherein virginity is rather commended to all, that can conteine, and such as cannot, are onely allowed every man to have his own wife, not wives, and that it was an impeachment to have more at once appeareth, because Bishops and Deacons are to be chosen not from amongst the Polygamous, but such as had onely one wife a man, which if it had been no sin to be Polygamous, should not doubtlesse have been so ordered. And howsoever there are arguments brought for Polygamy, yet there are grounds, that may seem more firme, that it was never lawfull, as from the first institution, not two but one woman onely was made and brought unto Adam, whereupon see, what is said, *Mal.*2.15. And Tremelius standeth firmly for a law against having two wives at once, Levit. 18. 18. Thou shalt not take a Wife to her sister, which may as well be rendred, one wife to another, for so also the Hebrew word will bear. Whereas the holy Patriarchs then may seeme to have offended in this kinde, and David and many more; it is answered, that the Lord dispensed with them, as for other reasons, so for signification, as Justin Martyr argueth touching Jacob in particular. Unto which we may adde, that one speciall reason might be for the increase of posterity, vvhilst the Church consisted of one onely people, that is, till Christs coming, that the innumerable increase promised to Abraham might thus with the more celerity be made. But now all people being Gods Church, all are to be held to the first institution, Matth. 19.4.

Lyranus.

Calvin.

Pet. Martyr in 1 Sam.

1 Cor.7.

1 Tim.3.

And Ada bare unto him Jabal, he was the father of such as dwell in tents, &c. Jacob is called the father, because the author of Tent-making and of removing Tents and cattell, from one place to another, that still they might have fresh pasture, and be brought in at night, and so prosper the better, and be kept together vvith the more facility, which tended to the great benefit of the ovvners. It seemeth by this, that Abel and others, vvho had kept and fed cattell before, had not yet devised the setting up of Tents, vvherein they might harbour, that lookt unto them, which was a great discommodity, both they and their cattell being the more exposed to dangers, and to many hazzards. Wherefore when this was invented, it vvas worth the recounting, & by whom, as also by whom musick, and vvorking in brasse and iron, vvere invented, as in the next words, viz. by the posteriy of Cain, that hovvsoever they vvere a graceless generation, yet we may see, that God did not send into and maintain such in the vvorld, but for some externall good to the vvorld. For the skill of ordering cattell rightly, and curing their diseases, vvhich Jabal doubtlesse had, is very beneficiall to the Common-wealth, and the musick of Jubal next spoken of vvas afterwards translated to the worship and service of God, and brazen and iron vvorks are for divers uses most necessary, of which Tubal-Cain the next son of Lamech is said to have bee n the author. The knowledge

Verse 20.

Marlorat.

Calvin.

knowledge of Astronomie, of Philosophie, and of all the Mathematicks also, whence came it first unto us, but from the Heathen. So that we may make use of the wits and inventions even of wicked men for our good in this world. And it is to be noted, that inventions tending to profit are first, and then those that that tended to delight, Tent-making and the care of cattell is first, and then Musicke. Ferus turneth all this another way, that necessity made these men artificers, because they could not have such benefit by the ground. And he will have the first, the author of Covetousnesse, the second of Luxury, the third of Warre, and the fourth of pride in apparell. Tubal-Cain the third son of Lamech, in stead of a brother happily coming at the same birth, as Jabal had, is said to have had a sister, named Naamah, fair, as Ada before had her name from neatnesse and fineneſse, here then is some intimation of the beautie of the daughters of men more plainly spoken of afterwards, Gen.6.2. The Rabbines say, that all the world were in love with Naamah, and that of her were borne evill spirits.

Musculus.

Verse 22.

Verse 23. Verse 24.

And Lamach said unto his wives Ada and Zilla, hear my voice (ye Wives of Lamech*) &c. For I have slain, or I would slay, a man, to or in my wounding, and a young man, to or in my hurt, if* Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech seventy times seven fold. This passage, because of the abrupt bringing of it in, nothing being before told of that which Lamech did, is most difficult, and by some thought inexplicable. The obscurity of it hath certainly bred great difference amongst the Learned, about the expounding thereof. Many understanding it of an old tradition amongst the Hebrews, that Lamech was much addicted to hunting, but growing old and somewhat dim-sighted, he used to take his sonne Tubal-Cain with him, to espie the wilde beasts, which he might shoot at, going on in which course, it happened upon a time, that Tubal-Cain seeing something russeling in a bush, which he supposed to have been a wilde beast, directed his father to shoot at it, which he having done and killed it, found it to be Cain, that was lurking there, whereupon he was moved against the young man, that he beat him with his bow, till he had killed him. Many, I say, grounding upon this, expound that which is here said thereby, as if Lamech did in thus saying, judge himself worthy not onely of seven fold revenge, as the Lord had threatened, for his killing of Cain, but of a far greater, in that he had thereunto added, the murthering of Tubal-Cain also. This Jerom speaketh of, as a thing received from antiquity. This, saith he, is the opinion of our Ancestours, that they thought Cain to have been slain of Lamech in the seventh generation, but not willingly, as we have read in a certain Hebrew book. Thus also Lyranus, Rupertus, Cajetan, &c. Now I confesse, if it were certain, that Lamech did thus kill Cain, I should soon be satisfied for the meaning of these words. But it soundeth like a devised tale, whereupon Calvin, and Fagius call it putidam fabulam; because Cain did not so flee the presence of men, till Lamech time, as to consort with the beasts by shrouding himself under bushes and thickets, for he built a city, and therefore without doubt he dwelt in it: again, if Lamech the sixt from him were so old now, how could Cain be alive to that time? Moreover, there is no certain credible author of this story: for whereas Josephus is alleaged by Tostatus, he speaketh not of it, but onely, that Lamech had 77 sons by his two wives, &, happily conceiving, that in the 7th generation vengeance shouldbe taken upon Cain, which was now come, he called his wives and said thus unto them. Others therefore hold, that Lamech slue not Cain, but only some other young man, whom he calleth a man, & a young man, of which he made confession and was truly penitent therefore, thus giving sentence against himself, and escaping all revenge at Gods hands; thus Theodoret. And from this Chrysostom doth not much differ, who saith, that Lamech having done wickedly in secret, was touched in conscience therefore, and so voluntarily accuseth and condemneth himself, as worthy of a greater punishment, by farre, then Cain, because Cain slue but one man, he two, Cain had no such warning, but he was warned by Cain's example, and therefore he saith, that

1 Catharinus.

Hieron. Epist. 125. ad Damas. Mirum nostrorum illa sententia est, quòd putent in septima generatione, ab Adam, Cain à Lamech interfectum, &c.

Calvin. Fagius.

Ioseph. Antiqui. lib. 1. c. 2.

2

Theod. quæst. 44. in Gen.

Chrysost. Hom. 20. in Gen.

that he had ſlaine a man, and a young man to his hurting and vvounding, becauſe the hurt of it ſhould redound to himſelf, ſo much, ſaith Chryſoſtome, did he profit by that, vvhereby God intended others ſhould take vvarning, namely by his making Cain an example to all Murtherers. But of the foreſaid Hiſtory of Lamech his killing Cain, and another, he ſaith nothing. To this I cannot yet ſubſcribe; becauſe the vvhole generation of Cain, for ought that vve read, vvas vvicked, and if Lamech had bin better, Moſes doubtleſſe vvould have given us ſome hint thereof for the comfort and inſtruction of poſterity in future times, as he doth of the goodneſſe of Enos, v. 26. Certainly ſo famous a thing at this time ſhould not have thus been involved in obſcurity. Moreover, if this ſhould be taken for a penitent confeſſing, why may not Judas alſo be ſaid to have confeſſed his ſin penitently? this man confeſſed to his wives, he to the high Prieſts, neither to God. Laſtly, the words will not well beare any ſuch ſenſe, If vengeance be taken of Cain ſeven-fold, of Lamech ſeventy ſeven. Now vengeance was not taken on Cain ſeven-fold, but threatned to the killer of Cain; and therefore to argue from vengeance upon the killer of Cain, to Lamech a killer of others doth not agree, but rather to the killers of Lamech for his murthers. Suidas reporteth, that Lamech ſlue the two Brethren of Henoch moſt Godly men, and therefore he thus cenſured him ſelf, and was accordingly moſt grievouſly puniſhed. Some Hebrews again expound them another way, as an Interrogation, Have I ſlaine a man, or a young man, as Cain did? And if not, certainly, if ſeven-fold vengeance ſhall be taken upon the killer of Cain, ſeventy times ſeven-fold ſhall be taken upon him, that killeth me, which, they ſay he ſpake to his wives complaining of the violence and ſlaughters made by his ſonnes, now that they had Iron Inſtruments, whereupon they ſaid, ſurely it would for this come to paſſe, that men would ſeek out the Father of ſuch children to ſlay him. But the words are not Interrogative, but affirmative. There is another Expoſition of Calvin, which ſeemeth to me to come neareſt to the truth of any Expoſitions hitherto brought, who underſtandeth theſe words, as a challenge, as if Lamech in oſtentation of his manhood ſhould have ſaid; Do not think, that ye have a coward to your Husband; for I do ſo little feare the face of any man, as that I could wiſh now, that I had a man, yea a young and moſt valiant man to incounter with me, for ſo I would kill him at my peril, whatſoever ſhould come of it. He ſaith moreover, that it is moſt likely that his wives firſt dealt with him about his cruelty, of which many complained, ſeeking by gentle perſwaſions to win him to more mildneſſe: but he was ſo farre from being won hereby, that he thus breathed forth his cruelty more and more. Some, ſaith he, by theſe words, in my wound, and in my hurt, underſtand, as if he had ſaid If I were hurt and wounded, I would kill, &c. And therefore much more being well and ſound: but he rather preferreth this, If any man ſhould hurt and wound me, and thus provoke me, I would kill him, whatſoever he were. As for the following words, if Cain be avenged ſeven-fold, &c He expoundeth this, as a mocking at Gods judgement, as who feared no revenge to be taken on him, if he ſhould commit murther. There are other Expoſitions brought alſo, as if Lamechs wives denyed to company with him either for his ferity, or for the judgement, which they thought, was now at hand, upon him and his Family being the ſeventh generation, as they underſtood the threatning before uttered againſt Cain: thus Fagius relateth. But not to ſtand about repeating or confuting any more interpretations; I think that of Calvin the ſoundeſt, if it be a litle thus ſupplyed. The third Son of Lamech was ſpoken of immediately before this, as the author of Iron and Brazen works. Lamech therefore being now furniſhed with weapons made by him, cometh in to his wives, vaunting himſelf like a prophane man, as if he had ſaid: Being thus provided, I would novv ſee the man, that durſt do me any hurt, or give me any vvound: for ſo I ſhould ſoon be avenged on him vvith the ſhedding of his deareſt blood, be he what he may be, a man

3 Suidas in verbo Lamech.

4

5 Calvin.

6 Fagius.

man, yea, a young man, and moſt ſtrong, and in thus doing, I vvould not feare, but God vvould take my part much more, then he did Cains: for he having killed his innocent Brother Abel, that did him no wrong, was yet by God defended, who threatned ſeven-fold revenge upon any, that ſhould kill him, and therefore, if any ſhould attempt the like againſt me, he would lay much ſorer judgements upon him; becauſe this my killing of men ſhould be upon injury offered me, whereas his was not. But neither do I think, that Lamech was ſerious in ſaying thus, but ſpake it in the way of deriding, all feare of God being caſt from before his eyes. And thus, as this race began wickedly, ſo the Lord would have us take notice, that it ſtill continued, and was all not long after ſwept away with the floud, when they had filled the Earth with cruelty, and other races by mingling with them in Marriage, came to be likewiſe corrupted, and to be aſſociates with them in their wickedneſſe, all but Noah and his family. And thus the words, if Cain be avenged ſeven-fold; that is, vengeance ſeven-fold, ſhall be taken for Cain, for Lamech ſeventy and ſeven-fold, doe moſt aptly agree. That we ſhall, not need curiouſly to inſiſt upon theſe laſt words, but by them underſtand a manifold more grievous revenge, is plainly by another like place, where the Lord Jeſus being asked, Should I forgive my Brother ſeven times, anſwereth, I ſay not unto thee ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven, that is, many more times by farre, ſo that it is not worth the ſpeaking of, that is laid hold upon by ſome out of Joſephus, telling that Lamech had 77 Sons, as if herein it were alluded to them. Or if this pleaſeth not, becauſe the Verb is in the Preterperfect tenſe; I have killed: we may with Ferus ſay, that having been a Murtherer, he was now tormented in conſcience for it, as Judas, and ſo breaketh out into theſe ſpeeches deſpairingly, as Cain uttered words of deſpaire before.

Verſe 25. And Adam knew his wife again and ſhe bare a Son, & called his name Seth, &c. all agree that although no mention be made of other children between Abel and Seth, yet Evah had many others, before this: for Seth is ſaid to have bin born Anno 130. of Adams age, all which time certainly was not ſpent, when it is to be thought, that mankind was moſt fruitfull, without iſſue. But after that Cain had ſlain Abel, it is moſt likely, that Seth was the firſt, that was borne to ſupply that great loſſe, and was the firſt of that line, of which Chriſt came, whom Moſes chiefly reſpected in his Genealogies; whereupon he had his name Seth, ſignifying a foundation, or one put, according to Fagius. And he is rightly ſaid to have been given in Abels ſtead, becauſe he was a moſt godly man, as Joſephus writeth, giving himſelf to ſtudy and learning, ſoaring up even to the knowledge of the courſe of the Starres, and ſuch as he was, were his children after him, who wrote upon two Pillars ſuch things, as they had by long ſtudy found out, the one being made of Brick, the other of Stone, which laſt, he ſaith, continued in the Land of Syria to his time, and Suidas ſaith, that he for his virtue was called a God, whereupon it is ſaid, Gen. 6. of his poſterity, that the children of God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were fair, &c.

Gen. 6. 3.

Fagius.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 2.

Suidas.

Verſe 26. And to Seth was borne a ſonne, and he called his name Enos, then men began to call upon the name of the Lord. In the Septuagints tranſlation it is, He began to call on the name of the Lord, and ſo in the vulgar Latin, but thus in the Hebrew and the Chaldee, and doubtleſſe, not the act of one man, but of more is here noted being inſtructed by that one Seth, and it is, as if he had ſaid, When Seth began to have children and had a family, he expreſſed his piety by this, that when as others generally were prophane, he yet ſet up the worſhip and ſervice of God in his family. Cain and his poſterity were wicked, others not mentioned, that came of Adam and Evah vvere not famous for any goodneſſe in them, and therefore it is likely, that they are not mentioned: ſo that betvveen the death of Abel and Seths birth and grovving up to have a Family there coming a long ſpace of time, wherein the Worſhip of the Lord was neglected by Adams children, for of him Moſes ſpeaketh not, it is worthily obſerved here, as a thing to be noted, that now Religion, which was in a manner

ner hitherto baniſhed, began to be put in practiſe againe. There cannot then be a Seth, that is, a godly man, but he is known by the exerciſe of prayer in his family, he that maketh this no part of his care, is rather after Cain, then after Seth, and ſo unworthy to be a member of Chriſts Church. One ſaith, that now firſt, God was called upon by the name Jehovah, being not called upon by this name before this time, but this is frivolous. The Chaldee Paraphraſe, for beginning to call upon the Name of the Lord, readeth it, prophaning the invocation of the Lords Name, which ſome think, was by turning the true worſhip of God into the worſhipping of idols, ſo ſaith Fagius. Maimony ſaith, that they worſhipped the ſtarrs, and made Images to them, and ſware by them, and forgat God, and that Enos was intangled with this errour. The word חוחל indeed ſignifieth either to begin, or to prophane, or to kill, but when Moſes is ſpeaking of the Godly, to hold, that he telleth of polluting Gods worſhip, is abſurd, and therefore this is to be rejected by the judgement of moſt, and the other of beginning holy devotion, to be imbraced. The name Enos ſignifieth a miſerable and calamitous man; Seth by calling his ſon ſo, preſaging the condition of the godly in this world, they are full of calamities and miſeries alwayes in this life. So Muſculus.

Note.

Cajetan.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.
Fagius.

Calvin.
Oecolampadius.
Muſculus, &c.

CHAP. V.

THis is the book of the generations of Adam, in the day that God created him, in the likeneſſe of God made he him. Moſes having done vvith Cain and his wicked race, now returneth to Seth, a ſon vertuous and godly given to Adam in ſtead of Abel, concerning whom and his father Adam, ye and all his poſterity he ſaith, that having lived ſo many yeers they died, that the juſtice of God might appear in ſtriking with death, as he had threatened it upon the eating of the forbidden fruit, whereby it appeareth, that as Adam, ſo all his poſterity was guilty of that ſin, as is further declared, Rom. 5.

Verſe 1.

Muſculus.

Of the death of Cain and his poſterity nothing is ſaid, nor how long any of them lived, becauſe God had caſt him and his out, and ſo ſeemed no more to regard either their living or dying, both being as it were, of Forreigners, and not of the Lords Domeſtickes, of whom onely a regiſter is kept, to ſhew, that they belong unto him, and that he never doth nor will forget them. Moreover, by his ſetting down the yeers of each mans life wee may eaſily gather the yeeres of the world from the Creation to the floud, and becauſe he goeth in one race onely, which continued even then, all others being omitted, thereby meaſuring the times, he did it certainly to intimate the promiſed ſeed to come of that race, who together with his onely ſhall continue for ever, when others ſhall be deſtroyed, as Luther partly noteth. This is the book, or catalogue of generations from Adam, and ſo forth. Now he is ſaid again to have been made at the firſt in Gods likeneſſe, to prepare to that, which here followeth of his begetting a ſonne in his own likeneſſe, and image, for I doubt not, but as Adam is ſaid to be after Gods likeneſſe for his Lordſhip and authority over all creatures upon earth, he being, as another God amongſt them, and ſuch an one, as in whom Gods glory did moſt ſhine, for which he is ſaid by the Apoſtle to be the image & glory of God. So Sheth is ſaid to be after Adams own image and likeneſſe for the dominion, that he ſhould have after him above all others, & for that excellency found in him, much like to that in Adam before his fall, the Image of God, which is in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, which was decayed by Adams fall, being by grace in this man much repaired. For when it is ſaid, he begat a ſon in his own likeneſſe, it is not meant, that he was ſuch by the power of generation, for by nature and generation, ſince the fall, vve are all corrupt, but he begat a ſon, whom God ſanctified ſo by his grace, that he was in Adams own image, that is, holy and full of excellent graces, as he was by his firſt creation, although not in perfection, as Adam himſelf never was holy, as God, in perfection, in whoſe Image he is ſaid to have been made, but ſo as man ſalne is capable. Now being ſuch, he ſaith not yet, that he begat one in Gods image, but in his own, becauſe mortall, whereas this was one thing, in which Adams likeneſſe unto God at the firſt ſtood, that he was immortall, but now both he and all his muſt needs dye from the worſt to the beſt, becauſe the very beſt is a ſinner. To this effect Muſculus having ſcanned divers expoſitions of this ſimilitude concludeth, he was in Adams ſimilitude, becauſe a man indued with reaſon, and Lord of the earth, and becauſe of ſin obnoxious to death and corruption, as Adam was. But neither he nor Calvin ſeem to favour this, that he is ſaid to have been in Adams likeneſſe for his holineſſe, or peculiar excellency, but as other men commonly were, yea ſome will rather have this image to be in ſin and corruption. But this is moſt improbable, that Moſes being about to ſet forth an holy ſtreine, in beginning with the firſt thereof, would begin with his corruption by ſin: for this certainly had been a more fit enterance for the hiſtory of Cain, or of ſome other wicked generation. This ſimilitude then, as I ſaid at the firſt, ſtood in a certain peculiar excellencie of Sheth, which in Adam was a likeneſſe unto God: for I cannot ſee otherwiſe, to what end that of Adams being made after Gods image, ſhould here be firſt repeated, but that the next man ſpoken of, as like unto him, that was like unto God, might be underſtood to be like unto God alſo, ſo farre forth as a mortall man, bearing about with him fleſh and bloud can be. Moreover, it ſeemeth by the joy, that our firſt parents had in Seth given them in Abels ſtead, a godly ſon, and by their good educating of their children, teaching them to ſerve God, and to offer ſacrifice, as before was ſhewed, and becauſe Adam is reckoned by Luke as one of the holy line, of whom Chriſt came, that Adam, although ſinne entered to all by him, yet was himſelf a faithfull and holy perſon, and therefore Seth is ſaid to be like unto him, a man truly having an earthly body, as he had, according to the laſt words, Verſ. 2. He called their name Adam, Red Earth, but as he was like unto him herein, ſo he was in the better part, the heart and the mind alſo, and ſuch a ſon, as he deſired to have, as from whom in his poſterity onely mankinde ſhould after the floud be propagated again, as all were at the firſt propagated from him alone. For if Adam had continued ſtill in his corruption, and had not been ſanctified by Gods grace, there had been a time when the holy Seed Chriſt vvas preached altogether in vain, forſomuch as God by ſpeaking of him, preacheth him ſo ſoon as man was found but to have ſinned, and the Devill muſt have had ſome for his before the Lord, and ſo all ordinary meanes of converting, and ſanctifying others ſhould have failed, whereupon the vvicked might have had ſome colour to open their mouthes in defence of their wickedneſſe, becauſe there vvas no teaching or praying or meanes to make them better. If any ſhall marvaile, that Abel was not likewiſe ſaid before to be in Adams own image, forſomuch as he was godly alſo; I anſwere, that becauſe he was ſoon cut off, Moſes maketh no large relation of him, but novv coming to one, whoſe ſeed continued from generation to generation, in proſecuting whoſe hiſtorie in his poſterity he intended to be large, hee ſetteth down in the enterance of his hiſtory ſuch circumſtances, as might make for his further commendation, not that Abel was not ſuch, but becauſe his ſhort abode here required none other, then a ſhort narration. And ſo I have done with the third verſe alſo, before I come at it upon occaſion of Gods Image, wherein Adam is ſaid to have been made. So that now in theſe three there is nothing more to be expounded, but that it is ſaid, ver. 2. as is no where elſe, he called the name of the male and female Adam, but it was, he ſaith in the day, that he created them, in alluding to Gen. 1. 27. before that the Hiſtory of the womans creation is particularly ſet down: for when man was firſt made, although he be ſaid to be both male and female, yet there is none other name uſed but Adam, till that the woman vvas ſeparated and diſtinguiſhed and built up by her ſelf, thus having the name of woman by Adam given unto her. For one hundred and thirty yeers of Adams age here mentioned, the Septuagint read two hundred and thirty, and in the yeares

Luther.

Verſe 3.

1 Cor. 11. 7.

Muſculus.

Irenæus bringeth divers reaſons to prove Adam one of Gods elect, lib. 3. cap. 33. & 6 And Epiphanius likewiſe contra Hæreſ. 46. and moſt of the Fathers were of the ſame opinion.

yeeres of others they do much differ alſo from the Hebrew, in ſo much that vvhereas by this catalogue of ages it appeareth, that from the beginning to the floud there were but 1656 yeeres, according to their reckoning there were 2242 yeers. Saint Auguſtine diſcuſſing this at large, and noting, that for five generations together the difference of the Septuagints is onely in the firſt number of yeeres, before the birth of a ſon, they commonly making them many more, then the Hebrevv doth, but the yeers reckoned after, they make ſo many fevver, ſo that the vvhole age of each man being brought together, from the firſt to the laſt, agreeeth vvith the whole reckoning in the Hebrew, but in the ſixth generation and others this order is not kept, he, I ſay, noting this, ſaith, that there vvas fault in ſuch, as at the firſt copyed out the Septuagints tranſlation, vvho not thinking the number of yeeres materiall, vvrote them out careleſly, and for the five former generations, he thinketh, that the Septuagints themſelves ordered them ſo, that it might be thought the more probable, that thoſe men lived ſo long, ſeeing every one vvas 200. or neer 200. yeers old, before that they vvere grovvn up and able for generation, ſuppoſing, that if they had put it dovvn otherwiſe, according to the Hebrevv, it would have been held incredible, that any man ſhould live ſo many hundreths of yeares. And to this of Auguſtine do I ſubſcribe; becauſe the originall copy muſt needs alwayes be trueſt, and tranſlations muſt be corrected thereby, eſpecially ſeeing it is the complaint of many, that the Septuagints tranſlations do much differ amongſt themſelves, and it is generally confeſſed, that there is not any pure copy of theirs to be had at this day. But at the great number of yeares, to which Adam and others lived many do much ſtumble, thinking, that it cannot be true, that any ſhould live ſo long, or elſe that they reckoned a farre ſhorter time for a yeare, then we do, and they inquire alſo, why not one lived 1000 yeares amongſt them all?

Aug. lib. 15. de Civit. Dei, c. 13.

Adam lived 930 yeares and dyed, and Methuſhelah, who lived longeſt of all, dyed the yeare of his age 969. But neither are their yeares to be underſtood otherwiſe then ours, nor is it incredible, that men ſhould then live to ſo great an age. Some have thought, that Moſes followed the Egyptian account, who counted their yeares by the Moon, that is 36 dayes for a yeare, ten Lunary yeares for one Solary. But ſo Henoch and Cainan ſhould have gotten children at ſix yeares of age, ſeeing they are ſaid to have begotten at 65 or thereabouts, and he that lived longeſt, ſhould not have lived to 100 yeares, whereas ſome live ſo long and longer to this day. But that Moſes counted his yeares as we do, by twelve moneths is plaine from the reckoning that is made of one yeare in Noahs time whilſt the waters were going and coming. For Noah went into the Ark the 17 day of the ſecond moneth, immediately after which the waters fell 40 dayes together, and prevailed from their firſt ariſing 150 dayes, to the 17 of the ſeventh moneth. After which they decreaſed to the firſt of the tenth moueth, that is 73 dayes, from which time yet Noah ſtayed 40 dayes, and then opened the Ark, but it being opened at the Window he ſtayed yet from the end of thoſe 40 dayes to the firſt of the firſt moneth fifty, before he uncovered ſending out at times a Raven and a Dove by the window, but yet he came not forth till the 27 day of the ſecond moneth, that is 56 dayes after, all which being put together make 365 dayes at the leaſt, the ten above a yeare being deducted alſo, and yet all this Line is preciſely noted to have beene but one whole yeare, for Noah entred the Arke in his yeare 600, and came forth in his yeare 601. Againe, for the greatneſſe of their age, if we conſider both the great need, that was thus to prolong their dayes for the increaſe of mankind, and for the finding out of the knowledge of many things profitable for the life of man, and the great ſtrength of mens bodies, they growing ſtill and waxing ſtronger, till they atteined to the age of 100 yeares at the leaſt, as appeareth in that, none are ſaid to have gotten children, till they were paſt that age; I ſee no reaſon why it ſhould be thought incredible, that the Lord

Verſe 5.

Gen. 7 11, 12.

Verſe 24.

Gen. 8. 5, 6.

Gen. 8. 13.

Gen. 7. 11. Gen. 8. 13.

ſhould prolong their lives to ſuch a number of yeares, beyond the time, that men live now a dayes. Moreover the bodyes of men were then in perfection, as God at the firſt made Adams, the humours being equally tempered, and their diet was ſimple, and the fruits of the earth, before the floud, were more wholeſome, whereas ſince there hath been a declination in the nature of man, and by the floud, ſalt waters being brought upon the earth, the fruits of it were more corrupt, which appeareth, in that fleſh was after allowed to be eaten. And therefore it is to be noted, that immediately after the floud, the age of man grew farre leſſe, from 900. to 600. 500. 400. and 300. as appeareth Gen. 11. Beroſus and Plinie were of opinion, that man could never live much above 100 yeares; becauſe, as Pliny ſaith, the heart of man groweth till 50 yeares of his age, but thence forward it decreaſeth againe as much in 50 yeares more. But by the relations of the ſame Authors, this is falſe. For Pliny teleth of men that were found in the time of Veſpaſian the Emperour, ſome 140, and ſome 150 yeares old. And Joſephus alleageth, Beroſus and Manethon teling of ſome that lived 500 or 600 yeares and more, and unto them he addeth Mochus, Eſtieus, Jeron: Egyptius and many more making the like relations, but unto a full 1000 yeares no man ever lived, as Irenæus ſaith, to ſhew the frailty of mans life, as being of no longer time then that, which is with the Lord, but as one day, for with him a 1000 yeares are but as one day, or as Oecolampadius; becauſe 1000 is a number of perfection, ſo that they all dying before this, it was hereby intimated, that no perfection of grace is to be atteined to in this life, and yet herein it vvas ſhevved, that God could have made man to live for ever vvithout dying, if he had not ſinned, as vvell as almoſt 1000 years.

Plin. l. 11. c. 37.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib 1. c. 3.

Irenæus.

Verſe 6. Seth lived 105 yeares, and begat Enoſh. It is not neceſſary to hold, that this vvas his firſt Son, as neither touching others, that follovv, for it is not to be imagined, that they went ſo long without all children, but this was he in whom the line went to Noah, and therefore, others being omitted, he only in particular is named, eſpecially for Chriſts ſake, for whom chiefly the Lord would have theſe things regiſtred, that we may ſee through what families his line ran throughout all ages.

Verſe 22. And Henoch walked with God after he begat Methuſhelah 200 years, and begat ſons and daughters; of Henochs walking with God by pleaſing him, and of his tranſlation I have entreated, Heb. 11. 5. as alſo of his Books and Propheſying, Jud. Epiſt. v. 14. ſo that I may well ſpare the labour of diſcuſſing thoſe things here.

Verſe 25. And Methuſhelah lived after he begat Lamech, 782 yeares. This was the longeſt liver of all, and yet no queſtion can from the Hebrew text ariſe touching him, what became of him in the time of the floud, for he dyed that very yeare, as is moſt probable, the firſt moneth, whereas the floud came the ſecond, as will appeare to him, that ſhall compute the time. For Lamech begat Noah the 182 of his Age, and Noah being upon 600. the floud was ſent, which together make 782, to which yeares adde the 187 of his age, when he begat Lamech, and all together will make the juſt age of Methuſelah, here ſet down, viz. 969, which yeares he might be ſaid to live to, although he atteined, but to the firſt moneth of the laſt of them. But by the Septuagints tranſlation 804 yeares are aſcribed to Methuſhelah after the birth of Lamech, which, although Lamech be made 6 yeares older, before the birth of Noah, as indeed they make him, yet come not to be ended, till 16 yeares after the floud. So that here is a plaine corruption, yet not in all copies, for Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that he had ſeene three Greek copies, one Latine, and one Syriack, whereby Methuſhelah appeareth to have dyed ſix yeares before the floud.

Verſe 29. Lamech lived 182, and begat a ſonne, and called his name Noah, ſaying, this ſame ſhall comfort us concerning our work and ſorrow, &c. There is a word in Hebrew called נוח ſignifying to reſt, from whence this name is given, and becauſe becauſe in reſting there is comfort to ſuch as are weary, this reaſon is rendred of this name, he ſhall comfort us, and yet the word נחם ſignifying comfort is ſomewhat neare to this, but the former denomination doth better agree. This Lamech ſpake doubtleſſe, as all Expoſitours agree, by the ſpirit of Propheſie, being weary, as others then were, of the manifold miſeries, which daily increaſed upon them, as the World was more repleniſhed with people, who grew worſe and worſe, whereupon it is moſt probable, that the earth being once accurſed for Adams tranſgreſſion, became yet more accurſed of God, making the toile and labour of man the greater to till it, that they might have fruits ſufficient out of it to live upon, whereas in thoſe dayes they had no fleſh or fiſh allowed them, but were pent altogether to ſuch things, as grew out of the ground for their ſuſtentation. Calvin ſaith, that the Hebrews indeed do thus reſtreine the labour and ſorrow here ſpoken of, to the toile in Husbandry, but he cenſureth this, as too groſſe, holding, that all the miſeries of this life are here meant alſo. And Chryſoſtome expoundeth the reſt here ſpoken of, of the reſt that is in death, according to Job, as if Lamech comforted himſelf to think, that in Noahs time, all men almoſt ſhould be cut off, and ſo their malice ſhould ceaſe: thus alſo Hugo de Sancto Victore and Jerom. But becauſe he ſpeaketh not only of ſorrow and labour, but expreſly of the labour of the hands about the ground, which the Lord curſed; I do rather herein ſubſcribe to R. Solomon and other Hebrews, who underſtand it altogether of toyling and pains-taking in tilling of the ground, being by Gods curſe come to that paſſe, that they laboured much, but reaped little profit, having ſcarcely wherewithall to ſuſteine their lives, and ſo being in continuall anxiety and care. And the rather am I led to this, becauſe for that favour, which the Lord bare to Noah, he ſeemeth to reverſe that decree made of curſing before, ſaying, I will henceforth curſe the earth no more for mans cauſe: and hereafter Seed time and Harveſt, &c. ſhall be, as long as the earth remaineth.

Calvin.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 21. in Gen. Hugo de Sancto Victore. Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

R. Solomon.

Gen. 8 21, 22.

So that the times certainly grew miſerable through Gods curſe for ſin, before this, they having happily ſome yeers no harveſt, but now Lamech ſeeing in the Spirit, that there ſhould be in Noahs time, and by his mediation obteined for mankinde a more comfortable being in this world, after that the earth ſhould be purged from the wicked by a floud, and that they ſhould have more allowed them for their ſuſtenance, even fleſh and fiſh alſo, and not be tyed any more to the fruits of the earth onely, that grew every yeere, he ſpeaketh thus of him, for his own, and for the comfort of all the godly, who ſighed after a deliverance from thoſe evils. And it is well noted here by Ainſworth, that according to this Propheſie, it is ſaid when Noah ſacrificed, God ſmelled a ſavour of reſt, &c. Gen. 8.21. הניחוח ריח the word uſed alluding to Noah his name. The Hebrevves adde alſo, that he foreſaw, that Noah ſhould be an husbandman, and deviſe the plough, and yoaking of Oxen and Horſes together to till the ground, which before was done onely by the labour of men. And ſome think, that Lamech hoped he ſhould be the bleſſed Seed promiſed, or that he ſpake this of him, as a type of Chriſt, by whom reſt and comfort cometh to us all. But againſt the expoſition, which I follow, it will be ſaid, the ground is ſtill accurſed, and a curſe upon it is threatened, whenſoever God is provoked by the ſins of men, & therefore it ſeemeth not to have been reverſed in Noah, that was before decreed againſt man for Adams ſin. Moreover, it is generally held, that the earth grew into a worſe caſe by reaſon of the floud ſludding and ſliming it in every place, and both weakening it and corrupting the fruits thereof. I anſwer, the curſe was not ſo made to ceaſe, as if the ground ſhould no more bring forth briars and thorns, or there ſhould be no more unſeaſonable weather, or labouring the ground without increaſe: but ſo as that the judgements of unſeaſonable times ſhould not be continually, as in times paſt they had been, Gods curſe being increaſed, as the wickedneſſe of men increaſed, an inſtance whereof we had in Cain, to whom the earth is curſed with a greater a greater curſe, then it had been to Adam, neither ſhould they extend to the utter deſtroying of the world by waters any more. And if the earth were by the floud more corrupted, and the vertue of it was much abated, yet for a helpe herein, proviſion is made by allowing other food unto man, not allowed before, which is a great comfort unto him. Ferus ſaith, that Noah preſerved the Word and promiſe of God to the comfort of others afterwards, and in him vvas a ſeed preſerved of mankinde, when all beſides were drovvned. If the queſtion be, how Lamech knevv, that Noah ſhould be ſuch an one, ſeeing we do not read of him, that he was a Prophet? Chryſoſtome anſvvereth, that the ſpirit of propheſie might yet come upon him at this time for the benefit of others, as Caiaphas propheſied afterwards, and Balaam. But I do not think Lamech to have been ſuch an one, but a good man, being one of the ten here commemorated, that vvere the holy ſeed in thoſe times, but as Evah vvas inſpired to ſpeak of Sheth, and Iſaac afterwards to bleſſe Jacob, and Jacob to bleſſe his tvvelve ſons, and to ſpeak of things touching them, which were all after fulfilled, ſo vvas Lemech inſpired likevviſe. If it be demanded, vvhy no reaſon is rendred of any other name but of Sheth the firſt, and Noah the laſt? Calvin anſwereth well, it is not to be doubted, but their names alſo were given them upon good reaſon, but the reaſon is not yielded, onely here it is, that Noah might be taken notice of, as extraordinary, and in whoſe time an extraordinary thing was to be done, tending to the great benefit of the Church, ſuch as had not happened in former ages. For the few men born into the world hitherto mentioned, although there were many more by far in thoſe times, yet it is undoubtedly to be held, that theſe were all, that ſucceeded one another in the ſame line, ſo that the yeers aſſigned to them, make an exact Chronologie to the time of the floud: for when theſe generations are again repeated, 1 Chron. 1. and Luke 3. the very ſame, and no more are ſpoken of.

Deut. 28.

Chryſoſt. hom. 21

Calvin.

Verſe 32. And Noah was 500 yeeres old, and Noah begat Shem, Ham and Japhet. It is a thing, that cannot, but bee noted, that Noah lived ſo long, even far beyond the time of any of his progenitors, without children: for Chryſoſtome and many others thinke, that he did live being, till about this time a ſingle man, but then he took him a wife, and by her had theſe three, vvhereupon he breaketh out into an admiration of his chaſtity, ſaying, that for this he was in ſuch ſingular favour with the Lord. And he extolleth his chaſtity yet the more, that after theſe, although he lived ſtill 400 yeers and upward, yet he abſteined from generation thence forward, ſo that, whereas of others it was commonly ſaid before, after the begetting of one childe, he lived ſo many yeeres, and begat ſons and daughters, of Noah it is onely ſaid, that he lived after the floud 350, and ſo all his yeers were 950; upon this the Popiſh do greedily lay hold, to prove, that a man may, if he will, live in perpetuall chaſtity. But what an uncertain ground is this, contrary to a certain word, Every one hath his proper gift, and all men cannot receive this, ſaving they to whom it is given. Yea, Pererius the Jeſuite himſelfe, although he maketh uſe of this of Chryſoſtome to confute Heretickes, as he calleth us, yet he confeſſeth, that it cannot neceſſarily be inferred, that Noah took not a wife, till about this time, neither begat children, for he might have had children before, but by ſome meanes or other they were prevented by death, ſo that they atteined not to this time. And what a weak reaſon is this of Gods being ſo ſingularly well pleaſed with Noah for his continency, when as Henoch was in as high favour, as he, and yet he was married and begat children in as young yeers, as any other of thoſe times? Yea, when Noah is ſpoken of, as pleaſing God ſo well, his generations are likewiſe commemorated. For my part, I think, that Noah took him a wife long before this, but was hitherto denied iſſue, as ſome other rare men were afterwards, Abaham, Iſaac, and Zachariah, becauſe the Lord would miraculouſly, as it were, out of an old and dry ſtocke, raiſe the innumerable fruits of all the peoples of the world, as he did great peoples and nations out of Abra-

Chryſoſt. Hom. 24 in Gen.

Gen. 9.28.

1 Cor. 7.7. Matth. 19.11.

ham

ham being old, but henceforward he giveth him no more children, not becauſe he did no more accompany with his wife, but for the notableneſſe the thing, that of theſe three the whole earth ſhould be overſpread, as by the Lord, three perſons in one Godhead all things, that live all over the world were made. For that he did not hitherto abſtein from marriage, I think it more then probable, it being ſo lately ſhewed in Adam, to whom Evah was joyned, what others ſhould alſo do in thoſe times, viz. marry for increaſe and multiplication, as the vacuity of the world required then: and that he had no children, till now, I do alſo beleeve, becauſe God would then doubtleſſe have preſerved them alive, although not ſo good', as he did Ham for his fathers ſake. 1 Cor. 7 5.

But how are theſe three Sons ſpoken of, as being before the Lord gave Noah warning of the floud to come, and as having wives alſo then, when as the time between this warning and the floud was 120 yeares, and theſe three are ſaid to have been begotten, when Noah was 500 yeares old, and accordingly the firſt man named, Shem was certainly borne about this time, for he is expreſly ſaid the ſecond yeare after the floud to have been 100 yeares old, and whether of them was eldeſt, and whether came they all at one birth, becauſe when Noah is 500 yeares old he is ſaid to have begotten them? I can ſee nothing for it, but againſt it, that the wife of Noah brought them all three forth at one birth, although when one Son is begotten at one time, and another at another, there have hitherto been diſtinct relations made thereof, as was noted before touching Cain and Abel, for Sem was but 100 yeares old two yeares after the Floud, c. 11. 10. and therefore one or both the other came before him; they came together or at divers times, it is to be held, that Noah was 500 years old before he begat any of them, ſo that it muſt needs be confeſſed that Moſes breaketh order in this place, ſetting down Noahs begetting of Sons, before Gods warning of him touching the floud, when as indeed he gave Noah warning of the floud firſt, even 20 yeares before, as appeareth plainly by one paſſage, Gen. 6. 3. the dayes of man ſhall be 120 yeares. Gen. 6. 18. Gen. 11. 10.

I know, that Philo, Joſephus, Lactantius and Rupertus underſtood this of mans life after the floud, but they were in a manifeſt errour, becauſe Noah lived 300 yeares after, and Shem 400, and many more longer, then that time; Chryſoſtome therefore, Auguſtine and Jerome, and others are rather to be hearkened to herein, who underſtand this time of the time given to the old world to repent in, ſo that if before the expiration of this long time they would not repent, they ſhould all periſh. Now whereas the begetting of Shem, Ham and Japhet is ſpoken of before this, it is done by anticipation to make up the whole catalogue of the holy line before the floud, the Hiſtory of the floud being a diſtinct thing here from, and therefore to be handled apart after this, together with the Apparatus thereof, as belonging to the ſame Hiſtory. And the like may be ſaid touching the age of Noah here commemorated, when as after this, 120 yeares are ſpoken of, wherein men ſhould be ſpared, whereas there was not ſo much time betwixt Noahs 500 yeare and the time of the floud, which was in his 600 yeare, although this ſpeech of the Lord be mentioned after, yet it was uttered before, Noah not having yet atteined to 500 by 20 yeares. Philo. Joſeph. Lactantius. Rupertus. Chryſoſt. Auguſt. Hieron.

Jerome indeed and Chryſoſtome and after them Hugo de Sancto Victore, labour to cleare this otherwiſe, by ſaying, that God ſeeing no inclination in them to repentance in 100 yeares, would delay his wrath no longer, but cut off the 20 yeares before ſpoken of; But becauſe this ſatisfieth not, Auguſtine ſaith, that Noah is ſaid to have been 500 yeares old, being indeed but 480, becauſe he was going on the 500. But this ſatisfieth not neither, becauſe it is plaine by the age of Shem ſpoken of, Gen. 11. 10. that Noah when he was ſaid to be 500. it is meant of him, that he was fully 500 and two yeares over. And therefore it is beſt to hold us for the clearing of this doubt, to that, which hath been already ſaid. And as in theſe things, ſo in that of Noahs Sons having wives, it muſt needs be confeſſed, that although the Lords telling of him, that he and his wife, his Sons and their wives ſhould Hieron. tradit. Hebr. Chriſ.

ſhould be preſerved in the Ark, that he ſhould make, doth ſo hang together with that charge about making the Ark, as that it may ſeem to have beene ſpoken altogether, yet it was not, but this of his Sons wives was ſpoken ſucceſſively, when as the Ark was now ready, and they were grown up and had taken them wives. Or rather it may be thought, that the Ark was not ſo long in building, but a farre ſhorter time, the Lord indeed revealed the deſtruction of the world by water to Noah 120 yeares before, that he might admoniſh men thereof, and ſo move them, if it might be, to repentance, but happily he did not appoint him to make an Ark, till many yeares after, when he had Sons, and thoſe Sons had wives, ſuch a convenient time before the floud, that he might then have finiſhed it, but I deliver this only, as a conjecture to be conſidered, the common received opinion is, that Noah was 100 yeares in building the Ark; Auguſt. lib. 15. de Civit. c. ult. Gregor. Hom. 15. in Ezech. Rupert. lib. 4 in Gen. cap. 20 Origen. &c. but the ground of this tenet is very weak, viz. becauſe Noah is ſaid to have been 500 yeares old here, but when the floud came 600. But who can tell, whether the Lord bad Noah immediately after this to build the Ark or many yeares after. Laſtly,

Gen. 9 24. for the three Sons of Noah, although Shem be firſt named, yet the Hebrews ſay, that he was youngeſt, but Ham is ſaid by Moſes to be Noahs younger Son, and therefore they have certainly erred herein: For amongſt the Hebrews there is none other degree of compariſon, but the younger is the youngeſt, yet Chryſoſtome and Ambroſe will not have Ham but Japhet the youngeſt in yeares, but only that he was called the youngeſt for his wickedneſſe, and ſinne committed againſt his Father, and therefore Ham is ſtill named before Japhet, becauſe in the courſe of nature he was elder. But to this doe not I ſubſcribe, as neither to that of the Hebrews, for Ham is expreſly ſaid to be the youngeſt, and Japhet Shems elder Brother Ch. 10. 21 and Shem to be 100 years old two yeares after the floud Ch 11 10. ſo that one muſt needs be before, being at that time 102. wherefore Japhet was eldeſt, Sem the ſecond, and Ham yonngeſt. But Sem is firſt named for honour, becauſe he was moſt holy, then Ham, becauſe of him came the firſt King Nimrod, and the Aſſyrian Ch. 10. 8, 11. Laſtly Japhet, becauſe he atteined not to ſuch greatneſſe till the third and fourth Monarchs of Medes and Grecians, who came of him, Ch. 10. 2. whereas another order is followed Ch. 10 in ſetting downe their Genealogies, that might be done in a myſtery, to ſhew that Sem the firſt ſhould one day be laſt in the Hebrews his poſterity, Japhet and Ham, that is, the Gentiles being under the Goſpell for their faith preferred.

Chryſoſtome Ambroſe.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. Verſe 2. WHen men began to be multiplied upon the face of the earth, and Daughters were borne unto them. 2 The ſonnes of God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were faire, &c. This is not to be underſtood, as belonging only to the 500 yeare of Noahs age, but alſo to preceeding times, when the world began to grow full of people, as it is moſt probable, that it did long before Noah. For Diodorus Siculus telleth of Ninus Emperour of the Aſſyrians, that although he lived but 250 yeares after the floud, wherein all periſhed but Noah and his family, conſiſting but of eight perſons, yet he had an Army then of 17000000 foot 200000 horſemeu, and 10600 Chariots. To which numeroſity if the World grew in 250 yeares from three couples only, we muſt needs think, that in 1000 yeares from the Creation, which was above 100 before Noahs birth, it muſt needs be moſt populous. And yet it is moſt probable, that Moſes doth not meane here any time ſooner, then that where in Lamech is ſaid of one of his wives to have had both a ſonne and a Daughter called Naamah, beautifull. For as if he had there laid a ground of this Hiſtory, touching Daughters that were faire, borne to men, he telleth of a daughter, and nameth her, which Diodor. Siculus lib. 3. c. 2.

Gen. 4. 22.

hath hath been hitherto unwonted touching any other woman. Now then I take it, we may understand him here, as if he had said, when Lamech had first begun to multiply wives, by whom he had Sons: yea and a faire Daughter also called Naamah, after whom it is not to be doubted, but that he had divers others, and his Sons, and other men after his example, being led by sensuall lust, had taken them more wives also, whereby their posterity was greatly multiplyed, the sonnes of God, seeing these daughters of theirs to be faire, took them wives, &c. For in Lamechs and his sonnes times, saith Josephus, the World began to be thus depraved, the children of Seth being till the seventh generation addicted to holy studies and to the worship of one only true God, but thence forward they fell away, and were twice as much set upon wickednesse, as they had been before upon vertue. And Theodoret to the same effect saith, the children of Sheth were not mingled with the children of Cain for Gods curse upon Cain, but lived separate, being called the children of God. But after that Musick was invented by Jubal, they were soon allured hereby, and degenerating from their former piety turned to licentiousnesse, forbearing no longer to mingle with Cains Daughters. And this, as is most probable, was about Henochs time, who was the seventh from Adam, as the Son of Lamech was, and if about the time of Gods taking him away, it was 905 yeares from the creation, so that from thence, till the threatning of the floud was almost 600 yeares, in which time iniquity growing to an height, he would now suffer it no longer, but punish the world all over, corrupted by this time with an universall deluge. The great question of this place is, who are these sonnes of God and daughters of men? The word used for God here, is of the plurall number אלוהים whereupon Aquila for the sonnes of God, hath translated it, the sonnes of Gods; Symmachus, the sonnes of the mighty; the Chaldee Paraphrast filios magnatum, Pagninus, the sonnes of Princes; the Septuagints in one copy; the sonnes of God, in another, the Angels of God, which maketh no difference, because if excellent men be meant, they are set forth by the name of Angels, as John the Baptist, of whom it is said, behold, I send my Angel before my face, for the word is ἄγγελος. But by all the most judicious, this reading is preferred, the sonnes of God. These, some say, were the good Angels set to guard Countries and Cities, who yet being allured by the beauty of women took and lay with them, and so fell from their former glory, the issue, that came thus being called Genii of the common sort. Thus Justin Martyr, Philo Judæus, Josephus, Clemens Alex. Tertullian, Lactantius, &c. But this seemeth to us, that live in these times, absurd in the very naming of it, because Angels having no bodies as we have, cannot be taken with corporeall beauty. Moreover, it is said here, they took them wives, and Moses coming further to expresse, who these sonnes of God were, that thus offended, he saith, the Lord said, my spirit shall not alwayes strive with man, &c. as if men and not Angels had been reported before to have offended. These were not then Angels, but men most certainly, and so that opinion of others, that they were Devils, falleth to the ground also. Thus Theodoret reasoneth against these opinions, calling them stupid and foolish, that hold them, because also if Angels good or bad had laine with mens Daughters, they must have been punished and not men therefore. And Chrysostome objecteth this one thing, as sufficient alone to beat downe this opinion, that it is said, to none of the Angels did God ever say, thou art my son, but of men it is often spoken.

Ioseph. Antiq. lib. 1.

Theod quæst. 47 in Gen.

Aquila.
Symmachus.
Chaldee Paraphrast.
Pagninus.
Septuagint.

Justin. Martyr. Apolog. pro Christianis.
Philo lib. de Gigantibus.
Joseph. Antiq. lib. 1.
Clem. Alexand. Strom. lib. 3.
Verse 3.
Plato.
Psellus.
Theod. quæst. 47 in Gen.
Chrysost. hom. 21. in Gen.
Hebr. 1.
Aug. lib. 15. de Civit. Dei c. 23.
Cassi. in collat. 8. cap. 21.
Cyril. lib. 9. contra Iulianum.
Ruper. in Gen.

Another exposition therefore hath been found out by these and other learned writers, that came after, as Augustine, Cassianus, Cyrillus, Rupertus, &c. Which is also now generally followed by Calvin, Musculus, Luther, Artopœus and others, that by the sons of God are meant the posterity of Sheth and Enos, who kept long separate from Cains posterity, as being accursed of God, during which time they lived vertuously, and mainteined justice, whereby they came to have great authority, as some think, in the world: but now, the wicked daughters of Lamech, spoken of, Gen. 4. being beautifull, they were hereby allured, and following the ſwinge of their carnall luſts, of them they took wives, as many as they liked, which ſheweth, that they did not ſet the fear of God before their eyes in theſe their marriages, taking wives for the procreation of children, and for mutuall helpe and ſociety: (for then they would have reſpected vertue more then beauty, knowing that of marriages with the wicked and vaine, no true comfort or content can follow to the godly) but to ſatiſfie their carnall luſts, like brute beaſts, multiplying the number of wives, as their luſts led them. If any man ſhall marvaile, that ſuch ſhould be called the children of God, it is eaſily anſwered, that this is the generall name of the ſonnes of the Church, which is called to this honour, by being ſeparated from the reſt of the world, to the exerciſing and mainteining of the true religion of God, although many herein be not elected of God, for til their abdication, they are ſtill wont to be called his people and his ſons for their outward calling, ſo Calvin. Moreover, it hath been noted before out of Suidas, that Sheth, of whom they firſt came, was for his piety and wiſdome called a God, and Cyril noteth the like touching Enos his ſonne, and therefore as their poſterity they might well go under this name בני־אלוהים. Some have thought, that they were of a very great ſtature of body, & therefore were called the ſons of God, as the Cedars for their procerity are afterwards called the trees of God: others becauſe of their dignity & principality in the world, whereuponthe Chaldee Paraphraſt inferreth, that it is a thing highly diſpleaſing to God, for great men to marry daughters of Plebeians for their beauty: but this is rather a perverting of doctrine, then a raiſing of true doctrine from this place. That, which indeed we ought to conſider hence, is, what a dangerous thing it is to be led by inordinate luſts, even in of taking wives, not reſpecting to marry in the Lord.

Deut.14.1. 1 John 3.3.

Calvin.

Cyril.lib 9. contra Iulianum.

Chal. Paraphra.

Note.

The Devill twice before plotted the ruine of all mankinde, firſt, by tempting to eat of the forbidden fruit, ſecondly, by ſtirring up Cain to kill Abel, now the third time, he draweth the generation of the godly to affect confuſed marrying, whereby God might be provoked again to deſtroy all. And had there not been onely one Noah better, then the reſt, the world had ſurely been deſtroyed. See then the miſchief of filthy luſts, when they have dominion in men, if but to carry them on to marry without reſpect of God and his true religion. And much more, when they ſway to filthy whoredoms and adulteries. Again, if we aſcend again to verſe 1. See, how corruption groweth in the increaſe of people: for now men being multiplyed, all are corrupted, and onely one good man Noah is to be found in the world, whereas before, in the paucity of people it was not ſo. For where there be many, there are many wicked examples in all kindes, and they bear themſelves upon their number, being ready to break out into violent & outragious courſes, wherefore a ſtrict and carefull government is now moſt neceſſary. And if we deſcend a little lower to the verſes following, we may ſee, how dangerous inſtruments of Satan, wicked women are, for in matching with ſuch is the beginning of all this confuſion, their allurements are moſt forcible, and therefore juſt was it with God to take ſo ſharpe a revenge upon men, for expoſing themſelves to this danger, and it is to be attended to, as no ſmall, but a great fault, that Moſes ſpeaketh of, when he ſaith, The ſons of God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and tooke them wives of all, that they liked, that all men may take heed, with whom they marry, but ſpecially the ſons God, they that be of the true Church, and in externall profeſſion of the beſt ſort.

Verſe 3.

And the Lord ſaid, my ſpirit ſhall not alwaies ſtrive with man, for that he alſo is fleſh, &c. The word דון here tranſlated, ſtrive, is in the Septuagints Greeke tranſlation, and the vulgar Latine rendered, remain, my ſpirit ſhall not alwaies remain in man. And this is followed by Chryſoſtome, and Ambroſe and many others. But Chryſoſtome expoundeth it thus, my ſpirit ſhall not remain, that is, I will not alwayes hold my providence over man to protect him, and to doe for him: Ambroſe thus, my holy ſpirit ſhall not alwaies remain in man, becauſe he is fleſh, for the nature of fleſh is given to pleaſure, and ſo reſiſteth diſcipline.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 22. in Gen. Ambroſ. lib. de Noa & Arca, cap. 3.

diſcipline. Again, ſome by ſpirit underſtanding the ſoul, becauſe it is ſaid, God breathed into man the breath of life, and ſo he became a living ſoule, expound it thus, The ſoul and life, that I have put into man, ſhall not alwaies abide with him, but I will now at once take it away again from all men by ſuddenly deſtroying them, and this is moſt agreeable to the Chaldee, wherein it is thus rendered, this evill generation ſhall not indure before me for ever. But the Hebrew word דון will not bear this expoſition, but in tranſlating it, becauſe it may bear divers ſenſes, there is great difference. Some expound it by judging, as Jerome, my ſpirit ſhall not alwaies judge theſe men for ever, that is, ſaith he, by puniſhing them hereafter eternally, and therefore I will at once temporally deſtroy them. Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. Others derive the word from נדן ſignifying a ſcabbard, as Pagninus, as if he had ſaid, I will not alwaies ſheath my ſpirit in man, that is, either by keeping his ſoul in his body, as in a ſheath, or by keeping up mine anger, as if it were ſheathed. Pagninus. Laſtly, others expound it by arguing or ſtriving, as the word alſo moſt commonly ſignifieth; but this, ſome, ſaith Luther, will have meant of ſome Prophet of God, who had hitherto admoniſhed them, but now ſeeing it to do no good, the Lord threateneth not thus to argue and ſtrive with them any longer: others of Gods own ſpeaking unto men, & lightly puniſhing them, when as they had offended, herein diſputing and ſtriving, as it were, with them to make them better, and this is followed by Calvin, and is doubtleſſe the genuine meaning of the words. Luther. For God had before ſtriven vvith Adam, when he ſinned, and vvith Cain by a lively voice ſpeaking unto them; but now wickedneſſe being grown to ſuch an height, he reſolveth not to take that courſe any more, but to deal with all together by a ſweeping iudgement of generall deluge. Calvin. They that tranſlated the word, remain, gave rather the meaning of ידום then of דון, becauſe that word ſignifieth to waite, or reſt expecting. And for other expoſitions, they ſeeme to be either too far fetcht, or not ſo well to agree to the ſcope of this place. But what force is there in this reaſon, becauſe he alſo is fleſh? This is alſo beſt reſolved by the ſame Calvin, becauſe he by ſenſuall living and following the pleaſures of the fleſh, is become like a bruit beaſt, uncapable of any reaſoning, as if he had no reaſonable ſoul in him, but were altogether fleſh, as they are, therefore I will no longer diſpute, or by arguing ſtrive with him, but deſtroy him utterely from off the face of the earth. And thus long before, Chryſoſtome, becauſe he is altogether given to carnall workes, abuſing thus the ſubſtance of the ſoul, as if he were all fleſh, and no ſoul. Indeed, as the ſame Father ſaith, fleſh ſometime ſignifieth mans nature, which is frail, according to that of Eſay, All fleſh is graſſe; but of this he ſpeaketh not here, as Jerome expoundeth it, taking it for a reaſon, why the Lord would not put them to everlaſting torments: for we are rather to hold the contrary, ſeeing Saint Peter ſaith, they periſhed, and are in priſon, which can be none other, but that of Hell. The fleſh here ſpoken of is the ſame, which Saint Paul elſewhere calleth the naturall man, who receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, and the wiſdome whereof he calleth enmity to God. Gods Spirit then having hitherto ſtriven to reform theſe men, as he daily doth in all ages, whilſt there are meanes of grace, but they through their carnality not being moved hereby, the Lord now reſolveth to give over dealing vvith them this way any more, as being in a moſt deſperate eſtate, and to pay them vvith judgements, according to their demerits, and to this expoſition is farther light given, ver. 5. Whereby we may ſee, how dangerous the caſe of all thoſe is, that receive no good being, yet along time moved and ſtirred up hereunto by the Spirit of God, in his ſpeaking unto them, and exhorting and admoniſhing them. Yet his dayes ſhall be 120 yeeres, that is, before I will bring my deſtroying iudgements upon him, that my patience and long-ſuffering may by all means appear. That theſe words are thus to be underſtood, and not of the age of man after this, I have already ſhewed upon, Gen. 5. 32.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 22. in Gen. 1 Pet. 3. 19. 1 Cor. 2. 14. Rom. 8. 7. Note. 1 Pet. 3. 20.

There were giants in the earth in thoſe dayes, &c. There is a great controverſie here

Verſe 4.

here amongſt Expoſitours, vvhat theſe giants were, vvhether ſo called onely for their giant-like conditions, cruelty, pride, brutiſh living, and prophaneneſſe, God and godlineſſe being contemned by them, or for the vaſt greatnes of their bodies: For the firſt is Philo Judæus, who ſaith, that they were called Gigantes, quaſi γηγενεῖς terrâ geniti, borne of the earth, becauſe they vvere altogether for earthly pleaſures, and not for any extraordinary greatneſſe of their bodies. And Joſephus ſaith, that they were thus called for the impiety of their manners, ſo likewiſe Chryſoſtome, Damaſcen and Cyril, and thus Calvin, Muſculus and others of our new Writers. But for the other is Auguſtine, ſaying, that the vvorld vvas then full of Giants, ſuch alſo, as were borne by the daughters of men, to the ſons of God, that married them, it pleaſing God to create ſome of ſo vaſt and ſtrong bodies, that ſeeing beauty and ſtrength to be of the wicked, we might learn not ſo highly to eſteem of them, but onely of ſpirituall good things. So likewiſe Theodoret ſaith, that when he readeth here of giants, and afterwards of giants, whoſe ſtature is ſet forth to be wonderfull, and farre exceeding that of other men, he cannot but think theſe to have been giants properly ſo called, God wiſely making ſome with ſuch vaſt bodies, to ſhew his power, but to cut off pride, and to repreſſe arrogancy, he hath not given to men generally the greateſt bodies, becauſe if men of little bodies be ſo lifted up one againſt another, and againſt God alſo, what would they have done, if they had had moſt mighty and ſtrong bodies? Ambroſe alſo held the ſame, and Caſſianus, and Beroſus Annianus in his Hiſtory ſaith, that before the floud there was a city called Enos inhabited by giants, who by the vaſtneſſe and ſtrength of their bodies, having alſo found out armes, conquered and ruled over all the World. Neither can I ſee any reaſon, why we ſhould rather avoid this, ſeeking another expoſition upon the word giants; when as in other places of Scripture, where giants are named, no man will deny, but that they were of huge and vaſt bodies. And the word נפלים here uſed from falling, becauſe, as Rabbi Solomon hath it, men fell down for fear at the ſight of them, or becauſe when ſuch fell upon any they cruſhed them under them, maketh much for this vaſtneſſe of body, there being not naturally ſo great fear of other men, though cruell and barbarous, when they are ſeen, or they have their name, ſaith Ferus, from falling, becauſe they were proud, and ſuch ſhall fall, Pſal. 82. wherefore hereby are underſtood proud ones. It ſeemeth to me, that, as men grew monſtrous in conditions, ſo children were borne into the world, of monſtrous bodies, who growing up were a ſcourge of wickedneſſe, and now the ſons of God amongſt whom it ſeemeth, there were no ſuch before, having married the daughters of men, God ſhewed a like wonder amongſt them: For to them were giants borne alſo, who as they were of a monſtrous and foul ſhape, ſo they were of foul conditions, filling all things with cruelty, ambition and filthineſſe. For two diſtinct rankes of giants are here noted, as Calvin well obſerved, ſome before this marrying, and ſome after, that were called men of renown, and Vatablus expreſſeth it, in adding to the words of the Text, genuerunt iis i. gigantibus, ſo that all was then full of giants. And indeed what ſort of men have ever been ſo cruell, ambitious, filthy, and ſuch contemners of God, as giants, as all Hiſtories doe record? although it muſt be acknowledged, that many things fabulous have been vvritten by the Poets and others of them. To conclude then, that which is here ſpoken, is, as if Moſes had ſaid: When the ſons of God thus married vvith the daughters of men, there vvere ſome of monſtrous and vaſt bodies, coming of the race of Cain, whoſe conditions were anſvverable to their ſhape, but now this brood vvas more increaſed, ſuch being born alſo to Seths Poſterity, vvho vvere of mighty bodies, and gave themſelves to rapine, and the ſpoiling of others, thus coming to be talked of for their valour, for vvhich it is ſaid, that of old they vvere men of name or of renovvn, the word here uſed is מעולם, as ſome underſtand it, ſaith Calvin, hath reference to the age, after the floud, as if of old onely before the floud there were ſuch, but none more after. But Philo lib de gigant.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.
Chryſ.
Damaſcen.
Cyril.
Aug. lib. 15. de Civit. Dei c. 23.

Theod quæſt. 48 in Gen.
Deo hoc ſapienter diſpenſante, ut cogneſcant, Deum tanquam Omnipotentem Creatorem tantam hominibus diſtribuiſſe menſuram. Perfacile enim Deo erat majores homines, quàm ſunt creare, &c.

R. Solomon.

Calvin.
Vatablus.

it it is plaine, that there were Giants afterwards alſo, and therefore hereby is rather meant that theſe were the firſt in the world, that through their might and great ſtrength of body atteined to principality and rule, and that over great Dominions, whereupon they were commonly talked of, as moſt famous, as Alexander the Great was afterwards, or Julius Cæſar, or ſome other like unto them. But to what rule ſoever they atteined, it is not a thing uſed either by Moſes, or any other Writer, if they were not Giants in ſtature, to call them Giants, but only mighty men, or men of great valour, or if he would ſet forth their evill conditions, Sonnes of Belial.

Verſe 5.

And the Lord ſaw, that the malice of man was great upon earth, and that all the imaginations of the thoughts of their heart were only evill continually. Here is further expreſſed that, which vvas before intimated in ſpeaking of Giants, and promiſcuous marriages for beauty, and the increaſe of the number of Giants after this. Novv the Lord looketh upon the vvorld, and, behold, vvickednes vvas grovvne to a great height, neither did men only commit moſt vile ſinnes, but alſo the fountaine of all their actions, their heart vvas corrupt, there being no thought or device novv therein, but tending to ſinne, and this vvas not the caſe of ſome, as of the Giants only before mentioned, and of thoſe that made promiſcuous marriages, but of all the men of the earth, their hearts vvere all as one thus corrupted, vvherefore he ſpeaketh of them thus, all the imaginations of the heart of men, and more plainly; all fleſh was corrupt. So that the Lord may not be thought to have been too ſevere in bringing upon them this common deſtruction, but being greatly provoked hereunto. But as it is ſaid here of thoſe that periſhed in the floud, ſo of Noah and his company after the Floud. The imagination of mans heart is evill from his youth. From vvhence vve gather, that the nature of man is generally ſo corrupted, that there is not one, that of himſelfe can think a good thought, as is plainly alſo taught by the Apoſtle Paul, but is dead in ſinnes and treſpaſſes, vvhich overthrovveth all free vvill ſo much ſtood for by the Popiſh. And moreover, that vvhilſt vve are mortall men, although vve be regenerated, as Noah vvas, there are imaginations in us, that come from our fleſh, vvhich be evill and ſinfull, making our beſt actions unvvorthy, although in Chriſt Jeſus it be condoned to all the faithfull, and ſo their ſacrifices done to God, are notvvithſtanding accepted of.

Verſe 12.

Gen.8.21. Note. 2 Cor.3.5. Epheſ.2.

Eccl.7.20. Eſay 64.6.

Verſe 6.

And it repented the Lord that he made man upon the earth, and it grieved him at the very heart.

This is not ſpoken, as if repentance and grief were incident to the Lord: for it is expreſly ſaid; God is not like man, that he ſhould repent, and there is no ſhadow of change with him. He doth therefore, herein ſpeak to our capacity, meaning only, that the Lord took great indignation at the great wickedneſſes then by men committed, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, becauſe they did contrary to that, for which he made them. Juſtin Martyr ſaith, that the Lord is ſaid to repent or change, when he changeth things, as is expedient for them, that he taketh the care of, who are changed from that, which they were. And when he thus repenteth and puniſheth, or ſaveth, he is ſtill immutable, thus he was immutable towards Saul, concerning whom it is ſaid, that he repented of his making him King, in not pardoning him, and towards the Ninevites he was immutable in pardoning them, for he is immutably merciſull to the penitent, but juſt to be avenged upon the wicked and impenitent. And Auguſtine ſaith, the ſentence of God touching all things is as firme as his præſcience is certaine, but he is thus ſpoken of to inſinuate himſelfe the more familiarly into all ſorts of men, for whom he provideth thus to terrifie the proud, to excite the negligent, to exerciſe the inquiſitive, and to nouriſh the intelligent. And indeed God cannot be ſaid properly to repent, becauſe repentance is only of thoſe, that are ignorant of that, which will happen, but upon experience find it to be ſuch, as they hoped it would not have bin, whereas all things are known before unto the Lord, yea even from eternity, as 1 Sam.15.29. James 1.17. Mal.3.6. Chryſoſt. Hom. 22. in Gen. Juſtin. Martyr. ad quæſt. 36. Orthodox. Deus quia ſemper ibidem eſt, & facit quod ipſum decet, eſt immutabilis; ſed cum ii quos curat, mutantur, mutat ipſe res, prout ius exigit, quos curat; decq; ad ignoſcendum & non ignoſcendum eſt immutabilis. Auguſt. lib. 15. de Civit. Dei, c. 25.

Theodoret

Theodoret reaſoneth. The meaning then is, God was, as a man who having built an houſe repenteth, and reſolveth to caſt it downe againe, yet becauſe of his great affection to his ovvn vvork therein, he doth it vvith vvonderfull grief. So vvhen Gods juſtice moveth him to deſtroy man for ſin, his mercy and love vvorketh vvonderfully vvith him, that he cannot do it vvithout ſorrovv, as a vvoman in travaile is full of paine, and yet vvould bring forth, ſo the Lord, notvvithſtanding the grief, vvhich he is put to in doing of it, yet vvill deſtroy, as Rupertus expreſſeth it. Gods juſtice then worketh to make him to meditate the deſtruction of ſinfull man, and his mercy to make him grieve at the deſtruction of one ſo deare unto him, for we never grieve for the loſſe of that, which we love not, and then his juſtice worketh againe to make him reſolve upon the deſtruction of man, as v. 7. So that God repenteth, and grieveth, but not as man, for it is without any change of his mind, which is alwayes to be affected with love, and yet to do juſtice. Beſides, the words uſed in this verſe; It repenteth the Lord that he made man, the vulgar Latine hath theſe, ſe præcavens in futurum, but this is neither in the Hebrew, Chaldee, or Greek, and therefore is meerly foiſted in by ſome man, to ſhew, that the judgements now to be executed ſhould be documents to ſucceeding generations. To conclude, God is ſaid to repent here, aed to grieve at the heart, to teach us to repent and to grieve for our ſinnes, when we read of God thus wonderfully moved hereat, and not to take Gods judgements upon us, as effects of hatred, but merely of our own ſinnes, the Lord through his love, being greatly grieved thus to deale with us.

Ejus de omnibus rebus tam fixa eſt ſententia, quàm certa præſcientia. Si ſacra Scriptura talibus verbis non uteretur, non ſe quodammodo omni hominum generi inſinuaret, quibus vult eſſe conſultum, ut perterreat ſuperbientes, excitet negligentes exerceat quærentes, & alat intelligentes. Theod quæſt. 50 in Gen. Rupert. lib. 4. in Gen. c. 1.

Note.

Verſe 7.

Calvin.

I will deſtroy man whom I have made, &c. from man to the beaſt, and the creeping thing, &c. Gods ſpeaking here, ſaith Calvin, is not any uttering of a voice, but his decreeing: yet if he be underſtood, as uttering this his decree, by voice to Noah, it is no more, then is ſoon after expreſſed, when he ſpeaketh unto him. But how can God juſtly judge the creatures thus, who had not offended? To this Ambroſe anſwereth, The creatures were made for mans uſe, and therefore he being taken away, there was no further uſe of them, he was as a Captaine of an Army, who being cut off, all his Army periſheth, and as the head of a body, which being cut off, all the members periſh together, which is not ſo, if an hand be cut off, or a foot. And moreover, ſo great a deſtruction is brought upon theſe creatures to ſhew the indignation of the Lord againſt ſin the more, as when all the living things in Amaleck were appointed to the Sword, as well as the men: ſo Calvin.

Ambroſ. lib. de Arc. & Noe. c. 10. Pſal. 8.

Calvin.

Verſe 8, 9.

But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord. 9. Theſe are the generations of Noah. He was a juſt man and perfect, &c. Amongſt all the men in the world, there being but one juſt, he is not forgotten, when a common deſtruction is ſent, which maketh for our comfort, if one man be alone for vertue. For theſe are the generations of Noah; one readeth it, theſe are the geſts of Noah, or the things, that befell him, for he ſaith, ſome Hebrews ſay, that the words do thus ſignifie, yet he confeſſeth, that ſome being diſpleaſed with this, render it, theſe are the generations, for ſo the word is uſed, (hap. 5. 1. Ch. 10. 1. Ch. 37. 1. Touching Noahs juſtice and perfection, how it is to be underſtood, may be gathered from that, which hath been ſaid, Luke 1. touching Zachary, and Elizabeth. In that Moſes having ſaid, Theſe are the generations of Noah, immediately addeth, Noah was a juſt man, &c. Chryſoſtome noteth, that the chief nobility is in vertue, becauſe Moſes being about to ſet forth the moſt famous man then in the World, ſaith nothing, to adde glory to him, of his Anceſtours, but only of his vertues. But for theſe words, in his generations, divers expound them diverſly: Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Noah was perfect in his generation, not as the Citizens in immortality, but as a man can be perfect in this World, and Jerome likewiſe, as the nature of man here is capable of perfection, and not by perfection conſummated. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that he was perfect in compariſon of others then living, ſo that this is added for his further commendation, that, thoſe times being ſo corrupt, he alone yet continued

Marlorat.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 23. in Gen.

Aug. lib. 15. de Civit. Dei, c. 26. Hieronymus. Chryſoſtom.

nued a just man, not being carryed away, by the common streame, and to this Calvin seemeth to subscribe. Lyranus either in comparison of the men of those times, but not if he be compared with the famous men, that lived afterwards, as Abraham, Jacob, Moses, &c. or in comparison of all his progenitors Sheth, Enos, and Henoch himselfe, all which he excelled. It seemeth to me, that Moses had none other meaning in inserting these words, but as if he had said, now that I am about to declare the generations of Noah, I would have this understood by the way, that he was a just & perfect man, for which cause it was, that the Lord did beare him so great a favour as was spoken, *v.*8. For, These, saith he, are the generations of Noah, and then interlacing, as it were, by a Parenthesis, Noah was a just man in his generations, he addeth, which was the thing first intended to be set forth, Noah begat three Sonnes, &c. Or that in these degenerating times, wherein other mens children that were of Seths posterity, were grown licentious to marry with and to follow the corrupt manners of the daughters of Cain, he yet kept his family in that good order, so perfect a good man was he, as that his sonnes did not so, but through their Fathers care, were kept within their own tribe, and so from being polluted with others. For that by his generations are not meant others of those times, is plaine, because Shem, Ham and Japhet only were his generations at this time, and not other men, and by the same reason the second of Lyranus is overthrowne, seeing that by his generations Moses meant not his progenitours, but his children. And the first of Lyranus is most improbable: for Noah doubtlesse was comparable to any of the best of after times: And therefore Ferus noteth him to be more praised then any other, a preparation being first made, and then he being said to be just, perfect, and to have walked before God. And lastly, for that of Augustine, howsoever it is bent to mainteine a true tenet in Divinity, yet because so it would rather have been said, in this generation, and not in his, I cannot think that to be the meaning of Moses here. Noah begat three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, of these three see before, Gen. 5. 32. v. 11. The Earth also was corrupt before God, &c. Moses not content to tell of the malice of men being great, and their imaginations evill, repeateth the same here in other words againe, and againe, v. 1. which as Hugo de Sancto Victore noteth, is done to set forth the greatnesse of mans sinne, and to shew, how justly God punished him therefore, so likewise Oecolampadius, and others. And it is to be noted here, that he saith not, as before, the malice of men was great, but varying the Phrase, the Earth was corrupt, by the sinnes and horrible wickednesses of men, the very earth, upon which they lived, was tainted, this becoming, as it were, a filthy and stinking thing, thus Musculus, and before him Lyranus, who from hence gathereth, that in these words their fleshly lusts are chiefly taxed, whereby they were carried like beasts to whoredoms, Sodometries and Buggeries, and all things to satisfie their filthy pleasures. And suitable to this, there is an old relation taken by one out of Methodius, that the children of Cain did then abuse their Brothers wives, and women did commonly prostitute themselves to men, and that men with men did commit filthinesse. And for this Exposition maketh that of Levit. 18. 25. Where after the forbidding of such sinnes as these, it is added, for in all these the Nations are corrupted, and the Earth is corrupted, yet some others by the Earth here understand the Inhabitants of the Earth by a Synechdoche, the Continent being put for the content, man being called thus to shew his baseneſse the more, for that he was wholly intent to earthly things, and did not in any thing, as one made after Gods Image, and that Moses meant men of the earth by the earth appeareth, v. 12. where he thus explaineth himselfe: And God looked upon the Earth, and behold it was corrupt, for all flesh had corrupted his way upon earth: Thus Chrysostome and after him Oecolampadius, Vatablus, &c. But I preferre the former, as being sufficiently confirmed, and aggravating mens sinnes the more, which doubtlesse is the scope of the Holy Ghost here. Before God, this is added, because howsoever

Lyranus.

Verse 10.

Hugo de Sancto Victore.
Oecolampadius.

Musculus.
Lyranus.

Magist. Eccl. histor. cap. 31.

Vatablus.
Oecolampad.

Chrysostom.

ſoever men thought of no ſuch thing, yet God accounted of the earth, as made filthy by this meanes, thus Luther and Muſculus alſo. They thought Noah a fool for his ſtrict life, and this world for the pleaſures, which they had herein ſeemed to them moſt excellent, yea to be turned into a very Paradiſe, but before God it was, as a moſt ſtinking ſinke of ſin. Vatablus ſaith, that the long ſuffering of God is hereby ſet forth. Toſtatus, that they ſinned openly, as being paſt all ſhame in practiſing filthineſſe, ſome others, knowing that God beheld them. I reſt in the firſt, as moſt genuine. And was filled with iniquity, the word tranſlated iniquity, is, חמס ſignifying violence, and rapine, and oppreſſion, and ſo fitly expreſſeth their other ſins.

Luther. Muſculus. Vatablus. Toſtatus.

Verſe 14. Make thee an Arke of Gopher-wood, roomes ſhalt thou make in the Arke, and pitch it within and without with pitch. When the Lord provoked by the wickedneſſe of men had a purpoſe to deſtroy the world, he for the ſpeciall favour, which he bare to Noah, telleth him firſt thereof, ſaying, An end is come of all fleſh, Verſ. 13. that is, of all mankinde, and other things living upon earth, which ſhall be deſtroyed, thou and thy wife and children only being excepted, as is afterwards expreſſed, Verſe 17. 18. I will deſtroy them with the earth, thus Vatablus readeth it, becauſe the earth alſo vvas then ſpoiled, the trees, plants, & buildings thereupon being demoliſhed, and the earth all over ſludded with the waters, and thus the word את properly ſignifieth, but it is read by ſome alſo, of the earth, as if it vvere ſpoken by מן, and aceording to this the Lord afterwards explaineth himſelfe, Verſe 17.

Verſe 14. Verſe 13. Vatablus. Oecolampadius.

Now for the Arke here appointed to be made; It may firſt trouble the reader to think, hovv ſuch a ſtructure, as is here deſcribed, could be fit to go upright upon the vvaters: for it vvas not made, as a Ship, narrovv below, and then ſvvelling out vvith hallovved boards, and broad at the top, with Maſts, Sayles, and Cables, but broad at the bottom, joyned together to a great height, being all cloſe at the top, for vvhich cauſe it is not called a Ship, but an Arke, or great Cheſt, as it vvere, the faſhion of vvhich it did more reſemble. And thus it vvas neceſſary that it ſhould be made to contein the creatures, and to defend them from the vvaters that fell night and day fourty dayes together in ſo great abundance. Hovv could ſuch a building, as this vvithout a Pilot, or meanes to guide it, move ſafely upon the vvaters amidſt a thouſand dangers? I anſvver; God vvas the Pilot of this Veſſell, and he continually guided it by the hand of his providence, that it was neither turned over by the violence of the waves, nor ran againſt any rocke to ſhatter it: for when hee appointeth the making, and taketh the care of any thing, wee ought not to conſider, how it may bee ſafe, by humane reaſon, but refer all to the Divine providence, thus Chryſoſtome. And Auguſtine ſaith, being made of boards framed in a right line, no art of man could have guided it upright, but onely Gods providence, that it might not ſuffer ſhipwracke. He then made the waters calme, although the winde blew, and kept the Arke from all violent motion, providing, that it might onely move gently to and fro during all the time, till it ſtood firme upon the earth again. But what wood was this Gopher, whereof the Arke was made? It ſignifieth, as Jerome noteth Bitumen, ſlime or pitch, wherefore he tranſlateth it, ex ligno bituminato, of wood vvith pitch laid on, and Ambroſe ſaith, that wood onely is named here, but not what kinde of wood. The vulgar Latine rendereth it ex lignis levigatis. And certain it is, that no ſuch wood is any where again ſpoken of, but here onely, and therefore Aben-Ezra ſaith, it was ſome light wood fit to ſwim upon the waters, but uncertain, of what kind; wood it was then, of which the Arke was made, pitched within and without, as is after expreſſed, but for the kinde, whatſoever is ſaid, is but conjecturall, as that it was Boxe, according to ſome, Firre according to others, or Cypreſſe, or Cedar according to others. It was doubtles the moſt durable and impenetrable wood that was, the pitching of it alſo conducing much to the durance thereof, this being, as Rabanus ſaith, a moſt firme kinde of glue, the vertue whereof Queſt. 1. Chryſoſt. hom. 25 in Gen. Auguſt. lib. 15. de Civit. Dei, c. 27.

Queſt. 2. Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. in Gen. Ambroſ. lib. de Noah & Arca. Aben-Ezra.

it is laid, can neither be eaten vvith vvormes, nor be diſſolved vvith the heat of the Sun, the blovvings of the vvind, or vvith the violence of the vvaters. And of ſo long continuance vvas Noahs Ark, that Joſephus ſaith, ſome parts of it remained, till his time; vvhich vvas above 2000 yeares. Rabanus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. Queſt. 3.

Roomes ſhalt thou make in the Ark, hovv great and hovv many theſe vvere, is not ſet dovvn; in the Hebrevv it is, neſts ſhalt thou make, by ſome tranſlated, little manſions, ſo that there vvere doubtleſſe very many to put the divers creatures into, and to lay in food for them.

The length of it ſhall be 300 Cubits, the breadth 50, and the height 30. How much the Cubit here ſpoken of is, becauſe divers Cubits are mentioned amongſt Writers, it is not agreed. For there is a common Cubit, and an holy Cubit, the common of a foot and halfe, which is the ſpace betwixt the Elbow and the end of the middle finger, the holy, an hand-breadth more, as the Hebrews commonly hold, and is expreſly taught, Ezech. 43.13. Some contend, that the ſacred Cubit is as much as a common Cubit, and 3 quarters more, becauſe the brazen Sea made by Solomon, being but 10 Cubits broad, 5 Cubits deep, and 30 Cubits the circumference, could conteine 3000 Bathes, which cannot be, unleſſe the Cubit be yielded to be ſo great, as hath been ſaid, as they prove by Mathematicall reaſons. But theſe reaſons are ſo farre fetcht, and tedious to ſet down, and the holy Scripture ſo plainly againſt this aſſertion, that I will ſpare this labour and leave that opinion to the Authors thereof. Now, beſides the two ſorts of Cubits already ſpoken of, there is another mentioned by Origen called a Geometricall Cubit; whereby he ſaith, that our Anceſtours held, that the Ark was meaſured, which is ſix times as great, as the common Cubit, and hereby he defendeth this Hiſtory, againſt the calumnies of Apelles, the Scholler of Marcion the Heretick, who derided it, as a feigned Fable, becauſe if Noahs Ark were but 300 Cubits long, and 30 Cubits high, and 50 wide, it could not poſſibly hold all the kinds of creatures, two or three Elephants alone being ſufficient to fill up the third part of it, and to this Auguſtine ſeemeth to ſubſcribe. lib. 15. de Civit. cap. ult. But Calvin and others, for ſo much as Moſes wrote all things plainly, as having to do with a rude and plaine people, deny, that by the Cubits here ſpoken of, he meant any ſuch: for ſo he ſhould have told them of things, that they being illiterate, could not conceive of. Moreover, the Geometricians ſpeak nothing in all their Writings of any ſuch Cubit; and Laſtly, there is no reaſon, but if the Cubit, whereby the Ark was meaſured, was of that extraordinary length, other things, that are afterwards ſpoken of by Moſes, and deſcribed by Cubit-meaſure, ſhould be underſtood proportionably in their dimenſions. But this is abſurd, as will appeare by inſtancing in one particular, viz. an Altar appointed to be made 3 Cubits high: for take this of Cubits, as they are commonly underſtood, and the height will be but reaſonable, to which a man might reach ſtanding upon the ground, viz. 4 foot and an halfe, but underſtand theſe Geometricall Cubits hereby, and it will be unreaſonable, viz. 27 foot high, to aſcend up to which they muſt neceſſarily have many ſtaires, and yet the Lord taketh expreſſe order, that his Altar be not aſcended to by ſtaires. The Cubits common and ſacred then only remaine, and of theſe, we have reaſon rather to underſtand the ſacred, then the other, whereof ſix made ſeven of the common, whereunto if we adde, that man was then of a greater ſtature by farre then now, and ſo every lineament of his body larger, we may eaſily conceive, that thoſe Cubits were much greater then ours, happily every one being as long, as one and an halfe of ours at this day, and ſo if the hand-breadth more, which is the ſixt part of a Cubit, according to Ezechiels direction before ſpoken of, be added, every ſix will make ſeven of theſe, that is, of ours ten and an half, and ſo 300 in length 525. 50 in breadth 78 and an halfe, and 30 in height 52 and an halfe, which is, if we reckon by the foot, 787 and an halfe long, 117 broad, and 78 high, if by the rod, 51 rods and 12 foot long, 7 rods and a foot and an half broad,

Verſe 15.

2 Chron. 4.

Origen hom. 2. in Gen. 6.

Calvin.

Exod. 27.

Exod. 20. 26.

broad, &c. Which is as much as an whole row of houſes ſtanding upon two Acres and a Rood of ground in the length extended 51 rods, which if it be conſidered with the breadth as much as the breadth of ſix houſes, and the height as of three, we may eaſily conceive it to have been of wonderfull great capacity, and able to hold the number ſpoken of of all ſorts of earthly creatures, and food for them. But yet I do not ſo go about to find out a reaſon, why this Ark could contein ſo much, as if at an ordinary time, ſuch numbers of creatures being congregated together by men upon their own heads, could be put into and preſerved an whole yeare together in the like Continent: for although I doubt not, but there was room enough to hold them all, yet the providence of God was wonderfull, whereby they were thus preſerved in ſuch pent up roomes, and fed all that vvhile vvith the little proviſion laid in for them, he that vvould have it thus done, vvas able to ſave all alive, thus put into the Ark, and therefore in vvhatſoever vve cannot find full ſatisfaction in humane reaſon, vve muſt look to him, vvho is Almighty, and ſo vve ſhall have no cauſe of further doubting.

Queſt. 4. But yet it may be further queſtioned, how Noah with his three Sons only could build ſo great an Ark? Anſw. A man is not only ſaid to build an houſe, when he doth it with his own hands, but when he imployeth others to build it, and ſo it is moſt probable, that Noah built the Ark, uſing many other work-men about it for wages, which he gave unto them. And they did aptly reſemble ſuch Preachers of the Word, as are of wicked lives, they build the Ark, wherein others are ſaved, but yet are deſtroyed themſelves.

Nota.

Verſe 16. A window thou ſhalt make in the Arke, and in a Cubit thou ſhalt finiſh it above, &c. Becauſe it was neceſſary, that there ſhould be ſome light in the Arke, a Window is here appointed to be made above in the higheſt part thereof one Cubit long, but how broad, it is not ſet down: ſome gueſſe at the ſixt part of a Cubit, but that would have been too narrow, wherefore ſeeing a Cubit only is ſpoken of, as the meaſure thereof, I think rather, that it was a Cubit ſquare. But we read afterwards of this Window, as ſhut all the time of the floud, but then vvhen it ceaſed, firſt opened, vvhereby it may ſeeme, and ſome have gathered hereupon, that this Windovv vvas not for light during the time of the floud, but then vvas continually ſhut and pitched as other parts of the Arke vvere, giving no light to thoſe vvithin, but at the ceſſation of the floud it ſerved to put out the fovvles at. But this is overthrovvne by the very vvord uſed, vvhich is צהר light, by Symmachus tranſlated therefore διαφανὲς tranſparent. And as for the keeping of it ſhut, it vvas doubtleſſe vvith ſome glaſſy ſubſtance, through vvhich the light might come, but not any vvater vvhich vvas taken dovvn vvhen the vvaters vvere abated, and the Raven vvas ſent out. Some think, that there vvere many lights or vvindovves, but that is contrary to the expreſſe text, ſome, as the Hebrevves, that it vvas no vvindovv, but ſome great Carbuncle, vvhich gave a light all over the roome vvhere it vvas, but this is confuted, becauſe it is aftervvards ſaid to have been opened. And the door of the Ark in the ſide, that is, as is moſt probable next to the ground, for the more commodious entring in of all the creatures, of vvhat height this vvas, is not deſcribed, but ſome think it to have been five Cubits. With lower, ſecond and third ſtories ſhalt thou make it. Thus the Hebrevv verily hath both theſe and the vvords going before; but the vulgar Latine, Oſtium arcæ pones ex latere deorſum, cœnacula & triſtegia facies in ea: the vvord lovver being by this referred to the door of the Ark, but the vvord (third) rendred triſtegia, by vvhich is meant, that theſe ſtories vvere three, maketh the ſenſe all one. The partition of the Arke then in generall vvas into three, one above another, and ſo each one vvas 10 Cubits high, 300 long, and 50 broad, and in the lovveſt it is ſuppoſed by ſome, that the terreſtrial creatures were placed, viz. Beaſts and creeping things, in the higheſt man and aereall creatures, that is, the fowles, in the middlemoſt the food, which ſerved for them all. The Septuagint followed by Origen and Auguſtine and others have have it, as Auguſtine readeth the vvords, bicamerata, & tricamerata facies eam, that is, as the ſame Auguſtine expoundeth it, the lower room being all one, the ſecond was again divided into two, and the third into three, being thus made into ſix, in all. Philo the Jew, and Joſephus ſay, that there vvere four ſtories in the Arke. But theſe things are uncertain, as not being grounded upon the relation of Moſes. Yet happily there was one roome lower then any of theſe, at the baſis of the Arke, for the excrements of all the creatures to fall into, as Origen ſaith, which is not ſpoken of here, but underſtood, the three ſtories onely, which are properly higher roomes, being mentioned. And as for partitions in each roome, it is not to be doubted, but there were divers, whereof it was alſo ſpoken before.

Gen. 8. 6. Teſtatur.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt. 6. Philo lib. de vita Moſis Ioſ. Antiqu. l. 1.

For thou ſhalt make roomes, or neſts in the Arke, ſaith the Lord, ſpeaking by a word, intimating many little roomes. Verſe 14.

Touching the reſidue of this Chapter, wherein Noah is animated to this work of the Ark, the Lord telling him of the floud, which he purpoſed to bring upon all the World, to deſtroy every living thing upon the earth, in which was the breath of life, but for himſelfe and his family, and ſome of all ſorts of the creatures, which might be for their uſe, and to repleniſh the World againe, that he would certainly by the means of the Ark preſerve them alive; whereunto Noah gave ſuch heed, that he did in all things as the Lord commanded, this I ſay, is all ſo plaine and eaſie to be underſtood, that I ſhall not need to ſpend time in the explanation thereof. Only whereas two of every kind are here ſpoken of, this number for the cleane creatures is inlarged in the next Chapter, ſeven being appointed to be brought into the Ark, and two of the uncleane. And it is moſt remarkable, that Noah ſhould thus readily obey the Lord in this thing, which when he ſhould goe about, he might juſtly feare the ſcoffes and mocks of the wicked World, and not only ſo, but violence to be offered to him, they being ſo barbarous and bloudy, as they were. For what could he expect, that they ſhould ſay unto him, when he ſhould threaten them with a floud, and goe about to make an Ark to ſave himſelfe and his, but we will now kill thee and thine, who imagineſt that thou ſhalt be ſaved alive alone, when all we periſh, and then we ſhall ſee, what will become of this thy preparation and threatning, as ſometime Joſephs Brethren ſaid of him; Loe, here cometh this Dreamer, let us kill him now, and ſee then what ſhall become of his dreames? And it is not to be doubted, but that by a ſingular providence of God they vvere held all that time from doing him miſchiefe.

Verſe 17,18, 19,20,21,22.

Note.

Now beſides the literall ſenſe hitherto given of the Arke, and the making thereof, there is herein a great myſtery, at vvhich Saint Peter pointeth, making the Arke a figure of the Church. For hereupon both Auguſtine and Origen, and Ambroſe and other ancients have held, that whilſt we conſider the Hiſtory of the making of the Arke, we do it too ſlightly, unleſſe vve pierce into the myſtery alſo. Yet a man, I grant, upon this ground may exceed by making the Arke figurative too many vvaies, as by dravving it into a figure of mans body, vvhich is as 300 in length, to 50 in breadth, that is, ſix times as long as broad, and as 300 in length, to 30 in height, that is, ten times as long as high, if the height be counted of a man lying upon his back, from back to belly: for this, although it be Auguſtines and Ambroſes, vvho proſecute this figure at large in the roomes, the ſtories, the doore, the windovv, &c. is both far fetcht and without edification to the hearer. Again, a man may exceed, by drawing it to be a figure of the ſoul, as Hugo de Sancto Victore doth and Origen, making the dimenſions of height, breadth and length, Hope, which is lifted up to heaven, Charity, which is extended to the South by loving friends, and to the North by loving enemies, and Faith believing all things which God hath done or will do from the beginning of the world to the end of the ſame, and the firme wood, whereof it was made, the Writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Noah in the Arke, the intellectuall faculty and his ſonnes, right counſells and juſt

1 Pet 3.19.

Hugo de Sancto Victor. Allegor. in Gen.

desires coming here-from, the earthly creatures, works about earthly things, the fowles of the heaven, cogitations heavenly, &c. But leaving these, as witty speculations, rather then profitable mysticall expositions, the mystery, or allegory, which we may certainly resolve upon, is, that by the Arke is set forth the Church. Noah signifying rest, figureth out Christ, who giveth rest unto our soules, and as Noah buildeth the Arke, so Christ beginneth, and setteth Prophets, Apostles, Doctours and Pastours to perfect the building of his body, which is the Church: Again, as the Arke is made of most durable wood, so the Church endureth most constantly all adversities. 3 As Pitch was used about the Arke to joyne and to glue the parts of it together, so by most ardent love the members of the Church are joyned together at all times. 4 As the Arke was pitched within and without, so the faithfull have not onely good workes externally, but purity and holinesse within. 5 As the Arke was more long then broad, and more broad then high, so the company of the faithfull, or that professe the faith of Christ, are of a farre greater extent in their faith, which is longitude, then in their love and charity, which is latitude, and yet in their love of greater extent, then in their heavenly contemplation, which is altitude, becaus even amongst the good & charitable, there are but few yet, that wholly abdicate the world, delighting in nothing, but heavenly meditations. 6 As the Arke was distinguished by stories and by divers roomes, some higher and some lower, greater and lesser, so in the Church there is great difference betwixt men, some being the common sort, & some lifted up to higher dignity, some rich and great, & some poor and little. 7 As there was in the Ark but one door, and one window, so the only door of the Church is Christ, and he and his Truth is the onely Light of us all. 8 As all sorts of creatures came into the Arke, both clean and unclean, so all sorts, both good and bad are in the Church. 9 As the clean creatures come in by sevens, so the godly are united together in greater numbers, whereas amongst the wicked love is amongst fewer onely, and onely by reason of intim acquaintance, or the tye of bands of consanguinity or affinity, and the manifold graces of the Spirit knitting their hearts thus together in love, is also intimated hereby. 10 As in the Arke food was laid up for all sorts of creatures, so in the Church, there is variety of food for the soul by the Word and Sacraments. Lastly, as all in the Arke were saved alive, although they were continually tossed about upon the waters, but out of the Arke all perished: so out of the Church there is no salvation, they are daily added unto the Church, that shall be saved, but in this world, they are (as it were) in a sea of troubles and miseries, never resting, till they come to the mountain of God, as the Arke rested not, till upon the mountains of Ararat. And all this have I gathered out of Augustine, Origen, Gregory, Ambrose, and Rupertus.

Ephes. 4. 12.

Acts 2. 47. August. contra Faustum c. 14. Gregor. hom. 22 in Ezech. Ambrose. Origen. hom. 2. in Gen. 6. Rupert. lib. 4. in Gen.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 2. OF every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the male and his female, and of Verse 2, 3. beasts, that are not clean by two, the male and his female, 3. The fowles also of the aire by sevens, &c.

The Arke being now ready, seven dayes before the floud, as is expressed, Verse 4. Noah is commanded to enter with his wife and sonnes and their wives, verse 1. and to take in to him of other creatures a certain number, as is here set forth. But the number spoken of before, Ch. 6. 19. doth not agree, becaus theretwo are mentioned of every kind, but here sevens of the clean beasts. This may easily be resolved thus, the Lord there only giveth order in generall, making no distinction betwixt the clean and unclean, but now coming to a more particular direction, he increaseth the number of clean beasts and fowls, as which should be of more use, appointing them to come in by sevens, but yet holding to his first of bringing them in by couples, male & femal, that in no kind kinde any might be alone, but for one couple of the unclean, he would have ſeven couples of the clean come in. Or happily Moſes having omitted there to ſet down this diſtinction, now ſetteth it dovvn and the ſeverall numbers of both ſorts accordingly. But whereas I expound the ſevens of ſeven couples, it is to be underſtood, that in the Hebrew the words are ſeven and ſeven, and two and two. Now I confeſſe, that Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Eucherius and many more, both old and new Writers will have but ſeven of a kinde meant in all, three couples to breed, and one, a male for ſacrifice, as if it had been ſaid, ſeven of one kinde of clean beaſts after another, as of the unclean, two after two: But this is contrary to the whole courſe of the Hiſtory, wherein ſtill the male is ſpoken of together with the female, as if the Lord would not have any to come in alone, ſo that it is but a meer conjecture, that of every clean kind there was one od beaſt a male alone brought in beſides the couples. And whereas it is ſaid, that this vvas for ſacrifice, one of a kinde was not ſufficient for this purpoſe, or elſe it muſt be thought, that Noah ſacrificed very ſparingly at the firſt, and neglected ſome times of ſacrificing, whereas he being ſet as a paterne to all others, it is rather to be thought, that God would furniſh him ſo, as that he ſhould have no want, vvhen he was once come forth of the Arke againe, but be ſufficiently ſupplied for ſacrificing, eſpecially it being as eaſie with the Lord to preſerve many beaſts, as fevv, wherefore there are ſome others, as Juſtine Martyr, Origen, Andreas, Carthuſian. and Oleaſter, who expound ſeven and ſeven of ſeven couples, whereof ſome ſhould ſerve to breed of, and ſome for ſacrifice, and for man to feed upon, it being immediately after the floud allowed to man to eat the fleſh of beaſts, which how he ſhould begin to do ſo ſoone, unleſſe there were many of them, I cannot ſee. There were then preſerved of the uncleane, two of each kind, and of the cleane 14. that there might be ſome of the leaſt uſefull for the glory of the Creatour, and of thoſe that annoy man for his caſtigation, none yet being only hurtfull, but ſome way profitable unto man, and of the moſt uſefull, many to oblige man to the greater thankfulneſs to God for having this ſingular care of him, for more of the profitable beaſts, and fewer of the unprofitable are preſerved: ſo Ferus. But if there were ſo many of the cleane and of fowles and two of all kinds; a queſtion may be made, to what a number they might all amount, and how the Ark could hold them? Anſw. Touching the Fowles, although he ſpeaketh only of ſevens, yet it is not to be thought, that of all kinds indifferently ſo many were to come in, but of the cleane only, the mentioning of the couples of the uncleane being for brevities ſake omitted, as neceſſarily underſtood, by the expreſſion touching the beaſts made before. And for the Arks being ſufficient to conteine them in the higheſt ſtory, where man lived, conſidering that they filled not much roome, becauſe their bodies were little, no man needeth to queſtion. For the beaſts and creeping things ſuppoſed to have been put in the loweſt ſtory, they who have with all diligence written of their number ſpeak of 131. whereof there are 34 of greater bodies which live upon Graſſe, and Plants, and ſuch like things; 1 the Elephant, 2 the Vnicorne, 3 the Rhinoceros, 4 the Monoceros, 5 Bubalus, 6 Bos, 7 Cervus, 8 Aſinus, 9 Onager, 10 Vrſus, 12 Aper, 13 Hippopotamus, 14 Pegaſus, 15 Bos Indicus, 16 Camelus Arabicus, 17 Camelus Bactrianus, 18 Dromedarius, 19 Camelopardalis, 20 Vrus, 21 Equus ferus, 22 Aſinus ferus, 23 Biſons, 24 Bonaſus, 25 Onyx, 26 Tarandus, 27 Struthiocamelus, 28 Tragelaphus, 29 Hyppelaphus, 30 Hyppardium, 31 Aſinus Vnicornis, 32 Muſio, 33 Magnus, 34 Corgobado in nova Hiſpania. Of leſſer bodies, 37. 1 Herinacius, 2 Hiſtrix, 3. 4 Cuniculus ferus & domeſticus, 5 Melis, 6 Glis 7 Scinlus, 8 Machlis, 9 Alce, 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. Ovium genera, 15 Mus, 16 Lepſus, 17 Lepus candidus, 18 Daſypus another kind of Hare, 19 Simia, 20 Cœbus, 21, Cynocephalus, 22 Cercopithecus, 23 Alopecopithecon, 24 Chiurca, 25 Tato, 26 Capra domeſtica, 27 Capra fera, 28 Rupicarpa

Muſculus.

Aug. lib 15. de civit. Dei c. 27. Ambroſ. de Noah & Arca. Chryſ. Theod. Veſe 16.

Juſtin. Martyr. quæſt. 43. orthodox. Origen. hom. 2. in Gen. 6. Andreas, &c. Gen. 9.

Note.

Queſt The number of the creatures preſerved.

Beaſts of great bodies.

Beaſts of leſſe bodies.

picarpa, 29 Ibex, 30 Oryx, 31 Dama, 32 Pigargus, 33 Strepſiceros 34 Animal Varium ſine nomine à Cardano deſcriptum 35 Marmota, 36 Animal in Japonia cani ſimile, 37 Aiotocheli.

Beaſts that eat fleſh.

Of Beaſts that eat fleſh 35. 1 Leo 2 Pardus 3 Draco 4 Panthera 5 Tygris 6 Lupus 7 Lupus Canarius 8 Lupus Cervarius 9 Lynx 10 Sphinx 11 Hyena 12 Lycaon 13 Vulpes 14 Muſtela 15 Felis 16 Canis 17 Vitulus Marinus 18 Crocodilus 19 Leocrocuta 20 Eale 21 Serpens Baa 22 Mantichora 23 Taurus Cornimobilis 24 Chaus 25 Cephus 26 Crocuta 27 Axis 28 Viverra 29 Icneumon 30 Roſomacha 31 Latax 32 Tibris 33 Satherium 34 Satyrium 35 Lutra. Of creeping things 25. 1 Anguis 2 Aſpis 3 Vipera 4 Baſiliſcus 5 Lacertus viridis 6 Lacertus minutior 7 Stellio 8 Tarantula 9 Cameleon 10 Salamandra 11 Scytale 12 Ceraſtes 13 Amphisbæna 14 Jaculi 15 Dypſas 16 Hypnale 17 Hemorrhois 18 Præſter 19 Seps 20 Ammodites 21 Cenchris 22 Elephantia 23 Cherſidras 24 Chamedracon 25 Hydra. Now for theſe creeping things, they being all uncleane came in but in 25 couples, 50 in the whole number, and for the moſt part being ſmall of body might be conteined in a roome of 6 Cubits broad and fifty long, which was but the fiftieth part of the Ark. Touching the beaſts, that eat fleſh, they being alſo all, as I take it, uncleane, were but 70, neither were they one with another ſo great as an Heifer of two years old, but becauſe they could not well be kept together, allow a roome of 4 Cubits ſquare to every couple, 35 roomes in all, and only two fifty parts more of the Ark will be taken up. Then come we to the 37 kinds of thoſe that eat Graſſe of leſſer bodies, and we ſhall ſcarce find any cleane, but the two ſorts of Goats, and the 4 ſorts of Sheep, which being taken out of the number, there remaine 31 couples, unto which if we allow a roome of 6 Cubits broad, and fifty long, it will be enough and ſo a fourth part of the Ark being divided in the lower roome into fifty is ſupplyed. Touching the Goats and Sheep, there being of each kind 14, were 74, unto which; becauſe they are greater, then moſt of the other, allow twice ſo much roome, that is, two fifty parts, and ſo ſix of fifty are ſupplied. Laſtly, for the beaſts of great bodies, there are but three kinds cleane, as I conceive, the two ſorts of Oxen, and the Bubalus of each of which, if ſeven couples were taken in, they were 42, and ſo to be conteined in two fiftieth parts more. Then of the 31 remaining, allow for a couple of Elephants alone, 2 fiftieth parts, and yet there will remaine 4 parts of fifty ſtill for the other 30 kinds. Now although divers of them be of great bodies, yet none of them is any way comparable to an Elephant, but two couples might well be in halfe the roome of the Elephants one with another, and ſo only 15 parts more will be ſupplyed, and thus halfe of this vaſt roome will ſtill remaine, ſo that if there were other kinds, which we know not, and many more of theſe were cleane, yet there was room ſufficient to conteine them all, and for Racks, and Mangers, and other receptacles, to put their meat into, and to paſſe and repaſſe amongſt them for ſuch, as tended them. All which I have ſet down to ſtop the mouths of ſuch, as impugne this Hiſtory, as if it could not be true, but fabulous; becauſe they cannot conceive, how ſo many creatures could be conteined in this Ark, and fed an whole yeare together. But now ſeeing ſome reaſon hereof, let all men reſt reſolved touching the truth of that, which is here related, but for the beaſts that were cleane, they are but 10. Deut. 14. 4, 5. and ſo the Rabbies ſay, there were but 10 ſorts in all the World. And ſo I come to another quære, how Noah could gather all theſe creatures together, ſome of them being wild, and ſome fierce and ſavage, and many living in places farre remote in divers parts of the World? Anſw. The Lord, vvho commanded him to take them into the Ark vvith him, as he is all-ſufficient, ſo doubtleſſe he by his all-commanding povver brought them all together to Noah vvithout his ſeeking for the time appeaſing the fierceneſſe of the nature of thoſe, that vvere ſavage, and vvorking ſo, that they voluntarily ſubmitted themſelves to his ordering, and this is plainly intimated Creeping things.

Levit. 11.

Queſt. The creatures come to Noah.

timated, v. 7, 8, 9. in that Noah is ſaid firſt to have gone in, and then that the creatures vvent in unto him. Some yet have thought, that vvhen the floud began, they being forced hereby gathered about the Ark, and ſo vvere by Noah taken in, but becauſe this going in is expreſly ſpoken of, as done 7 dayes before the beginning of the floud, that opinion cannot ſtand.

Queſt. Creatures unclean how.

But one queſtion ſtill remaineth here, how any of the creatures came to be uncleane, ſeeing they were all at the firſt made very good? and the law of diſtinguiſhing betwixt them was not yet given, but long after, Levit. 11. To this it may be anſwered, that although no ſuch Law hath been hitherto expreſſed, yet as that of ſacrificing and offering both beaſts, and the fruits of the earth unto God, concerning which there hath neither hitherto been any expreſſe Law, was revealed to Adam by God, ſo certainly this of diſtinguiſhing betwixt the creatures was taught him by God, and by a long continued cuſtome was now ſo eſtabliſhed, that Noah knew readily, vvhen the Lord directed him about the taking in of beaſts clean and unclean, vvhich vvere of the one ſort, and vvhich of the other; upon this Chryſoſtome toucheth, but vvithall he ſaith, that Noah knevv by the inſtinct of nature, vvhich creatures vvere more ſvveet and vvholſome for food, and vvhich leſſe, and that hereupon he might decline the one and chooſe the other for ſacrifice, vvhich being done divers yeares, ſome uncleanneſſe vvas conceived to be in thoſe, that vvere refuſed by cuſtome, and ſo this diſtinction vvas firſt brought in. So that in themſelves none vvere ſimply uncleane, but comparatively not ſo good, as others for meat, and therefore they did not uſe to offer them up in ſacrifice. For as touching the eating of any of them, they had not hitherto been allovved, but immediately after the floud all are indifferently allovved to be eaten of; till that Lavv of reſtraint from the uncleane, Levit. 11. Some reſolve this queſtion otherwiſe, ſaying that Moſes calleth them clean and unclean; becauſe they were in his time ſo called, by anticipation, and that the Lord named the creatures to Noah, which he ſhould take in by ſevens, and for the reſt, appointed them to come in by couples, but Moſes knowing the firſt ſort to be all of the cleane, ſetteth them forth by this name, and the reſt he calleth uncleane. But the other doth better agree, becauſe the Lord is brought in, ſpeaking of the clean and unclean to Noah, whoſe ſpeech doubtleſſe is verbatim ſet down by Moſes. If any further doubt ariſeth touching thoſe creatures, which live ſometime in the water, and ſometime upon the Land, whether they were not brought into the Ark alſo? Howſoever it be the conjecture of ſome, that they had rooms made for them on the outſide of the Ark, yet there being no ground for this, but contrary to it; becauſe all preſerved by the Ark are ſaid to have come into the Ark, and then to have been ſhut in, I anſwer, that ſuch, as come to Land ſometimes only for delight, were left out, as being able to live in the Waters, but others, which come for neceſſity, were taken in, and had water in the Ark to go into.

Chryſoſt. Hom 24. in Gen.

Gen 9 3.

Theod. quæſt. 1. in Gen.
Beda Hexameron.

Laſtly, a queſtion may be moved about the Phœnix, of which kind Writers ſay, that there was never but one, where this fowle was, when the floud prevailed? for into the Ark no fowles were taken, but by ſevens. Many have ſuſpected that, which is reported of the Phœnix, to be but fabulous, as Pliny, who ſpeaking of it ſaith, that he cannot tell whether it be fabulous, which is ſaid of that moſt noble bird of Arabia called the Phœnix, of the greatneſſe of an Eagle, yellow like Gold about the neck, and of a purple colour, all over the body, only in the Taile, ſome ſky-coloured feathers being intermingled, the head and face being adorned with a plume-like creſt, ſo likewiſe Tacitus and Pomponius Mæla. It is ſaid to live by ſome 500, by ſome 600 yeares, and then to burne it ſelfe with certain ſweet twigs gathered together to aſhes, after which a Worm is again ingendred out of thoſe aſhes, which again becometh another Phœnix. Certain it is, that it hath been ſo ſeldome ſeen, that hence the ſuſpicion hath ariſen, yet Cardanus telleth of a bird in India called Serenda, which doth thus, and Scaliger ſpeaketh

The Phœnix.

Plin. lib. 10. c. 2.

Cardan. lib. 10. de ſubtil.
Scalig. Exerc. 223.

eth of the ſame. And it is well known, that there are in ſome parts of Ireland certaine fowles about the greatneſſe of a Wild-gooſe, called Barnacles, which are bred of Corruption, being firſt wormes in rotten holes of wood, and then growing to a perfect proportion of fowles, ſo falling away and flying, and if ſo, then there may be ſuch a Phœnix, as a figure of the reſurrection of the body, and in this time of the floud, howſoever it was ſuffered to periſh, we may well believe the reſtitution of it againe in ſome ſuch like manner by Gods ſingular providence, becauſe ſuch fowles and other creatures only were taken into the Ark, as were preſerved in their ſpecies by ordinary Generation. For the being of this fowle, Saint Ambroſe was ſo confident, that he ſaith, it was ignorant of carnall copulation and of the ſnares of luſt, and doth riſe out of the own fire againe, &c.

Ambroſ. Pſ.118 Phœnix coitus corpореos ignorat, libidinis illecebras neſcit, & de ſuo rogo ſurgit, avis ſibi ſuperſtes, ipſa ſui hæres corporis, & cineris ſui fœtus.

Verſe. 4

Seven dayes hence I will cauſe it to raine upon the earth, 40 dayes and 40 nights, &c.

There is ſome difference here amongſt Expoſitours, why Noah with the creatures muſt enter into the Ark ſeven dayes, before any raine began. The Hebrews ſay, that Noah ſpent theſe ſeven dayes in mourning for his Grandfather Methuſhalem, who was to periſh by the floud: but it hath been ſhewed before, that he dyed that yeare the firſt moneth, whereas the floud began not, till the ſecond moneth the 17 day, and therefore that conjecture is moſt vain. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, that as there were ſeven dayes ſpent in making the World, and reſting from this work, ſo the Lord having given a long time to the World to repent already, added theſe ſeven dayes more, after that in the ſight of all men Noah was gone into the Ark, before that he would deſtroy it, that yet if it were poſſible, they might be moved to repentance, by remembring him, that in ſeven dayes he made all things, and therefore, that he could as eaſily deſtroy all again, and by having a fear and trembling ſtricken into them, when they ſhould ſee this man of God gone in to ſhelter againſt this time of the Floud. Muſculus ſaith, that the certaine day is ſet for Noahs more aſſurance, and ſome that in this time every thing might be orderly placed in the Ark. But we ſhall not need to labour much about a reaſon of this time given, if we do but conſider, that ſo many ſorts of creatures being to enter, and to be put into the manſions prepared for them, all this could not well be done, but ſundry dayes muſt needs be allowed therefore: yet I miſlike not the reaſon either of Muſculus or Ambroſe, becauſe of the ſame action there may be divers ends.

Hebræi.

Ambroſ. lib. de Noa & Arca, cap. 13.

Muſculus.

Verſe 6.
Verſe 11.

When Noah was ſix hundred yeers old, there was a floud upon the earth, &c. and again, verſe 11. In the ſix hundred yeere of Noahs life, the ſecond moneth, the ſeventeenth day of the moneth, all the fountains of the deep were broken up, and the windowes of heaven were opened. A queſtion is here made, how this yeere of Noahs life is to be underſtood, whether current or compleate, and what time of the yeer this ſecond moneth was? Some think, that the yeer compleat is to be underſtood, and that by the ſecond moneth the ſecond moneth of his yeer 601 is to be underſtood, but a vveak reaſon is yelded hereof, viz. becauſe otherwiſe he being 600 yeers old, when he was firſt warned of the floud, & this falling out in the beginning of his 600 yeer, he ſhould not have had full two moneths warning thereof in all: for although by his 600 yeer we underſtand that year current, yet it is farre from our meaning to underſtand hereby the beginning of that hundreth, but the beginning of the laſt year of that 100 only, ſo that the Jeſuits reaſoning here againſt upon this ground is almoſt vain. By the 600 year of Noahs life then is meant the yeare current, which is alſo proved, becauſe the floud being paſt, which continued one whole year; Noah is ſaid to have been but 601 yeares old, whereas if by the 600 year, the year compleat had been meant, he muſt needs have been 602. Thus alſo Lyranus, Toſtatus, Marloratus, &c.

Pererius.

Gen. 8. 13.
Lyranus.
Marlorat.

For the ſecond moneth of the yeare, it was doubtleſſe the ſecond moneth not of that yeare of Noahs life, but of the yeare according to the common account account, ſo Vatablus, and almoſt all Expoſitours; becauſe although a reſpect be ſtill had to Noahs age, that we might know, how long a time before warning was given of the floud, how long it laſted, and how long he lived before and after, yet in the holy Scriptures the moneths are no where called the ſecond, ſeventh or tenth, or firſt moneth, as here with reference to any mans age, but to the yeare of the World, or elſe we ſhould be uncertaine, at what time of the yeare any thing was done, whereas by this meanes it is manifeſt; yet ſome ſtand for the moneth of Noahs age, but I will not contend further about this. But amongſt thoſe, that agree about the moneth of the yeare meant, in this place, there is notwithſtanding a difference; becauſe ſome begin the yeare in the Spring, and ſome in Autumne. To which latter opinion, I do rather incline, and the reaſon ſee before, Gen. 1. v. 11. And ſo the beginning of the floud muſt needs be in October, which is alſo naturally a rainy time, and ſo the moneths following all the Winter time, and then Noah might be beſt furniſhed, alſo with all kind of proviſion, and the puniſhment was made the greater to thoſe that periſhed, when they had laboured in gathering in all their Harveſt and fruits, at once to have all drowned and themſelves together. I know, that Ambroſe and Rupertus, who are for the Spring, argue likewiſe thereupon, as the fitteſt time for the floud to come, when they looked for a pleaſant time and leaſt feared waters, it being alſo hereby proved to be moſt ſupernaturall. But I reſt in the former.

Vatablus.

Cajetan.
Pererius.

Ambroſe.
Rupertus.

But touching the means of this great floud; The Fountain of the deep broken up, and the windows of Heaven opened, it may be inquired, what theſe are? Anſw. Some by the fountains of the deep underſtand the Sea, which they think now over-flowed the Earth, and might well do ſo, forſomuch as it is higher then the Land: but both this hath been already confuted of the Seas being higher, Ch. 1. 9. and the Phraſe here uſed, the Fountains of the deep were broken up, and not overflowed, make plainly againſt it. Others therefore have thought, that there is a place about the center of the Earth called Tartarus, wherein an huge quantity of water is conteined, from whence the ſprings do ariſe in divers places, the water coming from thence unto them by certaine veines of the earth, but now the paſſages were made much wider and ſo the waters did flow forth from hence in farre greater abundance. Now that there is ſuch a Tartarus is but a conjecture, and it is more probable, that by certain veines & pores in the earth, the waters of the Sea do uſually iſſue and paſſe to ſome places, from whence they ſpring out againe, which places are called Springs or Fountains, and whereas ordinarily theſe veines were narrow and ſtreight, no great quantity of water paſſing through them at once, at this time they were made far wider, and ſo the water came guſhing out moſt abundantly. For the word תהום in Latine Abyſſus, uſed here to ſignifie the deep, is water of that depth, that the bottome cannot be ſounded, and this is the Sea, the originall of moſt Fountaines. Some Fountaines indeed are ingendred of vapours in the ground reſolved into water, but the greateſt part by farre do without doubt come from the Sea. And whereas in Philoſophy this may be argued againſt; becauſe the waters of the Sea lying low cannot ſend forth any higher then themſelves, forſomuch as water is heavy, and heavy things do naturally deſcend and not aſcend upward, this is eaſily anſwered, in that what was now done, was not naturall but miraculous, the Almighty power of the Lord working extraordinarily in this floud. Touching the Windows of Heaven ſaid alſo to be opened, although moſt do underſtand the clouds, hereby made to let raine fall in greater abundance then ever, as if it had come out of windowes, yet according to my ground, before laid in ſpeaking of the waters above the firmament, Gen. 1. 6. the flowing down of thoſe waters happily placed there at the firſt for this purpoſe, muſt needs rather be underſtood. For now all things are almoſt turned into the firſt Chaos, when the waters covered all. So that we may ſee, in what danger we live continually between waters above and waters beneath, which God can bring forth at his pleaſure, to drown and to deſtroy us all, that we may alwayes ſtand in awe and fear to ſin, and to provoke him to wrath againſt us.

Queſt.

Note.

Verſe 12. Chryſoſt. hom. 25. in Gen. And it rained upon the Earth 40 dayes and 40 nights. God would, as Chryſoſtome noteth, have drowned all in a moment, but herein his long-ſuffering is ſtill further declared that one day he bringeth the floud to that paſſe, that ſome are drowned, others ſurviving, and the next day more, &c. that yet ſome of them, if it were poſſible, might be moved with repentance. And Calvin ſaith, that by this means it might both take the deeper impreſſion in Noahs mind, and alſo the wicked World might the better perceive the errour of their incredulity, of which, if they had been drowned upon the ſuddaine, they through the preſent aſtoniſhment could not have beene ſo ſenſible. Touching Noahs knowledge of this number of dayes, and the matter, from whence ſuch abundance of water came, about which ſome move a queſtion, it is eaſily reſolved, that by the intercourſe of the light and darkneſſe he might well obſerve the paſſing away of the time, and God who at the firſt removed the water covering all things, and not annihilating it, could eaſily cover all with water again, bringing the ſame water from all parts for deſtruction, which he had ſometime diverſly diſpoſed of for the greater benefit of the Univerſe. For the words uſed 40 dayes and 40 nights, there is in them an Emphaſis, for the wonderfulneſſe of the thing, as in ſpeaking of the Faſt of Moſes and of Elijah, 40 full dayes being meant, conſiſting of 24 houres a day, and not artificiall dayes, which are but 12. There are ſome, that reaſoning Philoſophically about the floud have held, that it came of naturall cauſes only, as Seneca, who held, that there was a fatall time at the concourſe of certaine watery ſtarres, when the World muſt needs be drowned, and that this happened ſometime before this, and ſhall happen againe. And Beroſus ſaith, that the cauſe of the floud was the concourſe of all the ſtarres, which have divers courſes, in Capricorne, being ſo ſet, as that it may paſſe through their Orbes by a right line, and that when they ſhall in like manner meet in Cancer, the World ſhall be burned. But theſe men being led only by the light of naturall reaſon did certainly erre herein, becauſe not by any fatall neceſſity, but by the will of God, both the World was drowned and ſhall be burnt with fire for ſinne, and as for any more ſuch flouds, it is plainly contrary to Gods covenant with Noah, Gen. 9.

Seneca lib. 3. quæſt. Nat. c. 27

Beroſus.

Verſe 13. Verſe 16. Lyranus. That ſame day entered Noah, &c. into the Ark, and the Lord ſhut him in. The words tranſlated, in that ſame day, are in the Hebrew, in articulo illius diei, upon which divers have ſcanned diverſly, ſome, that hereby is meant the cleare light of the day, wherein and not in the darke, as it were, by ſtealth men ſeeing Noah to enter the Arke, they might conceive it to be by Gods direction, and ſo feare to do him hurt, as going under Gods protection: ſome, the ſtrength of the day, ſuch as is at noon-tide; becauſe the word tranſlated, in ipſo Articulo, is עצם ſignifying to ſtrengthen: others that little part of the day, whereby the day is diſtinguiſhed from the night, that is, the dawning early that day. Pagninus cutteth off all this controverſie by turning it, as here I have read it, in that very day, ſo that the day is ſpoken of, as an Article or point of time, wherein he entered, and not a part of that day pointed at. But a greater queſtion yet remaineth, what day this was, becauſe in the verſe immediately going before the 17 day of the ſecond moneth is ſpoken of, but before that it is expreſly noted, that Noah went into the Arke ſeven dayes before the floud, which began the 17 day. Some hold, that the very day, when the floud began, was the day of Noahs entrance, and ſo the order taken ſeven dayes before is to be underſtood only of a preparing to enter. But others better, that by the preterperfect the preterpluperfect tenſe here is to be underſtood, the ſelf-ſame day Noah had entered, that is, was in the Arke, and all ſorts of creatures with him, having begun his entrance ſeven dayes before, but now it being fully perfected. For the Lords ſhutting him in, hereby is meant, Oleaſter. R. Abraham. Aven Ezra.

Chryſoſt. hom. 25. Vatablus. Ambroſ. de Noah & Arca.

ſaith

ſaith Chryſoſtome, that he was ſafe there, God providing, that as other parts of the Ark, ſo the doore, after Noahs going in might be made cloſe, and defenſible againſt the water alſo, uſing herein the miniſtery of his angels, or by his All-commanding Word doing this for Noah, which he could not do for himſelf; becauſe the doore was to ſhut inward, and the cranies were then to be ſtopped, when all things were entered. Now for the repeating of the ſame thing again, v. 13, 14, 15, 16. touching the coming in of all things into the Ark, it being ſpoken of before ſo fully, verſe 7, 8, 9. this is not ſuperfluous, but that it might be the more conſidered to admire Gods providence in bringing together all ſorts of creatures at the very day appointed, and ſo ſeaſonably, that they might all be out of the danger of the floud. Chryſoſt. hom. 25. in Gen.

Now the waters having flowed thus continually 40 dayes together, were at length ſo increaſed, that they covered the higheſt mountains.

All the high mountaines under the Whole Heaven were covered. 20. Fifteen Cubits upward the waters prevailed. Some mountaines are reported to be of ſuch an exceeding great height, that they are thought to be above the middle Region of the aire, where the Raine is ordinarily ingendred, as the Mount Olympus, Caſius, and Athos, &c, and Bodin ſaith, that he hath been upon the top of an high Hill in France, where he ſaw the Clouds moving under him, and where no raine fell, but it was moſt faire during the time of his abode there, but having deſcended he ſaw, that ſome ſtore of raine had falne below. Some, who think, that all the raine, which fell now to make this floud, came out of the middle Region, are forced, conſidering this, to ſay that by Heaven, all the mountaines under which were covered, not the Starry, but the Aerean Heaven was meant, and ſo ſome of thoſe high mountaines, which exceeded the middle Region, were not covered, but in that ſudden riſe of the waters none could get to them to be ſaved there: others, that it is falſe which is reported of mountaines ſo exceſſively high. But if we hold us to that, which was ſaid before touching the waters coming down from above the Starry Sky, we ſhal neither need to denie the truth of that, which is reported touching thoſe high mountains, nor be forced to flee to that ſhift of underſtanding by heaven the middle Region of the Aire, without, yea contrary to all grounds of holy Scripture. For all the mountaines without exception in the whole World muſt needs be covered, or elſe all things had not neceſſarily periſhe d by water. The mountaines under the whole Heaven then were under the Starry Heaven, and above the higheſt of them theſe extraordinary waters, which deſcended from an higher place prevailed 15 Cubits upward, that no Giant of the greateſt procerity might lift up his heada bove the waters. Saint Auguſtine, who is for the waters coming out of the Clouds, ſaith, that at this time the Clouds might be lifted higher, as well as earth could be placed ſuch an height, as was the top of ſo high a mountain. But I reſt in the former reſolution. The waters thus prevailing, all things were drowned and periſhed, wherein there was any breath of life upon the ground; only Noah and they with him were ſaved alive, and in this ſtate Moſes ſaith, the World continued 150 dayes. Verſe 19. Verſe 20. Cajetan. Pererius. Aug. lib. 15. de civit. Dei c. 27. Verſe 21, 22.

The waters prevailed upon the earth 150 dayes. Some have held, that theſe dayes are to be reckoned from the 40 before ſpoken of, but they were certainly deceived, as will appear, if we look to Chap. 8. 4. where the Ark is ſaid to have reſted upon the mountains of Ararat the ſeventh moneth, the 17 day, which was from the ſecond moneth the 17 day, when the floud began, juſt 150 dayes: wherefore when Moſes ſaith the waters prevailed 150 dayes, the meaning is, that from the beginning of the flowing of waters to cover the earth, till ſo many dayes were come about, the earth remained all under water, but then it began to be freed again on the tops of higheſt mountains. If it be demanded, why the floud continued covering all ſo long, when as all things were drovvned dead many dayes before this? It is anſvvered, partly to ſhevv the Lords great indignation againſt ſin, and partly to exerciſe Noahs faith, Verſe 24. R. Solomon. Joſeph. Chryſoſt. See alſo before the yeer of the Floud counted. Muſculus.

faith, who might by this time, if he had not been ſtrong in faith, have begun to think, that the waters ſhould never ceaſe again. And how could they indeed, ſeeing they were 15 Cubits higher then the tops of mountains, be more abated in the ſpace of theſe dayes? for when water overfloweth all, there muſt be a time again for it to be brought down according to the proportion of the degrees of the greatneſſe thereof.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. AND God remembered Noah and every beaſt, and all the Cattel with him in the Ark, and made a Wind to paſſe over the Earth, and the waters were aſſwaged.

This of Gods remembering Noah is ſpoken according to man, not that he did at any time forget him, but his doing that, which did argue his care over him, is ſaid to be his remembering of him, and he is ſaid not only to remember Noah, but alſo the beaſts with him, to ſhew, that his providence extendeth to all creatures. But for the wind, which he made to paſſe over the earth to dry up the waters, divers conjecture diverſly. Some, that no wind, but the Spirit of God is meant hereby, becauſe no wind could dry up ſo great waters, for then the winds continually blowing upon the Sea, would dry up thoſe waters, alſo it was therefore, ſay they, the Almighty Spirit of God and a divine inſenſible vertue, whereby this was done. But howſoever a wind cannot do ſuch a great thing ordinarily, yet when God doth ſend it extraordinarily, why ſhould we think it impoſſible to be done hereby, ſeeing a wind ſent by him, made the waters of the red-Sea to ſtand upon heaps, making ſome part of it dry even to the bottom? It was therefore a wind doubtleſſe, as we read it, which the Lord ſent, and which in many dayes dryed up the waters ſo that the Earth began to appear. Some will have the heat of the Sun meant by this wind, which having been hitherto hidden by the thick Clouds now brake out, and dryed up the waters, for proof hereof, that the Sun may be underſtood by the word רוח Spirit or wind here uſed, alleaging a place in Eccleſiaſtes, where the Sun being ſpoken of, it is ſaid; The Spirit having viewed all things goeth forward in the Circuit thereof. But becauſe the going and returning of the waters is ſpoken of, v. 3. that is, an agitation of them by a wind, I reſt in the other, as the plaineſt and ſimpleſt meaning of the words, that there was a wind ſent vvhereby the vvaters vvere blovvn to and fro, and thus by degrees dryed up. Novv the time, vvhen this vvind began, vvas not after 150 dayes before ſpoken of, but ſo ſoon as the 40 dayes of rain vvere ended: for this vvind had had a vvonderfull effect at the expiration of thoſe 150 dayes, the tops of the mountaines beginning then to appear. And then alſo, as the fountaines of the deep had been before broken up.

Ambroſ. lib. de Noa & Arca, cap. 16. Theod.

Rupertus.

Verſe 2. Now they were ſtopped, and the windows of Heaven were ſhut. Some hold, that there could not be any beginning of the vvaters decreaſe ſo ſoon, but at the end of 150 dayes; becauſe they are ſaid to have prevailed ſo long a time, but their prevailing is to be underſtood, not of their continuing in their full quantity, as vvhen they vvere at the higheſt, but of their continuing to cover the earth, ſo that no part of it vvas diſcovered, till the end of this time; becauſe upon the laſt of theſe dayes, the vvaters vvere abated for the Ark to ſtick upon ſome mountains, there being thus ſome diſcovery of them made. And to this effect alſo Auguſtine, vvho ſaith, that this is ſpoken by capitulation, it being ſhevved in generall, that the vvaters prevailed 150 dayes, Chap. 7. v. 24. this thing is here particularly deſcribed, hovv it vvas, viz. a vvind ariſing, yet in this time, and the vvindovvs of Heaven, &c. being ſhut up immediatly after 40 dayes expired, and thus the waters decreaſing, but not ſo, as that there vvas any ſenſible demonſtration thereof, till the end of 150 dayes, vvhen it appeared by the ſticking of the Ark upon the mountaines of Ararat.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt. 12.

Verſe 4.

And the Arke reſted the ſeventh moneth, the 17 day of the moneth upon the mountains of Ararat. The deſcription of the time here is ſo plain, the dayes 150 from the beginning of the Floud, and this day of this moneth ſo fitly agreeing, (for from the 17 day of the ſecond moneth, to the 17 of the ſeventh are five moneths, that is, five times 30 dayes) that I cannot but marvaile, that any ſhould hold theſe moneths to be reckoned not from the beginning of the year, but from the beginning of the floud, thus both needleſly and falſly too, bringing in two ſeverall accounts in this hiſtory, whereas Moſes followeth onely one. For if it be reckoned ſo, at this time 197 dayes were expired, ſince the beginning of the floud, and then the floud laſted in the whole time thereof 57 dayes above a year, which is contrary to the common received opinion, and to the deſcription of the time by the age of Noah, when he went into the Ark, and when he came out, of which ſee before chap. 5. 5. in my reckoning made upon occaſion of that, which is there ſaid. In ſpeaking of this time, the vulgar Latine differeth from the Hebrew ten dayes, for in that tranſlation it is the 27 day of the ſeventh moneth, but both in Hebrew and Chaldee 17, ſo that here is in the vulgar Latine a manifeſt corruption. The mountaines of Ararat here ſpoken of, are commonly held to be in Armenia, for there is the River Araxis, nigh unto which ſtandeth the great mountain Taurus, which is ſuppoſed by ſome to be that, whereupon the Ark reſted. And this is the more probable, becauſe that place in the Armenian tongne, is called Aprobatherion, that is, the place of going out for a memoriall of Noah his going out of the Ark there. And Beroſus ſaith, that in his time certain parts of the Ark ſtill remained there, of which they ſcraped pitch, and uſed it to heal diſeaſes withall, thus alſo Joſephus and Jerome. And yet hereby it is made more evident, becauſe part of this mountain adjoyneth unto Cilicia, the chief City whereof was anciently called Terſus a τερσόω to dry, ſince Tarſus, becauſe in all likelyhood, the earth began thereabouts to be dryed firſt. Beroſus indeed calleth it Montem Cordyeorum, Damaſcen, Baim, but it might have upon divers occaſions divers names. Luther ſaith, that ſome underſtand by theſe mountaines the mountaine Imaus in India, the higheſt and greateſt by farre in all the world, and Muſculus ſaith, that ſome will have mountaines meant, not lying in Armenia, but near to Armenia; but theſe are onely conjectures, not able to weigh againſt that, which hath been already ſaid.

Vatablus.

Beroſus.
Ioſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.
Hieronym.

Luther.

Muſculus.

Verſe 5.

After this the waters ſtill decreaſed more and more, till the tenth moneth the firſt day, and then the tops of the mountains were ſeen. This was a long time, after that the Arke was grounded, before any ground appeared to the eye of him that looked out; viz. 74 dayes, from whence we may conjecture, how deep the Arke went in the water; for the water being at the higheſt was 15 cubits above all mountaines. Now from the time of the beginning to abate, till this time, had paſſed 184 dayes, in which if we count the abating by an equall proportion, the waters fell a cubit in 12 dayes 6 houres, and ſomewhat leſſe than half an hour, and ſo 110 dayes, before the Ark reſted, about 9 cubits, which being deducted out of 15, 6 remain, and therefore in this depth it is probable, that the Ark went, and ſo the waters fell in theſe 74 dayes 6 cubits. Hugo de Sancto Victore, Lyranus, and ſome others, labour otherwiſe about the finding out of this, but becauſe it is a point rather of curioſity than edification, I ſpare to ſet down their reckonings.

Hugo de Sancto Victor.
Lyranus.

Verſe 6,7.

And at the end of 40 dayes Noah opened the window of the Arke, which he had made, and he ſent forth a Raven which went to and fro, till the waters were dryed from off the face of the earth. Some thinke, becauſe it is ſaid, the window which he had made, that it was not the window or light ſpoken of before, out of which the Raven was put, but ſome hole made by Noah now to look out at, becauſe the other window being high, he could not well come to looke out at that. But this is a fond imagination, ſeeing one window onely hath been hitherto ſaid to have been made by Noah, and therefore it is certain, that this and none other is here ſpoken of: for it was made long before, as appeareth in that that it is ſaid to have been ſhut, and that he now opened it when the making of the window was ſpoken of before, the word Sohar ſignifying light was uſed, but here the word Shalon a long and narrow hole ſerving for a window. The Septuagint render it θυρίδα or θύραν, ſignifying a doore, but it is improbable, that Noah yet opened the doore, becauſe after this to be ſatisfied touching the ſtate of the earth, he removed the covering of the Ark, and looked out, and ſaw, that the earth was dry, which had been needleſſe, if the doore had ſtood open, ſeeing he might have looked out thereby. It was that window then, by which he ſent out the Raven, being made ſo, that although he might through it ſee the tops of mountaines, yet he could not ſee the Plain. Now the Raven being ſent out, was going and coming, that is, to the out-ſide of the Ark, and away again, never entering in any more: becauſe happily he found dead bodies of men and beaſts, and ſo lived upon them, thus Chryſoſtome, and Auguſtine, and others. The vulgar Latine readeth this of the Raven thus, which went out, and did not return, &c. whereupon a great queſtion hath been moved by ſome, how theſe two contrary readings might be reconciled? and becauſe it ſeemeth, that they cannot, ſome of them have rejected the Hebrew, as corrupted, but the ſenſe of them both is all one and the ſame, the Raven, although going and coming entered not into the Ark any more. And if there could be no reconciliation, yet farre be it from us to reject the fountain, the Hebrew for a tranſlation, but let that rather be corrected according to it. After the Raven a Dove is ſent out, which argueth that the Raven came in no more.

Chryſoſt. Hom. in Gen. c. 26. Auguſt. quæſt. 13. in Gen.

Verſe 8. Verſe 9. And he ſent forth a Dove from him to ſee if the waters were abated: but the Dove found no reſt for the ſole of her foot, &c. If it be demanded, how long after the Raven the Dove was ſent out; it is moſt probable 7 dayes after, becauſe after her returne, it is ſaid, he ſtayed other dayes, intimating hereby 7 going before: why theſe two fowles were rather ſent out than any other, no certain reaſon can be rendered hereof, but becauſe they could take a long flight, & had more ſagacity of nature, than divers others, & were fit for this purpoſe of exploration. But here is one neceſſary queſtion, how it is ſaid, that the Dove could not find, where to reſt the ſole of her foot, when as the tops of the mountains were ſeen 40 dayes before this? Saint Auguſtine anſwereth, that either this was ſpoken by capitulation, as being done before that of the mountains tops appearing, or elſe that howſoever they were ſeen, they were not yet dry, but ſluddy. The firſt of theſe cannot be, for it is expreſly ſaid, 40 dayes after the appearing of the tops of the mountaines that this was done, wherefore it is rather to be held, that the Dove being a cleanly and delicate creature could finde no fit place to reſt upon, but miry, and ſo either alighted not upon the ground, or elſe alighting and ſtaying a little while, flew back again, as not being content with ſuch a reſting place, as the earth could yet afford unto her, Joſephus ſaith, that ſhe returned with her feet all dirty.

Auguſt. quæſt. 14. in Gen.

Verſe 10. Verſe 11. And he ſtayed other 7 dayes, and again ſent her forth. And the Dove came into him in the evening, and loe, in her mouth was an Olive-leafe pluckt off, &c. Becauſe Noah is ſaid to have ſtayed other ſeven dayes, ſome have held that 7 dayes were paſſed before ſince the 40, and ſo find three ſevens here, which I have before followed, and is further confirmed by that which followeth, v. 12. and he ſtayed other 7 dayes, where it is plaine, that they are called other 7 dayes, in reference to the 7 before ſpoken of. Touching the Olive-leafe, a queſtion is made amongſt Expoſitours, how any tree could have green leaves at this time, when as all had been ſo long overwhelmed with water? To this ſome anſwer, that this tree was made immediately by Gods Almighty Power to reflouriſh, or elſe that God provided for the comfort of Noah, that trees ſhould not loſe their leaves and fruit even in the time of their being drowned, and he would have by the Dove a leafe brought unto Noah to intimate thus much unto him. Others, that the Olive-tree is alwayes green with leaves, but that the Dove lighted upon this tree, and brought a leafe thereof in her mouth,

Lyranus.

Chryſoſt. hom. 26. in Gen.

was

was by divine diſpenſation. The Dove had ſpent the time all day abroad, finding ſomewhat doubtleſſe to feed upon, but being a creature that loveth the company of man, and to come into an houſe at night, ſhe returned then unto Noah, becauſe ſhe could yet have no reſt abroad. The word leafe is in the Greek and Latine read a bough or branch, but it is not likely, that ſo little and weake a creature could bring a bough in her mouth. The ſeventh day, after this Noah ſendeth the Dove forth again, which returneth no more, whereby he underſtood that the earth was dry. Myſtically ſaith Ferus, the Raven ſet forth the Jews, and we may adde Hereticks, which go from the Church and return not, the Dove, the Holy Ghoſt which vvas ſent 1 vvhen Chriſt breathed upon his Apoſtles. 2 at Pentecoſt. 3 at the Reſurrection. And as the Dove reſted not upon the ſluddy ground, ſo the Spirit vvill not reſt in the impure. 2 As the Dove returned in the evening into the Ark, ſo the Spirit in the time of the Goſpel, vvhich is the evening of the vvorld. 3 As the Dove brought an Olive-branch, vvhereby Noah knevv, that the vvaters vvere dryed, ſo the Spirit bringeth comfort and peace to the ſoul, the faithfull being hereby aſſured, that Gods judgments are paſt unto them, their ſins being pardoned, Rom. 8.16. Thus Ferus. But Ainſworth by the Raven, whereby Noah could have no comfort, underſtandeth the law, which giveth no comfort in reſpect of the floud of Gods Judgements due for ſin abated, and by the Dove the Goſpel and Spirit ſent there with, Matth. 3.16. ſpeaking peace and comfort to all true believers: but neither of both theſe do fully ſatisfie. That of Ferus by the Dove underſtanding the H. Ghoſt I imbrace, but not any ſending of the Holy Ghoſt at the Reſurrection, but the firſt was at Chriſts Baptiſme. The Raven ſeemes rather to me to ſet forth the wicked in the Church, who go and come, but never truly enter by being effectually called.

Verſe 12.

Acts 2.

Then in the 60 year, the firſt moneth, the firſt day, Noah removed the covering of the Ark, and looked, and behold the face of the grownd was dry. Betwixt the time of the laſt ſending out of the Dove & this then were 6 days; but Moſes counteth it not bydayes, as before betwixt the Arks reſting upon the mountaines of Ararat, and the appearing of the tops of the mountaines he did not, but by the day of the moneth alſo leaving the dayes to be reckoned by the Reader. Thus then ten moneths and 13 dayes of that year were paſt, wherein the floud began, ſo that of an whole year there miſſed not now above one moneth and 17 dayes, but inſtead of theſe a moneth and 27 more were paſt, before that Noah came out of the Ark, v. 14. ſo that an whole year and ten dayes were ſpent in the Ark. Touching the covering opened, it was the roof of the Ark, not all throughout the whole length of 300 Cubits, but a board or two to look out at. But how is it here ſaid, that the ground was dry, and yet 56 dayes after this the ground is ſaid to be dry, as if then only it were firſt dry, and fit to come out upon, as the ſequel alſo doth declare? Anſw. It was dry now in appearance to the eye, but not ſo dry, as for Men and Cattel to go upon, becauſe it was moiſt and ſoft, like Marriſh ground, but a moneth and 27 dayes after, it was dry and hard.

Verſe 13.

Verſe 14.

Queſt.

Then God ſaid unto Noah, Go out of the Ark, thou and thy wife, &c. It may be demanded here, why Noah is bidden to go out, or what need there was, that the Lord ſhould command him this, for ſo much as ſeeing the earth to be dry, he might now of his own accord have gone out? Ambroſe anſwereth, that in righteouſneſſe there is ſuch modeſty, that a man vvholly ſubmitteth himſelf to the guidance and government of the Lord, not attempting any thing, but vvhat he vvilleth, and therefore this juſt man Noah vvould not preſume vvithout God to go forth, but expected, till he commanded him. And Calvin extolleth the obedience of Noah herein, commending it to our imitation, in that having been novv ſo long in a tedious Priſon, he yet refreined from going out, till the Lord bad him go out. For even thus ought vve in all our actions to follow God, as our guide, and not rashly adventure upon the doing of any thing at our own wils, and ſo we may expect a bleſſing with

Verſe 15, 16

Ambroſ de Noe & Arca, cap. 21

Calvin.

Noah

Noah from the Lord in whatſoever we go about. Yet we ought not to look for Revelations in theſe dayes, but in all things conſider the precepts of Gods holy Word, that we may be ſure what we do, is not againſt, but agreeable thereunto, and we muſt crave the Spirit of wiſdome, which is never denyed to ſuch as are willing to obey. Hitherto Calvin. And it is to be remembered, that God ſhut Noah in, when he was entered into the Ark, and therefore he muſt needs expect his opening of the door again, and not preſume of himſelfe to break it open. But why is the going out of all the creatures mentioned alſo in particular? Anſw. This ſheweth, how Gods care is ſtill extended even to beaſts and fowles, and creeping things, that we may not doubt of his Providence over us, and alſo, that as theſe came into the Ark to be preſerved, ſo none of them dyed there, but were preſerved alive to ſtore the world again, and for this purpoſe brought forth again. But vvhy doth the Lord in bidding Noah with his wife, and ſonnes and their wives to come out, vary the phraſe uſed in bidding them to enter in, Chap. 6. v. 18. For there it is ſaid, thou and thy ſonnes, thy wife, and thy ſonnes wives here, thou and thy wife, thy ſonnes and their wives? Ambroſe both obſerveth this difference & reſolveth it, ſaying, that whilſt they were in the Ark, the Lord would have them to live a part, the men by themſelves, and the women by themſelves, and not to come together man and vvife as at other times; but novv his vvill vvas, that they ſhould come together again, and increaſe and multiply and repleniſh the earth: for hovv unſeemly a thing had it been, vvhen the living vvere all dying, for ſuch as ſhould dye to be begotten? It vvas indeed a time of vvo and ſorrovv, and therefore of refraining from all acts of pleaſure, to be free to faſt and pray and to lament that common deſtruction; vvherefore, as I hold no certain ground to be in this variation for this tenet, ſo I reject it not, eſpecially it being commonly received amongſt many ancients, that neither men and vvomen nor beaſts did come together, during all that time of the common calamity of the World, but vvere kept, till the time appointed for generation and increaſe of the vvorld again.

Queſt.

Queſt.

Ambroſ. de Noa & Arca cap. 21 Quàm indecorum quo tempore vivi morerentur tunc perituri generarentur.

Verſe 20. Verſe 21.

And Noah builded an Altar, and tooke of every clean beaſt, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the Altar. 21 And the Lord ſmelled a ſweet ſauour and ſaid, I will not any more curſe the ground for mans ſake, for the imagination of mans heart is evill from his youth, &c. This is the firſt Altar that vve read of, although it is not to be doubted, but Altars vvere uſed before, and ſacrifices vvere offered upon them, of the reaſon vvhereof, ſee Gen. 4.3. Altars vvere of earth, Exod. 20.4. this is ſaid by the Hebrevves to have been built vvhere Cain and Abel ſacrificed before, and Abraham prepared to offer up his ſonne Iſaac, Gen. 22.2. It is noted here by Saint Ambroſe, that Noah is not ſaid to have done any thing before this vvithout an expreſſe command from God, but novv he buildeth an Altar, and ſacrificeth vvithout command; the reaſon hereof rendered by the ſame Father is, becauſe this vvas a duty of thankfulneſſe to God for the great benefit of his preſervation, vvhich ought to come freely and not to be exacted. For as now we ought to praiſe God with heart and voice, ſo then whole burnt-offrings were over-added, by giving ſomething unto God thus, the more to expreſſe the thankfulneſſe of the heart, man being of himſelf moſt dull in the performance of good duties, and therefore needing ſome outward meanes the more to excite him, and ſacrifices ſerved alſo to ſet forth deliverance from ſin, and coming into grace and favour with God by ſome meanes without us, viz. the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who was to be offered up in ſacrifice for us, as Calvin reaſoneth. Noah then in doing thus, had both warrant, it being a cuſtome amongſt the faithful from the beginning to offer ſacrifice, and that doubtleſſe by the direction of the Lord, and alſo, as his juſtice hitherto ſo herein his great piety is commended unto us. Touching clean beaſts and fowls I have ſpoken before, Chap. 7. 27. R. Eliezar is bold to determine, that Noah brought onely a bull, a ſheep and a goat, and of clean fowles, turtle doves, and young pigeons. Touching Gods ſmelling of a Ambroſe.

Calvin.

ſvveet

ſweet ſavour, in the Hebrew it is a ſavour of Noah, that is, of reſt, the meaning is, wherewith he was well pleaſed, and much delighted, as man is with moſt ſweet ſmels, not for the ſmell coming therefrom, but for the piety of him that offered, and therefore the word Noah is uſed in alluding to the perſon, in whom the Lord was ſo well pleaſed. For there could be no pleaſing ſmell in the ſmoak of ſacrifices, but the ſimple minde in the offerer, and the minde fearing God, is accounted a ſweet ſmell: but myſtically Chriſt offering himſelfe was this ſweet ſmelling ſavour, Epheſ. 5.2. And he ſaid in his heart, I will no more curſe the ground for mans ſake, this is ſpoken according to the manner of men, he ſaid in his heart, that is, he determined vvith himſelfe: the Chaldee, he ſaid by his vvord, underſtood by the Rabbins, as an oath, ſee Eſa. 54. 9. By curſing, here is not meant any kind of curſe, but as is by and by further expreſſed, by bringing an univerſall deſtruction upon the World; for other particular curſes are both threatened and inflicted ſtill daily for ſinne, vvhereas the burning of the World at the laſt by fire, vvhich vve expect, may ſeeme to be contrary to this, I anſvver vvith Ferus, this ſhall not be till the terme here ſet, v. 22. as long as the earth endureth. Rupertus ſaith, that the earth ſhall not be ſmitten any more for mans ſake, but man himſelf that ſinneth, but the earth and other creatures, vvhich ſinne not, ſhall be exempt. But ſo that vvhich is here ſpoken in favour of Noah, ſhould be taken as ſpoken againſt him, and for the ſenſeleſſe creatures. Touching the reaſon, for the imagination of mans heart is evill from his youth: this vvas ſpoken before, and novv again, ſaith Ferus, that vve might not think, that vve which live ſince the floud, vvare better than they that lived before it, for the corruption of mans nature is ſtill the ſame throughout all Ages. It may ſeem ſtrange, that this being alleaged, as a reaſon, why he would deſtroy the World before, Gen. 6.5. it ſhould now be brought, as a reaſon of not deſtroying it any more. But the meaning here is, that man being ſo corrupt and ſinfull, if whenſoever he provoketh the Lord by his ſins, the World ſhould be deſtroyed, it muſt often be deſtroyed, and reſtored again, and therefore he would not any more take this courſe, but for the generall, uphold the World, notwithſtanding ſuch provocations unto the end, as Calvin ſaith, or, as others, it is, as if the Lord had ſaid, ſeeing there is ſuch a fountain of corruption in man, that he can do no otherwiſe, but ſin, I will take pitty upon him, and not uſe ſo great rigour againſt him any more. For this is ſpoken in regard of Noahs ſacrifice, whereby the Lords wrath was ſo pacified towards man in generall, that although they ſhould offend again, as formerly they had done, as in reſpect of their corruption, they were apt enough to do, yet the Lord here reſolveth, not to purſue them with ſo great fury any more, wherefore the ſame, which was before brought, as a reaſon of deſtroying the World, is now for Noahs ſake, when he had ſacrificed, brought, as a reaſon of not deſtroying it any more for his incouragement, when he was thus aſſured, that his poſterity ſhould not any more be dealt withall as former generations. And ſo Noah giveth reſt, as was before noted upon his name, and the power of ſerving God with a good heart appeareth, the whole World though wicked, fareth the better for one righteous Noah doing ſacrifice to God. But how cometh man to be thus corrupt from the beginning, ſeeing God made him good? Anſw. He fell from this good eſtate, and ſo is born novv ſinfull and corrupt, generation after generation, vvhich is intimated, in that he ſaith, from his youth, and Eſa. 48. 8. We are all tranſgreſſors from the womb, Pſ. 51.7. 58. 4. A Rabbin being asked, vvhen is the evil imagination put into the child, he Anſvvered, in the houre that he vvas formed: his heart is a fountain or ſhop of ſin, and ſo the thoughts framed there, cannot but be evill, ſee before Chap. 6. 5. vvhich being ſo, and therefore the far greater part of men being through originall corruption mancipated to ſin, ſome fevv only being ſanctified to think and do better, the Lord reſolveth not to deſtroy the World again for him, but for Noahs ſake, and ſuch as he vvas, to uphold it all the dayes thereof. For although this be Tertullian. lib. 1. adverſ. Marcion.

Verſe 21.

Rupert. lib. 4. in Gen. c. 2.

Calvin.

Note.

Queſt.

not expressed, yet for somuch, as the Lord entereth upon this resolution, vvhen Noah had sacrificed, it is necessarily to be understood. So that here is no impunity intimated to the vvicked, but that the Lord vvill not for them drovvn the vvhole World any more, but rather respecting his servants preserve it free from such generall calamities, a just revvard yet avvaiting every such vvicked man in particular both here and hereafter. Gods promising not to curse the earth any more, though men be sinfull, is mystically applyed to the faithfull, Esa 54.9,10. for by Christ, vvho vvas made a curse for us, vve are for ever delivered from the curse, although vve be sinners, Gal. 3.13.

Verse 22. Hereafter seed-time and Harvest, cold and heat, Summer and Winter, day and night, shall not cease so long as the Earth remaineth. This is added, as opposite to the Worlds destruction, for when the floud came, there was a year, wherein they neither sowed nor reaped; because all was drowned with water, neither was there any Summer and Winter, but all as a VVinter abounding with water, and if there were an intercourse of day and night, heat and cold, yet no good redounded to the creatures hereby, seeing nothing grew, and nothing in that time had any comfort thereof. But now henceforth it is promised, that there shall be a vicissitude conducing to the sustentation of life, of mens actions, sowing and reaping, of the first qualities heat and cold, and of times both anniversary, Summer and VVinter, and quotidian, day and night. And all this, he saith, shall be, as long as the earth indureth, that is, not for ever, but whilest the earth remaineth unburnt with fire, which is till the day of Judgement: for after this, if it abideth still, it is not counted to be the earth, that now is, but a new earth. Neither is this so to be understood, as if in every particular Countrey there should alwayes be these vicissitudes: for in Egypt it was once continuall night, three dayes together; And in Ahabs time there could be no sowing nor reaping three years together in the drought, but it is true of the World in generall: for never shall these intercourses faile in all parts, till the dissolution of the Universe.

Musculus.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. AND God blessed Noah and his Sons, and said unto them, Increase and multiply, &c. As the Lord having made Man and Woman at the first, blessed them by making them fruitfull, and gave them dominion over the creatures, and appointed their food, so here again beginning a new World, as it were, he proceedeth in like manner in speaking of these three, and for this of increasing he iterateth it, v 7. as speaking to them, that had need of great confirmation, because they had been doubtlesse greatly astonished at the late generall destruction, and could not easily be resolved, to what end they had been hitherto preserved, and for their filling of this earth with their posterity, they being so few might otherwise have much doubted of it; yet there was a great difference betwixt our first Parents and these. 1 They, if they had continued in the state of innocency, should have multiplyed without sorrow, and have lived with theirs without sickness, paine, and death. 2 Their dominion should have been over the creatures without any reluctation. 3 Their food should have been more easie to get, and their toyle lesse, and that without wearinesse to get it; but now there must be sorrow in bringing forth, and in bringing up, sicknesses and death, the creatures will not obey, but by compulsion, and with great toyle and labour man must get his living out of the earth and them. But how doth Gods blessing take effect in Noah, seeing he had no more Children after this, that we read of, but by his three sons the whole earth vvas over-spread? Quest. Answ. It vvas a blessing to him, that his sons fructified abundantly, the children, that came of them being his also. Whereas the Lord blesseth them thus together, it is yet to be understood, that he doth not allovv promiscuous coming together of men and vvomen, but of each man vvith his ovvn Wife, his Lavves having alvvayes been for Matrimony undefiled.

Luther.

of

The feare and dread of you be upon every Beaſt, &c. When Noah and his ſons ſhould conſider the multitude and fierceneſſe of ſome of the Beaſts, they might vvell doubt ſome miſchief to come unto them by theſe, vvherefore God here animateth them againſt this, vvhich indeed taketh effect to this day, becauſe all beaſts, yea even the greateſt and fierceſt flee avvay, if they ſee but the ſhadovv of a man, as Baſil ſaith of great Fiſhes, and Pliny of Elephants. But vve ſee it not to be ſo vvith the great Whale, or vvith fierce Lions, Bears and Tigers, hovv then vvas this verified in every Beaſt? Muſculus moveth this queſtion and Calvin, but in reſolving it they ſay, that the fear of man is by God ſo farre ſtricken into them, that they come not to aſſault them, for if they ſhould ſo do, they might ſoon have torn them in pieces, and many of them of far greater ſtrength, then man are made ſubject to man, yea to children, as Horſes and Oxen and the like. This indeed may ſerve in part to reſolve this doubt, but it is not all, which is to be ſaid herein. For I doubt not but Noah and his Sons were feared by the fierceſt Beaſts, till the increaſe of mankind to that, that they were able to ſubdue them partly by number, and partly by wit and policy. There was certainly a ſpeciall providence holding the creatures in awe for the neceſſity of men, when they were but few, more then in theſe dayes, but even ſtill the fierceſt Beaſts are tamed by man, and then they feare him even as the domeſtick beaſts do. The fear of man then was in all beaſts firſt extraordinarily, till mankind was again more increaſed, their living with Noah and his Sons ſo long in the Ark, being ſome means of taming their fierceneſſe, and bringing them to fear them as domeſtick beaſts did. 2 In all times both to make them keep far off from the habitations of men in deſerts, fearing to come to do them hurt in Towns or Cities, and alſo, becauſe when by the Art and Wit of man they are tamed, not only Oxen, and Horſes, and Camels, &c. but even Lions, and Bears have feared, and been made obedient to man. For out of his power to tame and to rule is no beaſt or bird, creeping thing or fiſh, as Saint James teacheth. It is obſerved here by Ferus, that other vvords are uſed, and not the ſame to Adam, Gen. 1. 28. have dominion, &c. intimating, that all creatures vvere obedient to Adam in the ſtate of innocency; but novv they muſt be compelled by terrours and puniſhments.

Verſe 2.

Baſil. Pliny. Muſculus. Calvin.

James 3.7.

Every thing, that moveth and liveth ſhall be meat for you, as the green Herb I have given you all things.

At the time of the Creation only Herbs, and Seeds, and Fruits are given unto man for meat, but novv the Lord giveth the ſame liberty in reſpect of fleſh and fiſh of all ſorts, putting no difference betvvixt clean and unclean, and thus the Rabbins underſtand it. For in Breſhith Rabbath upon Pſ. 145. 7. The Lord looſeth the bound, they ſay, hereby is meant, that all the beaſts, vvhich have bin unclean by the Law ſhall be ſet at liberty, and men ſhall be licenced to eat of them in the time of the Meſſiah, even as the ſons of Noah might eat of all things according to the licence made, Gen. 9. 3. Some hold, that man might as freely feed upon the living moving creatures before, as now, becauſe although it were not ſpoken of by the Lord in appointing mans food, yet it is no where forbidden, and that they uſed beaſts skins for Garments, and their fat for ſacrifice is apparant, and what did they then with their fleſh, if they ate it not? Again, the creatures were made all for mans uſe, and if he did not uſe them by eating them, there are many, that he could make none uſe of at all. Thus Calvin, who yet profeſſeth, not to contend about it. And Dominicus de Soto argueth ſtrongly about the ſame, that man did and might eat fleſh after Adams fall, before the Floud, as being a convenient nouriſhment for his now decaying body. For if it were not lawfull or not uſed before, it muſt be either, becauſe it was prohibited, or becauſe not profitable food for man, or not known to be ſuch, or becauſe Herbs and Fruits abundantly ſupplyed mans neceſſity, and ſo there was none uſe of fleſh. But neither was it prohibited, neither unprofitable to nouriſh, becauſe by the judgement of all Phyſicians, and by experience it appeareth to be moſt nutritive, and they might eaſily in reaſon conceive thus much, and laſtly, although other things enough might be had for food, yet conſidering beſides the uſe of meats for neceſſity, there is an uſe for delight alſo, this could be no reaſon of abſteining then herefrom. So likewiſe Cajetan; becauſe although happily for the ſparing of living and moving things, till they were multiplyed, and becauſe they were but few at the firſt, who were to be fed, they were to abſtein from feeding upon them, yet this reaſon held not all the time before the floud, which was 1600, and therefore after a while they might and did eat of theſe alſo, yea, Beroſus reporteth, that they ate mans fleſh. And touching the preſent liberty given, he ſaith, it was no new indulgence, but this eating of all things is here mentioned, that thus occaſion might be taken to direct to avoid an abuſe in eating of theſe creatures, viz. together with their bloud, and that of adding unto the killing of ſuch creatures for meat, the killing of men alſo for the ſame purpoſe in a ſavage manner. And he alleageth Juſtin Martyr, as the author of this opinion, that man before this might eat living things, although not for neceſſity, as after the floud, but for delight, becauſe otherwiſe Abel when he offered ſacrifice, might have been thought to have done nothing worthy of acceptance, as who did offer that, which was not profitable unto him. But Juſtin Martyrs words are plainly wreſted to this ſenſe: for in anſwering to that queſtion, if they offered of things, which they might not eat, how this could be accepted of, ſith, the things offered, by them were to them unprofitable, he ſaith, according to Saint Paul, no man feeding a flock, but eateth of the milk of the flocke, ſo Abel when he brought an offering of his flock, brought of that, vvhereof he had benefit, for he ate doubtleſſe of the milk of the flock, but of the fleſh he ſpeaketh nothing. This therefore of their liberty before the floud to eat fleſh is but a nevv opinion, and the reaſons brought for it may eaſily be anſvvered. For firſt, although it vvere not prohibited expreſly, yet it was by neceſſary conſequence, ſeeing all the meat hitherto allovved to man vvas only Herbs, Seeds, and Fruits, ſo that of faith they could not eat fleſh then. Secondly, being prohibited, although they had known it to be good for food, yet what Godly man durſt have eaten of it? Thirdly, uſe may be made of every creature, although not by eating thereof, either for Phyſick and medicine, for variety of delight in ſeeing or hearing it, or to be ſtirred up hereby to extol Gods manifold wiſdom and power, who made ſuch diverſity of creatures. Fourthly, if when the fat was uſed in ſacrifice, God would have their fleſh ſo much as they would make none uſe of, to rot upon the ground, who can ſay, why did he ſo? and yet happily their ſacrifices then were all Holocauſts, as this of Noah ſpoken of, Chap. 8. Fifthly, Why there ſhould be any exception taken at offering things unprofitable to man, I cannot ſee, if God would be thus ſerved any more, then at our ſerving of him now a dayes with the calves of our lips, which is not caſt unto us. And laſtly, whereas it is ſaid no reaſon can be rendered, why man might not eat fleſh, but only Herbs, &c. before the floud, becauſe if the ſmall number of beaſts, which were in the beginning be brought as a reaſon, yet long before the floud they were ſo multiplyed, that this could be no reaſon. I ſay, that if no reaſon can be brought, yet Gods will, as for refreining from the Tree of knowledge, is a ſufficient reaſon. But there was good reaſon hereof, as I have already ſhewed upon Chap. 1. v. 29. and therefore all the Fathers generally held thus, as there alſo appeareth, or at the leaſt, that none of the Godly ever ate fleſh, till after the floud, although ſome of them have held it a thing never altogether unlawfull, but not neceſſary, ſeeing there was food enough beſides by God appointed. But now the Lord for their neceſſity alloweth them fleſh for meat, their bodies being grown weaker, and the fruits of the earth being not ſo perfectly good, as before, and

Verſe 3.

Gen. 1. 29.

Dominic. de Soto de juſtitia & jure, quæſt. artic. 1.

Cajetan.

Juſtin. Martyr. quæſt. 119. orthodox.

1 Cor. 9.

Chryſoſt. hom. 27. in Gen.

partly partly to comfort Noah, and his after their great ſorrow for that generall calamity, and their own reſtreint of liberty in the Ark, as in a dark Priſon an whole year together. Laſtly, beſides theſe, Theodoret yieldeth another reaſon of this liberty now granted, viz. becauſe God foreſaw the Idolatries with beaſts to come, wherefore to prevent it in all, that would be wiſe, he allowed men to kill and eat, and to make theſe creatures to ſerve for their uſes, as who might gather hereby, that it was an indigne thing in any man now to ſerve and worſhip them, who were theirs to uſe, as they pleaſed. Theod. in Gen. quæſt. 55.

Verſe 4.

But fleſh with the life thereof, which is the bloud thereof, ſhall ye not eat. It being in the former words allowed to man to eat living and moving creatures, now leſt they ſhould think hereupon that they might take and cut theſe creatures in pieces, and preſently eat them all bloudy in a ſavage manner, as beaſts do, that eat fleſh, and ſo grow ſavage like unto them, to kill and teare in pieces and to eat men alſo, the Lord doth here ſtreightly forbid the eating of the fleſh of beaſts in ſuch a manner. For firſt, it is to be taken and killed, the bloud being let out, and then to be prepared orderly for mans diet. This reaſon to prevent the killing of men is yielded by Chryſoſtome, as alſo becauſe bloud is an heavy meat, and the cauſe of many ſickneſſes. Calvin alſo yieldeth that for the preventing of murther, and Luther and others. But if we look into Levit. 17.10, 11. two other reaſons are there rendered, 1 Becauſe bloud is the life of the beaſt, and therefore to eat the fleſh and the bloud both is in effect to eat the creature living, which is inhumane and brutiſh. 2 Becauſe by bloud being offered to the Lord an expiation is made for ſin, ſo that the bloud of the creature is a thing reſerved for God, as a price to be paid to him for ſin, as a mulct for the ſame, and therefore to eat it had been to eat a thing hallowed to the Lord, and ſo ſacrilegious, and it was reſerved to the Lord, ſaith Tho. Aquinas, as his propriety, that hereby it might be acknowledged, that he only is the author of life to every creature. Two words are here uſed to expreſſe the ſame thing, the life and the bloud thereof by appoſition, the reaſon before rendered, becauſe the life is in the bloud, being thus intimated. And for the words following, I exclude not the other reaſon, that they might not be ſo prone to murther, as if the Lord had ſaid, I will not have you deſire the bloud of beaſts, much leſs to thirſt after the bloud of man. Some yield this as a reaſon, that the Iſraelites being inured to ſome ceremonies might the better beare all thoſe, that ſhould afterwards be inſtituted, but the former reaſons may ſuffice. If it be demanded, whether this Law being made at the beginning of this new World, doth not bind to the Worlds end, eſpecially ſeeing it is renewed, Act. 15. I have fully anſwered hereunto upon that place; ſhewing that what is there decreed, was but for unities ſake betwixt beleeving Jewes and Gentiles for a time, to ceaſe again afterwards, ſith that nothing entering into the belly now defileth the man. The Rabbins number this for the ſeventh comand given ſince the Creation, of which ſee afterwards, Deut. 20.10. Chryſoſt Hom. 27. in Gen. Calvin. Luther. Thom. Aquin. part. 1. quæſt. 102. art. 3. Mark 7.18.

Verſe 5.

And ſurely your bloud of your lives will I require, at the hand of every beaſt will I require it, and at the hand of man, at the hand of every mans brother will I require the life of man. Theſe words are in the vulgar Latine rendered thus, for your bloud of your lives, &c. as if they were a reaſon, why bloud ſhould not be eaten, but becauſe they can be made by no means ſo to agree, and the word in the Hebrew is אַךְ etiam, and, this is to be rejected, and that which is here ſaid is to be underſtood, not as cohering with v. 4. but with verſe 3. where a liberty was given to feed upon every living thing, unto which one exception only touching bloud-eating is put, verſe 4. and here is another touching the bloud-ſhedding of ſome living things, that is, of men. And ſo it is, as if it had been ſaid; Every living thing ſhall be meat unto you, and I give you freely power to kill and to ſhed the bloud of it, as well as to gather Herbs, but let the bloud be ſeparated from the fleſh, the one being refreined from, when the other is eaten, and take heed, that ye reckon not man amongſt the living living things that ye may kill, for my meaning is not, that he ſhould be meat either to you or to any ſavage beaſt, but if any man or beaſt offereth violence to him to take his life away, I will ſurely be revenged upon that man or beaſt, it ſhall coſt him his life for ſo doing. This Law is ſo obſcurely delivered indeed, that divers Expoſitors have been troubled much to finde out the ſenſe of the words: but both Chryſoſtome, Calvin, and almoſt all underſtand this wholly, as a prohibition of murther, with a threatning to ſuch, as ſhould dare to murther, and not as a threatening againſt bloud-eaters; yet the Lord is moſt ſevere in this caſe, Levit. 17. 11, 12, &c. threatening death even for eating of bloud; wherefore let it be conſidered, whether this is not alſo here to be underſtood. Bloud with the fleſh of beaſts ye ſhall not eat, for whoſoever doth ſo, I will be avenged upon him to cut off his bloud, and if he killeth a man, that is, any of you, although he eat not your bloud; your bloud of your lives will I require at his hands, that is, for ſhedding your bloud, whereby ye loſe this bodily life. I will ſhed his bloud, and ſo will I do by the beaſt, for touching a beaſt goaring a man, that he dyeth, a Law is made afterwards, that he ſhall be put to death, alſo the caſting of men to wild beaſts to be deſtroyed, as perſecutors did, is here forbidden. The words further added, at the hand of every mans Brother, ſerve to ſhew, that none ſhall eſcape death, that killeth a man, although he were his brother, whom he killed, or any one underſtood hereby, in whom he had moſt intereſt, as Parents in their children. And this is more plainly expreſſed, verſe 6. the Rabbins hold, that ſelf-murther is here forbidden and threatened, and the appointing of any to kill a man. Maimony Treatiſe of Murther. Chap. 2.

Chryſoſt. Calvin.

Exod. 21. 28.

Verſe 6. Whoſo ſheddeth mans bloud, by man ſhall his bloud be ſhed, for in the Image of God made he man. The cutting off of a murtherer cometh from God, but man placed in authority to ſee to the puniſhment of offenders is the inſtrument, by whom he will have it done, and not by any private man for revenge. The Hebrews find in theſe, and the words going before foure kinds of murther. 1 In theſe words, a mans own murthering of another. 2 In the words going next before, at the hands of every mans Brother will I require it; his ſetting of others a work to murther. 3 In the words next before them, at the hand of every beaſt will I require it; his expoſing of a man to wild beaſts to be deſtroyed. 4 In the firſt words, your bloud of your lives will I require; a mans killing of himſelf, ſo that which way ſoever murther be committed, revenge ſhall be taken therefore. And the reaſon added is moſt forcible, for in the Image of God made he man. By killing man Gods living Image is defaced, and if he ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed, that preſumeth to deface the Kings Image, which is a dead thing, how much more he that defaceth this living Image of God? wherefore if this will not move thee, ſaith Chryſoſtome, to flee from murther, becauſe man is of the ſame nature with thee, yet be terrified herefrom to conſider that he is Gods Image, and placed in great dignity. He is one of Gods domeſticks and familiars ſaith Ambroſe, and therefore he cannot ſee him ſlain, but he will be revenged upon the ſlayer. He is next unto God in dignity, as Joſeph was to Pharaoh, and therefore to abuſe him is to abuſe God, who hath thus ſet him up; as Muſculus reaſoneth, Numb. 35. 31. no ſatisfaction might be taken for bloud-ſhed, yea, ſaith Maimony, though he would give all the riches in the World, and the avenger of bloud were willing to free him, becauſe the life of the murthered is not the poſſeſſion of the avenger of bloud, but of the moſt holy God. This law touching bloud being thus ſet down, Moſes returneth again to ſhew, how carefull God was for Noah, his Sonnes and all creatures yet ſurviving, and for their poſterity, repeating again his bleſſing them to increaſe, and making a covenant with them, that he will never more by a floud of waters deſtroy all things again, as he had done, and eſtabliſhing this his Covenant by a ſigne given, the Rainbow. For he ſaith; This is the token of the Covenant, which I make between me

Hebræi.

Chryſoſt.

Ambroſ. de Noah & Arca. c. 16.

Muſculus.

Verſe 7. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Verſe 12.

and

and you, and every living creature with you for perpetuall generations. I do set my Bowe in the cloud, &c. Verse 13.

Noah and his sonnes having been terrified vvith such an horrible deluge lasting so long a time, could not, but yet remaine full of feare, vvhen they should see the clouds to gather together, that another deluge vvas coming: vvherefore the Lord doth not only covenant not to destroy the World vvith a floud any more, but also he giveth a visible signe, vvhereby they should be assured of immunity from such deluges ever hereafter, that thus all fear might be put out of their mindes, and they might rest confident, that they should never be punished thus again. The bovve, vvhich he saith, he vvould set for a signe, is by all generally taken to be the rainbovve, except Ambrose, vvho vvill by no meanes have it thus understood, but of the invisible povver of God, which is as a bowe sometime bent, when he is punishing, and sometime loosed, when he taketh off his punishments again, or forbeareth to proceed in punishing, as if he had said, he would, when clouds did arise, shew his Bow unbent by dispersing them again, before that any such effect of drowning all things should follow. For the rainbowe saith he, is rather a signe of raine, and uncertaine weather, and it is not alvvayes seen, vvhen all is covered vvich Clouds, neither is it seen continually night and day, but in the day-time only, and therefore it cannot be meant here. But it is plain, that the Bovv here spoken of is not an invisible, but a visible thing, for the Bowe, saith he, shall be seen in the Cloud, and although it shevveth some raine, yet no superabundance, but a cessation thereof after a vvhile again, and that the signe here spoken of should alvvayes appeare night and day, there is no reason, but rather of the contrary by the Text, because it is spoken of only, vvhen clouds should arise, and that it might be seen, the day-time is fittest, and not the night, vvhen it is dark and men are at rest.

Ambrof. de Noah & Arca. c. 27.

Verse 14.

But whether was there not a Rainbowe seen before this time? Some have held, that there was not, but that it was made by miracle, as Carthusianus saith, that Alcuinus conceited, and Chrysostome calleth it a miracle, as if he had also been of the same minde, and therefore some have feigned that there were before this no clouds or rain, but a mist, that watered the earth, applying to this purpose that of Gen. 2. 5. The Lord had not caused it to rain upon the earth. But that which is here last said, is a manifest mistaking, because, when raine is denyed to have been, the world was but in making, after the full perfecting whereof it rains and not before, but after this, till the floud no such thing is any where affirmed. And if there were rain and clouds commonly in former times, and a Sun shining upon the clouds, which are the naturall causes of a rainbowe: others say, the rainbowe must needs also have been before, but now it was the Lords pleasure to make the appearing thereof a signe of his care to preserve the World from drowning, so as it had not been in times past, and this is held by Calvin, Musculus, and all others, that I have seen, who also sleight such, as hold, that it was now first shewed. But for mine own part, I must needs confesse, that I am swayed rather by that, wherein they think there is no solidity, that now first the rainbowe was made by a kinde of miracle to appeare. I grant, that the Hebrew word will bear this exposition, Behold, I have set my Bowe, which some lay hold upon, as arguing, that it was before, but now first made a sign, but the Hebrews having no present tenses, but for the present using the Preterperfect also, it may as well be rendered, I do set my Bowe, as in our new translation, and so it may be understood, as of an Act now first done. For shall we, because the Lord doth use some naturall causes to make the rainbowe, as the Sun, and a light and watery cloud right opposite against it, say, that it must needs have alwayes been so from the beginning, seeing these causes have alwaies been? In the generation of man there are naturall causes, the coming together of man and woman, yet generation is not alwayes vvhere these causes are, but vvhen God vvill, so unto the being of the rainbovve, naturall causes alone are not enough

Quest.

Alcuinus. Chrysost. hom. 28. in Gen.

Calvin. Musculus.

enough, but Gods vvill muſt concurre herevvith, he therefore having never appointed theſe cauſes to produce this effect before, vvhy muſt vve needs beleeve, that it vvas before? Moreover if vve conſider the great variety of excellent colours in this bovve, and the admirable frame thereof extending ſo farre, and in the forme of a Bovve, not broader nor narrovver at one place, then at another, vve cannot but acknovvledge Gods hand ſingularly herein, and not only as in other red, or vvhite, or black apparitions in the Aire, there being none other meteor for the artificiall and admirable frame thereof comparable to this, that uſeth commonly to be ſeen, vvherefore even the Heathen Poets called it Thaumantias, a vvonderfull Propheſying, as Ainſworth noteth. We call it indeed Iris, or a rainbovve, but it is truly Gods bovve, by him vvonderfully made to appeare, as a ſigne of his mercy, the end hereof being partly to make us alwayes mindfull of the floud paſt to feare to ſin, and partly to think upon Gods care over us to be confident, when waters do moſt abound, that although ſome particular places may be drowned for ſin, yet the whole world ſhall never be drowned again, as Luther ſaith. Eccl. 43.11. it is ſaid, Look upon the Rainbowe, and praiſe him, that made it. So amongſt the Jews, ſaith Maimony, when any man ſeeth the rainbowe, he bleſſeth God that remembereth his Covenant, and is faithfull therein. If it be demanded, why this Bowe was ſet for a ſigne of this, and whether there be any reaſon of withholding the waters from abounding ſo extraordinarily in it? I anſwer, that experience teacheth it to be a ſigne of raine, eſpecially, if it appeareth in the morning, and the Aire is alwayes watery, when this Bowe is ſeen, and therefore it is a ſigne only by Gods ordinance, and no cauſe of keeping water from overflowing all, as Expoſitours do generally agree, when we ſee this, we are aſſured, that God remembereth his Covenant with Noah and us, not that he needeth a rememberancer, but to ſtrengthen our faith, that he doth remember it. God is, as a Warriour, who having done ſome great exploit, hangeth up his bowe, or his ſword and buckler, not taking it down again to be uſed, as before, becauſe he hath already done enough to be avenged upon his enemies: for even ſo he hangeth his bowe in the Cloud with the bent part to us-ward, intimating, that he is not minded to ſhoot ſo at us with flouds of water, as once he did; becauſe he holdeth himſelfe hereby ſufficiently revenged upon the wicked in this kinde, and therefore will never thus arme himſelf again for a common deſtruction.

Luther.

Quoſt.

Queſt.

But becauſe the World ſhall at the laſt be burnt with fire, it may be queſtioned, whether this ſigne of peace ſhall continue even till then? The author of the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, that ſome holy men have held, that 40 yeares before the day of Judgement, there ſhall no rainbowe appeare, the Aire being extraordinarily dryed, and ſo prepared for that generall burning. But this is a meere conjecture, neither can it be true; becauſe if clouds and raine ſhould not have their courſe, till the end, all things would periſh through the drought, before the coming of that fire, and men might hereby be aſſured of the time approaching, whereas it ſhall come, when it is leaſt thought upon. It is therefore more probable that rainbowes ſhall be ſeen, as now they are, at times, even to the end of the World. The rainbowe, ſaith Ferus, vvas a figure of Chriſts Covenant of peace made vvith his Church, Eſa. 54. 9.10.

Eccleſ. hiſtoria.

Verſe 18. And the ſonnes of Noah going out of the Ark were Shem, Ham and Japhet, and Ham is the father of Canaan, and of them was the Whole Earth overſpread. Hereby it ſeemeth plain, that Noah begat no more children after the floud: for then not only from theſe three, but from them alſo ſhould have come men to overſpread the Earth, or at the leaſt it would finally have been ſaid of Noah, as of others, he begat Sonnes and Daughters; yet Beroſus Anianus ſaith, that he begat ſo ſonnes after this called Teitans after the name of their Mother Titæa, and that they were Giants. And he reaſoneth from the long time, that he lived, viz. 200 yeares after this, and Gods bleſſing of him, as of his ſonnes, bidding them together to increaſe and multply, and the neceſſity Beroſus lib. 30.

neceſſity of the world then required it. What I think of Gods bleſſing him, ſee ver. 1. and for the long time which he lived after this, it was but as the time of him, that now adayes liveth to 90 yeeres, who if he begetteth no children after 60, growing then an olde man, it is no marvell, ſo Noah at 600 was an old man, and therefore though he lived long after, his barrenneſſe thenceforward is not to be admired, eſpecially having one and the ſame wife, who was an old woman alſo. The Lord in bidding them then to increaſe and multiply, and repleniſh the earth, ver. 1. meaneth, that they, who were fit for generation ſhould do ſo, and yet even in their fructifying Noah was alſo bleſſed, becauſe whatſoever increaſe there was, came originally from him, and his family was thus filled. The Jewes have a fable of Chams cutting off his fathers ſtones, that he might get no more children, like to that off the Poets, touching Jupiters gelding of his father Saturne: But I paſſe this over, as fabulous. Beroſus alſo telleth of a fourth ſonne of Noah coming out of the Arke called Tuiſco, as Muſculus ſaith, who was the father of the Germanes and French, but this muſt needs be falſe, becauſe it is often repeated, that Noah had then three ſonnes onely. Muſculus.

Ham was the father of Canaan, why after the three ſons of Noah mentioned is onely the ſon of Ham ſpoken of, and not of any of the other two? To this Chryſoſtome anſwereth, that Hams intemperance is hereby noted, and that he refrained not from the company of his wife, but begat him in the Arke in that time, when all things were overwhelmed with calamity. Chryſ. Hom. 29. in Gen.

But this is improbable, for Ham had other ſons before Canaan, even three, Gen. 10.6. and therefore either the number conteined in the Arke was greater, or elſe Canaan could not be begotten there; Ambroſe ſaith, that this is ſpoken to aggravate the fault of Ham, which here followeth, in that he being a father himſelf did ſhew no more reverence to his father: but then his elder ſonne Cuſh would rather have been ſpoken of, wherefore he addeth another reaſon, which is better, viz. that Canaan was to be the father of the Canaanites, whoſe countrey Gods people were to take into their poſſeſſion. Ambroſ. de Noah & Arca. c. 30.

And this reaſon is further amplified by Muſculus, ſaying, Moſes wrote this to the Children of Iſrael, who were by Gods appointment now to poſſeſſe this countrey, and therefore it was materiall by the way here to deſcribe Ham by his ſonne Canaan, of whom came the Canaanites, that ſeeing, how long ago they were curſed, the Iſraelites might now conceive the better hope, that they ſhould be expelled, and room ſhould be made for them in their countrey. Muſculus.

And Noah began to be an husbanndman, and planted a vineyard. Verſe 21. And he dranke of the wine, and was drunken, &c. In the Hebrew Noah an husbandman began to plant, &c. For he was not the firſt husbandman in the world, but only after the flood: For Cain in the beginning was an husbandman. Yet Noah found out, as was touched before, to do husbandry with the labour of oxen and other beaſts, which was in times paſt unknown, and therefore he is here ſet forth by this name of an husbandman. The word tranſlated, husbandman, is in the Hebrew, a man of the earth, the meaning is by an Hebraiſme, that after he had in the flood-time intermitted his husbandry, now he began to ſet to it again, and to plant a vineyard. Verſe 20, 21

A queſtion is here moved, why Noah applyed himſelf to plant a vineyard, which is for delight, and not rather to ſowe corne firſt, which is for neceſſity, and whether there were no vines before this? The firſt is moved and anſwered by Ambroſe, that Noah left things neceſſary for life to be provided by the Lord, attributing the invention therof to him, but he invented things for comfort and delight: but it is rather to be held, that tilling the ground for corn is not ſpoken of, becauſe that was in uſe long before, but this of planting a vineyard as being new, and for the hiſtory here following, ſo that although his ſowing of corne be not ſpoken of, yet it is moſt probable, that he intended it firſt, and after fell to planting of a vineyard, his ſonnes having now begotten divers children, ſeeing Ham ſeemeth to have had four at the leaſt at this time, Gen. 10.6. And for Calvin. Queſt. Ambroſe.

Chryſoſt. hom. 29. in Gen.

his applying himſelfe to provide for wine-making, Chryſoſtome ſaith, that he was moved hereunto, becauſe having had much ſorrow, he thought hereby to be refreſhed, and to have his grief eaſed, and alſo for the ſtrengthening of the body, which was now become weaker. But as for vines, there were ſuch certainly before the floud, but they were onely ſuch, as grew naturally in the open fields, as moſt hold, and therefore could not yeeld any fruit ſo pleaſant, as being but wilde vines, and ſo the grapes, which they bear, were not uſed for the making of wine, but only to be eaten, as other fruits of the earth. Yet ſome, as Calvin ſaith, have held that there were vineyards before this, and wine was then made and uſed, concernig which he determineth not. The more probable opinion is that there was never any wine made, till now, that Noah deviſed the planting together of vines in a yard, and ſo by cutting and dreſſing of them brought the grape to be more pleaſant and fit to make wine of. Becauſe otherwiſe it would not have been ſpoken of, as now firſt invented, and all antiquity hath ever held Noah to be the firſt, that taught this, calling him therefore Janus from the Hebrew vvord יין ſignifying wine, as Beroſus alſo noteth.

Calvin.

Beroſ lib. 3.

Theodoret. quæſt. 65. Ab inexperientia profecta eſt e vietas Noæ, non ab intemperantia. Nam ille primus omnium compoſitus uvis inerans, non ſolùm quantum eſſet bibendum, ſed quomodo nempe aquâ temperatum, incidit in ebrietatem. Athenæus.

Touching his drunkennes, it is excuſed by moſt, as being a thing, that befell him ignorantly. Hear one for all, Theodor. The drunkennes of Noah, ſaith he, came from inexperience, and not from intemperance. For being the firſt, that preſſed grapes, he was ignorant, not onely, how much was to be drunke, but how, viz. mingled with water. He being alwayes uſed for 600. yeeres to drinke vvater, might eaſily erre, ſuppoſing, that he might drinke as much vvine, as he had uſed to drinke of vvater, and the want of uſing vvine before made him the more apt to be wrought upon vvith the fumes thereof. And laſtly, he was old, and ſo the weaker to bear it, vvhereas his ſons being young, vvho haply dranke of it vvith him, vvere not, that vve read of, over-taken herevvith. But indeed after this it vvas an ancient cuſtome, never to drinke vvine, but mingled vvith vvater, as Athenæus remembereth, ſo much vvater being put to, as three are to five. And to ſignifie this, he ſaith, an altar vvas vvont to be built to the Nymphes neere to Bacchus. By ignorance alſo Chryſoſtome ſaith, that this juſt man became drunken, erring in the quantity, becauſe he knevv not the ſtrength of vvine, but he doth not altogether excuſe him, as not ſinning herein, but by his example admoniſheth others, vvho are far inferiour to him in grace, to take heed of falling. Some thinke, that it vvas no ſinne in him, becauſe altogether involuntary. But becauſe every exceſſe is a ſinne, and here vvas certainly ſome exceſſe, although not before purpoſed, as in thoſe, that drinke vvine novv adayes to exceſſe, it cannot poſſibly bee iuſtified, but it is to be held in Noah a ſinne of ignorance, in ſuch as offend this way in theſe dayes, a moſt foul and horrible vice. He that is voluntarily drunken, ſaith Chryſoſtome, his drukenneſſe is a Devill, yea more odious then a Devill, for when we ſee a man poſſeſſed with a Devill, we are affected with pity, and condole with him, but contrariwiſe we hate drunkard, and thinke them altogether unworthy of mercy, and worthy of ſevere puniſhment. Becauſe what is acted by one poſſeſſed is altogether againſt his will, but the miſchiefe done by a drunkard, is altogether of himſelfe.

Muſculus.

Chryſoſt.

Quæſt.

Calvin.

But why did Moſes tell of the drunkenneſſe of Noah, and not rather burie it in ſilence, ſeeing it was likely, that men would upon this example wax the bolder in this ſinne? Calvin ſaith, that the Lord would have him thus branded with a perpetuall note of ignominy, although a moſt juſt and temperate man, for this one fault, that others might learne to beware of drunkenneſſe. But herein the ſimplicity of the Word of God appeareth, in that none are ſpared, but the faults even of the beſt are laid open, as well as of others. Howſoever drunkards cannot have any colour for their ſin from hence. 1 Becauſe Noah knew not the ſtrength of wine, they know it. 2 Becauſe it doth not appear, that he dranke much, but onely he dranke

ſome

some wine, to which being never used before, a little might thus work upon his brain, but they are mighty to poure in wine, and strong to poure in strong drink. Esay 5.22.
3 Because he never offended in this kind again, but they often.

And he was uncovered within his Tent. By drunkennesse man is deprived of reason, and then there is nothing so brutish but he will do, he is not ashamed to cast off his cloathes and lay even his shamefull parts open to the view of all men; And thus Noah did at this time, by his nakednesse, as it is called in the Hebrew, the discovering of his privities being understood, and therefore in the vulgar Latin it is rendered turpitudo, and verenda patris sui. That Noah should do so shamefully in his drunkennesse the Lord suffered, saith Calvin, to humble him the more, and to make him the more carefully to flee drunkennesse ever after. For being seen thus by Cham he could not, but be greatly ashamed, ever since the fall of man, we being by a just judgement of God most unable to rule these parts by reason from rising and moving to things obscœne and filthy, as Augustine noteth, and therefore being greatly ashamed, even by nature to have them seene. Calvin. Aug. de civit. lib. 14. cap. 17.

And Ham the Father of Canaan saw the nakednesse of his Father, and told his two Brethren without. Verse 22. It may seem strange here, that Ham should be thus ill affected to his own Father to deride him, and to seek to bring others to do likewise. But it is to be understood, that as at the beginning there was a Cain as well as an Abel, so now there is a wicked Ham as well as a Godly Shem, who was opposite to his Father, as whose righteousnesse rebuked him and his evil courses daily, wherefore he was glad of this opportunity, to see his Father in sin, thinking that this was some cloak for his own wickednesse, and it was a feeding to his envious minde to see him shamed. For even as Vultures, saith Basil, are carryed to things smelling ill, and flyes to ulcerous places, so the envious are most attent to that, which is vilely done, and if any thing be done amisse, they publish it, and will have other men know it also. Basil. Orat. de invidia. It is commonly held, that Ham was Zoroastres, so called for his skill in Magick and in Witchcraft. For Berosus saith, that hence he had this name, and when his Father was thus uncovered, he came and handled his privy parts, and by his charms effected, that he was unable to beget children ever after. Berosus. And Cassianus saith, that he was most studious of these wicked arts, and taught the same to his posterity, having before the flood ingraven them in most hard stones, and in Iron plates, that they might endure, so likewise the author of the Scholasticall History, and if he were thus vilely addicted, no marvel, though he hated his Father, who doubtlesse was a professed enemy to such wicked studies. Cassianus. Serarius. Col. 8. c. 21. Scholast. Histor. But a question doth here offer it self, why Ham is described by his Son Canaan, Ham the Father of Canaan? Besides the reasons before rendered upon verse 18. The Hebrews tell another speciall reason, why he is thus named here, viz. because Canaan his Son saw Noah thus uncovered first, and went and told Ham his Father, who to make it yet more publick, shewed it to Shem and Japhet. And this is the more probable, both because Canaan is accursed, when Noah awoke from his drunkennesse, and it is said, that it was told Noah, what his younger son had done, which cannot be understood of Ham, the middlemost, but of Canaan his son, seeing Grandchildren are also commonly called their Grand-fathers sons: thus also Theodoret, who besides this yet bringeth another reason, Canaan in wickednesse was most like unto his Father Ham, and therefore good reason, that he of all his sonnes should specially be named. Quest. Hebraei. Theodoret.

And Shem and Japhet took a garment, and laid it upon their shoulders, and went backward, and covered the nakednesse of their Father, &c. Verse 23. A strange and stupendious sight, so reverend a man in drunkennesse, shamefully naked and derided of his own Son: certainly this was a great judgement upon him; therefore that others may be warned to take heed of the like, as Calvin noteth, and that his sonnes, who were better disposed, turned their faces away, as being ashamed to behold him. This shewed great piety in Shem and Japhet, Calvin.

and in them piety towards Parents, and a reverence of them is commended to all generations. The faults of Parents then are to be covered by their children from the eyes of others, and not to be laid open, and yet in the children, there ought to be an averſneſſe therefrom, as Shem and Japhet turned away from beholding their Fathers nakedneſſe. To this purpoſe Gregory ſpeaketh elegantly applying it to ſpirituall Fathers alſo, when the life of Maſters is worthy of reproof, ſuch as are ſubject unto them, yet muſt reverence them even when they diſpleaſe. But this is wiſely to be conſidered, that they imitate not thoſe, whom they ought to reverence, or contemne not to reverence ſuch, as they deſpiſe to imitate. As the good Sons of Noah gave them example in hiding their Fathers nakedneſſe backward. For even ſo the faults of Teachers ſhould diſpleaſe their Subjects, but they ought to hide them from others. The Papiſts lay hold upon this, as making againſt us, who ſpare not to publiſh the vices of their holy Fathers, the Popes, and of other ſpirituall perſons amongſt them. But Muſculus anſwereth well, that they are not Fathers, but Wolves, not Paſtours, but Tyrants, not Miniſters of Chriſt, but ſervants of Satan, and that they write books in the defence of Sodometry, and other vices, and ſo publiſh their own wickedneſſe, and therefore no reverence can be given to them without danger to the Soule. But for ſuch, as teach the truth, although there be ſhamefull things in them, the people ſhould with Shem and Japhet hide them, but yet diſlike them, becauſe when the vices of Gods Miniſters are laid open before all men, they will be ready to ſtumble hereat, and to grow licentious in ſinning. Thus therefore Theodoret reporteth, that Conſtantine the Great having many accuſations againſt divers Biſhops brought unto him, they one complaining of another, would not once look upon them, but ſealed them all up, and having reconciled them together again cauſed them to be brought out and burnt before their faces, proteſting, that he had not read one word in all thoſe Writings, becauſe the vices of Paſtours ought not to be opened to the people for the ſcandall, which would enſue hereupon, yea he added moreover, that if he ſhould ſee a Biſhop lye with any mans Wife, he would cover that foule vice with his Garment, leaſt the beholding of it ſhould ſome way hurt thoſe, that ſhould ſee it. But this is not to be underſtood of thoſe, that are commonly fouly vicious, as many are, but generally vertuous, as Noah was, but ſometime only by infirmity overtaken. For notoricus ſinnors of any ſort are to be rebuked openly, that others may feare.

Gregor. lib. 25. Moral. Si Magiſtrorum vita diſpliceat, oportet, ut eos ſubditi etiam cùm diſplicent, veneréntur: ſed hoc eſt ſolerter intuendum, ut quem venerari debent ne aut imitari velint, aut quem imitari deſpiciunt venerari contemnant, &c.

Muſculus.

Theod. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 1. 11.

Verſe 24.

But Noah awaking from his drunkenneſſe, knew what his younger Son had done to him, &c. Wine filleth the head with vapours, and ſo maketh a man ſleepy, and ſo Noah being drunken ſlept ſoundly in that uncovered caſe, wherein he was. But being now awake again he underſtandeth, what his younger ſonne had done to him, either by the Garment, which he found upon him, examining and finding out by Shem and Japhet, what had been done, or elſe by divine Revelation. But who is this younger ſonne here ſpoken of? Some think that it was Canaan the Grandchild, as was partly touched before, and not Ham himſelf. But becauſe, if Canaan did any thing, it is paſſed over here in ſilence, their opinion is better, who hold that Cham is meant, being called the younger Son, becauſe he was wicked, as hath been noted upon Gen. 5. 32. Saint Auguſtine hath an obſervation upon the ſignification of his name, Ham, ſaith he, ſignifying hot, the middle ſonne of Noah, as it vvere differing from the other tvvo, neither of the firſt fruits of the Iſraelites, nor of the fulneſſe of the Gentiles, ſignifieth a kinde of Hereticks, hot not vvith the ſpirit of vviſdome, but of ſubtile craftineſſe, vvhereby their hearts are vvont to boile, and to trouble the peace of the Church.

Muſculus. Queſt. Auguſt. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, c. 2 Hæreticorum genus calidum, non ſpiritu ſapientiæ, ſed verſpellis aſtutiæ, quo ſolent hæreticorum fervere præcordia & pacem turbare ſanctorum, &c.

Verſe 25.

And he ſaid, Curſed be Canaan, a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be to his Brethren.

It may ſeeme ſtrange, that Noah avvaking from his drunkenneſſe doth not firſt humble himſelf for his fault, but falleth immediatly to raging againſt his ſonne;

ſon: but Calvin anſvvereth vvell, that this is not to be taken, as a raging, but as a curſe coming upon a diſobedient Son by the ſpirit of Propheſie, it appearing hereby, what an horrible ſinne it is for children to be irreverent and undutifull towards their parents, it bringeth the moſt ſevere curſe of God down upon their heads. And as for his penitencie, it is not to be doubted, but that he was affected with much ſorrow, though it be not expreſſed, and certainly, he could not without much grief, thus accurſe his owne ſonne, and abdicate him and his out of the Church of God: thus alſo Theodoret.

Calvin.

Theodoret.

But when as Cham the father had offended, why is Canaan the ſon accurſed, and how can it be juſt to puniſh the ſon for the Fathers fault? The beſt anſwere, as I take it, to this is that, which is grounded upon ſomewhat ſaid before touching Canaan, that he told his father Ham of Noahs nakedneſſe, and ſo the beginning of the contempt was in him, ſo that Noahs knowing of that, which his younger ſon had done unto him, is to be underſtood with this circumſtance, that Canaan was the firſt, that began the irriſion, when he ſhewed it to Ham: Thus Theodoret and ſome others. And for his paſſing over the naming of Ham in this his curſe, he ſaith, that he did thus becauſe he durſt not curſe him, whom God had expreſly bleſſed but a little before amongſt his other ſonnes, and Chryſoſtome alſo toucheth upon the ſame. Calvin rejecteth this ſaying, that Canaan is named and not Ham, to aggravate the curſe, as being thus extended to his poſterity from generation to generation, Ham not being hereby exempted from the curſe, but when Canaan is curſed, the curſe redoundeth to him alſo, ſo likewiſe Muſculus. To this, which is alſo one reaſon brought by Ambroſe, he addeth two more, viz. 1 That Ham might be the more vexed, his younger and ſo his moſt beloved ſonne being thus ſmitten with a curſe. 2 Becauſe Canaan vvas moſt like to his father in vvickedneſſe. If it be true, vvhich the Hebrevves report, that Canaan firſt told Ham of Noahs nakedneſſe, the firſt anſvver is vvithout all exception, and the next queſtion touching the ſonne being puniſhed for the fathers offence, is eaſily reſolved alſo, and vvhy Canaan rather, then any of Hams other three ſonnes, ſeeing he had an hand in this wickedneſſe. Othervviſe the anſvver of Calvin may ſtand, vvho alſo ſaith, that the judgements of God are an abyſſe, the bottome vvhereof cannot be ſounded, & therefore although vve can finde no reaſon of Canaans being accurſed more, then any of his other brethren, vve muſt in ſilence ſubſcribe to the juſtice of God herein. Touching that queſtion in generall of children being puniſhed for their Fathers offence, it is to be underſtood, that they are never thus puniſhed, but vvhen they communicate vvith their fathers in their ſinnes: For the ſonne ſhall not beare the ſinne of the father, but that ſoule, which ſinneth, ſhall die. One then is puniſhed for another, ſometime becauſe he is guilty of as great vvickedneſſe, ſo that, as a Prince, when many rebell againſt him, may take and puniſh which of the rebels it pleaſeth him: ſometime alſo becauſe they are fellow-members of the ſame ſociety, when one ſinneth, others are puniſhed, as in the caſe of Achan, but onely temporally for a greater, that is, a ſpirituall good, that the more fear to offend may be ſtricken into mens mindes, as the Chirugion ſtriketh & pierceth one member for the good of the whole body: ſomtime to grieve him the more that hath offended, when they, which are dear unto him, are ſmitten, as Davids people for his numbering of them, and Jeroboams poſterity, and ſometime becauſe others, although they be free from ſuch heinous ſinnes, yet they make themſelves guilty by not chiding, and admoniſhing thoſe that offend ſo; either to ſpare the labour, or for feare of their faces, or to avoid their enmity, leſt they ſhould hinder them of that, which they deſire, or bring upon them that which they feare, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh. Now the Canaanites vvere puniſhed for Hams ſinne for the firſt reaſon, becauſe they were a moſt wicked people, and becauſe Ham muſt needs be pierced with the more ſorrow for the extent of his puniſhment thus to his poſterity for ever after. A ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be to his brethren, &c. That is, to Shems poſterity, his

Queſt.

Theodoret.

Chryſoſt. Calvin. Muſculus.

Ambroſ. de Noah & Arca, c. 32.

One puniſhed for another.

Ezech. 18.

Aug. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, c. 2.

his poſterity ſhall be moſt ſervile, and ſubject, ſome, yea, moſt of them being cut off by the Sword, and ſome made ſlaves unto them, as the Gibeonites: But this was not effected a long time, for the Canaanites rather proſpered; and had great dominion, ſo that this threatening might ſeem to have been fruſtrated; and ſo indeed that which the Lord promiſed in mercy to Abraham might ſeem likewiſe, yet we may be ſure, that Gods threatenings and promiſes ſhall not finally fall to the ground, but although they ſeem a long time to have none effect, the Lord will make them all good in his due time, as Oecolampadius noteth here.

Note.

Oecolampad.

Verſe 26.

And he ſaid moreover, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Shem, and let Canaan be his ſervant. Shem was the eldeſt, and accordingly, as it ſeemeth, the moſt excellent of Noahs ſonnes, and ſhewed herein moſt piety to his Father, although Japhet was a good man alſo, and joyned with him, yet happily Shem moved him firſt unto it, and therefore Shem is firſt praiſed, or God is praiſed for this his great piety. He doth not call God the Lord God of Shem, as if he were not his God alſo, but prophetically intimating, that the true God ſhould be worſhipped only amongſt his poſterity, and that the holy Patriarches, and Prophets, and Chriſt himſelfe ſhould come of him. In that he bleſſeth God for the grace in Shem and his, note, that God is the author of all grace, and therefore he alone ought to have the praiſe of it: ſo Muſculus.

Muſculus.

Verſe 27.

God perſwade Japhet to dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan ſhall be his ſervant. In the Hebrew there is an alluſion in the word tranſlated perſwade, to the name Japhet, for it is יפת Japhet, which moſt tranſlate, inlarge Japhet, but Vatablus ſaith, that it properly ſignifieth to allure with faire ſpeeches. Of Japhet came many Nations, eſpecially the Inhabitants of Europe, of Shem Heber, from whom the Hebrews had their originall and name. Now God draweth Japhet to dwell in the Tents of Shem, when he bringeth the Europeans and others coming of Japhet to the faith of Chriſt, who came of Shem, which was notably effected under the Goſpel: theſe Tents being left by Shems poſterity, who rejected the faith, and wholly poſſeſſed ſince by Japhets, who imbrace it, and ſo are now the true Church of God, with whom yet the Hebrews ſhall one day make one people being converted to the faith alſo. Thus almoſt Rupertus, ſaying that the Tents of Shem are the priviledges of the Hebrews commemorated, Rom. 9. 4, 5. wherein the Gentiles deſcended of Japhet came to partake with them, being made by faith the Church of God. For of Japhet came the Greeks and Italians, of whom are the Greek and Latin tongues, wherein the Goſpel hath been brought, not only to Japhets poſterity inhabiting divers other Countreys, but to ſome of Hams poſterity alſo. The word, and dwell in the Tents of Shem, is by ſome, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt, referred unto God, as if it had been ſaid, and God dwell in the Tents, &c. not in the Tents of Japhet, becauſe they a long time worſhipped falſe gods, but of Shem, becauſe amongſt the Hebrews, coming of Shem, the true Religion was a long time maintained and exerciſed, and not amongſt any other people: and alſo, becauſe Chriſt, God and Man, dwelt in his Tents, when the God-head vouchſafed to take fleſh of him. Thus Theodoret alſo and Lyranus. But it doth better agree to referre it to Japhet, as hath bin ſaid, that he ſhould be perſwaded, or inlarged to dwell in the Tents of Shem. So Rupert, Calvin, Vatablus, &c. and therefore it is added, and let Canaan be his ſervant, as diſtinguiſhing betwixt Japhet and Ham in his poſterity, the one ſhould dwell together as an equall and fellow, the other ſhould be as a ſervant unto Shem. But what meaneth this repetition of the ſame, ſhall Canaan ſtill be a ſervant, even after the coming in of the Gentiles, and if ſo, how ſhall the fulneſſe of the Gentiles come in, and the Goſpel be preached to all Nations? I Anſwer, the Canaanites were ſo deſtroyed, that they remained not unto this time, and if ſome remained, they were mixed with other peoples, and ſo in time loſt their name, ſo that whileſt that name laſted, they were ſervants, and out of the Covenant of grace, and if they came in ſince, this

Vatablus.

Rupert. lib. 4. in Gen. c. 39.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Theodoret.
Lyranus.

Rupertus.
Calvin.
Vatablus.

was, as others of the sons of Ham amongst the Gentiles, who are reckoned unto Japhet. From that which hath been said hitherto touching these three sons of Noah, something allegoricall may be observed. Shem is a type of the faithfull and Orthodox in the Church of God, Japhet of such, as somtime erre and wander in the wayes of wickednesse: for in saying, God perswade Japhet, and let him dwell in the Tents of Shem, it is intimated, that for a time his posterity should erre, and follow many abominations, as they did indeed, but as they are at length converted, so are many wicked persons also, but Ham figureth out Hereticks, who are most fervent for Heresie, and in opposing the truth, touching whom no comfort is spoken, but servitude and misery, because such are seldome turned. And as Ham seeth his Fathers nakednesse and derideth it, so these, because of the fraile and weak nature of man in Christ, have denyed his Godhead and have made a mock, some of them of the blessed Trinity: but as Shem & Japhet reverenced their Father even in his nakednesse, so the faithfull, and the worst of all being converted do highly esteem of Christ thus humbled and abased, knowing that the vile things of God are more glorious, then the most noble amongst men. And as Ham was cursed in Canaan and his offspring, this curse being to take effect long after, so wicked Hereticks, although they flourish for a time, shall at length be abased and destroyed, as experience hath taught in the Arrians, Ebionites, &c. and we hope will appeare more and more in the Antichristian Sect of Rome, but as Shem signifieth a name, and Japhet may be taken for inlarging, so the true Church of God shall be inlarged extending it self at length into all the parts of the World, and be most famous throughout all generations, upon this Augustine partly toucheth, lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, Cap. 2. and Gregory lib. 26 moral. and seeing Noahs family was now a figure of the Church to come, as it was all the Church for the present, I see not, how it can be amisse to make some such allegoricall application. Ferus saith, that mystically by Noah being drunken, &c. Christ was set forth, who being drunken with the love of his Church slept by death, and was therefore had in ignominy by the Jewes and wicked worldlings, but by the faithfull reverenced and covered, they shewing, that it was for our sins. And one day, he will awake and curse wicked mockers, and blesse the faithfull, which honour him.

An Allegory.

Noah lived after the floud 350 yeares, so all the dayes of Noah were 950 yeares, and he dyed. By this compu.ation it appeareth, that Noah lived after Abraham was born 51 years, for he was born 299 yeares after the floud, as may be seen, Gen. 11. And it is to be thought, that God did thus prolong his life, that his care of the Church in all times might the more appeare, in that he never left it without some famous Prophet to teach and to direct in his true worship and service. Before the floud were Sheth next unto Adam, Enos, Cainan, &c. and lastly, Methusalem, who lived till the very year of the floud: from thence forward Noah, and Abraham, &c. Of any notable thing done by Noah after this Moses spareth to write, although it is not to be doubted, but he did many, for brevities sake, as one hastening to the History of Abraham, for the same cause not writing any thing of note of the other Progenitours of Abraham. For his drift is to set forth the City of God, and such things onely unto which some mysticall relations are still annexed, not that all things set down are mysticall, for some are without signification set dovvn, only to bring in the more aptly such, as be significative: thus Augustine; and therefore they take a vaine labour in hand, that vvill have all things in the vvritings of Moses to be Allegoricall.

Verse 28, 29

August. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

IN this Chapter it is ſhewed, how Gods bleſſing upon Noah and his ſons took effect to make them exceeding fruitfull to repleniſh the whole world, which is thought from theſe three, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, to have been of olde divided into three parts, Europe, Aſia and Africa. In ſetting downe their off-ſpring he firſt beginneth with Japhet.

Verſe 2. The ſonnes of Japhet, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meſhech and Tiras.

It may be demanded here, why Iaphet and his ſons are firſt ſpoken of? To this ſome anſwer, that he was the eldeſt, but the ſame hold Ham to have been the youngeſt, why then is not he ſpoken laſt of, but middlemoſt? Moreover, that not Iaphet, but Shem was the eldeſt hath been already proved. Some, that Iaphets poſterity was greateſt, and inhabited parts more remote from the Hebrewes, to whom Moſes vvrote, and therefore he doth firſt curſorily paſſe him with his over, as being not ſo much knowne to the Hebrewes, dwelling longer upon Ham and his poſterity, as with whom the Hebrewes were more familiarly acquainted, Some, that Iaphet was laſt ſpoken of in the former Chapter, and therefore his hiſtory is here firſt proceeded in. But the reaſon of Auguſtine is beſt, it is uſuall with Moſes to begin with the youngeſt, and ſo to go on to the eldeſt to ſpeak firſt of thoſe, concerning whom he meaneth to ſay little, as not being of the City of God, and then of thoſe that belong to this City, as upon whoſe Hiſtory he meaneth chiefly to dwell, and for whoſe ſake he writeth. Now in ſetting down the ſons of Iaphet, we are not to conceive, as Calvin ſaith, that all are named that came of him, or of his ſons in the next generation, for the children of two of them onely are named, viz. of Gomer and Iavan, whereas it is not to be doubted, but the other five had children alſo. But ſo many onely are named, viz. ſeven of Iaphets ſons, and ſeven of his ſons ſons, becauſe theſe were moſt famous, and of more excellent parts, and ſo ruling over the reſt, and ſuch as from whom Countreys had their denominations. Theſe fourteene then poſſeſſed fourteen Countreys, and of them, and ſuch, as lived under them, were they peopled. And here by the way be it noted, that although the whole world was divided into three parts according to the number of Noahs three ſons, yet that diviſion made in Noahs time hath ſince been altered. For Iaphet had not only that part, which is called Europe, but that part of Aſia alſo, which we call Aſia, with the North extending to the Mediterranean Sea, and coming up to Paleſtine. He was ſpoken of as one that ſhould be inlarged, and hereby it appears, how he was inlarged indeed, being made more populous in his poſterity, then any of his brethren. So that all this was then counted for one part. And the reſt of Aſia inhabited by Shems poſterity vvas another part, and Africa repleniſhed with Hams off-ſpring; So Luther. But how the children of theſe three vvere diſperſed over the World, will appear better, vvhen vve come to ſpeak of them in particular.

Hebræi. Lyranus. Teſtatus. Calvin. Auguſt. Calvin. Muſculus. Luther.

As Iaphet is here ſpoken of, ſo amongſt the Heathen Poets, one Iapetus is much celebrated, borne of the Heaven and the Earth, vvho made war vvith Iupiter, being the father of Prometheus, and grandfather to Deucaleon, vvhereby it appeareth, that they vvere not altogether unacquainted vvith the Hiſtory of Moſes. Gomer the firſt of Japheth ſons here named, is ſaid by Ioſephus to have been the father of the Galatians, or Gallogrecians, and of his poſteritie vve read, Ezech. 38. Gomer and all his troopes, the houſe of Togarma, the ſides of the North, and all their ſtrength, &c. Magog the ſecond was the father of the Gothes according to ſome, as Ierome ſaith, but he rather holdeth that the Getes, and Maſſagetes, and Scythians came of him: ſo alſo Ioſephus, and of the Scythians came the Tartars and Turkes of Gog and Magog Ezekiel ſpeaketh, as the chief prince of Meſhech and Tubal. Madai the third Gomer. Ioſeph. Magog. Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen. Ioſephus. Ezech. 38. Madai.

vvas

vvas by the consent of all, the Father of the Medes famous once for their Empire.

The fourth Javan, was the father of those Greekes called Joves, and therefore the word Javan by the Septuagint is rendered ἑλλάδα, Grecian. Of Javan we may read more, Esay 66. Ezech. 27. Joel. 3. Iavan.

Tubal the fifth is said by Josephus to have been the father of the Iberians, who were since called Spaniards, the Hebrewes say, that he was father of the Italians before called Hesperians. See more of Tubal, Ezech. 17. 39. and how he is joyned with Mosoch, the sixt, who is thought to have been the father of the Muscovites by some, but Josephus saith, that the Cappadoceans came of him, and that this is made the more probable by the name of a chief city amongst them called Masecha. And indeed the word is not Mosoch in the Hebrew, but Meshech, by the Septuagint rendered Mosoch, whence the name Moschi was thought to come. The Psalmist speaketh of Meshech, as neere to Chedar. Thiras the seventh, was the father of the Thracians, Thracians quasi Theraceans. Yet Isodorus saith, although this be the right denomination, the Gentiles called them so from their fierceneſse, becauſe they would offer men in sacrifice being taken captive to their gods, and drinke mans blood in the skuls of mens heads, the flesh and haire being plucked off. Tubal. Ioseph. Mosoch. Psal. 120. Thiras. Isidor lib. 9. Etymolog.

Verse 3.

The sonnes of Gomer were Ashkenaz, Riphath and Togarmah. Of all the sonnes of Japhet two onely are spoken of again, as having sonnes, Gomer and Javan. Not becauſe the other five wanted, but becauſe none amongst them founded anew any countrey, but lived in their fathers countreys, contenting themselves with the possessions left by them. Ashkenaz was the father of a countrey not farre from the Medians, for when Jeremiah reckoneth up those, that should together with the Medes overthrow Babylon, he nameth Ashkenaz amongst the rest. But Iosephus will have the Rhegians to come of him, the Moderne Jewes the Germanes, others the Goaths. Riphat, some say, was the father of the Paphlagonians. Thogormah is afterwards spoken of as an assistant of Magog against the Hebrewes, by Ezech. 38. and therefore his offspring were inhabitants of Asia, as is most probable. Some will have them Phrygians, some Turks, some Cappadocians, and some Germans. Ashkenaz. Jeremy 51. Iosephus. Iudæi. Riphat. Thogormah.

Verse 4.

The sons of Javan Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim. By these were the Isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands, every one after his tongue, &c.

Elishah the first was, as Iosephus saith, father of the Greekes called Æolians. But the vulgar Latine, where Elisah is spoken of, Ezech. 27. rendereth it Italia. There are also certain Fortunate Islands called Elisian Islands, happily from this man, hence the Elisian fields were so much spoken of amongst the Heathen Poets. Iosephus. Elisha.

Of the second Tarsish it is held, that the Cilicians came, becauſe of their City Tarsus so famous throughout the world, yet the Sea is also sometime called Tarsus, becauſe the Cilicians were Masters of a great part thereof, and of the Countreys adjoyning thereunto. Of Tarsus see more, Acts 22. 3. Tharsh sis.

Of the third Kittim it is thought, that divers peoples came which dwell from the Hebrewes beyond the Seas, both in the firme land and in Islands, wherefore it is a word of the plurall number. But chiefly Cyprus was inhabited by them, the chiefe City whereof is called Citium, as Iosephus saith, next Italy, for hereby is this word Translated in the Latine, Numb. 24. and by the Romanes, Dan. 11. Lastly, Macedonia in Grecia: for Alexander, who came out of Macedonia, is said to have come out of Cethim, 1 Macchab. 1. 1. and so did Philip his father, ver. 8. Kittim.

Of the fourth Dodanim came the inhabitants of the Rhodes, as some think, D being turned into R and so Rhodanim being made, and thus the Septuagint interpet it, 1 Chron. 1. Such alterations have been in the vvorld, since the time of these men, that much cannot be said certainly of the Countreys in particular, to vvhich they dispersed themselves. But of these four last, that came of Iavan vve are here assured, that the Islands of the Gentiles vvere Dodanim.

Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

poſſeſſed, that is, theſe of Europe, and Ierom ſpeaking of the Greeks, that came of him, ſaith, if we look into the Books of Varro, and of other learned Writers, we ſhall finde, that almoſt all the Iſlands and Shores of the World neare to Grecia were poſſeſſed by the Greeks from the Mountain Amanus and Taurus to the Britiſh Ocean. Touching the tongues here ſpoken of, this is by way of Anticipation, for till the confounding of tongues, all were of one Language, and then firſt they were divided into many.

Gen. 11.

Verſe 6.

And the ſonnes of Ham, Cuſh, Miſraim, Phut and Canaan. Hams poſterity, as Joſephus ſaith, inhabited Syria, cleaving to the Mount Amanus and Libanus, and extending to the Ocean Cuſh, his eldeſt ſonne is generally held to be the Father of the Ethiopians: whereas it may ſeem otherwiſe, that Arabia was rather their Countrey then Ethiopia, becauſe Arabia was near Egypt and Paleſtina, as the Cuſæan Countrey is deſcribed to be, Numb. 12. where the wife of Moſes is called a Cuſean, who was a Madianite, and the Madianites dwelt mixt vvith the Arabians, and 2 Chron. 14. vvhere Zara the King of the Cuſeans is ſaid to bring againſt the Jevvs an Army of 1000000, vvhich could not have been done, if he had been of Ethiopia for the farre diſtance thereof being under the torrid Zone. It is anſvvered, that amongſt Geographers there are tvvo Countreys ſpoken of called by the name of Ethiopia, one in the Eaſt, and the other in the Weſt, one of vvhich vvas near to Egypt, the other farre of, being divided from it by the Perſian Gulph. Thus Atrabo and Pliny, vvho ſay, that the Ethiopians had a moſt large Empire ſometime, ruling even unto Egypt, from vvhich ſome parts thereabouts ſtill reteined the name of Ethiopia, as vvell as that Countrey ſo farre off. Mizraim the ſecond ſonne of Ham vvas Father of the Egyptians, vvherefore Mizraim in Hebrevv is alvvayes tranſlated Egypt, or Egyptians. Yet that Countrey vvas not called Egypt, till the time of Ægyptus, vvho, as Manethon in Joſephus contra Appion. ſaith, having put dovvn his Brother Danaus, reigned over that Countrey alone, vvhich vvas 390 yeares after the Hebrevvs departure out of Egypt by the conduct of Moſes, vvhich vvas a 1000 yeares from Noahs floud. So that this Kingdome is moſt ancient, but the boaſts of the Egyptians themſelves, vvho affirme their Kingdome to have ſtood 13000 yeares do farre outſtrip the truth.

Ioſeph. Cuſh.

Strabo lib. 1. Plin. lib. 5.

Mizraim. Egyptians

Manethon.

The third ſonne of Ham, Phut was the Father of the Lybians, as Joſephus ſaith, and after him Ierome, being firſt called after him Phutians, and Greek Writers ſpeak of a Region near Lybia called Phuta. But this Countrey was called Lybia afterwards from one of the ſonnes of Mizraim, whoſe name was Lybis, it lyeth in Africa. In Ezech. 30. where Phut is named amongſt others, it is tranſlated, the Lydians, as Cuſh there named is Ethiopia. The fourth ſon of Ham, Canaan is ſufficiently known to be the Father of the Canaanites, whom the Iſraelites expelled out of their Countrey, and brought into ſervitude.

Phut. Ioſeph. Lybians Hieron.

Canaan.

Verſe 7.

And the ſonnes of Cuſh, Seba and Havilah, Sabtah, Raamah, Sabtecah, and the ſonnes of Raamah, Shebah and Dedan.

Seba the firſt here was Father of the Sabeans inhabiting Arabia Fœlix, ſo called for the abundance of ſweet odours and ſpices, which that Countrey yielded, Strabo ſaith, that this is a very great Countrey, bearing Myrrh, Cynamon and Frankincenſe, and it is extended, ſaith Pliny, from Sea to Sea, that is, from the Perſian to the Arabick, but in this tract of ground dwelt not only the Sabeans coming of Seba, but the Shebeans alſo, who came of Raamah, and therefore the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh of them, as dwelling neare together, the Kings of Sheba and Saba ſhall bring preſents. For of Raaniah came Shebah the Father of the Shebeans, who dwelt in part of this Arabia Fœlix, having plenty of ſpices, and ſweet odours, and Gold alſo, and yet being given much to robbing.

Seba. Sabeans

Strabo lib. 16. Plin. lib 6. c. 28.

Pſal. 72. 10. Sheba.

The ſecond ſonne of Cuſh, Havilah ſeemeth to have been Father of the Canlateans, or Canilateans ſpoken of by Strabo, as dwelling alſo in part of Arabia, Havila. Strabo lib. 15.

Arabia neare to the Iſhmaelites, of whom I have ſpoken before, Gen. 2. 11. yet Joſephus and Ierome after him will have them to be the Getuli dwelling in a deſert of the furtheſt part of Africa.

The third Sabtah, was Father of the Sabbatheans, who, as may be gathered from Ptolomee, dwelt alſo in Arabia, becauſe he ſpeaketh of a certain chief City there called Sabatha, Ioſephus ſaith, the ſame people were called Aſtabari.

Sabtah. Sabbatheans Ptolom.
Ioſeph.

The fourth Raamah, and the fifth Sabtecah, Ierome ſaith, that no man hath remembered in what parts they inhabited, and therefore I can ſay nothing of them. Touching the firſt ſonne of Raamah Sheba, enough hath been ſaid already. Dedan his other ſonne was Father of the Dedaneans, of whom Ezechiel ſpeaketh, as next neighbours to the Idumeans, threatning them, that they ſhould be cut off together, ſo likewiſe Ieremiah.

Raamah.
Sabtecah.

Dedan.

Ezech. 27.
Jeremy 49.

Moreover Cuſh begat Nimrod, he began to be mighty in the earth, he was a mighty hunter before the Lord, &c. Verſe 8, 9.

Nimrod being ſuch a man, as that Moſes had more to ſay of him, then of any of the other ſonnes of Cuſh, for that greatneſſe, unto which he grew, ſpeaketh not of him amongſt the reſt, but here a part by himſelfe, yet ſome think, that he is thus ſpoken of, becauſe begotten of an Harlot, as Marlorat ſaith, or becauſe after thoſe two children of Raamah, the ſonne of Cuſh, which is one reaſon rendered by Auguſtine, but he preferreth the firſt in reſpect of his greatneſſe, calling him therefore a Giant, according to the Greek Tranſlations, wherein for mighty a Giant is put. This Nimrod was the firſt Tyrant in the World, others, who had ſome rule amongſt men, exerciſing their authority rather to govern civilly, then to domineere by force, as Calvin teacheth out of Iuſtin, who ſaith, that the moſt ancient manner of Government was that, whereby through reverence to the perſon ſet up men were voluntarily ruled. So Noah who yet lived, and Shem, and other chief men ruled, but Nimrod by his ambition troubleth the ſtate of the World, and ſubdueth all that he could by force unto him. Ioſephus ſaith, that Nimrod an audacious man and valiant ſtirred up men to the contempt of God, ſaying, that they did owe their preſent felicity not to God, but to their owne vertue, thus drawing them unto him, and offering himſelfe to them, as a Captaine. Here we may ſee, what was the firſt beginning of proud Kings, who ambitiouſly lift up themſelves above other men, forcing them to obey their wills, and not ruling, as is neceſſary, according to equity and right, that none may ſuffer wrong, but all have juſtice done to them. Such came originally from curſed Cham, the worſt of Noahs ſonnes, and ſo whatſoever worldly Glory they attein unto, they are ſtill but baſe and vile: He was a mighty hunter before the Lord, upon theſe words there are divers expoſitions. Some, as Artopœus ſaith, underſtand them, as ſpoken in his commendation, touching his hunting and deſtroying of wicked men and notorious offenders, having the Lord before his eyes, as at whom he looked in thus doing, but this is too favourable, and contrary to that vvhich could be expected from Chams brood, and Babels builder. Some ſay, that his hunting of vvild beaſts is properly meant, and that vvhen he had taken them, he offered them in ſacrifice to the Lord, thus Aben-Ezra: but this is improbable for the reaſons before rendered, and becauſe ſuch as honour God vvith ſacrifices are vvont to be commended in plaine vvords therefore. Some for before the Lord, will have againſt the Lord, underſtood, as Auguſtine, becauſe the Greek vvord ἐναντίον here uſed by the Septuagints ſignifieth as vvell againſt, as before, he then ſaith, Auguſtine vvas an hunter, that is, a deceiver, oppreſſour, and extinguiſher of earthly creatures, erecting vvith his people through his pride a Tovver againſt the Lord.

Marlorat.

Aug. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei cap. 3

Calvin.

Ioſephus.
Note.

P. Artopœus.

Aben-Ezra.

Auguſt.

Others vvill have the ſpeech altogether Metaphoricall, thus he vvas cruell, and bloudy, purſuing men to the death, that he might make a prey of them, as hunters purſue vvilde beaſts, to take and to get them to feed upon. And in this ſenſe Tyrants are often called hunters, as Pſ. 91. 3. 124. 7. Ezech. 32. 30.

Calvin.
Muſculus.

Lament. 3. 52. The other words, before the Lord, they expound, either under Vatablus. Heaven, he was the moſt mighty and valiant under the whole cope of Heaven, or through pride aſpiring to make himſelf as a God, and above the condition of men, as Vatablus, or elſe knowing that the Lord beheld his tyranny, and contemning him, or pretending the feare of God in his actions which Cajetan. were vile, as Cajetan: Or he was verily and indeed a moſt mighty hunter, becauſe that which is ſo before the Lord, is ſo indeed. Of all theſe that expoſition pleaſeth me beſt, which referreth this to Nimrods greatneſſe and ſuperiority above all other men, as if it had been ſaid, he was the moſt potent and full of valour, and by force and tyranny obteined the greateſt dominion next under God; and happily his audacious tyrannizing alſo is pointed at, that he exerciſed all manner of cruelty and violence to magnifie himſelfe, openly, and as it were daring the Lord, who is the revenger of all wrongs, becauſe he ſeemed not herein to regard him, but as Pharaoh ſometime ſaid in his heart, Who is the Lord, that I ſhould for him refreine from doing that, whereby I may make my ſelfe great? And becauſe he was ſo notorious for this, it grew into a Proverb, when any man of might grew tyrannicall and cruel, as Nimrod, the mighty hunter before the Lord; Lo, ſuch another Tyrant, ſo without all feare exerciſing violence, and ambitiouſly ſeeking dominion, Verſe 10. as Nimrod did. And the beginning of his Kingdome was Babel, and Vatablus. Erech, and Acchad, and Calneh in the Land of Shinar. This is generally held to be ſpoken by way of anticipation, this Babel here ſpoken of not being yet built, but the building thereof ſet forth in the next Chapter, which building was made in the dayes of Phaleg, for upon occaſion of the confounding of Tongues at that time, which was whileſt Babel was building, 1 Chron 1.19. Phaleg had his name from diviſion, and this was 101 yeares after the floud, Euſeb. Chron. Hieron. in Hiſ. 2. Aug. de Civit. lib. 16. cap. 17. as may eaſily be gathered, Gen. 11. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. And this Nimrod who was the chief in building the City and Tower of Babel, was alſo called Belus by other Writers, the Father of Ninus, to whoſe Widow Semiramis reigning after him is referred the building of Babel, but this is to be underſtood, not in reſpect of her firſt laying of the foundation thereof, which was done by Nimrod long before, but becauſe being ſmall in compariſon, and ruinous, till her time, ſhe built and inlarged it ſo, that it might ſeeme rather a Province, then a City. Hence we may gather, why amongſt the Babylonians an Idol called Bel or Belus was ſo highly honoured and adored, and why ſo many Gods of the Heathen were called from this name, as Baal-zebub, Baal-peor, &c. This Nimrod or Belus was the firſt author of this Idolatry, drawing his Subjects from the feare and ſervice of God, to reſpect and adore him, whileſt he lived, as their only chiefe, and after his death, when he had reigned 65 yeares, or as ſome ſay 55, they made Images of him, and Beroſus Annianus l. 4, 5 worſhipped them. Some ſay, that Nimrod was not Belus, but the ſon of Belus, who might yet be ſaid to be begotten of Cuſh, becauſe by Belus his ſonne. But Mercator Chronol. Diodor. lib. 3. this is both againſt the current of this Hiſtory, and againſt all that write of the Kings of Babylon, for they make Belus the firſt, and Ninus the ſecond. Others will have Ninus to be meant by Nimrod, becauſe he began his Kingdome firſt in Chaldea, but Diodorus ſaith, that he made Nineve the ſeat of his Kingdome, and all the famous Doctors of the Church are for Belus, as the Father or Grandfather of Ninus. The beginning of Nimrods Kingdome is ſaid to have been Babel, &c. becauſe he firſt reigned over theſe foure cities, afterwards extending his Dominion further; Erech is expounded by Hieron. Ierome to be Edeſſa, Acchad Niſibis, Calne, Seleucia or Cteſiphon. Shinar was Chaldee Paraphraſt. the Land of Babylon, and therefore the Chaldee Paraphraſt readeth it for in the Land of Shinar, in the Land of Babylon, being happily firſt called Shinar, and afterwards upon the building of Babel, Babylon, hereby alſo this Babel is diſtinguiſhed from that in Egypt, ſo Vatablus.
Vatablus.
Verſe 11. From that land went Aſhur, and built Nineve, and the City Rehoboth, and Calah.
ver. 12. And Reſen between them. A great queſtion is moved here, who is

is meant by Aſhur? Many ſay, that he was the ſecond ſon of Shem, mentioned ver. 22. who dwelling neere to Nimrod in Babylonia, when he applied himſelf ſo to ſubdue all neighbouring places unto him, was expelled thence, and went and built Nineve in Aſſyria. Thus Ioſephus, who ſaith, that after this Aſhur, the Subjects of that Kingom were called Aſſyrians, and after him Auguſtine, and Ierome ſaith the ſame, and Muſculus mentioneth this, as followed by many. But againſt this opinion maketh that which was ſaid before touching Ninus the ſon of Nimrod, or Belus, who is by all Hiſtorians celebrated, as the builder of Nineve, and therefore Aſhur, who came of Shem, could not be the founder thereof. Moreover it were a ſtrange anticipation, before that Aſhur is once ſpoken of, as begotten into the world, that his building of a City ſhould be related. Others, therefore by Aſhur underſtand the Nations of the Aſſyrians, of vvhom Nimrod vvas the head, who went out of their own bounds and to inlarge their Empire built Nineveh alſo. But all the names hitherto uſed are ſo plainly the names of particular men, that this name Aſhur muſt needs be underſtood in like manner alſo, not of a Nation, but of a particular man. They therefore who by Aſhur underſtand him, that in prophane Hiſtories is called otherwiſe Ninus, the ſon of Nimrod, ſpeak moſt probably. And ſo that which is here ſaid, is of a thing done long after, which notwithſtanding it ſeemed good to Moſes in ſpeaking of Nimrods geſtes, to adde in this place, that at once we might have a view of the Babylonian greatneſſe firſt in the father, and then in the ſon, who not contenting himſelfe with his fathers Dominions, went into Aſſyria and there built Nineve, calling it after his own name. And happily he had the name Aſhur afterwards, and not at his firſt going out, but when he had ſubdued Aſſyria, the ſeat of Aſhur the ſon of Shem, as afterwards Scipio had the name Africanus from the ſubduing of Carthage, and ſo all Africa. The next words, the City Rehoboth, are not underſtood by Jerome, as ſetting forth another City, but according to the ſignification of the vvord, Rehoboth ſtreets, the ſtreets of that City, which is added, to ſhew the greatneſſe of Nineve, and that this Aſhur brought it to perfection, of Calah and Reſen I read nothing amongſt Expoſitours, but Nineve is further ſpoken of in the end of v. 12. this was a great city, for all hold this to be ſpoken of Nineve, not of Reſen, or Calah. For Nineve is reported by Hiſtorians to be greater then Babylon, 480 furlongs in circuit, the walls 100 foot high, and ſo broad, that three Carts might go together upon the top of them. In the time of Jonah it was three dayes journey, and by the proportion of little children, 120000 could not contein leſſe then 600000 inhabitants, from Ninus the founder here otherwiſe called Aſhur it took the name.

Ioſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. Aug. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. Hieronym. Muſculus.

Mercator Chronol. Muſculus. Hieron. tradit. Hebr.

Triphan. hæreſ. l. 1.

Hieronymus.

Diodorus lib. 3. Strabo lib. 16.

And Mizraim begat Ludim, Anamim, Lehabim, Naphtuhim, Pathruſim, and Caſluhim, out of whom came Philiſtim and Caphtorim. This Mizraim, the ſecond ſonne of Ham vvas father of the Egyptians, but touching his ſeven ſons here named, and the Philiſtims coming out of one of them, which is the eighth, there is no light given either in the holy Scriptures or other Writers, ſaith Ierome, whereby we may underſtand what peoples they vvere, but onely of Ludim, Philiſtim, and Caphtorim, the reſt being overthrown in the Ethiopian vvarre, their names periſhed together with them. Of Ludim Jeremiah ſpeaketh, ſaying: Go up to horſe, aſcend your chariots, and let the valiant men of Ethiopia and Lybia come forth, who hold the ſhield, and the Lydians ſhooting arrows, this is ſpoken in Propheſying againſt Pharaoh the King of Egypt, theſe Nations being aſſiſtant in the vvarre unto him, and therefore they were not the Lydians in Aſia, who came of another Ludim named afterwards, but in Africa neere to Egypt. Of Philiſtim, it is often ſpoken inhabiting in a part of the land of Canaan. The Septuagint call theſe Allophyli, becauſe they came from another countrey, and vvere not Natives of that place: for they came, as here is ſaid, out from the Caſluhim, and ſeated themſelves here, this countrey belonging firſt to the poſterity of Canaan. And ſo vvhen the Philiſtimes countrey vvas given for a poſſeſſion to the children of Iſrael, the countrey onely of the Verſ. 13, 14.

Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

Jer. 46 9.

the Canaanites was given unto them, as was by Noah Propheſied, becauſe the place, vvhere the Philiſtims dwelt, vvas anciently their countrey. Of Caphtorim Amos vvriteth, as if the Philiſtims came from them. Have not I brought Iſrael out of Egypt, the Philiſtims from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir? ſo likewiſe in Deuteronomie the Caphtorim are ſaid to have expelled the Hivites which dwelt in Hazarim even to Gaza. The vulgar Latine tranſlateth Caphtorim Cappadocians, and ſo they are taken to be. Of ſome of theſe then, and of the Caſleuhim came the Philiſtims. Touching one other name Pathruſim, from thence it may ſeem that Pathros came, which is ſpoken of Eſa. 11.11.

Amos 9.7.

Verſe 15, 16. But Canaan begat Sidon his firſt born, and Heth, and the Jebuſite, the Emorite, and the Girgaſhite, &c.

Sidon. Numb. 34.

Sidon gave the name to the Sidonians, inhabiting a City in Phœnicia, called Sidon, and their Countrey in part fell to the lot of Aſhur, terminating the land of Canaan. Saidi ſignifieth fiſhes, as Juſtine noteth, and therefore he ſaith, the name Sidon, by the vulgar ſtill called Saidi came from fiſhes, or fiſhermen; whereof great ſtore inhabited there. Sidon, as Eſay ſaith, was the Mother of Tyrus, another famous City near unto it. Of Heth the ſecond came the Hittites, otherwiſe called the children of Heth, who dwelt about Hebron, where Abraham bought of them a burying place. The Jebuſites inhabited Jeruſalem, and after their name it was of old called Jebus. The Emorites or Amorites dwelt for the moſt part on this ſide Jordan, having Og for their King, but they were alſo diſperſed into all the parts of Canaan, being of huge and ſtrong bodies, and ſo able to oppreſſe others, and to poſſeſſe themſelves of their Territories, as may be gathered, Amos 2. where it is ſaid, I have driven out the Amorite, whoſe height was as the Cedars, and his ſtrength, as the ſtrength of an Oake. And therefore all the inhabitants of Canaan are ſometime called by the name of Amorites, as Gen. 15. The ſinnes of the Amorites are not yet full: from whence alſo it may be gathered, that they were rather more wicked and vile than the reſt. Of the Girgaſhites I find nothing in particular, but that they were one of the ſeven ſorts of people expelled out of Canaan afterwards.

Iuſtin lib. 18.

Eſay 23.

Heth. Gen. 23.

Iebuſites.

Emorites.

Gen. 15.

Girgeſhites.

The Hivites dwelt at the foot of Mount Hermon in Maſſah, Joſ. 11. from Hermon or Baalhermon to the entring of Hemath, Judg. 3. The Archites, as Ierome ſaith, built a Town at the foot of Libanus, over againſt Tripolis, which was not long after deſtroyed by warre. Of the Sinites I finde no mention in any Authour, but that there was a City called Sin, which it is likely, was built by them, not farre from the Town of the Archites, as the ſame Ierome ſaith. The Arnadites inhabited an Iſland ſeparated from the ſhore of Phœnicia by a narrow ſea, of theſe together with the inhabitants of Zidon it is ſpoken, Ezech. 17. The Zemarites are by ſome thought to have given the name to Samaria. The Hamathites built the City Hæmath or Hemath mentioned, Numb. 34.8. as the North boundary of the Land of Canaan, and part of the poſſeſſion of the tribe of Naphtali, Joſ 19.35. Now it is to be underſtood, that in other places, where the ſeveral peoples are ſpoken of, which the poſterity of Abraham ſhould poſſeſſe, all theſe eleven here mentioned are not named, as Gen. 15.20. but onely four of them, the Hittites, Amorites, Girgaſhites, and Jebuſites. But inſtead of the other ſeven, ſix other names are ſet down, Kenites, Kenizites, Kadmonites, Perizites, Rephaims and Canaanites. Touching the laſt of which, it is to be thought, that they were a peculiar people of that Countrey, who would be called after the name of their father Canaan, and not robbing him of that honour, after the name of any other Progenitour of latter times. For the reſt, theſe people being ſuch as were accurſed to ſervitude, & accordingly being brought under by the Caphtorim or Cappadocians before ſpoken of, of whom came the Philiſtims, did in all likelihood loſe their former names, for that they were waſted with warres, and there did not many of them remain, but after this increaſing again they took upon them other names, as any family grew to be of any note again, and were called after the father thereof. Thus then at the firſt they bare the names here ſet down, Hivites. Archites.

Hieronym. Sinites. Numb. 34.4.

Arnadites.

Zemarites. Hamathites.

down, but afterwards, ſome of theſe being extinct, other names, as their neerer forefathers were called. Of the Canaanites and Perizites mention is made Gen. 13. as being in the land when Abraham and Lot increaſed ſo greatly in ſubſtance, Exod. 3.8. the Lord telling Moſes to the countrey of what peoples he ſhould bring the children of Iſrael, nameth onely ſix, amongſt whom the Hivites are one, not ſpoken of, Gen. 15. but yet here mentioned; ſo that it is to be thought, that they beingput down recovered their name and fame again, Numb. 13.29. the ſpyes, who were ſent to ſearch the Land, ſpeak at their return but of five, four of which vvere named before, and one not before ſpoken of, viz. the Amalekites, but that vvas a place ſo to be deſtroyed, as not to be inhabited any more, yet at tbe time of their coming in to poſſeſſe the land, ſeven peoples are reckoned up, vvhich the Lord delivered into their hands, the Canaanite, Hivite, Perizzite, Hittite, Girgaſhite, Amorite and Jebuſite, ſo that into hovv many ſorts ſoever they vvere diſtinguiſhed before, yet novv they vvere but ſeven, ſaving that under ſome of theſe there vvere other diſtinctions of families, as into Anakims, and Giblites, &c. All theſe vvere brought under and deſtroyed by the children of Iſrael.

Joſ. 24 12.

Joſ. 11.
Joſ. 13.

And the border of the Canaanites was Zidon, as one goeth to Gerar, even to Hazzah, till he entereth into Sodoma, &c. All the peoples before ſpoken of go here under the name of Canaanites: for in the end of the former Verſe it is ſaid, Afterwards were the families of the Canaanites ſpread abroad, that is, of all thoſe that came of Canaan before named, who poſſeſſed large Territories, the borders whereof were Sidon on one ſide, and Gaza or Azza on the other, that is, Northward and Southward, for Gerar in the way to which Gaza ſtood, was Southward, ſaith Ierome, 25 miles from Eleutheropolis, and Sidon was Northward. But Laſa put for another boundary was Eaſtward towards Sodom, &c. being now called Calliroe, as Ierome ſaith, for the hot waters, that flow from thence into the dead Sea. And deſcribing the Countrey, Moſes is ſo exact, becauſe the children of Iſrael were now about to go to poſſeſſe it.

Verſe 19.

Hieronym.

Unto Shem alſo the father of all the children of Eber, the elder brother of Japhet, unto him were children borne. In our new tranſlation it is, the brother of Japhet the elder; whereupon a queſtion ariſeth, whether Shem or Iaphet were the elder brother? The Hebrews anſwer, that Iaphet was eldeſt, and Shem youngeſt, yet ſome, that Ham was youngeſt, and this is followed by Lyranus, and Genebrardus thinketh it moſt probable. Their reaſon is, becauſe Shem is ſaid to be 100 years old 2 years after the Floud, but Noah is ſaid to have begotten Shem, Ham, & Japhet, when he was 500 years old, that is, to have begun to beget them, Japhet then muſt be begotten anno 500 of his age, Ham, an. 501. Shem 502. But this is no firme reaſon, for it is not ſaid in that very year, when Noah was 500 years old, he begat Shem, Ham, and Japhet; bht Noah was 500 years old, and begat them, that is, after this age, happily all at once, the ſecond year after he had finiſhed 500 years. This reaſon then being of ſo little force, and there being none other for Japhets majority, I rather hold with Auguſtine and others, as I have already ſaid upon chap. 5. that Shem vvas the eldeſt, and ſo both the Greek and the Latine tranſlation render theſe vvords, Shem the elder brother of Japhet. I grant that the Hebrevv tongue having no caſes, הגדול tranſlated elder, may be put either in the Genitive, as having reference to Japhet the Subſtantive, or in the Nominative, as to Shem. But becauſe Shem is alvvays placed firſt, it vvere abſurd, unleſſe there vvere better reaſon for it, to joyn it to Japhet & not to Shem, as by all the foregoing hiſtory we are rather directed. But why is he ſaid to be the elder brother of Iaphet, & not of Ham alſo? To this Calvin anſwereth, that Ham for his wickednes was cut off frō this fraternity, but Iaphet although for a time he was to ſeparate in his poſterity, yet afterwards he was to be joyned to Shem again. But why doth Moſes uſe ſo many vvords in ſpeaking of Shem, deſcribing him by Japhet, & by the children of Heber, when as in ſpeaking of Japhet & Ham with their iſſue before, he maketh no ſuch deſcription of them? To this Muſculus anſwers, that this is done for honors ſake, becauſe

Verſe 21.

Hebræi.
Lyranus.
Genebrard.

Aug. de Civit. lib. 16. cap 3.

Calvin.

Muſculus.

Artopœus.

becauſe the holy ſeed came of Shem, & the children of Heber are ſpoken of in particular,& any other ſons of his,becauſe the bleſſing,which was upon Japhet, reſted chiefly upon them. Touching Heber,ſome as Artopœus ſaith,think it a Preposition,ſignifying beyond,& that the children of Heber were not the children of any man ſo called,but a people coming from beyond the River Euphrates,from which place Abraham came. But it is plain that Eber was a mans name,who came of Shem, v. 24. and from him the Hebrews had their name. And if it be demanded, why they ſhould rather be named from Eber then from Arphaxad, or Selah his Progenitours ? It is moſt probable, that the diviſion of tongues happening in the dayes of Peleg the ſonne of Heber, that the firſt language which was ſpoken, remaining with his poſterity only, they began then to be noted, as a ſingular people, and ſo were called after the name of Eber, which for the language was ſtill reteined throughout many generations.

Verſe 22.

The ſonnes of Shem were Elam, and Aſſur, Arphacſad, Lud and Aram. Of Elam came the Elamites, of whom were the Perſians, Medes, Parthians, Bactrians, Sogdians and Aramites, ſaith Artopœus. That the Perſians were of Elam appeareth by that, which is ſaid in Daniel, In Suſan in the Countrey of Elam. And Jerom ſaith, that the Princes of the Perſians were Elamites, and that the poſterity of Shem held part of Aſia from the River Euphrates to the Indian Ocean. Of Aſſur came the Aſſyrians, who, as I partly touched before, were in time ſubdued by Ninus called therefore Aſhur, v. 11. Of Arphacſhad came the Chaldeans, as Joſephus ſaith, being in the Hebrew tongue called Chaſdim, a name that ſeemeth to be taken from part thereof. Of Lud came the Lydians of Aſia the leſſer, as of another Ludim mentioned before the Lydians of Africa. Of Aram the Aramites or Syrians came, of Aram-Naharaim, and Padan-Aram, we read ſometimes, which were all one, and that was Aram of Meſopotamia, as Naharaim, of Rivers, ſignifieth,but beſides it, there was another Syria in Phœnicia, ſo Luther.

P. Artopœus. Dan.8. Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

Joſephus.

Verſe 13.

Luther.

Verſe 23.

The ſonnes of Aram, Hus, Hull, Gether and Mas. Having named five ſons of Shem, Moſes ſaith nothing of their ſonnes, but only of Arams here and of Arphachſads v. 24. Elam, Aſſur, and Lud being left with the bare naming of them, happily, becauſe none of their ſons did give a name to any Nation, but their poſterities were called only after them Elamites, Aſſyrians, and Lydians. And Aram is ſpoken of firſt with his Genealogy,and then Arphachſhad, that his offspring being briefly touched upon, as leſſe worthy, the offſpring of Arphachſhad, as more worthy might be proſecuted at large. Hus the firſt ſonne of Aram gave the name to the countrey of Hus, of which Job was, and in Hus Edom is ſaid to have dwelt towards Chaldea and Sabea. Hieronymus ſaith, that Hus was the founder of the Countrey Traconitis and Damaſcus. Of Hus came the Armenians: of Gether the Acarnanians or Carians, as Jerome ſaith, yet Joſephus maketh him the Father of the Bactrians. Of Mas the Meſſanian Province otherwiſe called Arax took the name, according to Artopœus. Arphachſad begat Selah, and Selah begat Heber.

Lament.4. Hieron.

Joſeph.

Artopœus.

Verſe 24.

The Septuagint put Cainan between Arphachſhad and Selah, and Luke likewiſe, whereby it appeareth, that he followed that Tranſlation, and not the Hebrew, wherein Selah is the next to Arphachſhad.

Verſe 25.

And unto Heber were two ſonnes borne, Peleg, in whoſe dayes the earth was divided, and Joktan.

Phaleg ſignifieth diviſion, and Heber called his ſonne ſo, for the diviſion of Tongues happening in thoſe dayes, whereupon occaſion was given for men to diſperſe themſelves, and to inhabit all parts of the Earth, but whether this happened at his birth, whereupon he was ſo named for a memoriall of the thing, or afterwards, and this name were given him Prophetically by Heber foreſeeing this to come, is a queſtion amongſt Expoſitours. The Hebrews ſay that Heber was a Prophet, and gave this name by a Propheticall ſpirit, as foreſhewing hereby the diviſion of Tongues to come in the dayes of this Peleg, and that this diviſion indeed happened at the end of his time, viz.

Hebræi in Seder Holam.

viz. 310 yeares after the floud, for he was born 101 after the floud, and lived 209. And to this Ierome subscribeth, and Chrysostome, and Lyranus, &c. But Iosephus contrariwise saith, that at the birth of Peleg the division of Tongues happened, and thereupon he had this name given unto him, as a memoriall of the thing. And Augustine saith, that at his birth it must needs be, that the division of Tongues happened, because, if afterwards at the end of his dayes, the tongue, which all commonly spake before, should have been called after him, and not after Heber his Father Hebrew, if Heber had been dead and gone before this. I hold with Iosephus and Augustine, because Languages were divided in the dayes of Nimrod, when he with his people were building Babel, that these words, Because in his dayes the earth was divided, cannot be referred to the end of his dayes, but to the beginning thereof. For 300 yeares after the floud, which was about the end of Phalegs dayes, was by the consent of all Historians long after the death of Ninus the son of Nimrod: and again when a name is given Prophetically, the reason is not given in the Pretertense, as here, but in the Future, as Lamech called his sonnes name Noah, because, said he, he shall comfort us in r espect of our worke, &c. But Peleg is so called, because in his dayes, that is, about the time of his birth the Earth was divided.

Hieron. Chrysost. Lyranus. Ioseph. Antiq. lib. 1. Calvin. Aug. de civit. lib. 16. cap 11.

Verse 25.

Joctan begat Almodab, Seleh, Hasarmaneth, Jarah, Hadoram, Usat, Diclah, Obal, Abimael, Seba, Ophir, Havilah, Jobab.

Moses having named two sons of Heber, according to his manner leaving the first Peleg for a while, of whom he purposed to say most, he first setteth downe the off-spring of the second Joctan. Concerning whose sonnes I finde little in particular, but only in generall Expositours agree, that they inhabited India, where two places famous for Gold, Ophir and Havilah took their names from them. The bounds of their Countrey here named, their dwelling was from Masa unto Sephar a Mountaine of the East, make it plaine. that they inhabited India, for both Masa or Messa was a Countrey in India, and Sephar a Mountaine there, according to Ierome.

Verse 30.

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1.

AND all the earth was of one language, and of one speech. In the. Hebrew it is, of one lip, and of the same words. And this was most agreeable to nature, and diversity of Languages is a thing monstrous in nature, for men indued vvith the like reason, and having the like Organs of speech to differ so much in speech one from another. The identity of the Language also is a great meanes to preserve unity amongst divers Nations, they hereby seeming to be all one, howsoever diversly dispersed. Wherefore the confusion of tongues, which Moses setteth forth in this Chapter, was a great judgement of God upon mankinde for sinne. The only question here is, what tongue was then used? To this most answer, that it was the Hebrew tongue, and the very names given at the creation Adam and Evah being Hebrew evince no lesse. Moreover the name Noah is an Hebrew name signifying rest, and Peleg so called at this very time is an Hebrew name also. Philo contendeth, that the Chaldee tongue was the first, but he is opposed by Ierome herein, and in truth there is so neare affinity betwixt the Hebrew and the Chaldee tongues, that happily they were then both one, but the difference of dialects grew in time, as in divers other languages also, so Musculus. And it is the more probable because the Chaldees and the Hebrews came both of Arphaxshad, as hath been already shewed.

Philo. Hieron. Musculus.

Verse 2.

And it came to passe, as they journeyed from the East, they found a plaine in the land of Shinar, and dwelt there. Some make a question, whether this be to be understood of all people of all parts without exception, or of some of them? Answering, that the meaning is nothing else, but that when all were of one language, such of them, as went Eastward, came to this plaine in Shinar. But others ſay the Text is plaine for the going of them all; for *v.*1. it is ſaid, The whole earth was of one language, and here, It came to paſſe, as they journeyed, that is, altogether. Calvin expoundeth this of thoſe that went, of Nimrod and his company, & if all muſt neceſſarily be here underſtood, then the next verſe muſt be underſtood of all without exception alſo, viz. when they conſult about the buildiug of a tower, which was ſo diſpleaſing to the Lord, & then it will follow, that Noah and Shem, and other godly perſons were of this conſpiracy, which certainly could not be. And therefore I rather hold vvith thoſe, who think, that not all the people of the earth without exception of any are meant, when it is ſaid, that they went from the Eaſt to Shinar, but only that there went a company, and moſt probably, under the conduct of Nimrod, the beſt ſtill remaining behinde, and ſo vvhen God being offended confounded the Languages of the builders, theſe reteined ſtil that old Tongue ſpoken from the beginning. They are ſaid to go from the Eaſt, becauſe Armenia, in which it is likely, that they dvvelt till this time, being the countrey, where Noahs Arke reſted, vvas Eaſtward from Babylon, but novv they increaſing to a greater company then thoſe parts could conteine, and partly, as it is to be thought, not ſo well pleaſed vvith thoſe rough and mountainous places, vvent in great numbers to ſeek nevv abodes, vvhich might be more pleaſant and commodious for them. And hereby it appeareth again, that it could not be three hundred yeares, as the Hebrevves would have it, betvvixt the floud and this; for certainly mankinde would by that time have been ſo multiplyed that one Countrey could not poſſibly have conteined them, and therefore it is to be held rather that a 100 years vvere the moſt. The Plain in Shinar or Babylonia was a moſt delightful and fruitfull place indeed, ſo that they might well reſolve to ſettle themſelves, and to build there.

Cajetan.

Calvin.

Verſe 3,4. And they ſaid one to another, Go to, let us make bricke, &c. ver. 4. And let us build a City and Tower, whoſe top may reach to Heaven.

Although it be moſt probable, as hath been ſaid, that Nimrod was the firſt ring-leader to this work, yet it being propounded took ſo amongſt the whole multitude, that they incouraged one another to the work, and ſo it was not the fault of ſome few, but of them all. And it is to be noted, how ſtiffly they were bent to do it, in that vvanting ſtone and morter, they reſolved to burne bricke inſtead of ſtone, and to take ſlime for morter, that is, a kinde of cleaving matter like pitch, a brimſtony ſubſtance, vvhich Pliny ſaith, is moiſt in thoſe parts. Men will refuſe no labour to fulfill their own vvills, how wicked and ſinfull ſoever they be, as Calvin noteth hereupon, and this aggravated much their ſinne. Audax omnia perpeti, gens humana ruit per vetitum nefas, and again, Cœlum ipſum petimus ſtultitiâ. For the city and tower, which they went about to build, it is not to be thought, ſaith Calvin, that they could be ſo fooliſh to imagine, that they could build up to heaven, or do any thing againſt God, as Heathen Poets have written of Giants, that ſet Mountain upon Mountain to aſcend and fight againſt the gods. But that vvhich is here ſpoken of the top reaching up to heaven, is hyperbolicall, as the cities of the Anakims are afterwards ſaid to have been walled ſo high that they reached up to heaven, that is, of an exceeding great height. For the conceit of ſome, that they attempted this worke to eſcape drowning, if another great floud ſhould come, it is rejected by the ſame Calvin, as an idle conceit, becauſe they themſelves expreſſe the reaſon of their building, viz. to get them a name, and as well may that be rejected of others, that they had ſome fore-knowledge of the deſtruction of the World by fire, as a preſervative againſt which they made this vaſt building. Doubtleſſe they had none other end, but as the Text ſpeaketh, by ſetting up ſome famous Monument, to make it memorable to all poſterities, that there had once ſuch brave-minded men, and ſo mighty lived in World, from whom all others diverſly diſperſed had their originall. For they adde this, as a reaſon, to get us a name, leſt we be ſcattered over the face of the earth. And this kinde of building truly was fit for the purpoſe, becauſe brickes made of a chalky ſubſtance, ſaith Pliny, and well burnt, do indure to Eternity.

Calvin.

Plin. li. 35. c. 14.

Eternity. Touching the ſlime taken for morter, Theodoret ſaith, that he had diligently ſearched, and ſo had found, that in thoſe parts there were fountaines, which caſt up this kinde of ſtuffe continually with water. And Philo ſaith, that upon the bricks they wrote their names. But how came they to imagine a future diſperſion? To this ſome anſwer, that Noah yet living threatened them herewith for their ſins, others, that by a divine inſtinct they were moved to fear it, but theſe are conjectures, the true reaſon is, that when they ſhould be more increaſed, they knew, that they could not poſſibly dwell altogether in one place, but muſt be diſperſed into other parts. Yet Joſephus ſaith, that being warned by God, vvhen they were greatly increaſed, to diſperſe themſelves into the divers parts of the uarth, to repleniſh it, they wickedly refuſed ſo to do, interpreting this Mandate of the Lord, which was for their good, as tending to a courſe to weaken and to overthrow them, and to keep them the more firmely together, attempted this preſumptuous worke, and that by the perſwaſion of Nimrod. The vulgar Latine rendereth it, before we be diſperſed, as if they expected a diſperſion, although they were unwilling. But the other reading is according to the Hebrew, Leſt We be diſperſed.

Theod quæſt 59 in Gen.

Philo lib.

Calvin.

Ioſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.

And the Lord came down to ſee the City and Tower, which the children of men built, &c. Verſe 5.

By that, which is here related, it ſeemeth, that God was angry at this attempt, of building, a queſtion therefore may be made, what did ſo greatly diſpleaſe him, that he for this laid ſuch a judgement upon man, as to confound their Languages? Toſtatus vvill by no meanes yeeld, that God was hereby offended, and therefore he holdeth that their Language was confounded, onely leſt, if they ſhould have finiſhed the intended City and Tovver, they would the more ſlowly have diſperſed themſelves into other parts: for to build a City and Tower is a thing lawfull, ſaith he, in it ſelf, and by lawfull means to ſeeke fame is no ſin: But Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine and all other Expoſitours are againſt him herein, and by the Text it is plain, that they ſinned greatly by pride and vaine glory. For although fame and a good name be a good thing, when it is rightly atteined unto, yet to do any thing not for Gods glory, but for a mans own, is a vvicked ambition, and highly diſpleaſing to God, and it is juſt with God to bring ſhame and confuſion, inſtead of glory upon ſuch. Auguſtine ſaith therefore, that Nimrods impious pride vvas ſignified hereby. And Chryſoſtome ſaith, as the builders of Babel, ſo are the vain-glorious now adayes, who build ſumptuous Houſes, Galleries, Bathes, and Walkes, that they may be magnified hereby: but as the men of Babel, ſo theſe are rewarded with ſhame: For what are men wont to ſay of them, when they behold their coſt, but lo, the building of ſuch a covetous wretch, of ſuch an oppreſſour, or ſpoiler of Widowes and Orphans? The right way therefore, ſaith he, is to give to the poor, and to be full of almeſdeeds. Moreover, that which followeth of the Lords coming down to ſee this worke, argueth, the wickedneſſe of the vvorkmen to have been exceeding great, becauſe this phraſe is never wont to be uſed, but vvhen ſome horrible ſinne hath been commited, as when Sodom was ſo full of ſinne, and the Egyptians did ſo grievouſly oppreſſe the Hebrevves, when the Lord is ſaid to come down to ſee, vve muſt not conceive, that being in Heaven he cannot ſee things done upon earth, for he filleth all places with his preſence, and it is impiety, as Philo ſpeaketh, to thinke, that he moveth from one place to another. He is then ſaid to come down, firſt, for the certain notice vvhich he took of the thing done, that men might learne hereby, not to judge of things by hearſay, but firſt to go and ſee, as the ſame Philo ſpeaketh.

Toſtatus.

Auguſt. Chryſoſt.

Philo. Deus deſcendens dicitur viſere, qui omnia etiam prius quam fiant clariſſimè prævidet, ut doceamur, ne quis homo de abſentibus rebus, & incertis putet, ſe certum poſſe indicium facere, ſed propriùs introſpecto negotio diligenter cuncta perluſtret.

Aug. lib 16 de civit. Dei, cap. 5

A ſecond reaſon may be that vvhich is yeelded by Auguſtine, God is ſaid to come dovvne, becauſe by a vvonderfull vvorke vvrought there by him in confounding Languages, he made it appear, that his providence extended thither to puniſh their great pride and ambition, and by his Angels he deſcended to hinder them in their work. A third and laſt reaſon may be that of Chryſoſtome, this is ſpoken to ſhew the long-ſuffering and patience of the Lord, and he alſo yieldeth for another the reaſon of Philo before-going.

Chryſoſt. hom. 30. in Gen.

Verſe 6.

And the Lord ſaid, They are all one people, and have one language, and this they begin to do, and now nothing will be reſtreined from them, which they have imagined. In theſe vvords is conteined an Irony, whereby they that laboured ſo earneſtly in this building, are derided, for the Lord knew well enough that he could eaſily confound this their machination: vvherefore it is to be underſtood, as ſpoken according to their conceit; for being an innumerable company, and through the unity of their idiome all as one, they thought doubtleſſe in the pride of their hearts, that nothing could poſſibly hinder them from bringing their intended work to perfection. But we may ſee hovv vain men are in their greateſt ſtrength, and in their moſt earneſt attempts, one blaſt of Gods mouth is able to overthrow them. Again, ſee hovv he ſuffereth long the vvicked in their evill courſes, ſo that they begin to think themſelves ſecure, but even then, vvhen they fear leaſt, he is ready to take vengeance upon them.

Note.

Verſe 7.

Calvin.

Go to, let us go down, and confound their language, &c. Julian the Apoſtata abuſed this place to prove a multitude of gods, but it is ſpoken here, as Gen. 1. about the making of man, Let us make man after our own image: and therefore hovv a triplicity of perſons is intimated in this ſaying, ſee there, their language, in the Hebrevv it is, as verſe 1. their lip, and that they may not underſtand one anothers lip. This, as Luther noteth, vvas no ſmall puniſhment, the ſeeds of future diſcords and contentions being ſown hereby, but it vvas aftervvards at the coming down of the Holy Ghoſt taken away again, becauſe although all Nations under the Goſpel ſpeak not one and the ſame language again, yet in divers languages they ſpeak the ſame things, as Calvin obſerveth. But the diſſention made by the Lord through the confuſion of language, was not hurtfull, but profitable for them, becauſe, if their language had continued one ſtill, they had gone on in their ſin, but being divided, they break off, and were without doubt confounded in themſelves. In ſetting forth the hurt of the unity amongſt theſe men, and the God of their diviſion, Caſſianus ſpeaketh excellently thus: The confuſion of tongues ariſing ſuddenly appeaſed the ſacrilegious and wicked attempts of men: for there had remained an evill conſent of men againſt God, unleſſe the diverſity of language making them at variance one with another, by divine diſpenſation had compelled them to come to a better condition, and a good and profitable diſcord had called them back to their ſalvation, whom a pernicious conſent had animated to their deſtruction, &c. And a moſt apt puniſhment was this for their ſin, becauſe the domination of him that commandeth, lyeth in the tongue: and therefore the pride of theſe men who deſired ſuperiority was puniſhed herein, that he might be no more underſtood, that commanded men, who would not underſtand to obey God commanding him, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh. And thus this conſpiracy was diſſolved, whileſt every man went from him, whom he could not underſtand, and joyned himſelf onely to ſuch as he underſtood. For we are not ſo to conceive, when it is ſaid, that one could not underſtand the language of another, as if there had now been ſo many languages ſpoken, as there were particular perſons: for then there could have been no ſocieties amongſt men, but there were certain companies, that ſpake ſome languages, and others again that ſpake other languages, who accordingly divided themſelves into ſeverall countreys, and therefore it is ſaid, in concluding the Genealogies of the ſons of Noah, Theſe are the ſons of Shem after their families, after their tongues in their lands, intimating divers languages, not of particular perſons, but of ſeverall families. It is worth the noting here, that wicked men are diſappointed of their ends, the contrary to that, which they intend and propound to themſelves ſtill coming upon them: for theſe men propounded to confirme their unity by building, but this turned to their diſſipation: they aimed at glory, but reaped perpetual ſhame.

Caſſian. Collat. 8. c. 12. Linguarum aborta repente confuſio ſacrilegos auſus hominum nefandoſque compeſcuit: permanſiſſet enim ibi contra Deum conſenſus hominum noxius, niſi eos diſpenſatione Dei repugnans inter ſe diverſitas linguæ per diſſentiam vocis in meliorem ſtatum proficere compuliſſet, & quos ad excidium ſui animaverat pernicioſa conſenſio, ad ſalutem revocaſſet bona utilisque diſcordia. Aug. de Civit. Dei. lib. 16. c. 4 Gen. 10. 31.

Note.

ſhame. The effect of pride is contrary to that of humility, as Gregory hereupon obſerveth, they that attempted to build a Tower againſt God, loſt hereby the communion of one tongue, but the Diſciples which humbly feared God, had in them all tongues again united. How theſe men came to be ſcattered abroad by this judgement hath been already touched, they could not certainly at the firſt but take great indignation one at another, when one ſpake in one tongue to another, and he anſwered him again in nothing that he could underſtand, as who might well ſuppoſe himſelf to be mocked herein. But after a while they were doubtleſſe amazed and confounded in themſelves at this thing, and ſo departed aſunder, leaving for an ever induring memoriall of this their confuſion the name of Babel, that is, confuſion, to this their vainglorious building. But that which now happened, ſhould ſeem rather a diviſion of one tongue into many, then a confuſion of tongues, wherefore Philo ſaith, that Moſes is not to be underſtood, as ſpeaking hiſtorically, but tropologically, as if when the Lord is brought in ſaying, Let us confound their language, he had ſaid, Let us make all their vices dumb and deaf, that neither by ſpeaking nor by conſenting together, they may be able to do hurt, &c. But Moſes certainly, as in all other things, ſo in this ſpeaketh hiſtorically, and the language is truly ſaid to be confounded, when men by the diverſity of tongues which they underſtood not, were confounded. How many the languages then were made, cannot certainly be known, but by the conſent of the ancient Fathers and other Writers it is moſt probable, that they were 72 becauſe ſo many families deſcended of Shem, Ham, and Japhet at that time. Thus Epiphanius, who ſaith alſo, that they were called Meropes, for their divided tongues, and Jerome in Matth. 26. and Auguſtine de Civit. lib. 16. *c.*3. and *Proſper lib.*2. *de vocat. Gent. c.*4. And Arnobius more particularly ſaith, that of theſe three came 100 Generations, of Shem 406 diſtinguiſhed by 27 tongues, inhabiting Perſia, and farre into India, and even to the Rhinocoruræ: of Ham 394. diſtinguiſhed by 22 tongues, inhabiting from Rhicoruræ to Gadara: of Japhet 200 divided by 23 tongues, inhabiting along by the River Tygris, where by Generations he meaneth Countreys poſſeſſed by them, divers of them uſing one and the ſame language. But ſince the languages of the World are many more, happily derived out of theſe. The ground of this conjecture of 72 tongues is, the 72 families reckoned, Gen. 10. But to make up this number, they which are named unto Peleg, at whoſe birth this diviſion happened, are not enough, they which came of Japhet being numbered but 14. and of Ham 32, and of Shem 12, together 58; wherefore Auguſtine addeth alſo Iochtan and his ſonnes, contending, that he was elder than Peleg by much, and had at this time ſo many Sonnes, Fathers of Families, which is unprobable. This therefore touching the number of languages muſt reſt uncertain, notwithſtauding this ground, becauſe as they might be ſo many, ſo they might be more or fewer, for ought that we know. Myſtically by the builders of Babel, Hereticks are ſet forth, who build up to heaven, by teaching juſtification by mans own righteouſneſſe, but they build not upon the rock Chriſt, but in a plain, with the brick and ſlime of their own inventions, and are confounded by being divided into many ſects amongſt themſelves. Ferus.

Gregor. hom 30 in Evang.

Philo.

*Epiphan. in Panario. Hieron. Auguſt. Proſper. Arnob. in Pſal.*104.

Shem was 100 years old, and begat Arphacſhad two yeares after the Flood, &c. Moſes having briefly touched the Genealogie of Shem, chap. 10. as of the other ſonnes of Noah, here to make a perfect Chronology by this line for honours ſake, as Luther ſaith, becauſe it was the holy line, as in any Nation the years are computed by the Kings reign, he returneth to this Genealogie again. Neither is it a light thing, or unworthy a ſacred Hiſtorian thus to ſet down, how long ſuch a man lived, and then begat ſuch a ſonne, and ſo touching a ſecond and a third, &c. for hereby both we are the more confirmed, that the world had a beginning, becauſe by the years of theſe Generations we know, how long ago it was ſince the world was made, and ſome prophecies, which have reference to time, are the more confirmed, and alſo we may ſee, what

Verſe 10.

Luther.

what a proportion of time hath bin held betwixt the creation and the giving of the Law, and the time thereof, and the Goſpel, and ſo both, what a long time paſſed after the promiſe of the ſeed of the woman, and his coming into the vvorld, that vve be nothing doubtfull of his ſecond coming, although it be hitherto deferred. Touching Shems age of 100 yeares tvvo yeares after the floud, I have ſpoken already. Noah vvas not juſt 500 yeares old, and then begat Shem, Ham and Iaphet, but he vvas of this age, and ſoon after he began to have this iſſue.

Verſe 12. Arphaxad lived 35 yeares and begat Salah, &c,

In the Septuagints Tranſlation, as I alſo partly touched before, Cainan is put between Arphacſhad and Salah, and likewiſe by Saint Luke, ch. 3. 36. whereupon Expoſitours have been greatly troubled: for if that of the Septuagint be right, the computation of Moſes in the Hebrew is erroneous, and if the Hebrew be right, Luke erred to follow the Greek expoſition rather then the Hebrew originall. To this it muſt not be anſwered, that both the Septuagint and Luke alſo erred herein: for if Luke being a Pen-man of the holy Scripture erred in one thing, why might he not alſo in another, and if he, why not other holy Writers, and why not in other things alſo? and ſo there ſhall be no certainty of divine Hiſtory. Neither may we ſay, that the Hebrew copy was corrupted in this, for there can no reaſon be imagined, why the Jewes ſhould deale thus herein, this being a matter no way concerning them in their Tenets againſt Chriſt. Some therefore anſwer, that Cainan was put into the Septuagints Tranſlation erroniouſly, there never being any ſuch betwixt Arphacſad and Salah, and that Luke notwithſtanding followed them, becauſe at that time the Septuagints Tranſlation was commonly followed by all men, and if he ſhould have differed therefrom, it would have beene a meanes to make men diſtaſte his Goſpell. Others, that Cainan and Salah were not two men, but one and the ſame, and therefore that it ſhould be read, which was the ſonne of Salah who was Cainan. Others, that Cainan was indeed between Arphaxad and Salah, but purpoſely omitted by Moſes, that he might make a juſt Decad or generations from Noah to Abraham, as he had done from Adam to Noah, but the Septuagintr knowing by tradition that he was indeed the next to Arphacſhad, ſet him downe alſo. And to make it the more probable, they ſay that Matthew in ſetting downe the Genealogy of Chriſt omitted divers, to make juſt three fourteens in his line. Laſtly, others ſay, that Cainan was put in by ſome Scribe in the Septuagints tranſlation, and becauſe it was ſet downe ſo there, into Saint Lukes Goſpell alſo, which they ſay, is the more probable, becauſe Ierome in his Book of Hebrew traditions upon Geneſis maketh no queſtion about it, ſo that it was not certainly in the eptuagints copy, which he then had: And Ioſephus, who followeth the Septuagint, maketh no mention of Cainan, nor Epiphanius, who likewiſe computeth the yeares after the Septuagint, ſo that hitherto Cainan was not in the Septuagints Tranſlation. Of all theſe reſolutions the firſt pleaſeth me beſt: for although Luke would not certainly by following it countenance any errour in any Tranſlation, which might be any way dangerous, yet he might well follow a common received Tranſlation, as he found it, in a meere name redundant, not to trouble the reader, who might ſtumble at an alteration, if he had made it, and to hinder him from paſſing on to things more profitable. For that Luke was not corrupted herein, but that he wrote it ſo from the beginning is plaine, becauſe no copy is to be found, wherein Cainan is not, and therefore the fourth reſolution cannot ſtand. That this name was put in more then ſhould be in this place in ſome copies of the Septuagints Tranſlation, is the more probable, becauſe, 1 Chron. 1. even according to the Septuagint, it is omitted. There is a Cainan in the line before the floud, Gen. 5. and from thence happily it might by chance in writing it out creep in here alſo. For the ſecond reſolution, that Cainan and Salah ſhould be all one, cannot be admitted without granting an 1 Cajetan. in Luc. 3.

2 Naucler. Chronol.

3 Hippomanni caten. in Gen.

4 Hieron. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. Epiphan. in Hæreſ. 155.

errour

errour in all copies of Luke; & it were ſtrange, that one ſhould be ſet forth by two names more then any other in all theſe Genealogies. For the third, it cannot ſtand for the number of yeares reckoned to every one, ſo that if there were a Cainan omitted by Moſes, his yeares muſt be omitted alſo, and ſo not the full but an imperfect Chronology was made by Moſes. Wherefore I for my part reſt in the firſt, knowing no other way, but that I muſt needs with Beda be confounded to think upon it, that Luke following the Greek rather then the Hebrew ſhould make 11 Generations betvveen Noah and Abraham, vvhen as Moſes in the Hebrevv maketh but 10.

Beda præfat. in Act. Apoſt. Lucas teſtimoniis Græcis potius quàm Hebræis, ex quo accidit, quod maximè miror, & propter ingeniitarditatem vehementiſſimo ſtupore perculſus, neſcio perſcrutari, quâ ratione, cùm in Hebraica veritate à diluvio uſque ad Abraham decem tantùm generationes inveniantur, ipſe Lucas, qui propter Spiritûs ſr. gimen errare non potuit, undecim, adjecto Cainan juxta Septuagintain Evangelio ponere maluit.

Muſculus.

But that the Septuagints Tranſlation is corrupted, appeareth moreover by the difference of yeares both before they are ſaid to have begotten, and after when the yeares of their ſurviving are ſet down: for before to eight of them are added 100 years more then are in the Hebrew. Arphaxad is ſaid to have been 135 when he begat Cainan, Cainan 130 when he begat Salah, Salah 130, Heber 134, Phaleg 130, Reu 132, Serug 130, Nahor 179. And after whereas in the Hebrew Arphaxad is ſaid to have lived ſo long, as that his whole time maketh 438, the Septuagint have but 435, and for 433 of Salah 460, for 464, of Heber 404, for 239 of Phaleg 339, for 239 of Reu 337, for 230 of Serug 330 for 148 of Nahor 304. And laſtly, to every one is added more then in the Hebrew, he ayed, doubtleſſe in imitation of that of chap. 5. If the reaſon of this great difference of yeares be demanded, of 100 yeares ſtill placed before the leſſer number by the Septuagint; this may ſeem to be a reaſon, they would not ſet forth any, as begetting at 30, or 35, becauſe happily they thought it would not be ſo well credited, that in thoſe dayes, when they lived ſo long, they were grown to any perfection to beget children at ſo few years, ſo alſo Muſculus. For the other differences, no reaſon can be yielded, but that in copying out the Septuagints Tranſlation there have many corruptions crept in. And Terah lived 70 years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran. Of Terah and others the Progenitours of Abram it is ſpoken again, Joſ. 24. 2. that they ſerved other Gods, ſo that before Abrahams time we may gather, what great corruption there was in the World: for if the holy line ſo much reſpected by the Lord, turned after Idols, how can we think, but all the reſt of the World was degenerated from the true Religion much more? There were yet ſome few ancients, who doubtleſſe ſerved the only true God, as Noah, who lived 58 yeares, after that Abram vvas borne: for betvveen the floud and Abram vvere 292 yeares, and Noah lived after the floud 350 yeares. And Shem, vvho lived 150 yeares longer then Noah, and Arphacſhad, and Salah, and Heber, from vvhom the Hebrevvs took their name. Touching the reſt, Peleg, Reu, Serug, and Nahor; happily moſt of them might hold the true Religion alſo: and by the care of Noah, Shem, and others of them, it is not to be doubted, but ſome others were kept from Idolatry in thoſe dayes; yet for Terah, Abrahams Father, it is plaine, that he turned Idolater; vvherefore there being ſuch a generall declining, & the Church thus being in danger to be extinct, God provideth an Abram to repaire the decaying ſtate thereof. So that hence vve may both gather, hovv headily men are carryed to errour & ſuperſtition, vvhen the reverence of ſo grave and holy anceſtors, yet living could not conteine them of thoſe times; and alſo that Gods Providence is ſuch over his Church, that henever ſuffereth it utterly to fail, but when corruption is grown to the higheſt, even then he layeth a foundation for the reflouriſhing of the truth, that finding it ſo hard to keep out Idolatry and Superſtition, we may never give any way unto it, but withſtand it to the uttermoſt of our power; & conſidering Gods Providence over his Church, we may never deſpair, but when things are moſt deſperate, be erected in our mindes through hope of a timely reſtauration. But why doth Moſes mention three ſonnes of Terah together here, and not Abram only, whoſe Hiſtory he ſpecially intendeth? To this Calvin and Muſculus anſwer well, that Haran is mentioned, becauſe of Lot his ſon, of whom he was afterwards to ſpeak, and Nahor, becauſe of Verſe 26.

Note.

Queſt.

Calvin. Muſculus.

Queſt. of Rebecca, vvho ſprang from him, and was afterwards Wife unto Iſaack. But here is a greater queſtion touching the age of Terah, vvhen he is ſaid to have begotten Abram, hovv he could be ſaid to be but 70 yeares old, vvhen as his vvhole age vvas 205 years, and after his death Abrams age being ſpoken of is ſet forth to be but 75 yeares, vvhich being added to the age of Terah vvhen he begat Abram, make only 145. For that Terah dyed before this going of Abram into Canaan at 75 years of age is further confirmed, Act. 7. 4? The anſvver of Calvin to this, before vvhom Theodoret anſvvered likevviſe, and Lyranus, is, that although by the order of naming him, Abraham may ſeem to be eldeſt, yet indeed he vvas not, but the youngeſt ſonne of Terah, only he is named firſt for honours ſake, but Haran the Father of Lot and Sarai vvas the firſt, Nahor the ſecond, and aftervvards Abraham, not vvhen Terah vvas 70, but 130 yeares old. And Calvin vvill not ſo much as yield, that Terah begat any of them at juſt 70, but only that he vvas thus old, and then begat. Moreover, he ſaith, that this is a ſtrong argument, that Abram vvas a younger Brother, becauſe Aarai his Wife vvas but 10 yeares younger then he, vvhich could not poſſibly be if ſhe vvere Daughter to his younger Brother. This argument, I confeſſe, is ſo ſtrong, as that I cannot ſee, hovv it may be anſvvered by any means, if by Haran Terahs ſonne, Brother to Abram be underſtood: for to ſay, that ſhe vvas Harans adopted Daughter or Daughter in Lavv, is but a Cavill, as Calvin reaſoneth: yet hovv it may be yielded, that Abram vvas not begotten, til 130 yeares of Terahs age, I can leſſe ſee, forſomuch, as by this line a Chronology of the World is made, wherein it cannot be avoided, but there muſt needs be a great imperfection, if this be yielded to. For whereas in all other Genealogies Moſes is moſt exact, ſetting down the age of the Father, when he begat that ſon whoſe begetting of another, and his age then is next reſpected, &c. to finde the juſt time from the beginning of the World, till then, in Terahs age, when he begat Abraham contrary to his courſe only there ſhall be a faile, and we ſhall be put to finde it out by comparing other places together, which is moſt improbable, eſpecially in Abraham, who, we muſt think, being of ſo great fame was more reſpected, then ordinary, and therefore he would not faile, but ſet down his Fathers age preciſely, when he was begotten. But how then ſhall this doubt be cleared? For the argument taken from Sarai being but ten yeares younger then Abraham, proving that Haran her Father muſt needs be Abrams elder Brother, it may be anſwered thus. Haran the Father of Sarai was not one of the three Brothers named together, but ſome other man: for Haran one of the three was the Father of Lot, and by him only he is deſcribed, but this Haran by Milcah and Iſcah his Daughters. For Haran, who was one of the three, hath his whole Hiſtory ſet down together, v. 27, 28. Haran begat Lot, and Haran dyed before his Father in the Land of his Nativity. And then Abrams and Nahors taking them Wives is ſet down, v. 29. Abram took Sarai, and Nahor Milcah, neither is Sarai ſaid to be Harans Daughter but Milcah only, & that Haran is further deſcribed thus, the Father of Milcah, and of Iſcah. Whereas if Haran one of the three mentioned before were meant Moſes needed not to have ſaid any more, but Milcah the Daughter of Haran. As for the other argument to prove, that Abraham could not be borne till Anno 130 of his Father Terah, viz. becauſe after Terahs death, he having lived 205 yeares, Abram is ſaid to have been but 75. This cannot be well proved out of the Hiſtory: for although Terahs death be firſt ſet down, and then the coming of Abraham into Canaan, this might be done, as S. Auguſtine noteth, becauſe Moſes intending to ſet forth the full Hiſtory of Abram by it ſelfe, would firſt finiſh all that he had to ſay touching Terah his Father, and ſo he briefly runneth through his coming to Charran or Haran, and his dying there, and then returning to Abram, chap. 12. beginneth with Gods firſt calling of him, which could not be after, but before his Fathers death many yeares, as appeareth by comparing the years of his age then with the Verſe 42.

Chap. 12. 4.

Calvin. Theodoret. in cap. 12. Lyranus.

Gen. 17. 17.

Aug. de Civit. Dei. lib. 16. c. 15

the time of his birth, as hath been done already. But Saint Stevens relation indeed ſeemeth to be plaine, that Gods calling of Abram mentioned, chap. 12. was after Terahs death: for he ſaith, Then he came out of the land of Chaldea, and dwelt in Charran; and from thence, when his Father was dead, he removed him into this land. Touching the names Haran, and Charran, and Charras, all Hiſtorians agree, that they were all one, viz. a City in the borders of Meſopotamia. To that out of Stevens narration, I anſwer, that Abram indeed was not removed to Canaan with his Wife and all his ſubſtance, &c. as is ſpecified, Gen. 12. 5. till after his Fathers death, but he with his Nephew Lot departed out of Haran, when they were firſt come thither with Terah, to ſee this Land, and returned ſometimes againe to ſee their aged Father for his comfort going and coming untill his death, but then, which was 60 yeares after, they with Sarai, & all that they had, went to Canaan to ſettle themſelves. For both a departing firſt ſeemeth to me to be plainly intimated, Chap. 12. v. 4. where Abraham is ſaid to have departed only with Lot, and another remove v. 5. where not only Abram and Lot go to Canaan, but Sarai, and their ſubſtance, and all the ſoules, which they had gotten in Haran, are carryed with them. And of this laſt remove Saint Steven ſpeaketh, and Moſes, when he ſetteth down his age, of the firſt, Chap. 12. v. 4. And that Abram was ſpoken to about this Land of Canaan, whileſt Terah lived, appeareth, becauſe, Gen. 12. 1. he is bidden not only to go from his Countrey and kindred, but alſo from his Fathers houſe, to a Land, that God would ſhew him, and that he made a long ſtay in Haran, before his laſt remove, is as plaine, becauſe he and Lot had gotten much during the time of their aboad in that place. If this ſolution ſhall ſeem improbable, becauſ it is not likely, that Abraham would delay ſo long for any friends ſake in the World, to do, as God commanded him; I anſwer, he did not delay to goe thither to ſee the Countrey, according to the Lords direction, Go to a Land, that I will ſhew thee, but only he waited, after that he had been there, the Lord doubtleſſe giving him leave, till a fit opportunity to remove with all his family, which was the time of his Fathers death, who living and being unwilling, had command over him, as a Father, and ſo could cauſe him to ſtay, neither ought he out of filial duty to refuſe ſo to do, unleſſe the Lord had expreſly charged him to remove with all his preſently, which it is likely he would not do, becauſe he would have Abram a paterne, as in other things, ſo in duty and obedience to his Father growing now very aged, and ſo ſtanding in need of him and Lot, whom only he took out of Chaldea with him. Thus that, which ſeemeth to make againſt Terahs age of 70, when Abram was borne, being reſolved, we ſee, how it may be mainteined, that he was borne then, and yet but 75 at his departing from Haran to Canaan, and ſo that the Chronology made by him and others of that line is perfect and plaine. Others reſolve this queſtion otherwiſe, as the Hebrews, whoſe reſolution Jerome mentioneth, and followeth. They ſay, that Abram is ſaid to be but 75 when he went to dwell in Canaan, becauſe from the time of Gods preſerving him miraculouſly out of the fire, into which he was caſt in Chaldea, his life is reckoned by Moſes, and not from the time of his birth. For they had an old tradition, that Ur of the Chaldees, out of which he came, was the fire of the Chaldees, according to the ſignification of the word Ur, into which he was put, becauſe he oppoſed their Idolatry committed with the fire. They then held, that Abram at his going into Canaan was 135 from his birth, but 75 onely from this time, when he had his life the ſecond time given him. But firſt the ground of this is uncertain, Ur not ſetting forth any ſuch fire, into which he was caſt, according to the opinion of many grave Authours, for then Terah alſo and Lot muſt have been in the ſame fire, and Sarai, who all came together from Ur of the Chaldees, but a City at this day called Orchæ, as Petrus Appianus ſaith, 624 miles diſtant from Jeruſalem Eaſtward; and again, if Moſes had reckoned the age of Abram by this at 75, why may he not be thought to have reckoned ſome others likewiſe

Act. 7. 4.

Hieron in traait. hebr.

P. Appianus.

wiſe? and what certainty then can we have in this Chronology. And no better to be liked is that anſwer of Andreas Maſius, who ſaith, that Stephen ſpeaking of Terahs death, meant not his naturall, but his ſpirituall death in idolatry. If any can finde a better ſolution, then that, which I have before ſet down, let him friendly impart it, for becauſe of the hiſtories following, I am nothing ſatisfied touching this queſtion. Yet happily Abram beſides his once going, went and came again and again, till that finally coming to Haran, and burying his father, he went to Canaan to dvvell, never to returne any more, his being there till this, being a kinde of peregrination rather then an habitation, at vvhich Stephen pointeth, vvhen he ſaith after his fathers death, God μετῴκισεν, made him a ſtable inhabitant there, as Saint Auguſtine interpreteth it, and the vvord ſignifieth. And in the time of Abrams going and coming before this his finall removing, many things happened, which are ſet down after, verſe 5. of chap. 12. all which happened according to this account, before that his laſt going thither. To conclude, ſeeing all thoſe things, both chap. 12. & 13. &c. following after chap. 12.5. when Sarai went with Abram, were done when they dwelt together in Canaan, and Iſaac was born before Terahs death 35 years, the beſt reſolution is that of Auguſtine, if we do but add that Stephen reſpected onely the courſe of the hiſtory, and examined not exactly the juſt time of his remove. It is then to be conceived, that he came firſt to Canaan with Lot at 75, chap. 12.4. and certain years after with the ſubſtance that he ſtayed to gather.

And. Maſius in Ioſ. ult.

Verſe 28. And Haran dyed before his father in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees. By this it plainly appeareth, that Chaldea was the Countrey where Terah dwelt from the beginning, and where Abram was born, ſo that originally Abram was a Chaldean, who were called Caſdim or Chaldeans from Arphaxad, but he and his, and the line before him from Heber, Hebrews. Yet ſome contend, that Haran was Abrams native place, becauſe, Gen. 24. 4. Abram calleth the City of Nahor in Meſopotamia, which was this Haran, his Countrey, when he ſent his ſervant thither to fetch a Wife for his ſon Iſaac. But he ſpake thus in reſpect of his long abode, not of his nativity there, for it is expreſly ſaid, that Terah took him with him, when he came firſt to Haran out of Chaldea. Touching theſe words, Haran died before his father in Ur of the Chaldees, the Hebrews have a ſtrange expoſition, as it is recorded by Jerome, viz. that the Chaldeans being great Idolaters, and Terah likewiſe, Abram vvould by no means be drawn to the worſhipping of their Idols, vvhereupon his father complained of him to Nimrod or Belus the King, and he vvas condemned to be burnt in the fire, but being caſt in, God preſerved him miraculouſly, ſo that he came forth vvithout hurt, vvhich Haran his brother ſeeing, he vvas animated againſt their Idolatry alſo, and vvas adjudged to the fire in like manner, but being not ſo ſtrong in the faith as Abram, he vvas burnt to aſhes, his father Terah beholding it, and conſenting, and that this is meant here vvhen it is ſaid, he dyed before his father in Ur, that is, the fire into vvhich the Chaldees caſt him. But this is certainly a fable, as Jerome alſo ſometime calleth it, becauſe Moſes vvould not doubtleſſe have omitted ſo great a miracle, and becauſe in the next verſe Terah, and Lot, and Sarai alſo are ſpoken of as coming out of Ur of the Chaldees, and here this Vr is ſaid to be the land of Harans nativity. If that ſaying, Gen. 15.7. I am the God that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, ſhall ſeem to intimate ſome great deliverance of Abram there, as when the bringing of the Hebrevves out of Egypt is ſpoken of, vvhich is urged by Burgenſis, vvho is for this opinion; It is eaſily anſvvered, that it vvas a great mercy of God to Abram to bring him from amongſt thoſe Idolaters, preſerving him from that ſpirituall danger, and placing him, vvhere he might freely ſerve God vvithout any interruption by meanes of ſuch miſcreants, and therefore he might vvell mention this, as a ſingular favour.

P. Burgenſis in Gen. 12.

Hieron. tradit. hebr. in Gen.

P. Burgenſis.

For that which is here ſaid of Abrams and Nahors wives, Milcha the wife of of Nahor is said to be the daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah and Iscah. Some hold, that this Iscah was Sarai, who had these two names, because they will needs have Sarai the daughter of Haran also, thus Jerome and Augustine and some others. But this seemeth to me to be but a meere conjecture. For neither is Sarai in any other place called by this name, neither doth Moses having named Sarai and Milcha, say in the plurall number, the daghters of Haran, but as speaking of one of them onely, viz. Milcha, in the singular number, the daughter of Haran, and whereas he is called the son of Haran, Terahs son, ver. 31. Sarai is not called his daughter, but Terahs daughter in law. Moreover in another place, viz. Gen. 20.12. Abraham saith of Sarai, she is indeed my sister, for she is the daughter of my father, but not of my mother. Whereupon some have held, and it may well be gathered, that she was not the daughter of Haran, Terahs son, but of Terah by another wife. There be many grave Authors, I confesse, that will not have those words of Abraham so understood, but that Sarai is called Terahs daughter, but not by the same mother, because amongst the Hebrewes grandchildren were called sons and daughters to their grandfathers and grandmothers, and so amongst other Nations, and for marriages betwixt brethren and sisters, they deny it to have been in use in those dayes. But who seeth not, that Abrams words to Abimelech do plainly describe one coming of the same father, it being an improper speech touching a grandchilde, she is the daughter of my father, but not of my mother? And for such marriages, there was yet no law to prohibit them, and for such, as would contein themselves in their own families, there was then often-times a necessity of marrying with a sister, werefore it is rather to be held, that Iscah was some other woman, but who, or married to whom, it is uncertain.

Verse 29.

Hieron. in Gen. 11. August. Ioseph.

Gen. 20.12.

And Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his sonnes son, and Sarai his daughter in law, and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees to go into the Land of Canaan, & they came to Haran, and dwelt there. For Ur of the Chaldees, the Hierosol. Targum hath the fiery furnace of the Chaldees, because Ur signifieth fire, and the Chaldees were worshippers of the fire, giving to this City, where they kept this fire continually burning, this name from fire, as is most probable. This journey undertaken by Terah and his company was very long, for from Ur to the City Haran are reckoned by Geographers 376 miles, and from Haran to Sichem in the land of Canaan 400 miles, there was a neerer way from, or to Canaan, but this was safest. A question here offereth it selfe first, what moved Terah to enter upon this long journey? To this Calvin and Musculus answer rightly, that God called Abram to this journey, as appeareth, Chap. 12. 1. and, Acts. 7. 2. and therefore it is most probable, that he declaring this his calling to his father, he was also willing for his great love to so good a son, to go along with him. Yet this going and taking Abram with him is referred to Terah, whom Abram followed as an obedient son, he having the honor of the chief in this voyage for his paternities sake. Wheras Moses saith, that God brought him from Ur of the Chaldees, it differeth not from this, that Terah took him with him, God was the author of this journey, and Terah the instrument to lead him forth. But it may seem strange, that Terah being an idolater, as is taught, Josh. 24.2. should so readily go away with Abram, the cause of whose departure were the abominable idolatries of the Chaldeans, as is touched, Judith 5.7. and not rather stay with his son Nahor there still. There are some indeed, that hold both Terah and Abram to have been idolaters before this, as the Jewish Rabbines, two especially of great note, Johanan and Hanine, cited by Genebrardus in his Chronologie. They say, that Terah was most earnest in that superstition, and a persecuter of oppugners, and that Abram lived therein, till Anno. 48. of his age, about the time of the division of Tongues, when abandoing all idolatry, he served the true God onely, and Epiphanius saith, that Abram provoked Terah his father to follow him herein, and Suidas saith, that Abram brake his fathers Image, and some of

Verse 31.

Quest. Calvin. Musculus.

Gen. 15.7.

R. Iohanan. Hanine. Genebrard. Chronol.

Epiphan. init. operis adverſ. Suidas in voce Serug.

them he burnt with fire. And both Ephiphanius and Suidas note Serug to have been the firſt Idolater of that line, who would have worthy men to be worſhipped after their death, and his ſon Nahor did likewiſe after him, but Terah deviſed the making of earthen Images to be vvorſhipped, and therefore God puniſhed him in taking away his ſon Haran by death before him, vvhereas never, till this time do we read of any, that died before their fathers. But of Abram do neither of both theſe Authors ſay, that he ever ſerved other gods, but Suidas contrarivviſe ſaith, that, as the Chaldeans were much given to the contemplation of the Stars, ſo he being intent in looking up to them thought that there was one moſt glorious Creator of them all, vvho alone was to be vvorſhipped, and therefore being but fourteeen yeers old, he reproved his fathers idolatry, & going on to ſerve the true God, he afterwards appeared unto him. And Joſephus ſpeaketh alſo to the ſame effect, hovv he argued from the moving and influence of the Starres, that there vvas one God, vvho giveth life and motion and vertue to all things, vvho alone ought to be worſhipped. And Saint Auguſtine ſtandeth not onely for Abrams, but for Terahs innocency alſo in this reſpect. For vvhen he took Abram and Lot, &c. vvith him, he ſaith, that the reaſon, vvhy he left Nahor behinde, was becauſe he was an Idolater, and would not be reclaimed herefrom, to flee which and the perſecution ſtirred up againſt them therefore by the Chaldeans, he and Abram fled away. Why Terah ſhould be excuſed from idolatry againſt the report of other Ancients, I can ſee no reaſon, eſpecially they ſaying the ſame with Joſhuah? But Abram doubtleſſe was alvvayes untainted, or elſe ſometime he would have made mention of his converſion to the greater praiſe of God. And it is moſt probable, that Terah vvas turned by him, and ſo when God called him out of Caldea, vvould go vvith him, but Nahor his other ſon not being moved to repent, ſtayed ſtill behinde. Yet afterwards he came to Haran alſo, and dvvelt there, as appeareth in this Hiſtory. But why did Terah ſtay at Haran in Meſopotamia, and not go through to Canaan? It is moſt probable, as all conſent, that being an old man, and weary of this vvay, he would go no further, but ſetled his abode there, ſuffering his ſon Abram with Lot to travel and ſee it, and ſo to come again, till that he ſhould be gathered to his fathers, wherein alſo they obeyed him. For the time of his aboad in Haran before his death, it cannot poſſibly be ſo ſhort, as Calvin imagineth, who ſaith, that Terah ſurely ſtayed but a little time in Haran, and then died, or elſe Abram vvould rather have obeyed God in haſtening forward to Canaan, and not after threeſcore yeeres more expired. For that they dwelt long in Haran is intimated, Chap. 12. ver. 5. where it is ſaid, that Abram and Lot took vvith them all their ſubſtance, and all the ſouls that they had gotten in Haran, and vvent into the land of Canaan. If their abode had been but a little time in Haran, it would rather have been ſaid, all their ſubſtance, they had gotten in Chaldea. But it is likely, that fleeing perſecution they came empty to Haran, or with little, and there were greatly increaſed, for vvhich they muſt neceſſarily dwell there many yeares, even threeſore, as hath been ſhewed before, at what time Terah died. As for the delay of ſo long a time, I doubt not, but it vvas made knovvn to Abram, that it vvas vvith the good vvill of the Lord, he being ſatisfied for that time with Abrams travelling thither, and returning again to do his duty to his father.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.

Aug. de Civit. lib. 16. cap. 13.

Queſt.

Calvin.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. Now the Lord had ſaid unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and fathers houſe, &c.

Calvin.

This is not to be underſtood, as ſpoken to Abram, after Terahs death, as it may ſeem, but long before, vvhen he vvas yet vvith his father in Chaldea, ſo Calvin. For if it had been ſpoken to him in Haran, he migbt have replied, I am already come out of my country, and the journey undertaken hitherto had been without warrant, whereas without doubt this call of the Lord was the cauſe cauſe thereof, yet againſt this ſeemeth to make the relation of Steven, Acts 7. For he ſaith, that God apeared to Abram in Meſopotamia, that is, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, betwe en Ur of the Chaldees & Haran, as they were travelling. But this is eaſily anſwered, the word Meſopotamia is largely taken by Saint Stephen in that place, that whole tract of ground beyond the River Euphates, being meant hereby, which conteined Meſopotamia, Chaldea, and Babylonia: for accordingly he addeth, Act. 7. 4. So he went out of Chaldea, and dwelt in Charran. And that Meſopotamia properly ſo called, was not the place, where God ſpake to Abram in this manner, is plain, becauſe he biddeth him to go from his countrey, and from his fathers houſe, and if from thence, he was then in his countrey Chaldea, when he was bidden thus to do, and not upon his journey. If it be objected, this apparition was after Terahs death, when Abram dwelt in Haran, for ſo it is related, and therefore in Haran and not in Chaldea, again, from Chaldea he was taken by his father, therefore not by this call of the Lord: laſtly, he forſook not his kindred in going out of Chaldea, for Lot and Terah went with him: for hereupon ſome hold, that Abram was in Haran when God ſpake thus unto him, as Rupertus, Lyranus, Toſtatus and Paulus Burgenſis, This is all eaſily anſwered. Firſt although it be ſet down after Terahs death, yet it might be before, all touching Terah, being written together, chap. 11, and the hiſtory of Abram being begun here, and therefore this apparition, although had before, not related till now. Secondly, his father in taking him, was rather a companion with him, out of his love, then the firſt Authour to him of this journey, as Chryſoſtome teacheth, and hath been before ſhewed. Laſtly, he might be called to leave his father and all, yet if he being converted would go with him, this was not againſt the will of the Lord. Toſtatus to defend his opinion ſaith, that Abram was called twice, once in Chaldea, of which Stephen ſpeaketh, and then in Haran, of which it is ſpoken here. But this is a new invention, and unknown to all ancient Expoſitours. Beſides, the words ſet down by Moſes, and uſed by Stephen, evince, that they both point at one and the ſame calling.

Auguſt. lib. 16. de Civ. Dei, cap. 15.

Rupertus.
Lyranus.
Toſtatus.
P. Burgenſ.

Chryſoſt. hom. 31. in Gen.

But why doth the Lord ſpeak both of countrey, kindred, and his fathers houſe, and not of his countrey onely, which includeth both the other? To this Ambroſe anſwereth. It had been enough indeed to have bidden him go out of his countrey, for ſo he ſhould have gone from his kindred and fathers houſe alſo, but therefore the Lord ſpeaketh of them ſeverally, that he might try his affection, leſt peradventure he ſhould ſeem either unwiſely to have begun his journey, or ſome fraud had been prepared in the heavenly Commandements, &c. For a mans countrey is dear unto him, and when a man thinketh upon his kindred there, it maketh him yet more loth to leave it, but when he thinketh alſo upon his fathers houſe, his affection is yet more drawn. Wherefore the Lord would hereby ſet forth Abram, as admirably obedient, who could not be moved by all theſe to reluct againſt this divine vocation. And yet his obedience is the more to be extolled, in that he telleth him not, into vvhat countrey he ſhould go by name, but at large into a countrey, vvhich he ſhould ſhevv him, vvhich is further thus ſet forth by the Apoſtle, he vvent out, not knowing whither he went. Yet ſome there are, vvho thinke, that Canaan was then named unto him. But no ſuch thing, but the contrary can be gathered from the text, and therefore it is held by moſt, that at the firſt he vvas not told the name of the countrey, but having ſhevved his obedience in beginning to go, it is likely, that the Lord named it unto him; vvherefore vvhen Terah vvith Abram, is ſaid to have gone out of Ur, to go into Canaan, it is to be underſtood, that Moſes ſetteth dovvn the name by anticipation. But vvould the Lord have Abram to go ſo farre, and to this countrey in particular? Anſw. If the vvay had been ſhort, his obedience had not been ſo great, and there vvas a propheſie of Noah, touching Canaan to be fulfilled, that he ſhould be a ſervant to Shem, vvhich vvas in Abrams poſterity at length ſubduing the poſterity of Canaan, deſtroying ſome of them and making ſervants of others, and

Queſt.

Ambroſ. lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 3. Satis fuerat dixiſſe egredere de terra tua, &c. ſed ideo addidit ſingula, ut ejus affectum probaret, ne forte aut imprudenter exiſſe videretur, aut fraus aliqua mandatis cœleſtibus pararetur.
Heb. 11. 8.
Cajetan.
Oleaſter.

Queſt.

and to this doubtleſſe the Lord had reſpect now in making Abram to ſee it and expect it. Philo and after him Ambroſe allegorically hence teach, how every ſoul is called from his countrey, kindred and fathers houſe to ſupernall places, which God wil ſhew unto it at the laſt. And this countrey is the body, being terra, becauſe taken out of terra, the kindred is the ſenſe, becauſe it hath neer alliance to the ſoul, and the fathers houſe is reaſon, the father, as it were of our ſpeeches and actions. From theſe we are called out, from the body, when we are called from defiling & making it filthy by ſin, from the ſenſe, when from following ſenſual luſts, which ſway to theſe pollutions, & from the reaſon, when from exerciſing it about worldly things, that it may be lifted up to things heavenly. Now whoſoever is a true childe of Abram, then applyeth himſelfe readily with all his power to obey God herein, and to him, that doth ſo, God will ſhew another Countrey farre above, even the moſt glorious heavens to be poſſeſſed by him for evermore. It is noted here by Ferus, that God made this gracious promiſe to Abraham, no mention being before made of his works, to ſhew, that of Gods mercy, and not for mans merit his grace is extended unto him.

Allegory. Philo. Ambroſ. lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 2.

Verſe 2. And I will make of thee a great Nation, and I will bleſſe thee, and make thy name great, and thou ſhalt be a bleſſing, &c. Here is a ſevenfold favour promiſed to Abram, to ſet forth all manner of favour: 1 The numeroſity of children. 2 Abundance of riches, which Gods bleſſing bringeth. 3 Glory of name. 4 Such happineſſe, as that he ſhould be a bleſſing in the abſtract. 5 Bleſſing upon ſuch, as bleſſed him. 6 Curſing upon ſuch, as curſed him. 7 A bleſſing upon all Nations through him. And hereby he ſhould be abundantly recompenced, for departing from his Countrey, another ſhould be ſhewed him, which he ſhould inherit, for leaving his kindred he ſhould have an innumerable poſterity, and for departing from his fathers houſe, ſo that he could not bleſſe him any more, he ſhould loſe his part in his goods, and ſo his name ſhould be put out amongſt his brethren, God would bleſſe him, and bleſſe thoſe that bleſſe him, and contrariwiſe curſe thoſe that curſe him, and make him a bleſſing, and through him bleſſe all other Nations, and through Gods bleſſing he ſhould be ful of wordly wealth, & his name ſhould be great. So whoſoever in obedience to God loſeth any thing, he is a great gainer thereby. God requireth no duty at our hands, but if we do, he propoundeth unto us an ample reward. For the firſt thing here promiſed, I will make of thee a great Nation. This was a wonderful mercy, Abraham having lived hitherto, and yet being childleſſe, as Calvin noteth, a great Nation he promiſeth to make of him, that is, both for the number of his children, and for the ſingularity of that people, it being ſequeſtred from the reſt of the world, as a peculiar people, and dealt ſo by, as never any other Nation was, Deut. 4. For the ſecond, I will bleſſe thee, that is, by my bleſſing it ſhall come to paſſe, that thou being thus old, yet ſhalt be ſo fruitfult, and I will ſend thee proſperity in all things, and greatly increaſe thy ſubſtance. For the third, I will make thy name great, that is, moſt famous, ſo that every where Abrams name ſhall be ſpoken of with honour, not onely in his life, but after his death. Joſephus telleth, how all Nations round about honoured the name of Abram, and ſince the preaching of the Goſpel in all Countreys, the name of Abram is moſt famous in all places. God made his name great alſo by calling himſelf by his name, the God of Abram, the God of Iſaac, and of Jacob. For the fourth, and thou ſhalt be a bleſſing. Hereby is meant, that his eſtate ſhould be thought ſo happy, that when any man ſhould wiſh happineſſe to themſelves or others, they ſhould ſay, God bleſſe thee, and make thee like unto Abram, thus Calvin. But to be a bleſſing is rather to be ſuch, as in whom others are bleſſed, ſo Abram was a bleſſing, becauſe for his ſake his children after him were bleſſed extraordinarily. I ſay, not and all Nations alſo, for that is another diſtinct thing after added. For the fifth, I will bleſſe them that bleſſe thee, and the ſixth, and curſe them that curſe thee. Here is the greateſt league that can be, as be-

Note.

Calvin. Muſculus. Luther.

Vatablus. Muſculus.

Calvin.

tween tween Kings, that have common friends and common enemies, yet thus is God in league alſo with all the faithful, if any do them good, he will reward it, if wrong, he vvill be avenged therefore. Thus he bleſſed the Midwives of Egypt, and Rahab of Jericho, and Ebedmelech the Blackmore in Jeremiah, as Luther noteth, but he curſed Pharaoh, the Ammonites and Moabites, Balak & Sennacherib, and all the Monarchs of the World for vexing his Church. For the laſt, In thee ſhall all the Nations of the earth be bleſſed, what is meant by this, is plainly expreſſed, Gen. 22.18. In thy ſeeed ſhall all the Nations of the earth be bleſſed, and this ſeed Saint Paul ſheweth was Chriſt, Gal. 3.16. yet the Jewes to elude this, ſay, that to be bleſſed in any man, is no more but to be prayed for, that God would bleſſe, as he bleſſed him, ſo to be bleſſed in Abram is to become ſuch as he vvas, and ſo to be bleſſed accordingly. Moreover they ſay, that the tribe of Levi, which came of Abram, was ſet to bleſſe, Deut. 10.8. Eſa. 65.16. and ſo all being bleſſed by them, are bleſſed in or by Abram. But this is a meer cavill, ſeeing Levi bleſſed not all Nations, but Iſrael onely, and God expreſly hath interpreted himſelf otherwiſe, as hath been ſaid. Moreover, the event proveth this to be ſo, becauſe, when this ſeed came, then Gods bleſſing began firſt to be diffuſed amongſt the Nations, they being turned from Idolatry, to ſerve the onely true God and his Sonne Jeſus Chriſt by the preaching of the Goſpel. This place, as Luther noteth, ſheweth the expectation of the Jewes to be vain, in looking for a Meſſiah, who ſhould ſubdue and bring under them all other Nations, for God promiſeth in Abrams ſeed a bleſſing upon all Nations, and threateneth not a ſubjection, bringing under, and violent ſubduing to any forreign Government, in reſpect of outward polity.

Vatablus. Luther. Hebræi. Luther.

So Abram went, &c. This is not to be referred either to his going firſt out of Ur of the Chaldees, or to his laſt going out of Haran to Canaan to ſettle there, when he took all that he had with him, v. 5. but, as hath been already touched, to his going up from Haran to ſee Canaan, and to travel about it, whileſt his father Terah was yet living, and ſtayed in Haran, from whence he continued going and coming till Terahs death, and then removed with all that he had. For theſe words, The ſoules that he had gotten, the Chaldee hath, that he had ſubdued to the law, the Jeruſ. Targum the ſouls of Proſelytes. Verſe 4.

And Abram paſſed through the land unto the place of Sichem, to the plain of Moreh, and the Canaanite was then in the land. The Greeks, ſaith Muſculus, read it, Abram went through the length thereof, even nigh to Mount Gerizim, where Sichem ſtood, ſo that being come into the land, the Lord did not yet ſhew him a place to reſt in, but after ſo long a journey, cauſed him ſtill to paſſe on many miles more, thus further exerciſing his faith. Geographers deſcribe this Town, as lying 36 miles from Jeruſalem northward, and it pertained afterwards to Samaria, Joh. 4. Sichem ſignifieth a ſhoulder, and ſo had the name therefrom, becauſe of the likeneſſe, as Melanchthon ſaith, yet at the firſt it was not ſo called, but Moreh, or the oake or valley of Moreh, as Vatablus ſaith: ſo rthe word אלון howſoever it ſignifieth an oake onely, may be tranſlated both wayes: and it is likely, becauſe it was a plain or valley, where this oake or thicket of oakes ſtood, by a figure, whereby the continent is put for the content, it was thus tranſlated by Jerome, whom others do follow herein For the word Moreh it ſignifieth conſpicuous or famous, or a ſhewer, and by this name it is moſt likely, that Abram called it, becauſe God appeared there unto him, ſhewing him for what cauſe he brought him thither, as v. 7. That of the Canaanites being in the land is added, that Abram might think his ſtate no whit better here than in Chaldea, ſo wicked and impure a people inhabiting in theſe parts, and that being poſſeſſed already by them, he ſhould never attein to the poſſeſſion hereof, ſo that a great and ſtrong faith muſt needs be in Abram to overcome theſe temptations, Verſe 6.

Muſculus. Melanchthon. Vatablus.

And the Lord appeared unto Abram, and ſaid, Unto thy ſeed will I give this land, and he builded an Altar there, &c. It is obſerved by Chryſoſtome here, that this Verſe 7.

Chryſoſt. hom. 32

was

was the firſt appearing of the Lord to any man mentioned in the holy Scriptures. He ſpake indeed to Adam, to Cain, to Noah, and to Abram before, but it is not ſaid that he appeared. So that upon this extraordinary fact of Abrams the Lord revealed himſelf unto him in an extraordinary manner. He having at the word of the Lord gone to a Countrey ſo farre, to comfort him after this long travell, the Lord did not onely ſpeak, but appear unto him. But whether by viſion, or by dream, or what other way, no man can tell. It is moſt probable, that he appeared by an Angel ſhewing himſelf in ſome glorious likeneſſe, aud ſpeaking thus, as the Lords Deputy unto him in the day-time: becauſe in divers other places, when the Lord is ſaid to appear, it is certain, that it was by an Angel. As when Moſes was with the Lord in the Mount giving him the law, this is ſaid to have been done by the miniſtery of Angels, and Jacob, to whom God appeared ſomtimes, ſaving from him all dangers, when he ſpeaketh hereof ſaith, The Angel that redeemed me from all evill, &c. For God himſelf Moſes, that talked ſo familiarly with the Lord, never ſaw, for which cauſe, he once deſired, that the Lord would ſhew himſelf ſo unto him that he might know him. But this was denied; becauſe, ſaid the Lord, No man ſhall ſee me and live. But when the Lord appeared to Abram, what did he for him? He promiſed, that his ſeed ſhould inherit that land, wherein the Canaanites then dwelt, and poſſeſſed it, for which cauſe alſo, that clauſe of the Canaanites being in the land, was put in before. At his firſt ſpeaking to him he promiſed to ſhew him a land, and no more, but here he promiſeth the poſſeſſion of it to his poſterity. A poor comfort, a man may think, as Calvin noteth, after ſo tedious a journey to promiſe a thing, which ſhould not be fulfilled till many years after, and to ſpeak to one of his poſterities inheriting it, who was old, and his wife alſo, and yet had no childe, but Abram by faith tranſcended all humane reaſon, and becauſe he did ſtedfaſtly believe this, in way of thankfulneſſe he built an Altar there to the Lord. Of Altars building ſee before, *chap.*8.20.

Gal.3.19. Gen.48.16.

Exod.33.13.20

Calvin.

Verſe 8. And he removed thence to a mountaine on the Eaſt of Bethel, and he pitched his tent, having Bethel on the Weſt, and Ai on the Eaſt, and there he built an Altar, &c. Wherefore Abram removed from the foreſaid valley to this mountain is not expreſſed: but Expoſitours conjecture, that for the diverſity of his religion he was envyed by the Canaanites, aud this gave him occaſion, when he had been a while in one place, to remove to another. But what mountain this was, is controverted. Mercator and Toſtatus ſay, that it was that mountain, whereupon ſtood Mount Gerizzim, and Ebal, being both tops of one mountain, where the bleſſings and the curſings were rehearſed, *Joſ.*8. as was appointed, *Deut.*11.29. and more particularly upon Mount Ebal, where Joſuah afterwards built his Altar, Joſ. 8.3. But others ſay, it was ſome other mountain, becauſe theſe ſtood in Sichem, as Joſephus ſaith, and Brocardus. And there is one Henry Bunting, who in writing of the travels of Abram, ſaith that this mountain was mount Ephraim, 28 miles from Sichem. And indeed the ſituation of mount Gerizim, and Ebal being ſuch, as hath been ſaid, viz. near to Sichem, and by the plain of Moreh, as is alſo ſet forth, *Deut.*11.30. it cannot be, that this ſhould be here meant, for to remove ſo little a way, had not been worthy the name of a remove, and therefore it is to be thought, that it was rather a mountain further off. For the name Bethel, that place was not then ſo called, but Luz, having this name given it afterwards by *Jacob Gen.*28. but here ſpoken of by anticipation. He pitched his tent, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, after the manner of ſouldiers, that with the leſſe trouble he might remove again, and whereas Sarai his wife being with him is not ſpoken of, as being diſcontented at this tumultuous kinde of living, he admireth her faith as much herein, as the faith of Abram.

Calvin.
Muſculus.
Mercator
Chron.
Toſtatus.
Joſephus.
Brocard.
H. Bunting.

Chryſoſtom. in Gen. Hom 32.

Verſe 9. And Abram journeyed, going on ſtill towards the South. To what place is not expreſſed, but Calvin conjectureth, that it was Hebron, a City afterwards of Prieſts, but then a place, where the Kings of the Canaanites dwelt. It is likely, that he vvas novv guided that vvay vvhich vvas tovvards Egypt, that he might the more eaſily remove thither in the time of the famine, of vvhich mention is made in the next verſe. The coming of Abram into this Countrey vvas to ſee it in all the parts thereof, and therefore in this reſpect he vvas not to continue long in any one place.

Calvin.

ly

Verſe 10.

And there was a famine in the land, & Abram went down into Egypt to ſojourn there, &c. It is ſtrange to ſee vvhat croſſes befel Abram, to vvhom ſuch ample promiſes vvere made. Unto all his former neceſſitated removes, here is added a great famine, ſo that he was compelled novv out of that promiſed land to ſeek for food for him and his in ſome other Couutrey. Neither could he be ſecurely there, but in danger of his life, or of having his vvives chaſtity violated, or of both. But God, by vvhoſe providence all things are ordered, did thus diſpoſe of things. In fine, to confirme him more of his fatherly care in all places over him, and he being ſtill exerciſed vvith ſuch great croſſes vvas made a more illuſtrious example of faith and patience, that vve might learn from him as from Job, never to deſpair, but in greateſt calamities to put our truſt in God, and ſo patiently to bear all events. Philo in ſpeaking of this famine ſaith, vvhen they laboured a long time vvith the penury of the fruits of the earth, partly through unvvonted ſqualours, partly through over-frequent ſhovvers, the Cities of Syria being oppreſſed vvith famine vvere left by their inhabitants, ſome ſhifting for themſelves in one place, and ſome in another, Abram hearing of the fertility of Egypt, removed thither. But to what part of Egypt is not ſet down, yet Henry Bunting in the travels of the Patriarchs ſaith, it was Tanis, in Hebrew called Zoan, the chief City of Egypt, where King Pharaoh kept his Court, and near to which the Hebrews afterwards dwelt, working and building for Pharaoh, Pithon and Raameſes. And therefore Goſhen, where they dwelt, is ſpoken of, as being in the field Zoan, and moſt fruitfull. This Tanis alſo was near to Nilus, in that part which lyeth towards Paleſtina, and ſo fitteſt for Abram to come unto from Canaan, and this journey, as the ſame Authour ſaith, was 240 miles. Egypt was lower than Canaan, and therefore, when he goeth thither, he is ſaid to deſcend, when he returneth again, to aſcend. Touching the famine, which cauſed this flight Calvin noteth, that Canaan was a plentifull countrey, and therefore it is probable, that it had not been formerly oppreſſed with famines, but now Abram coming thither, a famine followeth, ſo in Iſaacs time, and in Jacobs and Joſephs. This was to ſhew, that piety is full of ſcandals, if they be not overcome by faith. For here was occaſion given to the Canaanites to blame Abram and his company with their religion, as the cauſe hereof. And Muſculus maketh a queſtion, whether Abram ſinned not in fleeing into Egypt now, and whether he ought not rather to have ſtayed by it, relying upon Gods providence? To which he anſwereth, ſaying, that Rab. Moſes Gerund. held, that Abram ſinned in thus doing, becauſe the Lord had brought him thither, and therefore till he had been called from thence again, he ought not to have removed, and becauſe of this, his poſterity was puniſhed, by being kept in Egypt in ſervitude 200 years. But Muſculus is of a contrary opinion, that Abram ſinned not herein, becauſe the Lord did not prohibit him, as he did Iſaac afterwards, Gen.26.2. and not having any revelation, that he ſhould be miraculouſly preſerved there, he could do no leſſe, when food failed, as he would not tempt the Lord, but remove where food might be had. Neither did he go away, but with a minde to return again, and therefore it is ſaid, that he went to ſojourn in Egypt. There was certainly a providence, as Chryſoſtome noteth, in this his remove, as in the reſt, God carried Abram thus about, as a Doctor of vertue and piety to the people of both Nations, and he made this famine his Serjeant as it were to take Abram into Egypt, that his fame might be ſpread there, and notice might be taken, how gracious he was vvith the Lord, as was before promiſed, that his name ſhould be made great: in Chaldea he did not thus carry him about, becauſe a Prophet is not without honour, but in his own countrey. Abram being Philo lib. de Abram.

H. Bunting. In Zoan were Gods judgements ſhewed. Pſal.78.12.

Calvin.

Muſculus.

R. Moſes Gerund.

Chryſoſt. hom. 30. in Gen.

Verſe 11,12

Verſe 13.

Queſt.

ing towards Egypt, fearing that the Egyptians vvould kill him for Sarai ſo fair a vvoman, deſireth her to ſay, that ſhe vvas his ſiſter. Here a queſtion offereth it ſelfe, firſt, vvhy Abram feared violence at the Egyptians hands for his vvives cauſe more then at the Canaanites? It ſeemeth, that the Egyptians were more notorious for their inordinate luſts, then the very Canaanites, and therefore there was now more cauſe to fear; and moreover, their women vvere black, and ſanny, in vvhich reſpect Sarai did far exceed all them in beauty, whereby it vvas probable that they would be the more tempted.

Note.

We may ſee here, vvhat a troubleſome thing it is for a man to have a very beautifull wonſan to his vvife, at ſundry times he is in much fear by reaſon of her, as Ambroſe noteth, and therefore adviſeth, not to look much after beauty in marrying, but vertue, vvhich giveth to a man the moſt certain content.

Ambroſ. de Abrah. l. 1. c. 1.

Queſt.

But why did Abram thinke, that they would kill him, if they knew her to be his wife, could not they being without all fear of God, take and abuſe her as well, he being alive, as dead? I anſwer, it appeareth hereby, that being ſuch, as they were, they abhorred from adultery, but their blindnes appeared in this, that they abhorred not, but were ready to commit a greater ſin, even the ſin of murther.

Queſt.

But the greateſt queſtion is ſtill behinde, whether did not Abram ſinne in cauſing Sarai thus to diſſemble: For although ſhe told no lye in ſaying, ſhe was his ſiſter, yet in ſaying thus to the end, that they might not think her his wife, that ſome other man might take her to wife, how could it be without fault? And Abram ſeemeth herein the more blame-worthy, becauſe God had ſo extraordinarily revealed himſelf unto him, and made him ſuch gracious promiſes, that he needed not to doubt of his protection whereſoever? To this Chryſoſtome ſaith not directly, that Abram ſinned herein, but that he conſented to his wives adultery to ſave his own life, in ſo great fear was he of being ſlaine. Jerome ſaith, it was fœda neceſſitas, whereby Abram was brought to do thus. And Origen for the foulneſſe of the thing, will not have it underſtood literally, but allegorically. Calvin alſo and others of our new Writers hold this act of Abraham unexcuſable from all fault. That, he provided for the ſafety of his own life indeed is excuſable, ſaith Calvin, and a fruit of his faith, becauſe, according to Gods promiſe he expected to be a father of a great Nation, and that through him a bleſſing ſhould come to all nations, about which he did well to be ſolicitous in this time of danger, and in this reſpect, not to ſet by his wives chaſtity in reſpect of his owne life being of ſo exceeding great conſequence, although he loved her moſt dearly, and had rather otherwiſe to have endured death, then to have lived, to ſee her abuſed. Yet in that he deviſed this oblique way of ſaving himſelf, he ſaith, doth not ſeem excuſeable. His end was good, but through incogitancy he erred in the way, by uſing unlawfull meanes. As therefore they are raſh judges, that condemn this fact of Abram, ſo no man can deny a fall here in Abram, becauſe he ſhould have relied upon Gods providence, referring the ſucceſs to him. But on the otherſide, Auguſtine defendeth Abram, as free from all fault herein. For if Abram, ſaith he, had confeſſed her to be his wife, he had committed two things unto God to be defended, his owa life and the chaſtity of his wife. Both theſe he could not finde a meanes to defend, but one, viz. his life he could, he did then what he could, that he might not tempt God, what he could not, he committed unto God, he committed his wife to God, that ſhe might not be polluted. And to the ſame effect ſpeaketh Rupertus, ſaying, he committed his wives chaſtity to God, knowing aſſuredly, that God, who brought him out of Ur of the Chaldees, could ſave her from the Ur, or Fire, that is, the luſt of the Egyptians. But thou wilt ſay, why had he not the ſame confidence then, that God could preſerve his life? I anſwer, he feared the Lord, and therefore would not tempt him. For he tempteth the Lord, who being in danger doth not exempt himſelf from as great part of the danger, as he can, but therein requireth a miracle, wherein humane reaſon may afford ſome helpe, wherefore he concludeth, that Abram did wiſely herein, and that the ſequell approved, Chryſoſtom. in Gen. Hom 32. Hieron. de tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

Origen hom. in Gen.

Calvin.

Auguſt. contra Fauſtum, lib. 22 cap. 26. Si Abram interrogatus illam fœminam uxorem ſuam eſſe indicaſſet duas res commiſiſſet Deo. & ſuam vitam, & uxoris pudicitiam, &c. Rupert. lib. 5. in Gen. c. 7.

approved his fact. And to this do I ſubſcribe, it being ever far from me to impute ſin to any of Gods faithfull ſervants, in any thing, which they did, in which they have not been charged by the Lord with ſinne, neither can it be directly proved. Sarai was Abrams ſiſter indeed, as he afterwards telleth Pharaoh, wherefore he put no more into her mouth, then the truth, and it is not to be thought, but that he was without doubt of her continency, although ſhe were taken to Pharaohs houſe, and that whileſt Pharaoh prepared to marry vvith her, God vvould provide for her deliverance. If he ſhould at the firſt have confeſſed her to be his wife, there vvould have been danger of death unto him, and ſhe ſhould have remained the more expoſed to the vvill of a barbarous people. I cannot ſee then, but that Abrams providence is to be applauded, in preventing one danger, vvhich he could, by policy, and committing the deliverance of his wife, which he could not, to Gods miraculous vvorking. Neither vvas his expectation fruſtrated, as is here further dedeclared, for as he ſaid, Sarai being beheld by the Egyptians vvas commended to Pharaoh, and taken into his houſe, and he was entreated well for her ſake, and he had ſheep, and oxen, and he-aſſes, and men-ſervants, and maid-ſervants, ſhe-aſſes, and camels. This is added for explication, to ſhew, what benefits Pharaoh beſtowed upon Abram for his ſuppoſed ſiſters ſake.

Verſe 14, 15, 16. Muſculus.

Verſe 17.

But God plagued Pharaoh and his houſe with great plagues, becauſe of Sarai Abrams wife. What the judgement was, which now befell Pharaoh, Moſes relateth not, but Philo ſaith, that Sarai being now in great danger to have her chaſtity violated, ſought to the Lord for helpe, when her husband could afford her none, then he laid grievous torments upon the King, both in body and minde, ſo that he thought now upon nothing tending to luſt, but how he might be exempt from this malady again, which vexed him day and night. And the ſame judgement was alſo upon the whole Court, and that juſtly, becauſe no man reſiſted, but aſſented unto, and ſought to ſatiſfie the Kings luſt. Joſephus ſaith, that God ſmote the Court of Pharaoh with the peſtilence, and that a ſedition was raiſed amongſt the people. The Rabbines of the Jewes ſay, that Sarai had an Angell to guard her, to whom when ſhe ſpake againſt the King, or any man, that attempted to violate her chaſtity, he preſently ſmote him, that he neither could nor would come neer to her. Some think, that the judgement inflicted was the ſhutting up of wombes, as afterwards it is ſaid of Abimelech and his people. But the the Text ſaith, great plagues and therefore I thinke rather with Philo, that ſome bodily diſeaſes were laid upon them, whereby their mindes were wholly averted from nuptiall matters, and altogether made intent to their pangs, to think, how to be eaſed of them again. The relation of the Rabbines ſmelleth, as many other things of theirs, of a fable, and to make good their report, they alter the words, becauſe of Sarai Abrams wife, into theſe, at the word of Sarai. That of Joſephus is improbable, for then many ſhould have dyed. For another queſtion ariſing here, how the puniſhing of Pharaohs whole houſe can be juſtified for his onely fault. It hath been already anſwered by Philo, vvith vvhom Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh the ſame. Yet Muſculus thinketh not this a ſufficient anſwere, becauſe not onely they, that told Pharaoh, and promoted this libidinous buſineſſe, but all others of his houſe were puniſhed alſo. Wherefore he anſwereth, that they had other ſinnes, and that God took this occaſion to puniſh them together therefore. But neither is this anſwer full enough, unleſſe we adde, this was done to make it appear, how odious adulteries and rapes are before the Lord.

Philo lib. 1. de Abrah. Sarai in aliena regione apud potentem & crudelem regem, omni deſtituta auxilio ad eam, quæ ſola ſupererat, opem divinam confugit. Tunc propitius Deus, patientium injuriam protectur graves pœnas & cruciatus inflixit regi, &c. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. Rabbini.

Queſt.

Chryſoſt. hom. 32 Muſculus.

But Calvin maketh another queſtion here yet, how Gods plaguing of Pharaoh may be juſtified, ſeeing he knew not Sarai to be Abrams Wife, neither could he learn, but that ſhe was free for him to marry withall? and anſwereth, that although there ſeemed to be no fault in Pharaoh, yet God ſaw a fault in him, viz. unbridled licentiouſnes, forſomuch as he was a King, and no man durſt controule him. Wherefore Kings are to be admoniſhed from this example, to think always of another ſuperiour to them, and to uſe their power modeſtly. By former experiments ſurely Abram had learned, how Pharaoh was addicted, which made him ſo to feare. The cruelty of him and his it is likely was ſuch, that if any thing ſtood in their way to hinder them of their filthy Luſts, they would not ſtick to ſhed bloud to remove it, and therefore although no actuall ſin was now committed, yet God, that looketh at the heart, ſaw that to be ill bent, and ſo puniſheth moſt juſtly, which I thought good to add to Calvins anſwer to make it more full. Saint Ambroſe hence taketh occaſion to teach God to be protector of conjugall chaſtity, and the revenger of the ſame violated. For this place, ſaith he, yieldeth a great document and teſtimony of chaſtity, that no man affect the bed of another, or commit adultery with another mans Wife with hope of lying hid, or of impunity when he doth ſo, or be provoked unto it by the ignorance or fooliſhneſſe of the Husband, or by his longer abſence. The preſident of marriage, God is at hand, from whom nothing can be hidden, and whom none can eſcape, none elude: He defendeth the turne of the Husband being abſent, he keepeth watch and ward, yea without watching he takes the guilty, before he doth the deed, for which he prepareth. Although (thou Adulterer) deceiveſt the Husband, yet thou canſt not deceive God, and if thou eſcapeſt the Husband, and eludeſt the Judge of the Court, thou canſt not yet eſcape the Judge of the whole World. Let ſuch, as not ignorantly with Pharaoh here, but wittingly out of a filthy affection take to them other mens Wives, conſider of theſe plagues upon Pharaoh, and be abaſhed at ſo great inſolencies: for if the taking of another mans Wife, not known to be ſuch, in way of marriage was puniſhed vvith great plagues, hovv great ſhall the plagues of common Adulterers and Whore-mongers be?

Queſt. Calvin.

Note. Ambroſ. lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 2. Magnum præbet hic locus teſtimonium & documentum caſtitatis, ut nemo alienum affectet torum, nec latendi ſpe, aut faciendi impunitate alienam uxorem inceſſet, &c. Adeſt præſul conjugii Deus, quem nihil latcat, nullus evadcat, nempe irrideat, &c. Muſculus.

Verſe 18.

And Pharaoh called Abram, and ſaid, Wkat is this, that thou haſt done to me? why didſt thou not tell me, that ſhe was thy Wife? A queſtion is here moved by Chryſoſtome, how Pharaoh knew, that ſhe was Abrams Wife? and anſwereth, by the Revelation of God, which is the more probable, becauſe in the like caſe God is ſaid to have revealed it to Abimelech. Joſephus ſaith, that he conſulted with his Prieſts, what ſhould be the cauſe of thoſe judgements, who anſwered, for that he prepared to offer injury to the marriage of his gueſt; and happily it might be ſo indeed, becauſe we read of the like done by the Philiſtims, when they were plagued, 1 Sam. 6. Ambroſe noteth upon this, that Pharaoh was averſe from adultery, it appearing by him, that nature teacheth to abhorre therefrom, which is ſeconded by this, that other creatures ſome of them keep to one female only, and will not indure their females to couple with others.

Chryſoſt. hom 32. in Gen. Oecolampad. Gen. 20. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. Quòd hoſpitis matrimonio injuriam inferre paraviſſet. Ambroſe.

Verſe 19.

Why didſt thou ſay, ſhe is my Siſter? ſo I might have taken her to me to Wife. The Latin tranſlation followed by Marlorat is, & tuli eam mihi in Uxorem, the vulgar Latine, ut tollerem eam mihi in Uxorem. It is the opinion of all Expoſitours, that he had not yet taken her, but meant to take her, according to the firſt reading. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that God made Pharaoh to deſiſt by a moſt ſharp puniſhment for the heinous wickedneſſe intended. Theodoret, that ſo ſoone as Sarai was taken into Pharaohs houſe God laid a ſickneſſe upon him, and hereby, as by a band tyed him from violating of her. This ſickneſſe blunted his luſt, and ſo the hunter having gotten his prey in his net, could not yet injoy it. Moſes ſaith not here, that Pharaoh had not touched her, as afterwards of Abimelech, becauſe it was then more materiall to know it, in regard of Iſaac, with whom ſhe went about that time, that it might be certainly known, that ſhe had him by Abram, and not by any other, ſo Theodoret. Jerome conceived, that amongſt the Egyptians Women might firſt be prepared, as amongſt the Aſſyrians Heſter was for Ahaſhuerosh, and ſo although Sarai were many dayes at the Court, ſhe might yet be inviolate. But forſomuch, as this is but a conjecture, I rather ſubſcribe to Theodoret, that it was done by miracle, and indeed Chryſoſtome extolleth the miracle in this, as being equall to that in ſaving Daniel from the hungry Lyons, becauſe Pha-

Chryſoſt. Theod. in Gen.

Gen. 20. Hieron.

raoh

raoh having gotten her, vvith vvhoſe beauty he vvas ſo much raviſhed, did yet refreine from the uſe of her.

Verſe 20. Vatablus.

And Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him, and they ſent him away, and his Wife, and all that he had. Here alſo was a wonderfull providence, that the King did not interpret this diſſimulation of Abram, offering this Woman as his Siſter to him, as a contempt, inſtead of ſending him thus away, to take off his head, as Princes commonly, when they are groſly deluded, are vvont to do: for this is not to be imputed to Pharaohs humanity, but a terrour ſtricken into him by God, leſt he ſhould incurre further danger. And men vvere uſed to conduct him, becauſe, as is moſt probable, he vvas for the plagues hated of the people, leſt they ſhould offer violence to him. Betvvixt that vvhich befell Abram here, and his poſterity aftervvards, there is a notable ſimilitude, as Rupertus obſerveth, ſo that the one may ſeeme to prefigure the other. For as Abram, ſo Jacob vvith his came into Egypt, vvhen there vvas a famine in Canaan. Againe, as Abram had hard meaſure offered to him in the taking of his Wife from him, for vvhich Pharaoh and his houſe vvere plagued, ſo to the Hebrevvs an hard meaſure vvas offered in taking avvay their male children, for vvhich Egypt vvas plagued. Moreover, as Abram vvas ſent avvay at length vvith all that he had, ſo vvere they vvith great riches. Laſtly, as Abram after this fighteth againſt Kings, and overcometh them, and Melchiſedeck meeteth and bleſſeth him, ſo they fought againſt many Kings, and at length Chriſt Jeſus figured out by Melchiſedeck cometh amongſt them vvith the rich treaſures of his bleſſings. The time that Abram tarryed in Egypt, could not be very long, becauſe that after his returne from thence at the birth of Iſhmael he vvas but 86. yeares old, ſo that betvvixt his comming out of Haran to Canaan and that, only 10 yeares paſſed, vvhereof a great part vvas ſpent in Canaan, before his going dovvn into Egypt, ſome part in travelling, and ſome after his departing from Egypt, in fighting for Lot, &c. So that, whereas in Euſebius 20 years are ſpoken of, that he aboad in Egypt, that cannot be true, it is rathet more probable, that he ſtayed not above a yeare or two at the moſt. It may ſeeme ſtrange, that Abram being challenged ſo by Pharaoh anſwereth nothing. But happily ſuch haſte was made to ſend him away, that he had no liberty to reply, ſo did the plagues of Pharaoh vex him, as afterwards that other Paaraoh, that in all haſte he forced the Hebrews to be gone. How it might have been anſwered, appeareth upon the like occaſion, in that which he ſaid to Abimelech.

Rupert. lib. 4. in Gen. c. 7.

Gen. 16.

Euſeb. de præpar. Evang. l. 9.

Gen. 20. 12.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1,2.

IN this Chapter is ſhewed, how rich Abram returned from Egypt, which was, as we may gather, Chap. 12. 16. from the beneficence of King Pharaoh, but only, beſides the cattel, which he is there ſaid to have had, here his Silver and Gold is ſpoken of alſo. Gods bleſſing was with him every where, as was promiſed, Chap. 12. 2. and hereby he increaſed thus greatly, for it is the bleſſing of God that maketh rich. So that to be rich ſimply is not to be in an evill eſtate, but for the pride and covetouſneſſe, which accompany riches, and for the wicked means, which men uſe to atteine to riches. Rich men are commonly the more drowned in earthly cogitations and pleaſures, the more they have, being the more bent to the things of this World, and the leſſe regarding things, that belong to piety and vertue. But it was not thus with Abram, he goeth to the South againe, from whence he had removed, Chap. 12. 9. holding on in a conſtant care to obey God in keeping him to that Land, unto which the Lord had brought him, not being diſcouraged by the want, with which he had met there before. And as he had made no ſtay before in the South, ſo now he tarryeth not, but haſteneth againe to that place, where Verſe 3,4. where he had ſet up an Altar to the Lord, chap. 12.8. even to the mount between Bethel and Ai, and there he calleth again upon the Name of the Lord, that is, did ſome ſolemn ſervice by ſacrificing, and praiſing, and publickly praying to the Lord. For, as Calvin noteth, we muſt not think, that at ſuch times onely he called upon God, as are expreſly mentioned, for he did that doubtleſſe continually, but at theſe times, he ſhewed his devotion more publickly, that others might alſo be excited thereby. Let all rich men learn of Abram to be examples of piety to others, and not the leſſe to regard God and good duties, the more they abound. For theſe words Abraham was very rich. Verſe 2. Hebr. he was very weighty: this is applyed to weight of glory, Gen. 31.1. and of people, 2 Kings 6.14. and of cattel, Exod. 12.38.

Calvin.

Note.

Verſe 5,6. And Lot alſo, who went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents. And the land was not able to bear them, &c. Lot, who accompanied Abram always, doth with him partake of Gods bleſſings alſo, whence we may learn, that it is good to be in league with the godly, we ſhall be in the way of proſpering the better therefore. But this their ſuperabundance ſee what an effect it had, they could no longer dwell together, which doubtleſſe muſt needs be grievous to Abram loving Lot his Nephew ſo dearly. This, as Calvin well noteth, fell out by a providence, that Abram flowing now with worldly wealth, might not be too much affected to the world, the vineger of contention with one ſo near unto him being put to the ſweet of his great increaſes before ſpoken of, that he might not be overmuch pleaſed with the taſte thereof. And of the incommodities of riches, it is good for us often to thinke, that we may not ſo earneſtly deſire them.

Muſculus.

Calvin.

Note.

Verſe 7. And there was a ſtrife between the herdmen of Abrams cattel, and the herdmen of Lots cattel.

Philo lib. de Abrah. Philo entreating of this contention ſaith, that Lot growing rich, did carry himſelf variouſly towards Abram; ſometimes familiarly and flatteringly, and ſometimes contemptuouſly and proudly; and hereupon his ſervants obſerving their Maſter grew contentious and quarrelſome, railing upon and falling out with Abrams ſervants, but they for the mildneſſe of their Maſter gave way unto them, who upon this grew more inſolent and impudently bold, ſo that they were at length forced to betake themſelves to armes. This Abram perceiving, and thinking, that his men being more, if they ſhould go to it with blowes, that his Nephew Lot might be made a ſad man through the deſtruction of ſome of his men in this conflict, ſeeketh to prevent their intended fight, and ſo maketh offer to Lot to chooſe to go to ſome other place. About what in particular they quarrelled it is eaſie to conjecture, viz. for paſtures and waters, whereof there were ſcarcity in thoſe parts But what is this, which is added, The Canaanites and Perizzites dwelled then in the land. Some ſay, that this was added to ſhew, that the thing before ſpoken of might well be true, that the land could not contein the cattel of Abram and Lot: becauſe not onely they, but alſo the Canaanites and the Perizzites dwelt in that land, ſo that Abram and Lot could not have all, but ſuch part of the land onely, as they would ſpare them. Others, that it is premiſed, as a reaſon, why Abram ſought to appeaſe this contention, leſt theſe uncircumciſed ſeeing their quarrels ſhould take occaſion to ſpeak ill of them and of their religion, and this is ſuch a reaſon as the Apoſtle toucheth upon, 1 Cor. 6.6. and thus it is commonly taken. Laſtly, others taking it as a reaſon alſo, yet ſay that the force of it lyeth thus, theſe heathen were infenſe enemies, and therefore waited but for an opportunity to invade theſe new-come gueſts, whom they could not but envy for their wealth and different religion. Abram therefore wiſely foreſeeing this danger, ſeeketh the rather to pacifie the ſtrife by dividing. Thus Calvin, to whom I rather ſubſcribe, becauſe it was moſt fit, having ſpoken of the ſtrife of their ſervants, that he ſhould ſet it down, if there were any thing elſe which aggravated the miſchief, as this indeed doth, that they dwelt not then with their families alone in the land, but in the midſt of enemies, who

Chryſoſt. hom. 35

Calvin.

whileſt

vvhileſt they by their diſſentions vvaſted one another, vvould be the more glad, as thinking by this means to come ſhortly to make a prey of their great ſubſtance, and yet the other may be added well, as a ſecond and third reaſon alſo.

And Abram ſaid to Lot, Let there be no ſtrife, I pray thee, between me and thee, &c. That they two contended, is not ſaid before, but onely their ſervants: but, as was noted out of Philo, Lots ſervants took occaſion to ſtrive thus upon their Maſters ill carriage towards Abram. Brethren, Abram ſaith, they were, and not onely kinſmen, to move him the more, and amongſt the Hebrewes, kinſmen were commonly called brethren. Lo, here one, to whom wrong was offered, ſeeketh to him that offered it, although he were his Uncle and Superiour; to teach us to do likewiſe. And again, that this conſideration, that we Chriſtians are all brethren, ſhould keep us in unity. Verſe 8. Note.

Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thy ſelfe I pray thee from me, if thou take the left hand, &c. Some gather from hence, that the land was but little inhabited, ſo that although in the place, where now they were, no more room might be had, yet further off there was room enough to inhabit and keep their cateel in. The Septuagint read it, If thou wilt go to the North, I will go to the South, happily, becauſe the North was on the left hand, and the South on the right. Here the goodneſſe of Abram doth yet more appear, in that for peace ſake, he giveth his inferiour his choice, as before through the lowlineſſe of his mind he had made himſelf but equall to him, in ſaying, We are brethren. Verſe 9.

And he lifted up his eyes, and beheld, all the plain of Jordan was well watered every where, before the Lord deſtroyed Sodome and Gomorrah, even as the Garden of the Lord, and like the land of Egypt, as thou comeſt into Zoar. This plaine of Jordan by means of that famous river overflowing it becoming ſo fruitfull, lay towards the five Cities, called Pentapolis, that were afterwards for the foul ſins of the inhabitants deſtroyed by fire and brimſtone, one of which was Zoar, or Segor, as ſome read it, chap. 14.2. which is here mentioned. Now this whole tract of ground went commonly under the name of Sodome and Gomorrah, becauſe (as is likely) they were the greateſt, as being moſt known, and moſt commonly ſpoken of. And he ſaith, that it was a moſt pleaſant place, even unto the entering of Zoar, comparing it for this cauſe with Paradiſe watered with four famous Rivers, and unto Egypt watered with the River Nilus, for ſo was this place watered with the River Jordan. Yet ſome underſtand theſe words, as thou comeſt unto Zoar, as having reference to a part of Egypt, lying towards Zoar. But becauſe it no where appeareth, that this part of Egypt was more fruitfull than that, which lay towards other Cities of Paleſtina, I rather preferre the other expoſition. Verſe 10. Vatablus. Muſculus.

Then Lot choſe him all the plain of Jordan, and journeyed from the Eaſt, &c. Here a queſtion ariſeth, how Lot can be ſaid to have gone from the East, when as that place lay Eaſtward from Canaan? Our new Tranſlation readeth it, Lot journeyed Eaſt, as if he had gone to the Eaſt, but in Hebrew it is מקדם from the Eaſt, not אל קדם to the Eaſt, howſoever ſome contend that מן is ſometime put for אל, but, as Luther juſtly objecteth, ſome other place of Scripture then ſhould be ſhewed, where this particle is thus uſed, and becauſe there cannot, he reſolveth it by ſaying, that the place, to which Lot went, was Eaſtward on the other ſide of Ai, if reſpect be had to Abrams abode, or elſe that they ſeparated in their journey out from Egypt, before their comming to the mountain between Bethel and Ai, and ſo that, which is here ſet down, is to be underſtood, as ſpoken by way of capitulation, or laſtly, becauſe the word מקדם may be tranſlated, from the beginning, for ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth it, Lot is ſaid to have gone from the beginning, becauſe he went firſt, betimes in the morning his way. But there is no need to ſeek to any of theſe ſhifts: for the place, in which they now were, was more Eaſtward, than that plain, to which Lot went, although in reſpect Verſe 11. Luther.

of

of thoſe parts about Sodom, the land of Canaan, if the whole be conſidered, lay weſtward, and that Pentapolis be afterwards ſpoken of, as the Eaſt-limit of Canaan.

Verſe 12,13 And Abram dwelt in the Land of Canaan, and Lot dwelt in the cities of the plain, and pitched his Tent towards Sodom. Now the men of Sodom were wicked, &c.

Muſculus. The cities of the plain were thoſe five cities, vvhich vvere deſtroyed afterwards with fire and brimſtone. In theſe Lot is ſaid to have dwelt, becauſe ſometimes in one, and ſometimes in another, as was moſt convenient for the feeding of his cattell, untill that he came to Sodom it ſelfe; of the wickedneſſe of the people whereof Moſes here telleth, to ſhew, that Lot having his choice 2 Pet. 2 8. was not ſo happie herein, as Abram, becauſe although he lived in a fruitfull ſoyle, yet he could not, but be vexed at the unclean converſation of the people, and as notorious ſinning alwayes bringeth down Gods judgements, ſo by the ſins of the Sodomites within a ſhort time moſt horrible iudgements vvere brought dovvn upon that place, whereby Lot was put to more detriment by farre, then he got gain there, and hardly eſcaped with his life. Occolampad. Yet, as Oecolampadius noteth, there was a providence in Lots coming thither, that they, having a Preacher of Righteouſneſſe amongſt them before their deſtruction for ſin, might the more juſtly be ſo ſeverely proceeded againſt. It is to be noted, that he doth not onely ſay, that they vvere vvicked, but alſo ſinners before the Lord exceedingly, to aggravate their wickedneſſe, his meaning being, Muſculus. that they ſinned ſo, that the cry of their ſins went up to Heaven, into the preſence of the Lord, as is afterwards expreſſed, Gen. 18.21. Others ſay, that their impudent and open ſinning is meant, for thus their ſinning is deſcribed, Eſa. 3.9. Others, their ſinning againſt their own conſcience, which is knovvn onely to God. And laſtly, ſome, their ſinning, vvhen they were admoniſhed and reproved by the men God, ſuch as Lot was. I reſt in the firſt.

Verſe 14,15 When Abram and Lot vvere thus ſeparated, the Lord comforted Abram, Verſe 16,17 bidding him to look tovvards all the quarters of Heaven, and promiſing, that his ſeed ſhould inherit all that land for ever, and that it ſhould be innu-Verſe 18. merable, as the duſt of the earth, bidding him therefore to vvalke through the breadth and length of all that land, vvhereupon he removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plaine of Mamre, which is Hebron, and built an Altar there to the Lord.

Calvin. It it not to be doubted, but that Abram vvas troubled at Lots departing from him, and therefore the Lord comforteth him novv again in this manner. Queſt. But from vvhat place could he look to ſee all the quarters of the land of Ca-Oecolampad. naan? Oecolampadius ſaith, that the eyes of his minde, and not of his body are meat. But the place vvhere he then vvas, vvas a Mount, and therefore fit to behold from thence, and to ſee far about every vvay, and therefore it is improbable, that he ſhould mean any other looking then with the eyes of his body, being then ſo elevated, as then it was. But it may be thought impoſſible from Deut. 34. any one place to ſee a countrey of that greatneſſe full of mountaines and valleys towards every quarter in the full extent thereof. And yet Moſes is ſaid likewiſe from mount Nebo to have ſeen all the land, before he died. To this Aug. quæſt. 28. ſuper Gen. Saint Auguſtine anſwereth thus: Abram did not ſee the whole land at one view, but he ſaw farre into all the quarters Eaſtward, Weſtward, and Southward, having a promiſe that his ſeed ſhould inherit, not ſo much onely as he ſaw, but that which he then ſaw, and forth on, as farre as that whole countrey extended towards every quarter of heaven, which is plainly intimated in that when he had bidden him look every way, he biddeth him to ariſe and walke over the breadth and the length of the land, that in his perambulation he might ſee the whole land every way in the full extent, which he promiſed unto him, becauſe ſtanding in one place he could not poſſibly do it. To this effect Auguſtine, but that I have made his anſwere a little more full. Some hold, that this ſpeech was had to him in a dream, and ſo all was repreſented unto unto him, ſome, that God by his Divine povver made him to ſee all at once ſetting before his eyes, as it vvere, the Map of all together, as the Devill ſhewed Chriſt all the kingdoms of the earth in the twinkling of an eye. But it is not ſpoken, as if Abram were then ſleeping but waking, and the ſpeech doth not agree with that of the Devils ſhewing to Chriſt the vvhole World, and therefore is not ſo to be expounded, and ſo Auguſtines anſwer remaineth, as the onely true ſolution of this doubt. Matth. 4.

For that, which is ſaid touching Abrams ſeed, that it ſhould be as the duſt of the earth, it is an hyperbolicall ſpeech. Touching the Lords bidding of him to walk through the land in the breadth and length thereof, which it doth not appeare by the Hiſtory that he did, it is not to be underſtood therefore as an abſolute command, but as if he had ſaid: Walke through the length and breadth of it, if thou wilt, and take a full view of it, for it ſhall all be thine in thy poſterity: or elſe when Abram is ſaid to have gone and dvvelt in the Plain of Mamre, the meaning is, that having gone through the land, as the Lord bade him, he finally came and dvvelt in this place, as Muſculus hath it. The Plain of Mamre is ſo tranſlated, as the Plain of Moreh, Chap. 12.6. the vvords thus rendered be in Hebrew אלון ממרה the Oake, or Thicket of Mamre, but how it cometh to be rendered the plain of Mamre, ſee there. The Chaldee Paraphraſt, according to the word, rendereth it quercetum Mamre. This place vvas named from Mamre an inhabitant of that Countrey, vvho built him an houſe and dvvelt there, being brother to Eſhcol and Aner, mentioned, Chap. 14. ver. 13. as Abrams confederates, vvho grevv into this league with him, becauſe converſing together they vvere inſtructed by Abram in the knovvledge of the true God. It vvas, as he vvriteth, diſtant from the place, vvhere he dvvelt before, viz. the mount between Bethel and Ai thirty miles, and neer to Hebron, viz. but one mile off. But the Text ſaith, that it was Hebron, ſo that the city of Hebron included this place, as an appurtenance thereof. But the name of Hebron it obteined aftervvards from Hebron, the ſon of Caleb, being before called Arbe, vvhich ſignifieth four, for the four Patriarchs buryed there, Adam, Abram, Iſaac, and Jacob. In the Hebrevv Commentaries, for the four, Abram, Aner, Eſhcol, and Mamre dvvelling there. Here David reigned ſeven yeeres, here the Prieſts dwelt, and this was one of the cities of refuge, and here now Abram buildeth another Altar, intending happily to make ſome long abode, that he might offer his ſacrifices from time to time thereupon. Whereas, ver 15. God promiſeth this land to Abram and his for ever, it is to be underſtood, that the word לעולם here uſed doth not onely ſignifie to the end of the world, but to a certain period of time, which is their ever, of whom it is ſpoken, as 1 Sam. 1.22. Hannah ſaith, that ſhe will bring her childe Samuel, and he ſhould remain before the Lord לעולם, that is, during his life, ſo Deut. 15.17. Jer. 2.19. So in this place for ever, is during all the time of Abrams poſterities being a peculiar people to the Lord. But at the propagation of the Goſpel to all Nations, this time vvas terminated, they ceaſing then to be the Lords peculiar, the whole World, where the Goſpel vvas imbraced, becoming then the Lords inheritance, and the children of Abram, as vvell, yea or rather, then his carnall poſterity, becauſe they were rejected for their infidelity, and theſe received. Saint Auguſtine handling this queſtion divers times, as lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. c. 21. and cap. 17. lib. qu. in Gen. qu. 31. lib. ad Oroſium, cap 5. giveth divers anſvvers, but that which is chiefly to be reſted upon, is the ſame with the ſolution before going, that for ever and eternally are not all one, although in tranſlating that word, one be uſed oftentimes for the other. Becauſe for ever is manifeſtly put for a moſt long time, the end vvhereof is not mentioned, and ſo it is here to be underſtood. Or for ever, is during that World, in the time vvhereof it is ſpoken, ſo that the time of the Goſpel being, as it were, a nevv World, for the great alterations of all things, the old World vvas then ended, vvhen this vvas preached, and ſo the לעולם of that was fully expired at that time.

Muſculus.

H. Bunting.

Muſculus.
1 Chron. 2.42.
quære ch. 23.2.
Hieronym. lib. de locis Hebraicis.

Verſe 15.

Oecolampadius.

Auguſt.

CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. AND it came to passe in the dayes of Amraphel King of Shinar, Anach King of Ellasar, Chedarlaomer King of Elam, and Tidall King of the Nations, &c. Why Moses inserteth this History here of the Warres of Heathen Kings may easily be gathered, viz. becausse Lot was amongst them, and Abram acted a part herein. And hereby is intimated, how the Lord did first more lightly punish the Sodomites, after Lots coming and preaching repentance unto them, they being nothing moved hereby to break off from their foule sinnes, before he brought utter destruction upon them. And againe, to what miseries they expose themselves, who for worldly respects mingle with the wicked, as Lot did. Lastly, with what courage and warlike vertue, the Lord indued Abram, as well as with humility and meeknesse, and how in all attempts he was with him to blesse, prosper, and incourage him, and how full of courtesie he was, and free from all desire of the base gaine of this World, so that he shewed himselfe indeed a mirrour of all manner of vertue. For the time, when these things were done, it was doubtlesse, as by the course of the History is intimated, after that Lot and he being parted, he dwelt in the Plaine of Mamre, with whom, and his two Brethren he was grown in league, so that they went to this Warre with him, but precisely what yeare after, it cannot be determined. These Kings Iosephus calleth four Emperours of the Assyrians living under the obedience of that great King of Assyria, who then was Emperour of Asia. Diodorus saith, that they were Persians, Eupolemus, that they were Armenians, as Eusebius reporteth. But of the Armenians Moses speaketh nothing, and for the Persians, they came not to have a Kingdome, till long after this. But the Assyrians indeed had then taken the Kingdome from the Babylonians, and so he which is here called the King of Shinar, might well be the King of Babylon or of Assyria, seeing Babylon was in the land of Shinar, Gen. 11. 2. and the other three were either under him, or Confederates with him. Touching the name of the King of Assyria, Amraphel; I read nothing in other Histories, but that Ninus was the first, Semiramis his Queen the next, that reigned in that Empire, and Ninias or Nemeis, as Eusebius calleth him, the third, in whose time it is conjectured, that this Warre was made. Touching the second, Arioch King of Ellasar, in the vulgar Latin, King of Pontus, but erroneously, becausse Pontus was too farre from hence, for the King thereof to come and Warre in this place. He is therefore held rather by most to have been King of a City in Palestina, and Stephanus nameth this to be Cœlesyria. Touching the third, Chedarlaomer King of Elam, of the Elamites, came the Persians, who afterwards by their greatnesse obscured and put out the name of the Elamites. Touching the fourth, Tidal King of the Nations, he is thought by some to have been King of Galilee called Galilee of the Gentiles or Nations, becausse a place full of Ports, they repaired for trafick from all Countries thither. But Vatablus thinketh, that some place was called by the name of גוים translated Nations, over which he reigned. Calvin, that the people, over vvhom he reigned, vvere Runnavvayes from divers Nations, vvhom he received, making an Army of them.

Note.

Iosephus.
Diodor. Tarsens.
Eupolemus.
Eusebius lib. 9. de præparat. Evang. c. 4.

Stephanus.

And. Masius in Ios. c. 12. v. 9.
Vatablus.
Calvin.

Verse 2 These made VVarre with Bera King of Sodom, Birshah King of Gomorrah, Shinab King of Admah, Shemeber King of Zeboiim, and the King of Bela which is Zoar.

Oecolampad.

If the signification of the names of these Kings be respected, as Oecolampadius noteth, they were very bad, ברע Bera signifieth in malice ברשע in wickednesse, and שנב he which hateth his Father. The fifth is not named, becausse happily his City was very small, called therefore Zoar, as we may see afterwards, Gen. 19. 22. and so he is omitted as a King of small reckoning.

Verse 3. Now all these joyned together in the valley of Siddim, which is the salt Sea. This valley valley of Siddim in the vulgar Latin Translation is rendered vallis sylvestris, and accordingly by Aquila and Theodotion, amœna nemora. But the Chaldee Paraphrast readeth it vallis agrorum The word Seed, or Sadeh, of vvhich Siddim seemeth to come, signifieth to till a field plaine, as vvhen it is harrovved over, or make a vvall plain and even by pargeting, so that if the vvord be taken Appellatively, it signifieth a Plaine in the midst of tilled grounds. But it seemeth rather to be a proper name, and that the place vvas before full of Salt-pits, vvhich after the burning of Sodom vvas turned into the Dead-Sea, being then, as it vvere a sea of Salt and Brimstone; vvherefore Jerome saith, it may be expounded vallis salinarum, and for the Lake running there, being saltish, and the multitude of Salt-pits it might vvell be called the Salt-sea, according to the Hebrevv phrase, vvhereby the congregating of many vvaters together is called a sea. It vvas not so, as is most probable, in times past, although some Lake did run there from the beginning, for the River Jordan runneth through this place, but Moses speaketh of it, as it vvas, vvhen he vvrote this Book through the judgement of God.

Aquila. Theodotion. Cald. Paraphrast.

Twelve yeares they served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth yeare they rebelled. 5 And in the 14 yeare came Chedorlaomer, and the Kings that were with him, and smote the Rephaims in Ashteroth Carnaim, the Zuzims in Ham, and the Emims, &c.

Musculus.

Verse 4,5.

Lyranus here examining the reason, vvhy these foure Kings coming against the five before commemorated, fought first against other peoples, answereth, that most probably Chedorlaomer help them first in subduing their Enemies, and then they came on vvith him to holpe him in subduing these his Rebells. For that he vvas not the chief amongst them, but rather the King of Shinar, appeareth by the order of Moses in placing of them, vvherefore it vvas fit, that his turne should be first served, and then that Chedorlaomer should have help; but becaus the other Kings quarrels against the Rephaims, &c. did nothing concerne this History, but Chedorlaomers only, becaus of Lot, vvho lived amongst the Sodomites, they are omitted by Moses, and that only is set dovvn. Touching the peoples, here said to be subdued, the Rephaims, Emims, &c. Saint Jerome saith, that the Rephaims were Giants most strong in Arabia neere to Sodom, and Zuzims and Emims signifie terribiles and horrendi, and accordingly indeed Moses speaketh of them, Deut. 2. 10, 20. calling the Zuzims in the Moabites language Zamzummims. Touching the Horites see also Deut. 2. 12. unto Elparan. Touching this wilderness see Numb. 13. 1. it was that, through which the children of Israel passed, when they went from Mount Sinai. Touching En- Mishpat, to which returning they came next, which he saith, is Cadesh. It signifieth the fountaine of judgement being in the desert of Arabia, nigh to which was Cadesh a City, as Jerome saith. It was called En-Mishpat, not at the time of this VVarre, but afterwards, becaus God judged or sentenced Moses and Aaron there, for that they glorified him not, when he brought waters out of the Rock. Here they smote all the Countrey of the Amalekites and the Amorites unto Hazzezon-Tamar. This by some is interpreted the City of Palme-trees, for Tamar signifieth a Palm-tree, and is now called Engedi. Now if any man shall marvell, why Moses doth so diligently commemorate these severall peoples thus smitten. Chrysostome sheweth that this was not done, but upon good consideration, that hereby the power of these barbarous Kings might the more appeare, in that they overthrew and subdued all, whersoever they came, yea, Giants and men of such might, as that they were terrible and dreadfull to all their Neighbour Nations, that so the mighty power of God working with Abram might be the more magnified, they being overcome, and destroyed by him with so great facility and celerity. Against these foure Kings, the five before spoken of go forth to fight, all whom Moses numbereth over againe by name, adding that foure fought against five, and overcame them, that Gods hand might be acknovvledged herein, the fevver prevailing against the more, through a just judge-

Verse 6.

Lyranus.

Verse 7.

Hieron quæst. Heb. in Gen.

Hieronym.

Hieronym.

Chrys. hom. 31 in Gen.

Verse 8,9.

ment upon them for their ſinnes. For they had not onely the advantage of the number, but alſo of the place, full of ſalt-pits, by them choſen purpoſely (without doubt) to intrap their enemies, being ignorant of the dangerous pits there on every ſide.

Verſe 10. And the vale of Siddim was full of ſlime-pits, and the Kings of Sodome and Gomorrha fled, and fell there, &c. Some ſay, that they caſt themſelves into theſe, to avoid the dint of the enemies ſword, and ſo periſhed, but this cannot be, becauſe the King of Sodome cometh after this to meet Abram, v. 17. The Hebrewes feign, that theſe two Kings by chance fell in as they fled, but were preſerved alive, that they might acknowledge Gods power in bringing Abram out of the fire of the Chaldees. But this is a fiction touching Abram, onely that which they ſay firſt is moſt likely to have been true, that they fell into ſome of theſe pits, but periſhed not, and ſo came out again when their enemies were gone, becauſe otherwiſe the King of Sodome could not have come forth after this to meet Abram. To expound their falling in theſe pits of their armies falling, as ſome do, is forced, for it is ſpoken plainly of their perſons, their armies being in that hurly burly mingled vvith the armies of the other Kings, and ſo many of them doubtleſſe eſcaping to the mountains vvith others, or being taken priſoners.

Hebræi.

Verſe 13. And there came one that had eſcaped, and told Abram the Hebrew, &c. Touching the name Hebrew, enough hath been ſaid Gen. 10.21. Who it was that eſcaped, divers conjecture diverſly, ſome that it was a godly man, ſome that it was Og the King of Baſhan, but theſe are idle imaginations, it is moſt likely, that it was one of Lots ſervants, who knew the near relation of Lot to Abram, being preſerved by a ſingular providence, that Abram might by him be thus ſtirred up for the reſcue of Lot. Abram then dwelling in the plaine of Mamre, and having him and his two brethren Eſhcol and Aner, confederates with him, Verſe 14. he armeth his trained ſervants borne in his own houſe 318, and purſueth them unto Dan.

Muſculus. Muſculus moveth a queſtion here, how Abram could make a league with Mamre and his brethren, they being Amorites, and ſo ſuch as with whom his children afterwards were forbidden to make any league, Deut. 7.2, 3? To this he anſwereth firſt, that they ſought it of him, as is moſt probable, and therefore it tended to Gods glory. Secondly, that at this time they had the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, neither were they yet to be expelled, and therefore Abram was not now tyed from making leagues with them, as his children were afterwards. And Oecolampadius noteth, that hereby this entering of them into league together appeared to be of God, in that to aſſiſt Abram a ſtranger they would thus adventure themſelves to go and fight with him againſt four ſuch Kings being Victours ſo many times, and by their victories ſo fleſhed, as they were to quell all aſſailants. But if they were converted by Abram, as H. Bunting noted before, v. 18. all this queſtion is cut off. By the number of men, that Abram had able to bear arms, it appeareth, that he was a Prince amongſt this people, and ſo other Lords or Princes, ſuch as it is likely theſe were, might well ſeek to be in league with him. Theſe 318 ſaith Joſephus, were all Captains, having every one his band of men, but this is incredible. A neceſſary queſtion here offereth it ſelf, how this expedition of Abram may be juſtified, ſeeing the Sodomites and the reſt were ſubjects to Chedorlaomer, and in his thus coming againſt them for their rebellion, he did no more than agree with juſtice? Moreover Abram was not armed by any publick authority, which is a neceſſary thing required in him that taketh up the ſword to ſhed bloud; for againſt all private perſons that of the Lord holdeth; He which taketh up the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. There is one who handleth this queſtion, & having ſet down ſuch things, as muſt neceſſarily concurre to the making of a juſt warre, as 1 a juſt cauſe, 2 a right intention, 3 ſuch a ſtate and condition of life, as agreeth with warfaring, 4 a meaſure in revenging injuries, 5 lawfull authority, 6 wiſdome and providence, that Occolampadius.

Ioſeph. lib. 6. de bello Iud. c. 11.

Quæſt.

Tho. Anglicus a war lawfully made.

that he which maketh warre bring not himſelf and his into danger. He ſaith, that all theſe concurred in Abram, for it is moſt probable, that Chedorlaomer at the firſt ſubdued theſe Cities unjuſtly by force, compelling them tyrannically to ſerve him, and his cauſe was juſt, and by the joyning of Aner, Eſhcoll, and Mamre Princes of that Countrey with him, it appeareth, that he was armed by the authority of the Kings there, and certainly he had ſuch a confidence in Gods help, with vvhom he had ſuch familiarity, that he knevv he vvent not vvithout him, ſo that even vvith thoſe fevv he had full aſſurance to prevail, and as for the other things requiſite, there is no doubt to be made of them. And unto this we may adde, that Lot his brothers ſonne being but a ſtranger in that land, and living innocently tovvards all vvas manifeſtly vvronged, for vvhoſe cauſe eſpecially he undertook that expedition. Touching the place called Dan, to vvhich he purſued them, it vvas before called Lais, untill that the tribe of Dan, the old inhabitants being expelled, inhabited there, from vvhence it aftervvards took the name. To this place from Hebron, H. Bunting ſaith, it vvas one hundred twenty four miles. It vvas the furtheſt North-coaſt of all the land of Canaan, according to Hieronymus, and vvithin 4 miles of Paneas in Phœnicia: From this Dan, he ſaith alſo, that Jordan took the name, becauſe it roſe from tvvo Rivers meeting here together.

Dan.
H. Bunting in the travels of the Patriarchs.
Hieron. in tra dit. hebraicis in Gen.

And he divided himſelf againſt them, he and his ſervants by night, and ſmote and purſued them unto Hoba, which is on the left hand of Damaſcus. Abram came to the camp of his enemies, as Joſephus ſaith, the fifth night after that he ſet forth. Hoba vvas a Tovvn, inhabited aftervvards by Chriſtians called Ebionites, according to Jerome. R. Solomon denyeth it to be a proper name, and ſaith, that Dan vvas called ſo for the great fault of Idolatry committed by the Danites, becauſe Hoba ſignifieth a fault. But that it vvas a divers place is plain, becauſe from Dan he purſued them hither. The vulgar Latine hath it Hoba in Phœnicia in ſome copies, but it is not ſo in the Hebrevv or Septuagint. The great prudence of Abram appeareth by his dividing of his Army thus, that he might ruſh upon his enemies unprepared in many places at once. Although he and his ſervants onely be ſpoken of, yet it is not to be doubted, but that his confederates with their ſervants are meant alſo, for they all now ſerved him in this warre.

Verſe 15.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.
Hieron.
R. Solomon.

And the King of Sodome Went out to meet him at the valley of Saneh, which is the Kings Dale. Of this Saneh it was ſpoken before, v. 5. It was a City of the Emims near to Sodome, adjoyning unto which was a ſpacious plaine, called the plaine or valley of Saneh, extended from the mountains of Gilboa and Hermon all along by the River Jordan even to the dead ſea, according to Brocardus. Here it is likely, that the King was wont to exerciſe himſelfe with his ſouldiers, for which cauſe it was called the Kings Dale. And accordingly the Chaldee Paraphraſt ſaith, Ipſe erat locus ſtadii Regis.

Verſe 17.

Brocardus.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

And Melchiſedeck King of Salem brought forth bread and wine, and he was a Prieſt of the moſt high God, &c.

Verſe 18.

Touching Melchiſedeck, what the divers opinions of Expoſitours are, and of Abrams paying of tithe unto him, I have ſpoken enough in my Expoſitions upon the New Teſtament, Heb. 7. ſo that I ſhall ſpare that labour here. The Hebrews generally hold him to have been Shem. The Hieroſolym. Targum ſaith, this was Shem the great, ſo R. Eliezer and Talmud Babyl. but with what probability ſee upon Heb. 7. His bringing forth of bread and wine is thought by ſome to have been to refreſh Abraham and his ſouldiers, by others both to offer ſacrifice firſt unto God, and then for this end alſo.

And the King of Sodome ſaid unto Abram, Give me the perſons, and take the goods to thy ſelf. 22 And Abram ſaid, I have lifted up my hand to the Lord, the moſt high God, poſſeſſour of heaven and earth, 23 That I will not take from thee a threed even to a ſhoelatchet, &c.

Verſe 21.
Verſe 22.
Verſe 23.

The King of Sodome hereby deſired to expreſſe his gratitude unto Abram in that he offereth him all the recovered prey, which doubtleſſe was great, forſomuch forſomuch as theſe Cities were very rich, and fruitfully ſituated. But Abram although he had made this warre at his own charge, doth utterly refuſe to take any part thereof in way of ſatisfaction, and much leſſe to inrich himſelf thereby; thus ſhewing a minde moſt free from covetouſneſſe, contrary to that which is in mighty Victours. For the oath here taken by him, I have lift up my hand, &c. it may ſeem to have been needleſſe, becauſe without it he might well have refuſed theſe goods. Calvin. Calvin ſaith, that ſome hold, that he ſware thus, to inſtruct the King of Sodome in the knowledge of the true God, but indeed, there are two other reaſons. 1 That he thought that the King of Sodome and others meaſuring him by themſelves, would not have believed him without an oath, ſpeaking of a thing ſo unuſuall amongſt other great men in the like caſe. 2 That by interpoſing the name of God, he might binde himſelf againſt all temptations in this matter. And ſo his ſaying, I have lift up my hand, &c. Luther. is, as if he had ſaid, I do lift up my hand in calling upon the Lord, and to do ſo to me and more alſo, if I take ought, &c. But Muſculus. for his deſcribing God in this full manner, The Lord, the moſt high God, poſſeſſour of heaven and earth, he doth it to inſtruct the Heathen King in the knowledge of the onely true God, leſt thou ſhouldſt ſay, I have made Abram rich: this is not ſpoken in diſdain, but to ſhew his affiance in God to be ſupplyed with Note. wealth ſufficient. A good man will not be enriched by any thing of the Sodomites.

Verſe 24. Save onely that which the young men have eaten, and the portion of the men that went with me, &c. Although Abram would not take any thing to himſelfe of that, which by the law of armes he might, yet he will not make a law for others, but leaveth them to take their parts: ſo we muſt not require, that Muſculus. others ſhould alwayes do as we do in points of liberality, for this were Quæſt. too much moroſity, as Muſculus ſpeaketh. But why did he not except the tithes alſo given to Melchiſedeck? Anſ. A tithe was to be paid of cuſtome to God in way of gratitude, and therefore there was no need to mention this: but ſome will have the tithes paid to be underſtood of the tithes of the goods of thoſe four Kings whom Abram overthrew, and therefore, that Abram ſpake nothing of them. But he is ſaid to have given to Melchiſedeck the tithe of all, and that in the preſence of the King of Sodome, and ſo there was no need to except them.

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 1. After theſe things, the Word of the Lord came to Abram in a viſion, ſaying, Fear not Abram, I am thy ſhield, and thine exceeding great reward. That is, after the Victory before commemorated, and his refuſing of any gain thereby, to confirme him againſt all other enemies, and in the contempt of theſe worldly things, in reſpect of which he had ſhewed ſuch an heroicall minde. Some, Calvin. as Calvin ſaith, imagine, that ſome ill accident had befaln Abram, making him to fear, and filling his minde with new troubles, becauſe it is ſaid, Fear not Abram; but this is onely conjecturall: more probably, he might conceive, that although he had gotten this Victory, yet thoſe barbarous people might repair their forces again, and come upon him with a greater power. Moreover, the people of that Countrey might envy him for that his great good ſucceſſe, and forecaſting, that in time he might aſſault them, and ſeek to get dominion over them, mutter ſomething againſt him tending to a conſpiracy, which might make him afraid. And laſtly, his minde might happily upon this Victory be ready to enter upon new conceits of making himſelfe great by the ſword; wherefore to prevent this, or to confirm him againſt thoſe other fears, the Lord apearing, ſpake thus unto him; to this effect Calvin. But this viſion cometh ſo plainly upon his contempt ſhewed of worldly gain offered unto him, him, as that I thinke it vaine to ſeeke after any other reaſon then that, which was rendered at the firſt. After theſe things, in the Hebrew is, after theſe words, whereupon Chryſoſtome expoundeth it accordingly, after that he had ſpoken to the King of Sodom, and by that ſpeech of his calling God therein, the moſt high God, Poſſeſſour of heaven and earth, thus inſtructing the Heathen in the knowledge of the onely true God, he appeared unto him, ſaying, Fear not Abram, fear not, that thy ſubſtance ſhall now be the leſſe, becauſe thou haſt refuſed to increaſe it by the goods offered thee. But the Hebrewes do not only ſet forth words, but things done, commonly by this phraſe, and therfore that Father doth alſo adde, after that he had paid tithes to Melchiſedeck, and performed all things before related.

Chryſoſtom. in Gen. Hom 36.

Touching the time, it is uncertain, how long after, but by the Septuagint the words are rendered thus: The Word of the Lord came to Abram in a viſion by night, which Chryſoſtome alſo followeth and many others, ſaying, that the night was the moſt quiet time, and fitteſt for this revelation, and that it was in the night, is moſt probable, becauſe he biddeth him to look up to the ſtarres, and number them if he could, ſaying, that ſo his ſeed ſhould be. Yet ſome there are, that think this viſion was in the day, becauſe of that which followeth, where mention is made of the Sunne going down, ver. 9, 10, 11, 12. But it may be, that Abram took thoſe beaſts and divided them the next day, which was the fitteſt time for ſuch actions. But Abram was not aſleepe, when the Lord ſpake thus unto him, as appeareth by their collocution. But whether did Abram now ſee any apparition? To this it is generally anſwered, that he did, an Angel of the Lord repreſenting the Lords perſon appeared and ſpake thus unto him, and that he ſaw ſomething, is intimated in the word viſion. Now that which the Lord ſaid unto him in this viſion, was, that he was his buckler and his exceeding great reward, that is, both a protectour, as he had late experience in his war. And whereas he refuſed the gifts and rewards offered by the King of Sodom, he was and would be a great reward unto him. For to have God on our ſide is more, then to have all worldly wealth. And this may be a comfort to every faithfull perſon, when by refuſing to take the courſes of gain uſed by the world, he debarreth himſelf from any benefit, he gaineth hereby, for he hath God himſelfe for his reward.

Septuagint.

Calvin.

Queſt.

Note.

And Abram ſaid, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſſe, and the Steward of my houſe is this Eliezar of Damaſcus, &c.

Verſe 2.

By this ſpeech Abram ſeemeth to ſet light by the comfort in this viſion given unto him by the Lord, as if he ſhould have ſaid, Thou promiſeſt indeed great favour unto me, but I know nothing, which may be done more for me, wherein I can have any great comfort, unleſſe I might have a childe to poſſeſſe the goods, which thou bleſſeſt me withall. For alas, I am now an old man, and going out of the world, if then I have no children, though I abound with wealth, as thy promiſe ſeemeth to imply, it will be nothing unto me. Now Abram ſpake not thus, as being ungratefull for ſo great a favour, but as putting the Lord in minde of that promiſe touching ſeed, and ſuch ſeed, as wherein all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, he thinking it now high time, if ever, for the Lord to remember him herein, which indeed he prized above all Worldly vvealth, not onely out of a naturall deſire of iſſue, but becauſe upon this other great promiſes of inheriting that Land, and of bleſſing upon all Nations did depend. I go childleſſe, in the Septuagints Tranſlation it is: I am diſmiſſed without children, that is, I being old die childleſſe. Chryſoſtome according to this noteth, that to dye for the ſervants of God is to be diſmiſſed or let go, vve being tyed and bound, as it were, vvhileſt vve live in this vvorld, and then let go free. So Saint Paul, deſiring to be diſſolved. And this vvord going, is often uſed for dying, ſo Luke 22. I go away, as it is written, and, Luke 2. Now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart. And the Steward of my houſe is this Eliezar of Damaſcus. In the Hebrevv theſe vvords are thus read, the ſonne of Meſech of my houſe, &c. And by the Septuagint the word Meſech is reteined, as a proper Chryſoſt. Phil. 1. 23.

Vatablus.

per name. Vatablus expounding this word, rendereth it filius derelictionis domûs meæ, that is, the ſonne, to vvhom I have left all the care of my family-affaires, vvhich is, if a man vvill render it in one vvord, according to our tranſlation, the Stevvard of my houſe: & ſo it is rendered by Jerom, the ſon of him, that is, the Stevvard of mine houſe. Calvin ſaith, that Meſech is by ſome derived from משך diſcurrere, becauſe the ſteward went about all buſineſſes of the houſe, ſome from מכש pocillator, is if the Butler were meant, but משך ſignifieth dereliction, and therfore the beſt tranſlating of it, is filius dereliction is, not as if hereby he meant, that he ſhould leave all to him, as ſome expound it, but becauſe he was his ſteward, and ſo by courſe, he being dead, himſelf without a childe, this man ſhould have the government and diſpoſing of all. Hereby all hold, that Abram vilified his eſtate, as being worſe then his ſervants, ſeeing he had a ſon to leave behinde him, but himſelf had none, and yet this ſervant was both a ſlave, being bought with his money, and a ſtranger, a Syrian.

Hieron. quæſt. hebr. in Gen.

Calvin.

Queſt.

But how could this be ſo, ſeeing he is ſaid by and by to be borne in his houſe? The anſwer is eaſie, he bought the father, and of him was this ſon gotten, ſince his comming to ſerve Abram. The ſpeech is Eclipticall, and to be ſupplied thus, the ſon of my Steward is this Eliezar, to whom I muſt leave all the wealth, wherewith thou haſt or ſhalt bleſſe me. A queſtion is here made by ſome, whether this man built the city Damaſcus? Jerome anſwereth, that he did, and the Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith the ſame, and many more. But both Joſephus ſaith, that Hus the grandchilde of Shem built it, and Jerome alſo following him elſewhere ſaith the ſame. And I cannot ſee, how he can be ſaid here to be of Damaſcus, it being ſpoken of by Abram, as now built, if he were the builder of it. And therefore I ſubſcribe to Joſephus, that this City was built, long before his time, eſpecially becauſe it is ſpoken of, as being a city, when Abram fought with the four Kings.

Hieron. hiſtoria Scholaſt. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. Gen. 14. 15.

Verſe 4.

And behold, the Word of the Lord came to him, ſaying, This ſhall not be thine heire, but he that ſhall come forth out of thine own bowels ſhall be thine heire, &c.

The Lord was not angry with Abram for his doubting of the ſeed promiſed, but when as he erred, thinking happily that the Lord meant one of his family, by whom he ſhould ſo grealy increaſe, when he promiſed, that his ſhould be numberleſſe, he gently correcteth this his errour, and confirmeth him touching an innumerable off-ſpring to come out of his own bowels, teaching us by his own example meekly to ſeek to ſtrengthen the weak in faith, and not to carry our ſelves harſhly towards them; So Calvin.

Note.

Calvin.

Verſe 5.

Then he ſheweth him the innumerable company of the ſtars of heavev, promiſing, that ſo his ſeed ſhould be, that by ſeeing the ſtarres at once made by the Word of God, he might acknowledge his power to make his ſeed innumerable alſo, whenſoever it pleaſed him, although he were very old, before, that he had any childe. Here is an Hyperbole againe, as before, in ſaying, that they ſhould be as the duſt of the earth. And this is not to be underſtood either by Iſhmael, or other children, which he had by Keturah, but by Iſaac onely. For accordingly we ſee how wonderfully his poſterity was increaſed in Egypt in a few yeers, ſee alſo Deut. 10. 22. And yet his carnall poſterity onely is not meant here, but myſtically his Spirituall, ſuch as all the faithfull are to the Worlds end. For even all theſe are the Children of Abraham, Gal. 4. 28, 31.

Verſe 6.

And he beleeved the Lord and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe. This is alleadged, Rom. 4. 3. in the praiſe of Abram, and to prove juſtification by faith and not by the workes of the Law, which yet is ſtifly impugned by the Church of Rome, and therfore in my Expoſitions there I have entreated largely upon it, ſo that for the true ſenſe hereof the reader may have recourſe thither.

Verſe 7, 8.

And he ſaid unto him, I am the Lord God, which brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land. ver. 8. And he ſaid, Lord God, whereby ſhall I know, that I ſhall inherit it.

Calvin.

The Lord here remembreth his bringing of Abram out of Chaldea to give him this land, that beleeving already he might yet be more confirmed in his faith faith by recounting Gods purpose towards him revealed long ago, because Jehovah, who promised, is without all variableness or shadow of change. God was the author of his peregrination hither for this end, and therefore it stood not with his glory to fail in the full accomplishment. So likewise every faithfull person may be confirmed by this consideration, that God hath brought him from a naturall estate to be a true member of his Church, and therefore he will not fail, but give him an inheritance with his Church in heaven for ever. Moreover, from benefits past we may well rest the more assured of Gods mercy and favour for the time to come. Abrams asking of a signe to be further confirmed touching this, may seem to derogate from his faith so greatly praised before. But it is to be understood, that Abram was already fully perswaded of the thing, yet, as the Lord giveth leave to his servants, he craveth a signe, that as by the promise of his Word, so by the addition of a signe he might yet be more abundantly satisfied, both when, and by what means so mighty Nations should be expelled, and his posterity should be planted there. Thus Gideon asked a signe also, and Hezechiah, and because Ahaz would not, God sheweth to be offended with him, as incredulous and desperate, and voluntarily giveth Judah a signe. Saint Augustine bringeth in the example of the Virgin Mary also, saying, that this asking of a signe urged no further doubting in Abram, no more then was in the Virgin Mary, when she asked, How shall this be, seeing I know no man, for she inquired only how, or by what meanes this should be. Chrysostome saith, it is, as if Abram had said, It is impossible (O Lord) that I should not believe that, which thou hast said, yet I desire to be taught of thee by what means this thy promise shall be effected, seeing I am old, and have been long in this Land already, but as a stranger, wandering up and down; and others have it in possession?

Calvin.

Note.

Musculus.

Augustin. lib. 16. de Civit. c. 24. Chrysost. hom. 36. in Gen. Theod. quæst 64 in Gen. 2 Kings 20.8. Judges 6.3. Esay 7.12.

And he said unto him, take me an Heifer of three yeares old, and a she-Goat of three yeares old, and a Ram of three yeares old, and a Turtle Dove and a young Pigeon, &c.

Verse 9.

The Lord in bidding Abram to do thus, condescendeth to the ratifying of his Covenant with Abram after the manner of the men of those times. For the Chaldeans, as Hilary observeth in speaking upon this, were wont to take a Bull or an Hog for the confirmation of their Covenants, and having divided it asunder, to passe through the middest of the parts placed one on the one side, and the other on the other, saying, So let me be cut in sunder, if I keep not this Covenant. Thus also Chrysostome, because, there was such a custome to confirme leagues, the Lord condescendeth to ratifie his Covenant with Abram in this grosse manner. And that the same ceremony was used amongst the Hebrews may be gathered, Jerem. 34. 18. for thus Theodoret observeth upon that place, and therefore the Hebrews to expresse the ratifying of a Covenant, say, to divide a Covenant, and because amongst the Romans they used to strike an Hog or a Sow in confirming Covenants, wishing, that they might be stricken likewise, if they kept them not, to make a Covenant in Latin is percutere or ferire fœdus. But in the Lords appointing Abram what to take, there is this difference; men anciently took but one Beast, the Lord biddeth Abram to take three, and two fowles; againe, they took an Hog or a Bull, but here a Bullock, a Goat, and a Ram are taken, and a Turtle Dove, and a young Pigeon: and the age of the beasts is set down, three yeares old, although some by the word translated, three yeares old, understand trebled, as if three of each of them were meant, but because there was no need of so many of each sort, and when two or three Bullocks are spoken of elswhere, the number is plainly set down, and not a Bullock trebled, the common reading, a Bullock of three years, &c. is to be preferred. And of the Fowles it is said, that he divided not them, what may by all this be meant? Some will have this killing and dividing to be in way of sacrifice, but there is no such thing intimated by Moses, but only that it was done in way of confirming the Covenant. For these Beasts and Fowles singularly Hilarius contra Iulian.

Chrysost. hom. 36. in Gen.

Theodoret.

Quest.

chosen, it is generally held, that the Lord would hereby intimate aforehand, what beasts and fowles should be accounted clean and fit for Sacrifice, for none but these are afterwards appointed to be used, except for the cleansing of a Leper, a Sparrow. But why should these be chosen for sacrificing above all other beasts and birds? Philo saith, that a Dove is the mildest of all fowles, and the Turtle of solitary fowles, the most easie to be tamed. And the Bullock, the Goat, and the Sheep are the gentlest amongst beasts, whole herds and flocks of them being easily guided by one Man or Boy. Moreover, their eating of Grasse and not of flesh, and their want of one row of Teeth doth further argue their mildnesse. They are also profitable, the Bullock labouring for man; the Sheep yielding him Wooll for cloathing, and the Goat haire, besides the profit of their milk. Lyranus yieldeth another reason of the choosing of these, viz. because they were most apt to represent Christ typified in all sacrifices, the Sheep his innocency, the Goat his similitude unto sinfull flesh, the Bullock his strength and patience in bearing and labouring, the Turtle his chastity and cleanneſſe, and the Dove his meekneſſe. But now for the present occasion a Bullock, Goat, and Ram of three yeares old are appointed, saith Theodoret, and three they are in all, to typifie the oppressions to be borne by Abrams posterity for three Generations, and the Turtle the fourth, which because it is a solitary fowle, figured their coming out and living in the desert, in the fourth Generation after which the Dove sheweth their coming to houses in Canaan, it being a domesticall creature. Calvin saith, It is uncertaine what is meant by three, unlesse that all the children of Abram, of what rank soever, were to offer themselves up in sacrifice to the Lord, by truly serving of him. But because here was no sacrifice made, I preferre that of Theodoret. For their killing and cutting in pieces hereby saith Calvin, was set forth the death of Abram, and the other Patriarchs, before the possession of the Land of Canaan obteined, and the afflictions of his posterity in Egyyt, in that they should not be only like a dead body, but also rent and torne, which aggravateth the misery. These Beasts do all serve man, and therefore were apt to set forth the servitude of the Hebrews in Egypt, but in that Birds are taken also, which are not divided, a free flying creature, this setteth forth their deliverance againe. But Calvin will have this rather typified in the gathering together of the parts and placing them in order. But there is no such thing mentioned in the Text, as the gathering of them up, and therefore this is not so probable. The Beasts were divided, to shevv, hovv they in their servitude should be divided from their children being taken and cast into the River, but the fovvles not, because, after their deliverance they were not subject to such a misery any more. Or else happily, which I rather think, nothing is signified by dividing the beasts, and not dividing the fowles, but only Abram did this in dividing the beasts according to the common custome of those times, and because fowles were not vvont to be used ro confirme Covenants, he took them only, and killed and placed them also, but divided them not, forsomuch as he had no order from the Lord, or president to follovv in making division of them. As Abram, so vve, to have God tyed to us by Covenant, must take a Bullock of three yeares, that is, humility in submitting, as he doth, to the yoak, 1 tovvards Superiours. 2 equalls, 3 inferiours a Goat of three by penitency, standing, 1 in confession. 2 contrition. 3 a resolution to flee all sin; and a Ramme of three, by constant suffering crosses, 1 against fame. 2 against goods. 3 against life; and lastly, the chastity of a Turtle, and meekneſſe of a Dove. And when evill spirits seek to hinder us herein, we must drive them away as Abram did the fowles, that fell upon these carcases.

Levit. 14. Quest Philo lib. de Victimis.

Lyranus. The mystery.

Theod. in Gen. quæst. 65.

Calvin.

V 1. And fowles fell upon the Carcases, and Abram drove them away. When Abram had thus prepared all things according to the commandement of the Lord, he waited to see the event, and whilest he did so, the carnivorous fowles of the Aire came to prey upon these bodies of the beasts thus laid, but he rose and drove drove them away, which was not done without a myſtery; by the fowles the inſtruments of Satan, wicked enemies of the Church being underſtood, who ſhould afterwards trouble the Hebrews in their ſervice doing to the Lord, but a providence ſhould never be wanting to preſerve the Church from their infeſting of it, and to repell their malicious attempts againſt it. Thus Muſculus. Others expound it of the Hebrews troubles by the Egyptians, but the other is beſt. Saint Auguſtine turneth it into another far different myſticall ſignification of evill ſpirits ſet forth by the fowles preying upon carnall men in their diviſions. Gregory maketh from hence an excellent Allegory ſaying, that like to theſe fowles, when we are offering the ſacrifice of prayer, divers cogitations diſtracting the minde interpoſe themſelves, but the faithfull, as Abram, do ſtrongly repell them, leaſt the benefit of their prayers ſhould thus be taken away, and they ſhould be defiled hereby.

Aug. de civit. lib. 16. cap 14. Gregor. lib 16. Moral. in Iob. Sæpe in ipſo orationis ſacrificio importunæ cogitationes ſe ingerunt, quæ hoc rapere vel maculare valeant. Sed ut Abram aves ſtudioſè ne oblatum ſacrificium raperent, abegit, ſic nos cum in ara cordis ſacrificium offerimus Deo, ab immundis his volucribus hoc cuſtodimus Aug. de Civit. lib 16. cap. 14.

But when the Sun was nigh going down, an heavy ſleep fell upon Abram, and lo, an horrour of great darkneſſe fell upon him. Verſe 12.

For the ſleep here ſpoken of, the ſame word is uſed to expreſſe it, that was uſed before to ſet forth Adams ſleep, when Evah was made out of him, Gen. 2.21. Saint Auguſtine will have the horrible perſecutions of the Church towards the end of the World ſet forth hereby, of which the Lord ſpeaketh in the Goſpel. But becauſe whatſoever was done at this time, was to prefigure ſomething touching Abrams poſterity according to the fleſh, by his ſleep, the Lords ſeeming to ſleep and to neglect his Church in Egypt towards the end of the time of their being in that ſervitude may rather be underſtood, and by the darkneſſe ſo horrible the increaſe of their miſery by laying more grievous burthens upon them, and killing their children a little before their deliverance. The Targum Hieroſol. applyeth here their miſeries by Babel, Madai, Javan, &c. Some expound this ſleep, as if it were an extaſie, wherein that which followeth was revealed, as Adam had in his ſleep a Revelation, as appeareth by his words touching Eva, when he awoke. Maimony ſaith, all that propheſied were thus terrified, their joynts trembled, and there remained no ſtrength in them, and their thoughts were troubled, and the minde left changed to underſtand that which was ſeen, as we may ſee alſo, Dan. 10.8.

And he ſaid unto Abram, Know of a ſurety that thy ſeed ſhall be a ſtranger in a land, that is not theirs, and ſhall ſerve them, and they ſhall afflict them 400 years. Verſe 13.
And that Nation, which they ſhall ſerve, will I judge, and afterwards they ſhall come out with great ſubſtance. Verſe 14.

Now the Lord plainly declareth what was before myſtically repreſented, viz. the great afflictions of his poſterity, and the time of their deliverance. But how contrary may we think this was to Abrams expectation? he looked doubtleſſe for ſome more comfortable Revelation, but thus it ſeemed beſt unto the Lord to order the matter. And in making this known to Abram he reſpected rather the neceſſity of his poſterity, then his preſent comfort. Abram for his own part had been ſo throughly confirmed by many Revelations, that the Lord knew well enough the invincible courage of his minde to beare any thing, which he ſhould learne to be decreed concerning his, how hard ſoever. But his poſterity might well be diſcouraged at their long oppreſſions, if this had not been revealed, thinking that they would never have an end: Wherefore it was for their ſake, and to ſupport their faith, that the Lord now made thus much known, being well aſſured, that Abram would not faile to inſtruct his touching the ſame: for it appeareth plainly that he did, in that Joſeph being ready to dye, ſpake of the carrying of his bones out of Egypt into Canaan. And in dealing thus with the Hebrews before their deliverance, the Lord read, as it were, a lecture of the ſtate of his ſervants in all ages, that they muſt in this World expect many afflictions, and then come to the promiſed Land of glory and joy: and of the ſtate of the wicked, that although they belong tolerated in their ſinnes, during which time their caſe may ſeem to be better then that of his deare children, yet the meaſure of their ſinnes being o nce made up, they ſhall have a dreadfull time of judgement, and his children contrariwiſe a day of deliverance from all trouble, and poſſeſſions as great, as heart can wiſh. Thus almoſt Muſculus alſo. Muſculus. But touching the number of yeares, it is hard to ſhew, how this Propheſie was verified, both becauſe they were not in Egypt, before their deliverance, above 215. and ſerved not of theſe above 130 yeares, and yet Exod. 12. 40. their ſojourning in Egypt is ſaid to have been 430 yeares. For that their abiding in Egypt was not above 215, reckoning from Jacobs firſt comming thither, is proved, becauſe Cohath the ſonne of Levi came then with him, Gen. 46. 11. who lived 133 yeares, and Amram his ſonne lived 137, and Moſes his ſonne 80, before his bringing of the people out, Exod. 6. 18, 19, &c. Exod. 7. 7. all which yeares together are but 350, out of which deduct Cohaths age at his comming thither happily 20 yeares, and the yeares of his life after the begetting of Amram happily 57, and then ont of the yeares of Amrams life after his begetting of Moſes 58. For ſo probably Moſes was begotten of Amram aged 78, Amram of Cohath aged 76, and then the remainder of time will be 215. But becauſe this reckoning is not ſo certaine, count we the whole time from Gods promiſe made to Abram, firſt in Meſopotamia, Gen. 12. For from thence to the giving of the Law, Saint Paul ſaith, that the yeares were 430, Gal. 3. 17. Now Abram was then 75, from thence then to the birth of Iſaac were 25. from thence to the birth of Jacob 60, Gen. 25. from thence to Jacobs going down into Egypt 130, Gen. 47. together 225. wherefore, if they were delivered, and the Law were given at 430 after that promiſe, their aboad in Egypt could be no more then 215. Thus alſo hold Joſephus, Euſebius, Jerom, Auguſt. Beda, Rupertus, &c. Joſeph. Euſebius. Hieronym. Auguſt. Auguſt. l. quæſt. in Exod. qu. 47. And for the clearing of this doubt Saint Auguſtine, whom almoſt all follow, ſaith, that theſe vvords of the Lord, are to be underſtoed, not as ſetting the time of their ſervitude only, but both of that and of their vvandering partly in Canaan, & partly in Egypt, becauſe they are both conjoyned together, the vvhole time of all this being, after ſeed given to Abram, 405 yeares, that is, beginning the account 25 yeares after Gods firſt ſpeaking to Abram, viz. vvhen Iſaac vvas borne, and for the five yeares overplus, this time is not ſpoken of for the rotundity of the number, eſpecially, it being immediately added, in the fourth Generation they ſhall come out, vvhich putting us upon another reckoning beſides this, included not only 5 but 30 yeares more then 400, as vve ſhall afterwards ſhevv. I have vvritten ſomevvhat already touching this difficult queſtion upon Gal. 3. But novv the more I conſider of this common ſolution, the more do I doubt of it. Both becauſe it is expreſly ſaid, Exod. 12. that the time of their ſojourning in Egypt vvas 430 yeares, and not part in Canaan, and part in Egypt, and becauſe it is ſaid, in a Land, which is not theirs, in this place, vvhereas Canaan by Gods decree and promiſe vvas theirs, and laſtly, becauſe the Lord having preciſely ſet dovvn the time, 400 yeares, it is not likely, but that he ſpake of the juſt number, and meant not 405. But vvhat then ſhall vve ſay to this difference? Verily for mine ovvne part, I knovv none vvay of certaine reconciliation, but that, vvhereas the yeares of the Hebrevvs abiding in Egypt are commonly reckoned by Cohath, Amram, and Moſes, vve grant, that beſides theſe nominated, there vvere tvvo more in the line of Levi omitted, Exod. 6. vvhich might vvell be, becauſe Moſes doth not there ſeeme to propound to himſelfe to ſet down any more then the heads of Families in the time of the Hebrevvs coming into Egypt, and in the time of their going out, in the time of their coming in Levi and Cohath, and in the time of their going out Amram and Moſes, ſuch, as came between, becauſe they lived and dyed in the time of that ſervitude, are in ſilence paſſed over: whereas this may ſeem to make againſt it, that Amram is ſaid to be the ſonne of Cohath, it is to be knowne, that grand-children two or three generations after are called Sonnes to their Grand-fathers, or great Grand-fathers, as well as their own children, for ſo by Matthew Joram is ſaid to have begotten Uzziah, Matth 1. 8. when as there were, three others between. And if we grant, that there were two more, and allow but to each of them 60 yeares ſeverall, both the whole number not only of 400, but of 430 years ſpoken of, Exod. 12. will be made up, and there will be a fourth generation, ſince their comming down into Egypt, viz thoſe two omitted, and Amram the third, and Moſes the fourth, as it is here ſaid, in the fourth Generation they ſhall come out with great ſubſtance. But deny any more to have been, then the men named, and then they came not out in the fourth, but in the ſecond generation, after their coming down, becauſe Levi and Cohath were before that. And thus almoſt alſo Genebrardus in his Chronology ſtandeth for the being of the Hebrews in Egypt 420 yeares. Genebrard. Chronol.

Calvin.

Luther.

Note.

Againſt this there is but one thing to be objected, viz the reckoning of Saint Paul, Gal. 3. making only 430 yeares between the promiſe to Abram, and the giving of the Law, whereas by this account it is above 600. But this is eaſily anſwered, he ſaith not 430 and no more, for although there were more yeares, it is true which he ſaith, that there were ſo many, and happily he nameth theſe, becauſe he found them ready reckoned, Exod. 12. and becauſe then firſt, when they came into Egypt, this Propheſie, wherein the time is moſt particularly ſet down, that they ſhould go out to poſſeſſe Canaan, having been firſt cruelly uſed in Egypt, began to take effect. Let the Reader conſider, and if he can finde any thing to ſatisfie better, candidly impart it. If there were no more, but the foure named, Exod. 6 16. happily Cohath was not borne till long after their coming into Egypt, as neither the children of Pharez; and if ſo, and he were borne but 17 yeares before his Fathers death, and Amram 13 before his death, and Moſes 14 before the death of his Father Amram, the time vvill amount to 430 yeares, and yet no ſtrange thing ſhall be admitted. For Abraham being 137 took Keturah to wife, and had by her many children, and therefore novv a man might alſo get children being 120, or 127, or upvvard. Object.

And thus the vvords of v. 16. are plaine alſo. In the fourth Generation they ſhall come hither againe, for ſo they did, Moſes being the fourth from Cohath For that a generation is thus to be underſtood, and not of a certain number of years, as ſometimes it is, appeareth, Exod. 1. 6. And the Propheſie of 400 years ſpending in a ſtrange Countrey, vvith this addition, may very vvell agree vvith the Hiſtory, the time of the dwelling of the children of Iſrael in Egypt, was 430 yeares, for in the fourth generation, at the 80 yeares of Moſes, 430 were expired. Full 400 yeares they were held there, and yet comming forth in the fourth generation, when 430 were expired, this Propheſie was accompliſhed. For the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full. Theſe words are added, as a reaſon of this long delay. The Amorites now poſſeſſed that Countrey, and the juſt Judge of the whole world doth never diſpoſſeſſe any people of their Countrey, but for ſinne, and that not for ſinne in any meaſure, but for abundance of ſinne, and moſt groſſe ſinnes, and ſo long lived in, that it is apparant they are now incorrigible, which is meant the fulneſſe of ſinne here. Some by iniquity underſtand the puniſhment of iniquity, as the word is uſed, Ezech. 18. The ſon ſhall not beare the iniquity of the Father: and ſo take theſe words, as if it had been ſaid, the full ſet time to puniſh the wicked Amorites is not yet come. Now there is a time ſet often, unto which there are many yeares, partly, that the vvicked might have time ſufficient to repent, and partly, that a vvicked people may be firſt uſed to ſcourge others, as the Aſſyrians vvere, and after as a rod, vvherevvith the childe is chaſtiſed, be caſt into the fire. Verſe 16. Exod 12.

Others underſtanding iniquity properly take the meaning of theſe words to be this. The ſinnes of the Amorites are not yet come to a full height for the heinouſneſſe thereof, the common committing of them, and the time of perſiſting therein. For ſinne is firſt ſaid to be at the full, when not ſome one or few, but all manner of abominable ſinnes are lived in. 2 When not a few, but very many, yea almoſt all are infected with thoſe ſinnes. 3 When Sin at the full when ſuch abominable ſinnes are committed openly without all ſhame. 4 When by the long continuance therein without reformation by any meanes it is apparant, that they are incorrigible. For thus the Sodomites fulfilled their iniquities, *Gen.*19. Eſay 3.9. *Ezech.*16. for having been chaſtiſed with that war, Gen. 14. yet they reformed not. Thus alſo the Iſraelites. And theſe Amorites we may gather were likewiſe in the height of their ſinnes, when they were cut off, *Levit.*18. Deut. 9.2. and *Chap.*12. It ſeemeth to me, that both theſe are implyed, the time of puniſhing them in ſuch a manner, which the Lord had ſet, was not come yet, and their ſinnes were not yet in every reſpect grown to that full height. For there was Aner, Eſhcol, and Mamre godly men of them, and doubtleſſe yet there were ſome others, but before their deſtruction all were worne away, as in Sodome, and in the old world, onely Lot with his remaining in the one, and Noah with his in the other. But why doth the Lord ſpeak onely of the Amorites, and not of the Canaanites and other peoples alſo? Queſt. Anſ. The Amorites were the chief, as being greateſt of body, and ſtrongeſt, and poſſeſſed the land in many parts, as appeareth, *Gen.*14. Deut. 1. Numb. 13. &c. and moſt notorious for their wickedneſſe, whence in upbraiding Judah the Prophet uſeth this phraſe, Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite. Ezech.16. They therefore are onely named Synechdochically by them, the reſt being underſtood, as Joſ. 1 the Hittites onely are named for all.

Verſe 17. And when the ſunne went down, and it was dark, behold a ſmoaking furnace, and a burning lampe paſſed between thoſe pieces. The preparation before ſpoken of being made to confirme Gods Covenant with Abram, now there is an appearance cauſed to paſſe between the parts, as if God had paſſed according to the manner for ratification. A fit reſemblance ſaith Vatablus, to ſet forth the ſtate of Abrams poſterity at their coming out of Egypt; it was darke, and there was a ſmoaking furnace, but a bright ſhining lamp riſeth out of this furnace, to ſhew, how the Lord would bring the light of comfort and deliverance to them out of hot burning affliction, which was ſo darke and uncomfortable. For when God came to deliver them, he appeared in a flame of fire in a buſh. It is not ſaid, that the pieces were hereby conſumed, yet ſome think, that they were and ſo a ſacrifice was made, God ſhewing himſelfe to be well pleaſed therewith. Saint Auguſtine referreth this to the end of the World, as ſignifying the Lords coming in flaming fire to conſume the carnall.

Verſe 18. That ſame day the Lord mad a Covenant with Abram, ſaying, Unto thy ſeed have I given this land from the River of Egypt unto the great River Euphrates, &c.

The ſame promiſe in generall was made to Abram before this, but now the Lord condeſcendeth after the manner of men to tye himſelfe to performe it, & ſo for this ratification he is ſaid now to have made it. For the bounds of the land promiſed, the River of Egypt is not Nilus, but a little River called from a City near adjoyning Rhinocolura, this was the South-bound ſomewhat inclining to the Weſt for the longitude of the land, and Euphrates called a great River, both becauſe it was ſo, and in compariſon of this River of Egypt the North-bound. For the Hebrewes never extended their poſſeſſions neer Nilus, becauſe it lay into the land of Egypt it ſelf. Now if this promiſe be compared with the performance, it may ſeem not to have been ever fulfilled. For, Numb. 34. the land which they poſſeſſed being deſcribed, is not extended any further than to Emath, which cometh much ſhort of Euphrates, and it is uſuall in ſpeaking of the limits of the land poſſeſſed by them, to ſpeak of it by Dan and Beerſheba. But it is anſwered by Saint Auguſtine, that in Solomons time this was fulfilled, 1 *King.*4 onely the Iſraelites poſſeſſed from Dan to Beerſheba, from Emath to the River of Egypt, but they ſubdued alſo and held as tributaries the other parts ſo farre, as Euphrates. But this was not ſufficient, ſay ſome, to make good this Covenant, which is of inheriting, as is further explained, Exod 23. Joſhua 1. wherefore there is another place found by them, which ſeemeth to be a further explanation of theſe promiſes. If

Vatablus.

*Aug. de Civit. Dei. lib.*16.*c.*24

Hieronym. Munſter.

Auguſt.

the

the Lord inlarge thy coaſt, as he hath promiſed to thy fathers, &c. if thou ſhalt keep all theſe commandements, &c. Here the poſſeſſing further even to Euphrates ſeemeth to be made conditionall, if they lived in obedience, which they did not, & therefore itwas never performed. Yet Saint Auguſtine bringeth a place to prove his tenet, that the Lord promiſed this whole tract of ground partly to be inhabited and partly to be ſubdued, *viz. Deut.*20.15,16. whereby I am rather moved, becauſe Gods Covenant is abſolute, and if it had been conditionall, they were ſo rebellious that they could never have inherited any of the promiſed land. Deut.19.8,9.

Hieron Epiſt. 29. ad Dardan.

Touching the peoples, whoſe lands the Lord bindeth himſelf here to give Abram, they are ten in this place, but in other places fewer, and ſet forth by different names, but of the reaſon of this ſee before, *Chap.*10.*v.*15, 6. Verſe 19,20, 21.

CHAP. XVI.

IN this Chapter, there is onely the Hiſtory of Hagar an Egyptian, Sarais maid, given by her to Abram, that becauſe he could have none by her ſelf, he might have a childe by her. Sarai ſaid to Abram, Behold, the Lord hath reſtreined me from bearing, I pray thee, go in unto my maid, it may be, that I may obtein children by her, &c. verſe 3. Theſe things are noted to have been done, when Abram had dwelt 10 years in Canaan. A promiſe of ſeed the Lord had made him then 10 years before, he being then 75, but now 85; and Sarai, who was but 10 years younger 75. wherefore ſhe deſpairing of her husbands having children by her, but perſwaded in regard of Gods promiſe, that he ſhould have children, commendeth her maid Hagar unto him. It is to be noted, that ſhe conſidered rightly that it was the Lords doing to keep her barren, in whoſe power onely it is to reſtrein from children, or to give children. Neither was ſhe haſty in this her reſolution, but after a long time, which the ſpirit of God would have us take notice of, for that the time of their being in Canaan, 10 years are here ſet down. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that this is ſpoken, to ſhew, how long Abrams faith was exerciſed, and how conſtant he was in expecting the performance of Gods promiſe, as alſo of how great modeſty and continency he was, that in all this time he neither ſhewed himſelf to be diſpleaſed with Sarai for her barrenneſſe, nor inclined his minde to ſeek iſſue by any other marriage. The Hebrewes ſay, that this time of ten years is ſpoken of, becauſe of old they were wont to make thus long triall of their wives, and if then they ſaw no hope of iſſue, to ſeek a ſecond marriage. But this is altogether improbable, both becauſe Abram and Sarai had not lived onely ten years together at this time, but much longer before they came into Canaan, and alſo becauſe Iſaac and Rebecca lived 20 years, before ſhe had any childe, and yet he took not a ſecond wife. But the main queſtion of this place is, whether this motion of Sarai, and act of Abram in taking Hagar to wife, were lawfull? The ancient Fathers with one conſent, have all held it to be lawfull, becauſe to take another Wife then vvas not prohibited by any law, neither was it againſt nature, and Abram in going in to Hagar was not led by concupiſcence, as is apparant, for that ſhe having conceived by him, his wife Sarai being afterwards diſpleaſed with her for her petulancy, he left her, even before ſhe had brought forth to be chaſtiſed at her pleaſure. Thus Theodoret. And Auguſtine in amplifying the laſt reaſon, that Abram did this, not out of luſt, but in hearkening to his wife Sarai, who had power of his body, as Saint Paul afterwards teacheth, ſaith, By no means is Abram to be counted faulty for marrying Hagar, becauſe heuſed her, not to fulfill his luſt, but to obtein iſſue, not inſulting over his wife, but rather obeying her, who thought it would be a ſolace unto her to have children by him of her maid by her own good will, which by nature ſhe could not. And after ſome words touching his leaving of Hagar to her Miſtreſſes

Verſe 2.

Verſe 3.

Chryſoſt. hom. 38. in Gen.

Hebræi.

Queſt.

Theod. in Gen. quæſt. 66.

1 Cor. 7. 4.

Miſtreſſes will, he addeth. In this alſo Abram ſhewed himſelf not a ſervile lover, but a free begetter, and that in Hagar he kept his chaſtity to his wife Sarai, neither did he fulfill his own pleaſure, but her will, in receiving, not deſiring, in going into, not cleaving to, in ſowing, not in loving. Oh a man therefore uſing women like a man, his wife temperately, his maid obtemperately, but neither intemperately. Thus alſo Chryſoſtome, and Ambroſe, and others. Moreover, Auguſtine contra Fauſt. lib. 10. cap. 32, ſaith, that Abram believed, that Sarai perſwaded him to this marriage by an inſtinct from God, and that ſhe had ſuch an inſtinct is affirmed by Joſephus. Laſtly, the Lord promiſeth a bleſſing to the fruit of this marriage, *v.*10. which doubtleſſe he would not have done, had it not been well pleaſing unto him. And Saint Paul ſaith, that it was done in an Allegory, and therefore it was of God, and if it had been unlawfull, it muſt have been ſo, becauſe it was adultery: but it is not likely, that Abram ſo wiſe and ſo holy a man would have been perſwaded to this, but would preſently have rejected the motion, when it was firſt made unto him, ſeeing it is apparent, that not by luſt, but by a free will he proceeded herein, in that Hagar having conceived by him, he left her for ought that we read, and never went in unto her any more. Wherefore he certainly knew nothing againſt this act of his, and if he knew nothing, I cannot ſee, how any man in theſe times can juſtly impeach it any way. For the polygamies of others, as of Jacob and David, &c. I have ſpoken ſomewhat already upon Gen. 4.18,19. ſhewing ſome reaſons againſt it, and for it, and therefore I will adde no more in this place, but whereas the reaſon againſt it taken from the firſt inſtitution of Matrimony betwixt one man and one woman may ſeem ſtrong, it may yet be anſwered, that what was then done, was done in a myſtery, to repreſent Chriſt and his Church, and not as a law preciſely to be followed by all men ever after. Again, if it ſhall ſeem, that if polygamy were at any time lawfull, it muſt needs be lawfull ſtill, for nothing ever altereth in the nature thereof; I anſwer with Chryſoſtome, that it was lawfull then, becauſe permitted for the increaſe of poſterity, but Chriſt coming aboliſhed that cuſtome, there being no need now of ſtudying for increaſe ſo greatly any more. If it be demanded, where was it ever permitted? I anſwer, although it be not expreſly permitted in any place, yet that it was, is manifeſt, becauſe there is a law, which ſpeaketh of more wives, the beloved and the hated, ſhewing what ſhould be done to the children of both, and in ſome caſe there ſeemeth to have been a neceſſity laid upon a man to have more wives, viz. if his brother having a wife dyed without iſſue, ſo that it was not permitted, as the giving of a bill of divorce for the hardneſſe of mens hearts, which therefore could not be without ſinne, but, as the neceſſity of the times required, for increaſe, that the world might be with mankinde repleniſhed to poſſeſſe all parts of the earth, as God had unto man granted them.

Aug uſt. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 25. Nullo modo de conjugio cum Hagar ancilla inurendum eſt crimen Abræ: uſus quippe eâ eſt ad generandam prolem, non ad explendam libidinem, non inſultans ſed potius obediens conjugi.

O virum virili-ter utentem fœmineo conjuge temperanter, ancillâ ol temperanter, neutrâ intemperanter.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib 1.

Ga'.4.24.

Chryſoſt Hom. 56 in Gen.

Verſe 4.

And when ſhe ſaw, that ſhe had conceived, her miſtreſſe was deſpiſed in her eyes.

Muſculus.

Oecolampad.

Hagar her ſervant did herein ſhew a baſe minde, not of a free woman, but of a ſlave, as ſhe was. Her miſtreſſe had greatly honoured her, but ſhe to requite it, contemneth her, as accurſed in her barrenneſs, being proud of her own fertility. But God did afterwards glorifie himſelfe more in Sarai her barrenneſſe, then in Hagars fruitfulneſſe. Hagar doth not unfitly ſet forth one waxing proud of his knowledge, to which he hath by the helpe of his Paſtour attained, who beginneth eftſoones to deſpiſe him, and refuſeth any more to be ruled by him, when as before he yeelded all due obedience, as Gregory noteth: but as ſhe, that was thus puffed up, is ſaid to be a ſervant, ſo ſuch are ſubject and weake through elation, and come not into the number of the ſonnes of God.

Gregor. lib. 21. in 3 Reg.

Calvin. Calvin, who condemneth the foreſaid fact of Abram and motion of Sarai, noteth this to come upon her, as a puniſhment redounding to Abram alſo. But we may rather referre it, as hath been ſaid, to the ſervile miude of Hagar, who who was not alone neither in waxing inſolent upon her preferment, but it is a thing commonly to be obſerved in ſuch, as are of baſeſt quality.

Verſe 5.

And Sarai ſaid to Abram, My wrong be upon thee, I have given my maid into thy boſome. And when ſhe ſaw, that ſhe had conceived, I was deſpiſed in her eyes, the Lord judge between me and thee.

Sarai being provoked by the inſolent carriage of her maid towards her, groweth impatient without reaſon towards Abram, who was in no fault. She was an excellent woman, and hitherto moſt patient, and to her husband obedient and reſpective, but now ſhe is unable to rule her paſſions, carrying herſelf like a frantick furious woman towards him, taxing him unjuſtly, as the cauſe of this wrong, and calling for Gods judgement upon him therefore. We may ſee here, 1 That the beſt have their vices. 2 That there is no rage to the rage of a woman. 3 That as in the married eſtate there is much comfort to ſuch as are equally yoaked, ſo betwixt the beſt there happen ſometimes chidings and fallings out. 4 Becauſe in this family the Church was at this time, that the holy Church of God it ſelf is not free from diſſentions.

Calvin. Muſculus.

Verſe 6.

And Abram ſaid, Behold thy maid is in thy hand, do to her, as it pleaſeth thee, and when Sarai dealt hardly with her, ſhe fled.

The fury in which Sarai was, could not move Abram to the like, but he quietly ſeeketh to pacifie it, giving example to husbands to do likewiſe, and not to oppoſe fury to fury: for even Socrates for the credit of Philoſophy was moſt patient towards his wives. But how is it, that he permitteth Hagar, in whom his hope of iſſue now lay, which he ſo greatly deſired, to be dealt withall by an angry woman, as ſhe thought good? Herein, as hath been already noted, Abram ſhewed plainly the great vertue, that was in him, and how that, notwithſtanding his taking of Hagar to wife for ſeed, he remained conſtant in the true conjugall love of Sarai, not being overcome with any luſt towards Hagar: For as Luther noteth, he preferr'd an old & ſterill miſtreſſe before a young & fruitfull mother. And as for the childe with which Hagar went, he doubted not, but Sarai being as deſirous of this iſſue, as himſelf, would have that care in chaſtiſing Hagar, that it ſhould not be indangered hereby. Yet Calvin taketh this, as an argument of fickleneſſe in Abram after his fault committed, as if herein being left to himſelf he did he knew not what, as befalleth thoſe that are guided in any thing by carnall reaſon, and not by God. But I reſt in the former reſolution. Touching Sarai her hard dealing with Hagar, ſome blame her, as correcting her unreaſonably, and ſome juſtifie her. Saint Ambroſe blameth her, as taking immoderate revenge, but Auguſtine defendeth her, as giving her ſervant only fit & neceſſary correction, as Hereticks may be corrected by Catholicke Princes, and for this maketh the ſaying of the Angell to Hagar, bidding her to go and humble herſelf to her miſtreſſe. So that Sarai had given her but ſuch correction, as was fitting, but ſhe ont of the ſtoutneſs of her ſtomack would not bear it, or voluntarily humble her ſelf unto her, but fled away, as contemning to be thus uſed, and ſo perſiſting ſtill in her inſolency, happily conceiving, that Abram would be glad to ſeek her up again, and to bring her home with honour, and this I think the moſt probable: For the word tranſlated, uſed her hardly, is עִנָּה, which is commonly put for any kinde of affliction or chaſtiſement.

Luther. Calvin. Ambroſe Auguſt Epiſt. 48 & 50.

Verſe 7.

And the Angel of the Lord found her by a fountain in the Wilderneſſe, in the way to Shur.

This Shur was between Cades and Berad, as ver. 13. being extended even to the Red-Sea, which was upon the borders of Egypt, ſo that it is moſt likely, that Hagar took this way thinking to return into Egypt her own countrey again. And herein ſhe may well be a type of ſuch, as being impatient of chaſtiſement for their faults by the diſcipline of the Church, return to darkneſſe of errour and ſuperſtition again, from which they had come out. Hagar ſat here penſive without doubt, and ſtudying what to do, having by this time ſuffered ſomewhat, by hunger, and thirſt, and wearineſſe, and dangers, to which ſhe ſaw herſelf expoſed, and therefore this being a moſt fit time for admonitions to work upon her, an Angel cometh unto her, and biddeth her to return, and humble her ſelf to her miſtreſſe. He could have met her at her firſt going out, but he deferred till novv, becauſe then chiefly are vve apt to be wrought upon by admonitions, vvhen vve have ſuffered ſmart for our follies, being before averſe from hearkening to good counſell. And the Angel in ſpeaking to her calleth her Hagar Sarais maid, not Abrams vvife, to humble her being inſolent, and immediately ſhe confeſſeth by the like termes, I flee from the face of Sarai my miſtreſſe. But he biddeth her go and humble her ſelfe unto her, eſtabliſhing thus the order of maſters and miſtreſſes and ſervants, although ſervants vvere then in a moſt hard condition. It is not then for ſervants to thinke of exempting themſelves from their earthly maſters, vvhen they are hardly uſed, but they muſt ſtill abide in their calling, and by humility ſeek the mitigation of their miſery.

Muſculus. Note.

Note.

Verſe 8.

Verſe 9.

Note.

Verſe 10. And the Angel of the Lord added, I will ſurely multiply thy ſeed, and it ſhall not be numbered for multitude.

Unto his admonitiõ he addeth this comfort, the more to allure her, to teach the Miniſters of Gods vvord, hovv gently they ſhould ſeek to reduce into the right vvay ſuch as vvander in ſin, and not uſe altogether auſterity, vvhereby they may rather be exaſperated then converted. In ſaying I vvil multiply, he ſpeaketh ſo as repreſenting the Lords perſon, or happily, as ſome think, Chriſt vvas in all theſe apparitions under the Old Teſtament. And he calleth it her ſeed, not Abrams, becauſe it ſhould have the name from her of Hagarens, as indeed it had, there being another ſeed to come yet appointed for Abram by Sarai. And hereupon yet the Hagarens grevv inſolent, uſurping to themſelves dominion over all, & taking upon them the name of Saracens, ſaying in their Alcoran, that vvhen Abram went to ſacrifice his ſon, he ſpared Iſaac, and vvould have taken Iſhmael, but God delivered him. Some make a queſtion about the name Saracens, as Stephanus, holding, that it came of a countrey in Arabia called Saraca next to the Nabatheans. But Jerom ſpeaketh of it, as a new name in his time, ſaying, the Arabians, or Hagarens, vvhom they novv call Saracens, dvvelt neer to Jeruſalem: ſo that it is moſt probable, that they uſurped this name for their greater glory from Hagar. But it may ſeem ſtrange, that God ſhould promiſe ſo great a multiplication of ſuch a barbarous people. To this it may be ſaid, that he had herein reſpect to Abram, as vve may ſee, Chap. 17.15. And for his mercies ſake to Abram, the Jevves having apoſtatized from the truth, are yet exceedingly multiplyed to this day.

Calvin.

Muſculus.

Stephan. de urbibus.

Hieron. Epiſt. 129 ad Dardan.

Verſe 11. And the Angel of the Lord ſaid unto her, Behold, thou art with childe, and ſhalt have a ſon, and ſhalt call his name Iſhmael; becauſe the Lord hath heard thy affliction, &c.

Hebræi.

The Hebrevves, as Lyranus reporteth, feign, that Hagar by her hard uſage and flight miſcarryed, but novv the Lord promiſeth to revive that ſeed in her again, and therefore they read it, thou ſhalt be with childe. But this is to be rejected, as a fable, her being novv vvith childe is ſpoken of to make vvay to the name here follovving, & to the inſtructions given her touching this childe. It is a rare thing, vvhich is here done in appointing the name, there being but two more in the Old Teſtament named before they were borne, Iſaac & Joſiah, and two in the nevv, John, and Jeſus. How cometh it to paſſe, that ſuch an one as Iſhmael is ſo ſingularly priviledged? Anſw. It vvas for Abrams ſake, for whom even reprobates have been ſtiled by an honourable name, and therefore no outward thing is to be gloried in. Iſhmael ſignifieth, God will hear. But how is it added, the Lord hath heard thy affliction? Anſw. Not that ſhe prayed in her affliction, for we read nothing of that, but being heavie and troubled at her deſolate eſtate, although ſhe brought her ſelfe into it by fleeing juſt chaſtiſement, this even when nothing is ſaid, is counted a crying in the eares of God, and he is moved to pity hereby. Gods mercy is ſo great, that he pitieth any in miſery, oh, how much more then will he pity the godly in affliction

Queſt.

Calvin.

Queſt.

Note.

affliction ſeeking by prayer unto him, Morally ſaith Ferus, by Hagar underſtand any man, by Abraham God, and by Sarah the Church. For as Hagar, ſo every one is borne a ſtranger to God, being taken in of grace, and made a Wife, 2 as ſhee, ſo he diſpleaſeth by pride, and by contemning the Churches precepts, 3 being admoniſhed he is not amended, but made worſe, 4 he leaveth the Church, and goeth towards the Egypt of ſin, 5 returneth not, but by the admonition of an Angel, 6 God ratifieth what the Church doth.

Verſe 12.

He will be a wild man, his hand againſt every man, and every mans hand againſt him, and he ſhall dwell in the preſence of all his brethren. The word פרא tranſlated a wilde man ſignifieth Onager, a wilde Aſſe-Colt, as Jerome advertiſeth, and ſo the Herews commonly expound it, and in what ſenſe he is thus ſpoken of, the next words explaine, his hand ſhall be againſt every man, & every mans hand againſt him. There are two things in wilde Aſſes 1 They love to live in wildernesſes ranging farre and wide up and down. 2 They are fierce and unſociable. So were the Iſhmaelites or Hagarens, for they have alwayes been a wandering wilde kinde of people, often changing the place of their aboad, not uſing any Husbandry to get their living, but being continually addicted to prey upon others round about them, feeding upon wilde beaſts, milk and herbs, living without Lawes, and taking Wives, and putting them away againe at their pleaſure: thus Ammianus, and Ierome ſpeaketh to the ſame effect, as he ſaw by experience in his travell. But the word פרה ſignifieth alſo to fructifie, as others obſerve, and ſo tranſlate it, he ſhall be a fructifying man, and then the words following are not an explanation of this, but hereby another property of that race is ſet forth. But becauſe the innumerable increaſe of his poſterity is mentioned, v. 10. it is better to underſtand this of their wildneſſe and ferity, as hath been ſaid. He ſhall dwell in the preſence, or before his brethren: that is, although for his ſavage manners all his Brethren ſhall be againſt him, yet he ſhall grow ſo potent, as that they ſhall not be able to drive him ſo from them, but that for Abrams ſake he ſhall ſet up his Tents, and abide neare unto them. And thus the Iſmaelites, of whom it is certainly ſpoken here, and not of the perſon of Iſhmael, did, for they dwelt in the wilderneſſe of Paran, neare to which the Hebrews, Edomites, Madianites, Moabites and Ammonites dwelt, and theſe were all their Brethren, or Kinſmen, who were commonly called Brethren, becauſe they came either of his Father Abram, of his Brother Iſaac, or of his Kinſman Lot. And thus moſt Expoſitours agree, yet ſome expound it, as if it had been ſaid, their brethren for their ferity ſeeking to expell them, but their fortitude and power being ſuch, and their multitude, that they ſhould not be able, they ſhould not for all their oppoſition remove further off the place of their habitation. And both theſe inded may be well held to be implyed here. If it be demanded now, whether ſuch a kinde of life be tolerable, becauſe Hagar is comforted hereby, and it ſeemeth to be ſpoken of, as a bleſſing? Calvin anſwereth well, that the bleſſing lyeth not in the ferity of their manners, but that giving hereby continuall occaſion to others to infeſt them, yet through their multitude and proweſſe they ſhould be able to keep their ground, where they had planted themſelves againſt all oppugners. And this was but a temporall bleſſing, which may befall Reprobates, and therefore, though for Abrams ſake they were bleſſed herein, yet they were not counted his, but Hagars ſeed, the children of a bond-woman, theſe conditions of tumultuating and troubling the world with perpetuall broiles, and living licentiouſly, not being of the children of God, but of ſuch, as are in a ſervile and ſlaviſh eſtate, all whoſe felicity is in this World, the children of God, ſuch as they were, they came of Iſaac being contrariwiſe meek, gentle, peaceable, and patient of wrongs, and injuries. If it be demanded, why God would give Abraham ſuch a ſonne? Ferus anſwereth well. 1 The judgements of God are unſearchable. 2 Becauſe even good men deſire more many children, then godly. 3 That Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. Vatablus.

Ammian. Marcellinus lib. 14. de Saracenis. Hieron. de Mulcho monacho. Oecaſter in Gen.

Calvin.

Note.

grace may appeare, not to come by nature. 4 that by ſuch, he may ſcourge his people ſinning, as he doth to this day, by the Turks Hagars poſterity.

Verſe 13. Chaldee Paraphraſt. And ſhe called the name of the Lord, that ſpake unto him, Thou God ſeeſt me, &c. The Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth it thus, She prayed in the name of the Lord, that ſpake with her, ſaying, Thou art the God ſeeing all things. And it is generally held, that although Hagar is not ſaid expreſly here to have prayed, yet having been ſo ſpoken to by the Angel ſhe came to underſtand, how the Lord beheld all things, which out of a prophane minde ſhe would not think upon before, and then ſhe fell to prayer, the beginning whereof was this, Thou God ſeeſt me, but no more did Moſes think good to ſet down. So then theſe words carry this ſenſe, ſhe in praying called the name of the Lord, Thou God ſeeſt me, becauſe ſhe began her prayer in theſe words. For ſhe ſaid, Have I alſo here looked after him, that ſeeth me? Divers are the Expoſitions of theſe words, as Vatablus noteth, ſome expound them thus, I have ſeen the poſteriour parts of him, that ſeeth me, that is, I have ſeen him obſcurely, and this he ſaith, is commonly received, and if the vulgar Latine which readeth it ſo, be followed, the words may well carry this ſenſe, yet others following the ſame reading underſtand it, as if ſhe had ſaid, I have ſeen him angry with me: others, Have I been blinde in looking after him? But the ſenſe to be preferred is, Have I ſeen him departing from me, as we can look after a man going away? no I have not, and therefore he was doutbleſſe the Lord, becauſe I ſaw him, and he is now gone, but when he went I ſaw not, ſo that he went not away, as a man, but vaniſhed away, as a ſpirit. For theſe words are a reaſon, why ſhe called him, The Lord ſeeth me, and therefore muſt needs be taken in this ſenſe, becauſe thus they prove it, and not otherwiſe, and howſoever they be rendered in the vulgar Latine, they are read by an Interrogative in the Hebrew. Calvin expoundeth it, as if Hagar did hereby check her ſelfe, that ſhe had not ſooner, whileſt the Lord talked with her, looked more attentively after him, lifting up her eyes to Heaven for mercy. But I preferre the former, becauſe it is a plaine reaſon of the title given by her to the Lord before.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Verſe 14. Therefore ſhe called the well, or he that ſpeaketh of it, calleth it, Beer-lahairoi, the well of the living ſeeing me. The words are commonly read, the well is called, but in the Hebrew it is קָרָא ſhe called, and that for the perpetuall memory of the thing, and to ſhew her gratitude, others continuing the ſame name, as Calvin noteth, ſo that by her afflictions ſhe well profited, who before went ſo much aſtray. For the Epithites given to God here, living and ſeeing, they are both moſt proper to him, for he is life and the fountaine of life, and ſeeth all things, neither can any be hid in the greateſt deſert from him. It is between Cades and Bered: of the place ſee before, verſe, 7.

Calvin.

Verſe 15. Muſculus. And Hagar bare Abram a ſonne, and he called his name Iſhmael, &c. Abram is ſaid to have given the name, becauſe the right of giving names belonged to the Father moſt properly, ſhe told him doubtleſſe of the appointment of the name by the Angell, and ſo he obeyed in calling him by that name. And it is to be thought, that hearing all from her, that was ſaid by the Angell touching Iſhmael, he conceived great hopes of him, not knowing yet, that Sarai ſhould beare him a ſonne, the Lord thus ſuffering him for a time erroneouſly to reſt in this ſonne, as if he had been the promiſed ſeed, leſt ſo many yeares paſſing, as did betwixt this time and the birth of Iſaac he ſhould have been overmuch diſcouraged. For, as is ſaid v. 16. Abram was now 86 yeares old, and therefore he went 13 yeares after this, before Sarai was with childe by Iſaac.

Verſe 16.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVII.

ANd when Abram was 99 yeares old the Lord appeared unto him, and ſaid, I am the Almighty God, walk before me, and be perfect, &c. What was done concerning Abram after the birth of Iſhmael 13 yeares together is here omitted by Moſes, becauſe it doth not concerne us to know it. God calleth himſelfe the Almighty God, that Abram might not doubt of that, which he ſhould now ſay unto him of the fruitfulneſſe of his Wife Sarah, and hereupon he biddeth him to walk before him, that is, to proceed in a Godly courſe of life, and to be perfect, that is, having an heart truly fearing him alwayes: for there is nothing that doth ſo much affect the heart with a feare to offend, a reverence and confidence in God, as the conſideration of this, that God is Almighty, and where theſe three concurre, there is a perfect man, although in reſpect of doing good without ſinning in any thing there is not perfection even in the beſt, Eccl. 7. 20. Touching the name שדי tranſlated Almighty, ſee Exod. 6. 3. Verſe 1.

And I will make my Covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly, &c. Here is nothing now, but a repetition of that which was ſaid, Chap. 15. becauſe of the new ſigne of the Covenant now inſtituted, viz. circumciſion. Now when Abram heard this againe, he fell on his face, worſhipping the Lord that talked with him, and he promiſed to make him the Father of many Nations, which was verified both according to the fleſh, becauſe of him came the Iſhmaelites, Hebrews, Edomites and Madianites by Keturah, and according to the ſpirit, becauſe he is the Father of all the faithfull in all Countreys and Nations of the World. And for a ſigne, that he ſhould be a Father of many Nations, the Lord changeth his name from Abram to Abraham. Abram, as Jerome hath it, ſignifieth an high Father, but Abraham, a Father of many, the word Nations being underſtood, and the Hebrews obſerve, that his name is increaſed, as is Sarai alſo by the addition of a letter ה, which if one in the name Tetragrammaton. Fagius ſaith, that Abraham is compounded of Abram and Hamon ſignifying a multitude, the laſt ſyllable being taken away, it is Abram-ham, & for the better ſounds ſake Abraham. Thus alſo Ferus, but he draweth the change of this name into more Myſteries alſo: Becauſe ה is inſerted, that Abraham was made partaker not only of Gods benefits, but even of the divine nature, ſet forth by this ה which is twice in יהוה, for this is a priviledge of faithfull perſons, that God is not only favourable unto them, but dwelleth in them. 2 That the Sonne of God ſhould take fleſh of Abraham, according to which the Apoſtle ſaith, He took not the nature of Angels, but the ſeed of Abraham. 3 That the Son of God ſhould come of Abraham after 4000 years, becauſe ה is made the fourth Letter of his name. 4 Becauſe a ſhut ם followeth after ה, that Chriſts Kingdom, who ſhould come of him and the Kingdome of the faithfull, whoſe Father he is, ſhould be without end. Philo will have Abram to ſignifie either an high Father, or a Father of election, but Ham being added, which he expoundeth a voice or a ſound, the Father elect of the ſound, becauſe when men praiſed God, they ſounded forth this name, the God of Abraham. But this is farre fetcht, and the reaſon of the change of the name is expreſſed in the Text, a Father of many Nations I have made thee. It may be noted generally, that when God will grace any he addeth to their names, but when he will diſgrace, he taketh away, as from Jechoniah, calling him Coniah. Abraham is thus named before his Circumciſion, to intimate, that peoples and Nations, not only circumciſed, but alſo uncircumciſed ſhould be his children, Rom. 4. v. 11. 12. That, which followeth here of Nations and Kings to come of Abram, and of Gods Covenant with him, which he promiſeth ſhall be everlaſting with him and his ſeed, &c. needeth no further explication, then that which was made before upon the like occaſion, Chap. 13. 15. Verſe 2. Verſe 3. Verſe 4. Rom. 4. Verſe 5. Hieron. Fagius. Ioan. Ferus Myſteries. Heb. 2. Philo, Jer. 22. Verſe 6. 7. 8.

This

Verſe 10. Verſe 11. This is the Covenant, which ye ſhall keep betwixt me and you, and thy ſeed after thee, every manchilde among you ſhall be circumciſed. 11 And ye ſhall circumciſe the fleſh of your fore-skin, and it ſhall be a token, &c.

Touching the ceremony of circumciſing here inſtituted, I have ſpoken at large, Luc. 1. Doct. 46. ſhewing, that it was the cutting away of the looſe skin of the genitall member, and having mentioned ſome reaſons hereof ſet forth by Philo and by Moſes Ægyptus, I have pitched upon four eſpecially. 1 Becauſe it doth moſt aptly ſet forth the circumciſion of the heart, to which they were directed hereby, Dent. 10.16. Jer. 4.4. So Irenæus, Hæreſ. lib. 4. cap. 30. Lactant. lib. 4. divin. inſtitut. and Lactantius ſaith, that therefore the circumciſion of the heart is ſet forth hereby, becauſe as this member is by circumciſion made bare and open, and all filthineſſe is done away, ſo in the heart-circumciſion foul ſins are not kept cloſe any longer, but confeſſed to God, all deceit is put away, and the heart is ſimple and open, and vain delights are no more harboured in the heart. And this member was appointed to be cut thus for the ſimilitude betwixt it and the heart, as Philo noteth. 2 Becauſe the poſterity of Abram were hereby to be diſtinguiſhed from other Nations: ſo Joſephus, and Theodoret, Gen. 34. Judg. 14.4. 3 That thus the cutting off of originall ſin might be ſet forth, Coloſſ. 2.11. But it is not to be conceived, that it was done away hereby, but by faith, becauſe then Iſhmael and others had been freed alſo, as Theodoret reaſoneth. 4 Becauſe hereby Chriſt to come of Abram pure and clean from all corruption was prefigured, Col. 2.11. So Beda, who beſides the former, hath this reaſon, and therefore Chriſt coming, it ceaſed; and becauſe of the ſeed that cometh by the member of generation, the circumciſing of it was moſt aptly inſtituted, and this is called the Covenant, becauſe the ſigne thereof. Moreover, I have ſhewed, in what an honourable account this ceremony was had both amongſt the Jews, and in other Nations. and Laſtly, in what ſenſe it is ſaid here to be an everlaſting Covenant, why the eighth day was the day appointed for it, what if any dyed before, and why women were excluded from this ſacrament, whereas now they are baptized as well as men. And therefore, if any deſire to read of theſe things more largely, he may have recourſe thither. The Jews have theſe Canons about circumciſion. 1 If they be ſick, that are to be circumciſed, they deferre the time till they be recovered, and then circumciſe the eighth day after. 2 If the childe be pale or very red, they circumciſe him not till he hath a good colour. 3 If a woman hath circumciſed her childe the eighth day, and it dyeth thereupon, and a ſecond childe, and that dyeth alſo, the third is not circumciſed till it be grown greater and ſtronger. 4 Heathens are not circumciſed, but coming of love, not being moved by any by-reſpect. 5 Thoſe that were circumciſed, were baptized and brought a ſacrifice. 6 The circumciſion of Heathen is before three. 7 Women were baptized and brought ſacrifices. Maimony.

Verſe 15. Verſe 16. And the Lord ſaid, As for Sarai thy wife, thou ſhalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah ſhall her name be. 16 And I will bleſſe her, and give thee a ſonne by her, &c. After circumciſion inſtituted for Abram and all the males of his family, both ſervants born in his houſe, and bought with his money, a threatening being added to cut off the uncircumciſed, the Lord cometh to reſolve Abram of that which he had not hitherto done, viz. what ſeed was the ſeed meant, when he made a covenant with Abram and his ſeed, and this he telleth him, was a ſeed yet to come of Sarai, and not that which came of Hagar, as all hitherto thought; for which cauſe he changed her name, as he had done Abrahams. But before we come to ſpeak of this, there is a queſtion to be diſcuſſed hitherto omitted, whether the ſervants of Abraham were to be circumciſed againſt their wils, or no; and why they muſt partake of the ſame Sacrament with his ſeed? I anſwer, that it conduced much to peace to have all of one family of one religion, and being ſo, there was the leſſe danger of drawing away any after ſuperſtition and errour: ſo Th. Anglicus. And for inforcing any to circumciſion, ſuch as were born after this in Abrahams houſe, by reaſon ſon of their infancy could not be ſaid to be inforced, as for others, it was to be offered to them, as Gods Ordinance, and the penalty of refuſing to be propounded, and all that would hereby be moved, were to be circumciſed, but none againſt their wills, as none are againſt their wills to be baptized. And therefore when the Lord ſpeaketh afterwards of the Paſſeover, he ſaith, if a ſtranger dwelling vvith thee vvill eat thereof, he ſhall be firſt circumciſed, ſo that this muſt be voluntary in him, although ſervants it ſeemeth, that they being under their Maſters juriſdiction vvere to be taken and circumciſed, or to be cut off. Exod.12.48. Exod.12.44.

Verſe 12. Queſt. Abrams ſervants circumciſed why. Th. Anglicus.

Novv for the change of the name of Sarai, it vvas made upon the like occaſion that Abrams name vvas changed upon, becauſe ſhe ſhould be a Mother of Kings and Nations, Sarah ſignifieth a Princeſſe, vvhich vvhileſt it is Sarai, is more reſtreined, but now this reſtraint is taken avvay, this nevv naming of her being, as if it had been ſaid, ſhe ſhall have dominion by reaſon of her Motherhood far and vvide in many Countreys. And this is more expreſſed in verſe 16. She ſhall grow into Nations, and Kings of people ſhall come of her. Calvin.

Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, ſaying in his heart, Shall a childe be born to him that is 100 years old? and ſhall Sarah that is 90 bear? 18 I would to God, that Iſhmael might live before thee. Verſe 17. Verſe 18.

A great queſtion is here made amongſt Expoſitours, vvhether Abraham doubted of the promiſe of the Lord vvhen he thus laughed? For it ſeemeth that he did both by his laughing and by his wiſh, that Iſhmael might live. Chryſoſtome therefore ſaith, that there was ſome unbelief novv in him, vvhereby he ſinned, and for this cauſe he eſcaped not vvithout puniſhment in his poſterity, vvhen they vvere made to ſerve in Egypt 400 years. So likewiſe Jerome, through the conſcience of his frailty he fell groveling upon the ground, hiding his face when he laughed, becauſe he durſt not laugh openly. But both Saint Paul is plainly againſt this, vvho ſaith, that Abraham doubted not through unbelief, conſidering the deadneſſe of his own body, and of Sarahs vvombe, but vvas ſtrong in faith, and gave glory to God. And Calvin, Luther, and Artopæus, and other new Writers generally juſtifie Abraham in this his laughing, as not proceeding from unbelief, but from joy, and in his queſtion, ſhall he, that is, an 100 years old have a childe, &c? as not proceeding from doubtfulneſſe, but from a moſt ſtrong faith, in that notwithſtanding this obſtacle he believed, that God by his Almighty Power was able to effect this. And therefore in reverent thankfulneſſe he bowed himſelf down to the ground before the Lord, who promiſed him this bleſſing. For his deſire, that Iſhmael might live in the Lords ſight, that was no more, but an expreſſion of his great parent-like affection towards him, and hovv well contented he could have been, if the Lord had given onely that ſonne unto him: but now ſith he was pleaſed to promiſe another by Sarah, who ſhould be his heir, he prayeth for Gods bleſſing upon him alſo, which is meant, when he ſpeaketh of his living in his ſight, as is explained in the Lords anſwer, verſe 20. And that Abraham ſinned not through unbelief, appeareth, becauſe when Sarah laughed ſo, ſhe was reproved, but Abraham not, but onely the Lord doth yet more and more aſſure him. He laughed, ſaith Ferus, through joy for ſo great a favour, and whereas he ſpeaketh of his great age, it was not out of diſtruſt, but out of admiration, &c. verſe 19. Yea, Sarah thy wife ſhall bear a ſonne, and thou ſhalt call his name Iſaac, &c. that is, laughing, for a memoriall of the joy, which Abraham conceived, when he heard hereof. And whatſoever Chryſoſtome ſaith elſewhere, yet upon this place he alſo juſtifieth Abraham as rejoycing through faith at the news of this ſonne. Chryſoſt. hom. d. pœnit. 6. Hieron. lib. 3. dialog in Pelag. Rom. 4. 19. Calvin. Artopæus. Gen. 18. Verſe 19. Chryſoſt. hom 40

Thus alſo Rupertus, who ſaith, that Iſaac for this laughing of Abraham through joy in Gods promiſe had his name, the future joy in Chriſt, who ſhould come of him, being alſo intimated hereby. Some for the more cleering of Abraham, yet ſay, that he knew not whether God ſpake plainly or myſtically: for which cauſe it is anſwered. Sarah ſhall indeed bear thee a ſonne: Rupert. lib. 5. in Gen. 35.

My

Verſe 20,21 My words are not otherwiſe to be underſtood then as they ſound. He alſo ſaith, that he had heard him for Iſhmael, to bleſſe him, and to make him fruitfull, but his Covenant ſhould be with Iſaac; thus putting a difference betwixt the childe of the fleſh and the childe of promiſe, as it is alſo at this day, there being many that come of Abraham according to the fleſh, who for his ſake enjoy outward bleſſings, but the Covenant is peculiarly of another ſtreine of the truly faithfull.

Verſe 22,23 When the Lord had made an end of talking thus with Abraham, he departed up to heaven. And he deferred not, but was circumciſed that ſame day both he and all his males. Here was an admirable example of obedience, in that he deferred not one day to do the Lords command, either for the ſmart and danger to himſelf, for the conſideration that he might have, that he had been Gods Servant hitherto without any ſuch ſign, and therefore it was needleſſe now, or that it might ſeeme obſcene and ridiculous, or that the males of his family being very great would never indure it, but be ready to riſe up againſt him attempting ſuch a thing, and in a fury ſlay him. For a ſtrong faith alſo was needfull againſt all theſe, that God, who directed him to this, would aſſiſt and defend him. And withall we may note, what a wel-governed family he had, there being not one to be found that reſiſted, but all readily ſubmitting unto him in this matter. Thus Calvin.

Note.

Calvin.

Verſe 24,25 Verſe 26,27 Laſtly, here is the age of Abraham 99 ſet down, when he was circumciſed, and of Iſhmael 13, and then the order, Abraham and his ſonne Iſhmael, and then all the males of his houſe. Abraham is ſaid long before this to have been juſtified by faith, ſo that this conduced not unto juſtification. And here is an example of a due order in duties of piety, the Maſter is firſt, and then his ſonne, they go before, and then the reſt of the family follow after.

Note.

Muſculus.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſe 1. Verſe 2. AND the Lord appeared unto him in the plaine of Mamre, and he ſate in the tent-doore in the heat of the day. v.2. And he liſt up his eyes, and looked, and lo three men ſtood by him, &c. This apparition was preſently after the other, when he had now circumciſed all the males of his houſe, as is plain from the time of Sarahs bringing forth a ſonne, ſpoken of there, Chapter 17.21. and againe here verſe 10. But the manner vvas divers from any that had been made hitherto. For Abraham novv ſeeth three men, and accordingly addreſſeth himſelf unto them, and enterteineth them vvith vvaſhing of their feet and good chear, becauſe he thought them to be men indeed. And herein he vvas a notable example of hoſpitality, as Lot vvas another, vvhereupon hoſpitality is commended to us all, Hebrews 13.2. Firſt, he ſate at his door about noon-tide, vvhen men uſually ſeek to ſome houſe for dinner. Secondly, he ſtayed not till they came to him, but ran to meet them, and to dravv them unto him for their repaſt. Thirdly, he moſt courteouſly bovved himſelf to him, vvhom he thought the chiefeſt of them, deſiring him to accept of ſome refreſhing, vvhich he vvould prepare for him. 4 He haſteneth to get cakes, fleſh, and butter and milk ready for them. 5 He ſtood giving attendance upon them, vvhileſt they did eat.

Verſe 3,4,5. Verſe 6,7,8.

Now it is to be thought, that the Lord would at this time appear in this manner unto him, Angels taking upon them the ſhape of men to prove his hoſpitality, which the Lord maketh account of as a ſingular vertue, to be inhoſpitable being an inhumane and brutiſh thing. And in coming thus like men unto him, there appeared certainly in them a kinde of reverend Majeſtie, which made Abraham thus to humble himſelfe unto them. Some think, that he had been taught by his anceſtours, that Angels ſometimes appeared in the ſhape of men, and therefore he conceived, that theſe might be ſuch: but neither

Calvin.

hath hath any thing hitherto been delivered, from whence this may be gathered, and it is contrary to that of the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that by being hoſpitable, ſome have entertained Angels unawares: He thought them then to be but men, and ſtrangers, and unknovvn they were unto him, yet ſee, what obſervance he giveth them. And this is indeed the true hoſpitality, when we entertain, not friends coming to us, who may requite us again, but mere ſtrangers, whom vve may happily never ſee any more to have any recompence at their hands. Yet I do not thinke, that Abraham did thus to all comers without difference, for ſo he might have been oppreſſed with multitudes, but diſcreetly conſidering the quality of ſuch, as came by. What three Angels theſe were it is uncertain, yet the Hebrew Rabbines take upon them to determine, that they were Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael, and that Michael vvas ſent to tell of the birth of Iſaac, Gabriel being on the right, and Raphael on the left hand of him, who vvere by and by to be imployed, the one to deſtroy Sodome, and the other to bring Lot out from thence, and therefore Abram ſtill addreſſed himſelf in his ſpeech to Michael onely, ſaying, My Lord, &c.

Heb.13.2.

Rabbini. Hieruſ.Targum One Angell is employed at once but about one thing, therefore three things being now to be done, three Angels come.

But in thus punctually ſetting down every thing, they greatly forget themſelves: for both together take Lot and his vvife and daughters away from the burning, *Gen.*19.16. And vvhen Lot made ſuit for Zoar that it might be ſpared, it was anſwered, that he had heard his prayers, not to deſtroy that city, vvhich argueth, that the ſame who brought out Lot, deſtroyed Sodom, becauſe it is alſo added, make haſte, ſave thy ſelfe there, for I can do nothing, till thou comeſt thither. But vvhy then, ſeeing there vvere three, doth he ſpeak as unto one only? To this Saint Auguſtine anſwereth, that in theſe three Abraham acknowledged the Lord, there being ſomething, vvhich he ſaw in them excelling men, as vvhen they appeared in the ſhapes of men to the Prophets; and therefore he ſpake unto them, as repreſenting one Lord in the ſingular number, and yet becauſe they appeared as three men, ſometimes in the plurall. But Ckryſoſtome ſaith, that by ſome ſuperexcellencie which he ſaw in the perſon of one, and the reverence which the other two did unto him, he conceived him to be the chief, and that they did miniſter unto him. So likewiſe Ambroſe, he firſt ſpake to him, who ſeemed to be the chief, and then turning to the two, whom he thought to be his ſervants, he giveth ſome reſpect unto them, Let a little water I pray you be fetched, and waſh your feet, and reſt your ſelves, &c. But Rupertus again on the other ſide cleaveth rather to Auguſtine, ſaying, that he ſpake ſometime in the ſingular number, when ſuch things were done and ſpoken, as properly belonged to God, as in his adoration and praying him, if I have now found grace in thy ſight, &c. ſometime in the plurall number, as when he came to offices of humanity and hoſpitality, which are common to others alſo, as of waſhing, and reſting, and eating, &c. I do with Calvin ſubſcribe to Chryſoſteme, becauſe Abraham knew not at the firſt, that they were any other then men, and as for his proſtration before one of them, and calling him Lord, which by ſome is interpreted, as if he knew him to be God, thus appearing to ſet forth the myſtery of the Trinity, it is to be underſtood, that in thoſe parts it was uſuall thus to ſalute ſtrangers, and to ſpeak unto them by the name of Lord, as the woman of Canaan did unto Chriſt, being yet a ſtranger to her. But why did three together come, and not rather one? Hereby it hath been generally held by the Fathers, that the myſtery of the Trinity was ſet forth, the Son of God with two Angels attending him thus coming in the likeneſſe of a man as a præludium of the humane nature, which he would afterwards take of Abram. This laſt of the Son of God with his Angels is imbraced by Calvin, but that of the myſtery of the Trinity is utterly rejected by him. For my own part, I can ſee no reaſon, why this myſtery may not be thought to be intimated hereby, ſeeing otherwiſe two or more might as well have appeared. Philo, who knew not the Doctrine of the Trinity, is for three things in God intimated hereby, or three repreſentations in the mind of the Divine nature, one of the thing it ſelf, the other two of ſhadowes, as it were on each ſide thereof.

Gen.19.21. Queſt. Auguſt.lib.16. de Civit.Dei, cap.19.

Chryſoſt.hom.41

Ambroſ. Deinde converſus ad duos, quos miniſtros arbitrabatur, etiam ipſis deferre geſtit obſequium. Rupertus.

Calvin.

Matth.15. Queſt. A myſtery.

Philo.

The one is properly called Eſſence, the other two the next vertues or powers of the Deity, the firſt, whereby he governeth all things, the other whereby he giveth lavves to all, being rightly called for this Lord, and for that God. Or hereby are ſet forth three wayes of mans knowing God. 1 In himſelf, as he is infinitely Wiſe, Holy and Good. 2 In his effects of Mercy and Love. 3 In his effects of Juſtice and Severity. Ferus ſaith, now that Iſaac, a Type of Chriſt was to be borne, the myſterie of the Trinity was in this apparition manifeſted, to ſhew that at the time of Chriſts Incarnation it ſhould be made plain every where, the three perſons coming to the Virgin Mary, the Father and Spirit to impregnate, and the Son to be borne of her.

Verſe 6. Make ready quickly three meaſures of fine meal, &c.

The vvord meaſure is properly tranſlated Satum, being Saach in Hebrew, being a meaſure of dry things three times ſo great as an Homer, ſo that an Homer conteining ſomewhat more then a Gallon, a Satum is three gallons and three pintes, according to Budæus. Three Sata then are ten gallons and a pinte, that is, five pecks of our meaſure and ſomewhat more, a ſufficient liberall proviſion to entertain three men, and hereby is ſet forth, how free Abram was in his hoſpitality.

Budæus Hebr. menſur.

Verſe 7,8. Now cakes being made hereof, and a calfe provided and brought, with butter and milke, and ſet before them, they did eat, Abram ſtanding by. It may ſeem ſtrange, that Angels, who have no bodies to be nouriſhed with meat, ſhould eat, and therefore Theodoret diſputing upon this, ſaith, that they ate not indeed, but ſeemed only to eat, that it might not yet appear what they were, putting the meat with hands, which they ſeemed to have, into mouthes, which they ſeemed to have, and ſo conſuming it, as they pleaſed. And herein many follow Theodoret. But Calvin will have their eating to be a true eating, as their appearing and ſpeaking, and not a ſeeming onely. For they took bodies to them, when they appeared, and therefore although that which they ate, was not turned into nutriment to thoſe bodies, yet they had the organs of eating, and as their bodies, when they had done that with them, for which they took them, vaniſhed, and were turned into their prejacent matter, ſo alſo did their meat, after they had eaten it. They ate not out of infirmity as men, but out of power. Thus alſo Chriſt ate with his Diſciples after his Reſurrection, to approve that he had a true humane body, which could not have been by ſeeming to eat onely.

Theod. quæſt. 68. in Gen.

Calvin.

Quòd comederunt non fuit infirmitatis ſed poteſtatis.

If theſe Angels had ſeemed onely to eat, they had deluded Abraham, and as in this, why might it not have been ſuſpected, that they had deluded him alſo in that which they ſaid unto him? Whereas Raphael in the book of Tobit is objected, who ſaid, that he did but ſeem to eat, but he uſed indeed inviſible meat, the book is Apocryphal, and therefore we are not bound to beleeve all related therein.

Tob. 12.

Verſe 10. They having eaten inquire for Sarai, and then he ſaid, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life, and lo, Sarah thy wife ſhall have a ſon, and Sarah heard it in the tent-door, &c.

In the 9 Verſe they ask, where is Sarah thy wife? but here, he ſaid, I will certainly return, &c. The reaſon of this variation is, becauſe they were three, and yet did repreſent but one Lord, one therefore who ſeemed the chief, and indeed was the Sonne of God, although Abraham yet knew it not, when any thing was to be ſpoken arguing ſuperiority, ſpake alone, but otherwiſe any of the reſt, touching whom it is ſaid, although but one ſpake at once, they, and touching the chief, he ſaid, I will certainly return unto thee, according to the time of life. This according to Jerome is, as if he had ſaid, if I live, but it is abſurd, as Calvin noteth, to expound any thing ſpoken by the Lord, when he ſetteth forth his Almighty Power, as if he were uncertain of life, wherefore it is rather to be underſtood of the childe which Sarah ſhould bear, as if he had ſaid, ſo much time being fulfilled, as is commonly for the conceiving and bringing forth of a living childe, I will come by my power giving Sarah a ſonne, yet the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, I will come, whileſt thou Hieron. Calvin.

Cald. Paraphraſt.

and

and Sarah yet live, and others, whileſt Sarah liveth, but ſo no certain time ſhould be ſet, whereas, Chap. 17.21. there a ſet time, and ſo a thing preciſely deſcribed by the time before, ſhould now be left more uncertain in reſpect of the time which is improbable. Now Sarah behinde the tent-door hearing this laughed, and is therefore challenged, but denyeth it. Whether did ſhe ſinne in laughing, when as Abraham having before laughed upon the ſame occaſion is not taxed, as having offended? Anſw. There was great difference betwixt her and Abraham in laughing, he laughed out of joy, as hath been ſhewed, but ſhe out of incredulity, as the Lord knew, to whom onely the heart is manifeſt, and therefore he taxeth her but not him. She conſidered how it was with her in the courſe of nature, and the old age of her husband, and ſo thought it impoſſible for her to have a childe, neither did ſhe think that it was God, but a man that ſpake thus. Wherefore doubting cannot be denyed to have been in her at the firſt, and becauſe ſhe was reproved, and denyed what ſhe had done, ſin. So Auguſtine and Calvin, &c. Yet ſome excuſe Sarah, as if her laughing were propheticall, ſhewing rather myſtically the joy to come, and the name Iſaac, then ſavouring of incredulity, ſo Ambroſe. The firſt is moſt probable, and whereas Sarah is praiſed for her faith, *Heb.*11.11. it is to be underſtood of her faith after that the Lord had confirmed her. Now for the old age of Abraham alleged as a reaſon againſt her having children by him, as well as her own age, and that it ceaſed to be with her according to the cuſtome of women, it is to be underſtood, that it was not impoſſible in nature for Abraham being thus old to have a childe: for he begat Iſmael of Hagar but 12 years before, and long after other children of Ketura, but that being thus old, and having lived ſo long with Sarah, by whom he could never yet have a childe, it was impoſſible in naturall reaſon, that now he ſhould beget one of her. And as for women in her caſe, they are certainly out of all hope in the courſe of nature.

Verſe 11, 12, 13, 14 15.

Aug. quaſt. 36. in Gen. Calvin. Ambroſe.

The men having ſaid thus, went from thence and looked towards Sodome, and Abraham brought them on the way. Then privately the Lord conſulted about the diſcloſing of what he intended to do to Abraham, becauſe he feared God, and would teach his, and ſhould be extraordinarily bleſſed, as being in ſingular favour with the Lord. Abraham ſtill ſeemeth to proſecute them with offices of humanity, as if he thought them yet to be men, but doubtleſſe he knew them by this time to be Angels, as Calvin ſaith, and therefore he attended them on the way out of duty, not of courteſie. When the Lord maketh a queſtion of hiding or not hiding from Abraham what he intended to do, he doth not ſo, becauſe he doubted, but ſpeaketh after the manner of men now that he appeared in the ſhape of a man. But what need was there, that Abraham ſhould be acquainted with the purpoſe of the Lord herein? Anſw. If the Lord ſhould not have revealed judgements to come to his ſervants the Prophets, they would not be thought by the world to come any otherwiſe then by chance, but now it appeareth, that they are of the Lord, and men are the more apt to be affected herewith. And therefore it is ſaid, that he doth nothing, but he firſt ſheweth it to his ſervants the Prophets. For the reaſons of revealing this to Abraham. 1 Abraham ſhall grow into a mighty Nation. 2 He will teach his, &c. One favour of God is the cauſe of another, and not any merit in man. The Lord had received Abraham into grace to make him a father of a great people, and to make all nations bleſſed in him, and becauſe he had done ſo, he would now open himſelf unto him, as to a friend. Again, what he ſhould reveal to Abraham, he knew that he would not hide it through negligence, but open it to his family, that they hearing how ſevere God is againſt ſinners, might flee ſinne, and do that which is juſt and righteous. They in whom God ſetteth up any light of knowledge, have it not for themſelves onely, but to ſhew it unto others, that they may be excited to good hereby. And therefore they are over-ſtupid and blockiſh, who ſpeak not of any thing divine to their families, but altogether of the world

Verſe 16, 17, 18

Calvin.

Queſt.

Amos 3.7.

Note.

Note.

It is no marvel, that moſt houſholders are ſo ſimple in heavenly things for this, ſeeing God communicateth himſelfe and his things only unto men, as he ſeeth, that they are ready to inſtruct others.

Verſe 21. And the Lord ſaid, Becauſe the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, &c. I will go downe now and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me, &c. Of the cry coming from ſinne, I have already ſpoken, Gen. 4. 10. and as to Cains ſinne, and to this of Sodom crying is aſcribed, ſo to oppreſſions of Widowes and Orphans, Exod. 22.23. and to the deteining of labourers wages, Jam. 5. 1. The horrible ſinnes of Sodom yielding a loud cry, which came up to Heaven, yet the Lord deferreth to take vengeance upon them, ſaying, that he would firſt go down, &c. And in this he doth after the manner of men, to teach Judges and Rulers to inform themſelves certainly, before they proceed to puniſh malefactours, as Gregory excellently teacheth. For having queſtioned, why God, who knoweth all things, doth as it were doubt before proof made? he anſwereth that he might give us an example of gravity, that we preſume not to believe the evils of men, before we prove them. But when he had proved, and found them intangled with moſt foule ſinnes, he did, as it were, omit patience, and not ſtaying revenge, till the day of the laſt judgement, he prevented them with the fire of judgement. Behold, how he believed the evill, as it were with difficulty, when he heard of it, and yet he ſmote without delay, when he found it to be ſo, herein giving us an example ſlowly to believe greater crimes, when we heare them, but ſooner to puniſh them, when we finde them true. It is ſtrange that the Sodomites having been chaſtiſed by Warre and captivity but 15 yeares before, ſhould now be grown ſo wicked. For they had not only one foule ſinne againſt nature, but others alſo, Ezech. 16. The fruitfulneſſe of their Countrey made them wanton, in their wantonneſſe they did not only abuſe Women but men, and herein they were impatient of reproof, and lived in idleneſſe. Now when the Lord ſaith, I Will go down and ſee, whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, and if not, that I may know, the meaning is, as Abraham well underſtood, if they have, I will utterly deſtroy them, if theſe corruptions be generall, and if they be impudent and ſtiffe in ſinning ſo heinouſly, but if not, I know what I will do. In that the ſame Angels, that came to comfort Abraham, deſtroy Sodom, it is intimated that when the Lord ſhall come with his Angels at the laſt day, as he will deſtroy the wicked, then ſo he will come for the comfort of the righteous.

Gregor. Moral. in Iob lib. 16. Ut gravitatis nobis exemplum proponat, ne mala hominum ante præſumamus credere quàm probare, &c. Ecce malum quaſi cum difficultate credidit, cum audivit, & tamen ſine tarditate percuſſit, cum verum agnoſcendo reperit, ut nobis daret exemplum majora crimina & tarde credenda eſſe cum audiuntur, & citiùs punienda, cum vera eſſe agnoſcuntur.

Verſe 22. And the men turned their faces from thence, and went towards Sodom, but Abraham ſtood yet before the Lord. Moſes calleth them men ſtill for the humane bodies aſſumed by them, although Abraham knew them now to be heavenly creatures repreſenting the Lord. They turned their faces, is rendered by ſome, they had turned, but it may well be taken, as it is, for a valediction unto Abraham after thus much ſaid. But as when one man is ready to depart from another, he is often ſtayed ſtill a time, becauſe the other hath ſomewhat to ſay unto him, ſo here Abraham by ſtanding ſtill giveth them occaſion to ſtay. And then he draweth neare by interceding for Sodom: ſaying, Wilt thou alſo deſtroy the juſt with the wicked, &c? It pittieth him to think, that ſo great multitudes ſhould now utterly periſh together, and doubtleſſe he had Lot ſpecially in his minde. He had not long before fought for that people, and therefore he had ſome relation unto them, and although much wickedneſſe were there practiſed, he thought, that they could not generally ſo farre yet forget that deliverance, as all of them to corrupt their wayes. Wherefore he ſeeketh to move the Lord in moſt humble manner, not to ſpare the wicked, but to refreine for the righteous, that might happily be amongſt them, from a generall deſtruction of all. So he oppoſeth not the Lord in his purpoſe, but propoſeth what he thought would be moſt effectuall to move him to compaſſion. And he beginneth with 50, ſaying, What if there be 50 righteous, wilt thou not ſpare the place for 50, and this being granted, he proceedeth to 45, 40, 30, 20 and Vatablus.

Verſe 23, 24, 25

and 10. Why did he not ſpeak of 10 at the firſt, but of 50, and why of no more then 50 at the firſt, and of no fewer then ten at the laſt? To this I finde none that anſwereth ſo particularly as Tho. Anglicus, who ſaith, that partly for reverence to God, and partly for the greatneſſe of the requeſt he durſt not ask a pardon for the ſake of ten, but of 50, wherein, when the Lord had yielded, he waxed bold to deſcend to fewer and fewer. Moreover, the Lord ſecretly moved his minde to ask rather this way then any other, becauſe he would have the forme of this his praying to ſerve for ſpirituall myſteries. For by the ſix different numbers mentioned by him all the degrees of the righteous, that ever have been, are ſet forth, by 50 the moſt perfect, who give themſelves wholly to contemplation, as Mary; by 40 ſuch as labour in doing good to others, as Martha; by 45 ſuch as partly lead an active, partly a contemplative life; and by the other three numbers ſuch as keep with their beſt care the 10 Commandements; ſome for the love of God ſet forth by 30; ſome for the love of the reward, ſet forth by 20; and ſome for the feare of puniſhments ſet forth by ten. So that according to this Author Abraham deſcended no lower, then to ten, to ſignifie, that if there be not a care to keep all the ten Commandements, a man cannot be numbered amongſt the righteous, neither can there be an higher degree of perfection, then that which is ſet forth by 50. But I reſt rather in his firſt reaſon, the holy man durſt not begin with ſo few at the firſt, nor urge the Lord any further, when he had come down to ten: and the Lord doubtleſſe put it into his minde here to ceaſe, becauſe his will was not to ſpare them, if there were fewer found then ten, and he would not grieve Abraham by denying any requeſt, which he made unto him. Here is matter of comfort and confidence for us in praying, to conſider, how ready the Lord is to yield to all the petitions of his ſervants, even wherein they ſcarce dare ask. If it be wondered that Abraham interceded not for Lot in particular, when he had deſcended to ten: it is to be underſtood, that he doubted not, but there were ten, and ſo the City ſhould yet ſtand ſafe, and if not, ſeeing the Lord had yielded to ſpare the place for 10 righteous perſons, he doubted not, but righteous Lot ſhould be reſpected, and preſerved from the common deſtruction.

Th. Anglicus.

Note.

And the Lord went away after he had done talking with Abraham, &c. It is moſt probable, that two of the men appearing to Abraham were gone before this towards Sodom, and that his communication was with one alone, the chief of the three, even the Sonne of God, who alſo now went away, that is, up into Heaven, and ſo the other two only came to Sodom, as Chap. 19. 1.

Verſe 33.

CHAP XIX.

IN this Chapter two of the Angels ſpoken of before came to Sodom, the third being away: for although, verſe 1. they are called Angels, yet verſe 10 they are called men alſo, as when they came to Abraham. When it is ſaid then that two Angels came to Sodom, it is to be underſtood, in the ſhape of men. If it be demanded why three came not, as well as three to Abraham? According to the Rabbins it is anſwered, one being ſent to tell of Sarahs bringing forth of a ſonne, went up to Heaven againe, when he had done this, but the other two being ſent, one to ſave Lot, and the other to deſtroy Sodom went on to Sodom for theſe ends. But this is only conjecturall, as hath been already ſhewed. The reaſon of Calvin is more probable, Abraham being in greateſt grace with God, the Son of God vouchſafed with two Angels attended to come and talk familiarly with him, as with a deare friend, but now he returning to Heaven againe, ſendeth only his Angels to Sodom. And two only, ſaith Ferus, come to that wicked place, to ſhevv that the wicked are unvvorthy to knovv the Trinity, and that Chriſt in his tvvo natures ſhall come to judgement in the evening of the World. When they came thither

Verſe 1.

Queſt. Rabbini.

Calvin.

Lot

Lot ſat in the gate, waiting doubtleſs for an opportunity to exerciſe hoſpitality, he ſeeing the Angels like men, and taking them to be men, with all reverence inviteth them to his houſe, as he thought fitting for men of quality, ſuch as they ſeemed to be. But whereas at Abrahams intreaty they preſently aſſented, here they deny Lot, ſaying, they will lodge all night in the ſtreet, untill that he preſſeth upon them, and ſo being overcome by his importunity, as it were, they yeeld to go with him. The reaſon hereof vvas, as Calvin hath it, to try the hearty kindneſſe of Lot, becauſe there are many, which offer kindneſſe, when they would not have it accepted of, *Prov.*23.7. but vvhen Lot was denied, and yet vvas inſtant, his love is approved to be hearty and vvithout all diſſimulation. To refuſe Abrahams offer for the triall of him there vvas not the like reaſon, becauſe they came not to his tent in judgement, but in mercy, but to Sodom in judgement, and therefore, as a man vvill not accept any kindneſſe offered, where he hath juſt occaſion of high diſpleaſure, and meaneth to be revenged, ſo theſe Angels were averſe from accepting any kindneſſe offered in this place. It is then, as if out of high diſpleaſure they had ſaid, Nay ye men of Sodom are a very inhumane people, vve have been hitherto in the ſtreet, and no man hath invited us to a lodging; whereby vve gather, that ye can be well content, that vve ſhould lie abroad all night, wherefore we will indeed even do ſo, thus almoſt Muſculus. But their refuſall made the grace of Lot to ſhine the more, vvho vvould take no deniall, and ſo entertained them moſt joyfully.

Verſe 2.
Verſe 3.
Calvin.
Muſculus.

Verſe 4. But before they went to bed, all the people of the City compaſſed the houſe, both old and young from every quarter.

Chryſoſt.
Ambroſ.

Some underſtand this, as hyperbolically ſpoken, by al not underſtanding every one, but a very great number, but Chryſoſtome and Ambroſe underſtand it of all without exception. For hereby Gods proceedings againſt them ſeem to be juſt, in that the corruption was general, not only the great, but little ones which were capable of vice, being all infected, wherefore all both great and little are deſtroyed without ſparing of any one. And for ſuch as yet wanted reaſon, it was juſt with God to cut them off alſo together with the reſt, becauſe they were the offſpring of this impure aſſembly, by birth the children of death, and habitually ſuch, as their forefathers. If it be doubted, how they could all compaſſe about one houſe, it is to be conceived, that ſome were neare, and ſome farther off in the ſtreets, as they could come for the preſſe. A moſt malicious conſpiracie, ſaith Chryſoſtome, and vehement ſtudy to do evill, an unſpeakable greatneſſe of perverſitie, and ſtiffe attempting of evill, worthy truly of no pardon. For neither did they think upon Gods eye ſeeing all things, nor reverenced juſt Lot, nor ſpared ſtrangers, but vvithout bluſhing they openly uttered theſe vvords of moſt filthy luſt, Bring them out, that we may know them.

Verſe 5.

Verſe 6,7,8. Queſt
Chryſoſt. Hom. 43.
Ambroſ.

Honeſt Lot ſeeing them thus madly bent towards a moſt unnaturall ſin, goeth out unto them, and offereth them his two daughters. But whether was this offer of his excuſeable or no? Chryſoſtome, and Ambroſe, and divers others excuſe it, yea and praiſe Lot therefore: becauſe he preferred the ſafety of ſtrangers, whom he had entertained before his own fleſh; and becauſe ſeeing a neceſſity of a more foul ſin about to be committed, he ſought to turn them from it by a leſſer. But Auguſtine, although he ſeemeth ſometimes to ſpeak doubtfully of it, yet ſometime he ſaith rightly, that this offer came from a perplexed and troubled minde, in which caſe even the beſt may ſpeak and do things that are not juſtifiable. For it is to be thought, ſaith he, that when he ſaw ſo horrible an evil hanging over the heads of his gueſts, which he would repell, but could not, that his minde was ſo troubled, that he would do, what not the cloudy tempeſt of humane fear, but the tranquill ſerenity of Gods Law, if it be conſulted withall, will cry ought not to be done, but will bid rather, that we ſo take heed of ſinning our ſelves, as that we ſin not at all through the fear of other mens ſins. For indeed if a leſſer evil may be yielded to for the avoiding Auguſt. lib contra mendacium, c.9. Putandum quòd quum tam horrendum malum ſuis hoſpitibus impendere cerneret, quòd ipſa cuperet repellere, nec vaceret, ſic ejus animum potuiſſe turbari, ut of a greater, a broadway will thus be made, yea all bounds of a way being pluckt up, there will be an infinite ſpace for all ſins to enter by and to reign, as the ſame Father ſpeaketh. That of the Apoſtle Paul is a ſure ground, We muſt not do evill, that good may come of it: The leaſt ſin muſt not be yeelded to for the avoiding of the greateſt, or for the procuring of any good. And therefore this of Auguſtine is followed by Lyranus, Toſtatus, Ferus, Sotus, and Calvin and many more. Whereas ſome excuſe Lot, in that they ſay, he might happily think, that they would by this offer be appeaſed, not accepting of it, or that his daughters, whoſe conſent muſt firſt be had, refuſing to yeeld, as he knew they would, their fury might thus for a time be delayed, or that their husbands, to whom they were eſpouſed being wealthy men and great in that City would not ſuffer it, hereby I confeſſe the fault is ſomewhat extenuated, but not quite taken away. The beſt then we ſee have their imperfections and failings, and therefore let him that ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall, every one walking alwayes in humility and fear.

of

vellet facere, quod non humani timoris nebuloſa tempeſtas, ſed divini juris tranquilla ſerenitas, ſi conſulatur, a nobis faciendum non eſſe clamabit, &c. R. m 3.

Note.

The mad Sodomites are ſo far from being appeaſed by this offer, that they threaten Lot, and preſſe more upon him, and offer to break the door, but the Angels take Lot, in and ſhut the door, and ſmite them with blindeneſſe. Whileſt ſome are buſie in beating back Lot, and doing violence to him, who ſtood to defend the door, others ruſh upon the door to break that open, and to come in to the ſtrangers. The queſtion here is, with what blindneſſe the Sodomites were ſmitten? To this it is generally anſwered, that it was not with bodily blindenſſe, ſo that they could not ſee, for then they would rather have ſought each man for a guide to lead him home, then for the door of Lots houſe. The blindneſs, ſaith Auguſtine, wherwith they were ſmiten, is by the Greeks called ἀωπσία, an inability to ſee, that is, to ſee Lots door, when they could ſee other things well enough. Chryſoſtome ſaith, it was a blindneſs of minde joyned with weakneſſe of their limbes, ſo that they with great labour went up and down ſeeking the door. It was doubtleſſe ſuch a blindneſs, as wherewith the Aramites were afterwards ſmitten, that although they did ſee Eliſha, yet they knew him not to be the man whom they ſought, nor the way, nor City Dotham, to which they were led, to be that way, or that City. Their underſtandings were blinded with filthy luſt, and for a juſt reward thereof, they are blinded, not to be able to diſcerne the place, where they deſired to fulfill their luſts.

Verſe 9.
Verſe 10, 11

Queſt.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt. 43.
Chryſoſt.

2 Kings 6.
Note.

This being done, early in the morning Lot is admoniſhed to take with him all that belonged unto him out of the City, long before day, as is moſt probable, becauſe the City ſhould be deſtroyed. Then Lot went to his ſons in law, and told them hereof, but he ſeemed to them but as if he mocked. Theſe ſonnes in law of Lot I do not thinke with ſome, were onely contracted to his daughters, but marryed, and living in the houſe with him, wherefore the Angels having had communication with Lot alone in one room, and they being in another he now goeth out unto them to tell them hereof, but they ſet light by his admonition, as counting it ridiculous to fear any ſuch ſudden deſtruction to come upon the City. And after the ſame manner the wicked do in their hearts deride the threatnings of deſtruction at the day of judgement to come upon them for their ſins.

Verſe 12, 13
Verſe 14.

Note.

The morning coming on, the Angels urge Lot to depart without delay, and when he deferred, they lay hold upon him by the hand, and his Wife and Daughters, and ſet them without the City, and bid him to flee away, and not to look behinde him, or to tarry in all the Plaine, but to eſcape to the Mountaines. It is ſtrange, that Lot ſhould thus deferre to his own perill, Calvin thinketh, that he hoped that God would not utterly deſtroy all, but ſpare the innocent age, and that his delay ſprang from a ſtrife betwixt the Fleſh and the Spirit. Muſculus, that he ſtayed reaſoning with the Angels about this deſtruction. But Vatablus, that through feare of the judgement he ſtood aſtoniſhed, not being able to go this way or that for a time. And this

Verſe 15, 16
Verſe 17.

Calvin.

Muſculus.
Vatablus.

this ſeemeth to me the moſt probable, becauſe he certainly beleeved, and ſo would not willingly ſtand to argue, or think of the impunity of any. For upon a ſudden feare, a man is apt to be ſtricken ſo ſometimes, that he ſtandeth like a ſtone. But having recovered his ſpirits upon that extraordinary mercy ſhewed unto him in bringing him and his out of that place, he is bidden now to flee to the Mountain, and not to ſtand ſtill, or to look behinde him, for feare of being deſtroyed alſo. Ferus here compareth Lot with Abraham, and ſaith, that although he was a juſt man, yet he came ſhort of him, for he obeyed God, calling him immediately, and went to the place appointed, but Lot delayed and reluctated againſt going to the Mountains. What Queſt. might be the reaſon, that the Lord would not allow him to look behinde him, but threateneth him, if he ſhould ſo do? There may be divers reaſons of this aſſigned, as firſt, that by looking back he might not ſhew any the leaſt affection more to that vile place, wherewith for the fertility of it, he had

Calvin. been formerly ſo much delighted; thus Calvin. And in this he was made exemplary to us, that we by repentance being turned from ſinne ſhould take heed of being in the leaſt meaſure intangled with our old ſinnes againe, we muſt with Saint Paul forget that which is behinde, and look to that which is

2 Pet. 2 20. Phil. 3 8. before. Secondly, hereby was ſet forth, what haſty ſpeed he ought to make in fleeing away, not ſo much, as once looking behinde him. Thirdly, the Lord would not have him curiouſly to pry into his judgements, but for reverence not once dare to look into them in the time of their execution. Fourthly, that he might not in the leaſt meaſure be moved with commiſeration to a place made, ſo deteſtable with horrible ſinnes, flaming with Gods ſevereſt judgements, and that he might not ſhew any worldly affection to his goods periſhing there. The Mountaine, to which he was bidden to flee, Luther. was the Mountaine Abarim towards the Eaſt, not being ſo fruitfull, but more barren then the Plaine: for, as Luther ſaith, the Plaine was exceedingly fruitfull, but Lot muſt now be content with ſterility in ſafety, ſith plenty could not be injoyed without abundance of ſinne.

Verſe 18. Lot being appointed to flee to the Mountaine intreateth, that he might not Verſe 19. be ſent thither, becauſe ſo he ſhould be in danger of death otherwiſe, but Verſe 20. to a little City neare, which is granted unto him, and therefore he is bidden
Verſe 21. to haſten thither, the Lord averring that he could do nothing, till he came Verſe 22. there, and becauſe he pleaded for this by the name of a little City, it obtained Verſe 23. the name of Zoar, and ſo he entered it at the riſing of the Sun, and then the Verſe 24. Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah fire and Brimſtone, and deſtroyed Verſe 25. thoſe Cities, and all the Plaine.

Lot being appointed to flee to the Mountaine, which was farther off, feared leſt he ſhould be deſtroyed in the way, before he could get over the Plaine, and therefore he entreateth for a nearer place. But herein he is taxed by Auguſtine and Calvin, as not reſting in the will of God, who had expreſly aſſigned him a place, ſo that he ought not to have deſired any other. Wherefore in

Auguſt. quæſt. 44. in Gen. Calvin. this alſo he ſhewed a weaknes of faith, as is commonly incident to the beſt; yet the Lord accepteth of his requeſt for the incouragement of his faithfull

Note. ſervants in their prayers, although there be imperfections in them, for which they may feare, that he will not heare them. The argument whereby he pleaded for it, was, becauſe it was little, that is, according to ſome, this was a little requeſt, but according to others, it is better referred to this City, which was but little. But how doth the Lord ſay, that he can do nothing, till that

Calvin. Lot was come thither? Anſw. The Angel, who ſpake thus, had a charge given him to ſave Lot, and to deſtroy the City of Sodom, &c. and therefore it is well ſaid, that he could not do it, till Lot was gone out of the compaſſe of ground to be deſtroyed. Or if it be referred to him repreſenting the Lords

Note. perſon; we may note rightly, that the ſafety of the faithfull is moſt certaine; God cannot deſtroy them, becauſe it is againſt his will, and grace, that any of them ſhould periſh. For the name thus obteined by this City of

Zoar

Zoar little, before it vvas called Bela, according to Jerome, ſignifying devouring, becauſe it vvas once devoured by an Earth-quake, or, as the Hebrevvs ſay, Saliſſa, for the ſame reaſon. Laſtly, for that vvhich is ſaid here, The Lord rained from the Lord out of Heaven fire and Brimſtone.

Gen. 4. Hieron. in trad. Hebr.

This is, as Vatablus ſaith, an Hebraiſme, as if it had been ſaid the Lord rained from himſelfe Fire and Brimſtone. The Fathers generally vvill have in theſe words a myſtery, as if it had been ſaid, the Lord the Sonne rained from the Lord the Father, &c. And if any man denyeth this myſticall interpretation, implying the bleſſed Trinity, to be rightly made, he is Anathematized by the Syrmian Councill. For although it be a propriety of ſpeech amongſt the Hebrews, yet withall a myſtery may lye hid therein. Wherefore I ſubſcribe rather to the Fathers, then to Calvin, vvho denyeth any ſuch myſtery here. For the matter rained, it vvas fire and Brimſtone ſent dovvne immediately by Gods Almighty Povver from Heaven, and not ingendered by naturall cauſes, and this ſending dovvne thereof is Metaphorically called a raining dovvn, it coming ſuddenly, as a ſuperabounding ſhovvre of raine. Fire vvas ſent dovvn to burne, and Brimſtone to burne vvith a ſtink, and ſo that it might not be quenched, a puniſhment ſuitable to their ſin, they burnt in luſt, and this had a filthy ſtink before the Lord, therefore they are deſtroyed by burning with an horrible ſmell. And hereby Brimſtone being of a ſaltiſh nature, the place was deſtroyed, to remaine throughout all ages, as a fearfull ſpectacle of deſtruction, ſeeing Salt laid thick upon the ground killeth all things, and ſuffereth no green thing to grow, and accordingly all thoſe parts abound with Salt to this day.

Vatablus.

Council Syrmian. Can. 16.

But Lots Wife looked behinde her and was made a Pillar of Salt. The Lord may ſeem in puniſhing Lots Wife thus ſeverely for ſo ſmall a fault, to have been rigorous, but if it be well conſidered, it was very great indeed, and not a ſmall fault, which ſhe did herein. For 1, She ſhewed great infidelity, ſhe would not believe the deſtruction of Sodom, unleſſe ſhe ſaw it with her eyes, then which nothing can be more heinous to the Lord. 2 She had ſome corrupt affection in her, which made her thus to look back, for which cauſe Chriſt biddeth us to remember Lots Wife, ſo Calvin, it vexed her doubtleſſe, that ſo great ſubſtance, and ſuch goodly things, as they had gotten, ſhould now be conſumed all together, and ſo ſhe caſt in all likelihood an angry look back upon the City, having ſome indignation at this fact of the Lord. 3 She ſtayed as is probable, behinde her Husband looking, till the raine of fire and brimſtone began, and then it was too late to eſcape, ſo Muſculus. Laſtly, ſhe was over-curious to pry into Gods Judgements, from which he will have us to ſtand aloofe for reverence. Now for that into which ſhe was turned, viz. a Pillar of Salt, we muſt not imagine, that her ſoule and body vvere both thus turned, but only her body, her ſoule departing to the Lord, that gave it, and happily, although ſhe vvas temporally puniſhed, her ſoule might be ſaved, as ſome think. But vvhy vvas ſhe made a Pillar of Salt, rather then any thing elſe? The Rabbins of the Jevvs, as Lyranus reporteth, tell a fooliſh reaſon, viz. becauſe vvhen Lot the night before deſired of her Salt for the ſeaſoning of his gueſts meat, ſhe out of the hatred of hoſpitality denyed it. But to come to ſomething ſerious, ſome by a Pillar of Salt do not underſtand one properly ſo called, but becauſe it ſhould indure alvvayes, for ſo a Covenant made to indure alvvayes, is called a Covenant of Salt, Numb. 18.19. 2 Chron. 13. 5. the reaſon of vvhich appellation Lyranus ſaith is, becauſe in ſacrifices Salt vvas alvvayes appointed to be uſed by an unalterable decree, and therefore a Covenant made to endure alvvayes inviolable vvas in alluding hereunto called a Covenant of Salt. And for this cauſe the Ancients uſed Salt in ratifying of Covenants. Moreover Salt is of that nature, that it preſerveth things long from corruption, and ſo may fitly be an embleme of perpetuall duration. Thus the Targum Hieroſolymitanum, the Wife of Lot looking behinde her, vvas made a Pillar of Salt, to endure to the reſurrection

Verſe 26.

Calvin. Luke 17.32.

Muſculus.

Queſt. Rabbini.

Lyranus. Levit. 2.

Targum Hieroſolym.

of the dead. Certainly the words are not onely figuratively, but prp erly to be underſtood, as abundance of Salt was an effect of that dreadfull fire in all thoſe parts, ſo ſhe being deſtroyed with other things in particular ſtood in the place where ſhe ſinned a fixed Pillar of Salt, for an ever induring Monument of infidelity and diſobedience, that all might be vvarned hereby, thus then ſhe did partake vvith Sodom in the judgement thereupon, becauſe her love was towards it: for all that land is Salt to this day. Auguſtine and Rupertus ſay, that ſhe was turned into a Pillar of Salt, becauſe, as Salt is unprofitable to it ſelfe, yet other things are made ſavoury hereby, ſo others may be made wiſe by beholding or conſidering this, not to look back when they have put their hand to the Plow, that is, when by repentance they have eſcaped the filthineſſe of the World, not to be again intangled. The place, where this vvonderfull Metamorphoſis vvas made, vvas betvveen Sodom and Zoar, in the Plain there: For Brocardus ſaith, that travelling in thoſe parts, he took great pains to ſee it, but it vvas ſo difficult to come unto it, and by the vvay vvere ſuch vvilde beaſts and men-killers called Bedwini, as he vvas certified by ſuch as dwelt neer to thoſe parts, that vvithout perill of death he could not.

Auguſt. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 30.
Rupert. lib. 6. in Gen. c. 12.
Luke 9.
2 Pet. 2. 10.

Brocard. deſcriptione terræ ſanctæ parte, c. 7

Verſe 27. Verſe 28. Verſe 29.

These things being thus done, Abraham is ſaid early in the morning to have looked towards Sodom, and behold, a thicke ſmoak aſcended, as the ſmoak of a Furnace. But God remembered Abraham, and ſent Lot out of the midſt of that overthrow. Abraham in looking towards Sodom on a fire did not any thing forbidden him, as Lots wife, neither did he it out of infidelity, but becauſe he beleeved, and was ſolicitous for the ſafety of the place, and ſpecially for Lot. And it is not without a ſingular providence, that he is made an eye-witneſſe of this deſtruction, that he might tell it forth to others, and admoniſh them to take heed of ſin hereby, that none might afterwards ſay, that it was a thing naturall in that countrey, it having been alwayes ſo. Whereas God is ſaid, in delivering Lot, to have remembered Abraham, this is not to be underſtood, as if for the righteouſneſſe of Abraham Lot were preſerved: for Saint Peter aſcribeth it to Lots own righteouſneſſe, but it is thus ſpoken to ſhew, that God thought upon the petition of Abraham, not to deſtroy the righteous with the wicked, ſo Muſculus. But Calvin ſaith, that God had both reſpect to Lots juſtice and to that league of friendſhip, into which he had taken Abraham, ſaving Lot the rather for his ſake, that we might be comforted in reſpect of Gods hearing us for our ſelves, being aſſured, that he wil do ſo much more, then one praying for another being far remote. I reſt in the former, as a leader unto this, whereunto if this be added, it will be more full. Yet to ſpeak properly, God ſaveth no man for his own righteouſneſſe, but of mercy, onely it is thus ſpoken to incourage men to be righteous & godly, ſeeing unto ſuch, Gods mercy ſhall upon all occaſions be extended. Happily alſo this clauſe of Gods remembering Abraham is put in here, becauſe as he ſaw ſignes of the deſtruction of Sodom, ſo by ſome meanes he knew at that time of Lots deliverance.

2 Pet. 2. 7, 8.

Muſculus.
Calvin.

Verſe 30. And Lot went up from Zoar, and dwelt in the Mountain, and his two daughters with him, becauſe he feared to dwell in Zoar. Jerome ſaith, that forſomuch as Zoar before called Bela, according to the ſignification of the word (devouring) was in danger after of being devoured in an earthquake, to which it was much ſubject, he thought that the other four Cities, which ſeemed more ſafe, being deſtroyed, this was much leſſe likely to eſcape long, forſomuch as the people there vvere as wicked, wherefore he removed ſoon from thence again, to the Mountain, the place before appointed unto him. Thus unſtable and uncertain ſhall he alwayes be, that going from the Word of the Lord, chooſeth rather to follow the dictate of his own reaſon, although he may ſometime reſt ſecure upon a new promiſe, yet his own conſcience ſhall convince and condemne him, as having done fooliſhly, ſo that even when he needeth not, he ſhall be driven hereby to go from his own choice to that which before was ſo diſpleaſing unto him. Wherefore let us without projecting this or that, ſimply obey the Lord in that which we know to be his will in every thing, and refrain Hieron. tradit. Hebr.

Note.

frain to follow the ſuggeſtions of carnall reaſon. In the Mountain Lot with his two daughters dwelleth in a Cave.

Then the firſt born ſaid to to the younger, Come, let us make our father drinke Wine, and we will lie with him, that we may preſerve ſeed of our father, for he is old, and there is not a man in the earth to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth, &c. Verſe 31. Verſe 32.

Some, ſaith Vatablus, hold, that Lots daughters thought there were no more left alive in the world, but their father and they two, but that they could not thinke ſo, is plain, becauſe they ſaw people living ſtill in Zoar, and they knew, that the burning was not generall, but of that tract of ground about Sodom and Gomorrah and thoſe Cities neer adjoyning onely, and they knew alſo, that they had a great uncle Abraham, with his great family living not far off: wherefore this was not the ground of their conſultation to lye with their father, but becauſe they thought, that this ſolitary place muſt be alwayes the place of their abode, and they muſt have no communion with any other people. He alſo ſaith, that it is moſt probable, that they had ſervants with them: becauſe otherwiſe how ſhould proviſion for their ſuſtenance have been brought thither, but they thought ſcorne of joyning themſelves to ſuch baſe perſons. But herein I cannot ſubſcribe, for vvhence ſhould they have ſuch ſervants, when as it is expreſly ſaid, that Lot onely and his wife and two daughters were by the Angels taken by the hand and brought miraculouſly out of Sodom. Wherefore their ſervants were left behinde and periſhed with that impure people, and for their proviſion carrying, it is more probable, that they brought enough with them for a certain time themſelves to ſuſtein them there. For it cannot be thought to have been long after their coming to this place, that they conſulted thus to act ſo horrible a ſin, becauſe what proviſion ſoever they could bring, would in a ſhort time be ſpent, and ſo they muſt have been deſtitute without taking ſome other courſe for a new ſupply, as Vatablus himſelfe alſo ſaith. The Rabbines of the Jewes are bold, according to their manner to feigne, that although they brought no wine thither, God did miraculouſly ſupply them herewith. But far be it from us to thinke, that he would miniſter the matter of drunkenneſſe and inceſt unto them by miracle.

Vatablus.

Rabbini.

They brought it doubleſſe with them from Zoar, for from Sodom, by reaſon of their haſty coming away, they could not. Now although Vatablus be againſt that opinion, that Lots daughters ſuppoſed all men to have been deſtroyed, yet it is to be known, that all Expoſitours generally of old have held, that they thought ſo. Origen ſaith, that they had heard of the deſtruction of the World by fire, which ſhould afterwards be, and therefore ſuppoſing this to be the time, they out of a vvomaniſh credulity thought that not onely Sodom, but all cities and tovvnes vvere novv deſtroyed vvith their inhabitants, and therefore, hovvſoevr they knew inceſt to be abominable, yet they thought they ſhould offend more, if in avoiding they ſhould ſuffer mankinde utterly to periſh, then in conſenting to ſeek the preſervation and increaſe thereof again. Thus alſo Chryſoſtome, vvho by this reaſon pronounceth them to be vvithout fault in thus ſeeking to have iſſue by their father. So likevviſe Ambroſe, and Theodoret, and Irenæus, and Joſephus, lib. 1. Antiqu. &c. It vvas indeed a fooliſh opinion in them, becauſe they ſavv Zoar to ſtand ſtill, and it is likely, that from the Mountain they might ſee other places: but for their innocency, I can by no means aſſent to theſe Ancients, but rather hold vvith Auguſtine, that they ſinned againſt nature in ſeeking to have their father lye vvith them, ſuch a conjunction being not onely forbidden by Gods Lavv, but by the lavv of nature, vvherewith no man can diſpenſe. They ſhould have committed the care of poſterity to their father, and not have attempted any thing for this end, before they had acquainted him therevvith, by vvhom they ſhould have been ruled. But they knovving in their conſcience, that their father vvould have abhorred from ſuch a foul fact, if they had conſulted vvith him, go cunningly to vvork, and by deceiving him effect it. A prodigious thing,

Origen.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 44.
Ambroſ lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 6.
Theod. quæſt 60 in Gen.
Iren. lib. 4. c. 51.
Auguſt. contra Fauſt. lib 22. cap. 43.

Calvin.

ſaith Calvin, after ſo dreadfull a judgement upon whole Cities, for confuſed and foule copulations, that they ſhould yet immediately after dare to run into the like ſinne, wherefore although the meere deſire of poſterity for the preſervation of mankinde, and not brutiſh luſt carryed them on to lye thus with their Father, and hereby their fault is extenuated, yet they cannot poſſibly hereby be juſtified. It was not a ſingle but a double fault, which they committed. 1 In making Lot drunken. 2 In lying inceſtuouſly with him. For when the one ſaid to the other, Come, and let us make our Father drink Wine, her meaning was, to make him drunken with Wine, as the word alſo is rendered in the vulgar Latin tranſlation. But whileſt the Daughters ſinned in giving him Wine unto drunkenneſs, what is to be thought of him for drinking ſo liberally thereof? Some conjecture, that it was mingled with ſomething apt to make him drunken, although he took but a little, and ſo excuſe him, others that he was not deceived by any mixture, becauſe if ſo, where ſhould they have gotten it? for it is not likely, that they thought upon this, till they were come out of Zoar, and ſo had it not thence. But they ſay, that Lot drank more liberally the Wine offered him at this time by his Daughters, to recreate his ſorrowfull minde, after the loſſe of all his goods, and friends in Sodom, and his deare Wife, and whileſt he did thus was overtaken unawares, ſo Chryſoſtom and Theodoret, and Tho. Aquinas, who therefore excuſe Lot, as not ſinning herein.

Chryſoſt. hom. 44
Theod. in Gen. quæſt. 69.
Tom. Aquinas ſecunda ſecundæ, quæſt. 150.
Auguſt. lib. 22. contra Fauſtum cap. 43.

But Auguſtine contrariwiſe ſaith, that it did not become a juſt man to admit of ſuch a conſolation, and that he ſhould have refuſed to have taken cup after cup, being offered by his Daughters unto him: becauſe the eternall Law condemneth drunkenneſs, which admitteth not of the taking of meat and drink according to a naturall order, but for the preſervation of health, and therefore he ſaith, that he ſinned not only by inceſt, but before that by drunkenneſs. And Origen, although he excuſeth him for his inceſt, yet blameth him for his drunkenneſs, ſaying that he was no perfect juſt man, but a certaine kinde of middle man betwixt righteous and wicked, the beſt thing in him being his hoſpitality, for which and not for any other vertue he was preſerved from that burning. With Auguſtine agreeth Calvin and Muſculus, & generally all our new Writers, that Lot cannot rightly be excuſed either for his drunkenneſs or inceſt, not for the firſt, becauſe he ſhould have refuſed the exceſſive quantity of Wine offered him, nor for the ſecond, becauſe it followed upon the former, from his drunkenneſs it came, that he was deceived and committed inceſt, and ſuch as the Tree is, ſuch is the fruit, wherefore this ſpringing from the immoderate drinking of Wine, which was a vice in him, muſt needs be vicious alſo, yet for Origens debaſing of him, it is contrary to the teſtimony of Saint Peter, who ſpeaking of Lot ſaith, that God ſpared juſt Lot, and againe, that righteous man in hearing and ſeeing vexed his righteous ſoule, &c. wherefore he was a perfect good and juſt man, as fleſh and bloud permitteth, whileſt we carry it about with us, but ſubject to falling, as all are, when he was not upheld by grace, yet theſe his falls are ſomewhat extenuated, the firſt, becauſe he drank Wine the more liberally to cheare him, as his neceſſity then required, he being full of heavineſſe, and in a dark and uncomfortable place, and the ſecond, becauſe he did it ignorantly, being in a dead ſleep, the Devill happily making him to dream of lying with his Wife, when he got his Daughter with childe. For it is ſaid, that he knew not, when ſhe lay downe, or when ſhe roſe up. Calvin ſaith, that it was a judgement of God upon him for his intemperance in drinking Wine, that he lay like a dead body for a time, ſo that his Daughters then might do any thing with him, he not knowing thereof. Lyranus ſaith, that it is the opinion of the Hebrews, that Lot indeed was faſt aſleep, when his Daughter lay downe by him, and when ſhe roſe up, but that he was awake, when he did that foul act, but ſo oppreſſed with drunkenneſs in his braine, that he conſidered not with whom he lay, neither did he remember that he had now

2 Pet. 2. 7, 8.

Calvin.

Lyranus.

no

no Wife: for it ſeemeth impoſſible to them, that a man ſhould do ſuch an act, but waking, and therefore Lyranus followeth the ſame, and ſome others, but the ground hereof is very weak, ſeeing in the time of ſleep in dreames men do many things, not only to the ſending forth of ſeed, but alſo to riſing up and walking about. But why did the Lord ſuffer theſe things to be thus done to the diſgrace of ſo juſt a man? It is anſwered generally by all, that we might learne by this example, what a dangerous thing it is to be drunken, that we might the more carefully keep our ſelves from it all the dayes of our lives: for there is no ſin, how foule ſoever, but a man ſhall lye open unto it, if he admitteth of drunkenneſs. We ought to learne from hence, ſaith Ambroſe, to flee drunkenneſs, which maketh us that we cannot flee moſt groſſe ſinnes. For thoſe things, that being ſober we take heed of, we ignorantly commit being drunken. Drunkenneſſe inflameth luſt, overwhelmeth the minde, taketh the underſtanding, and wreſteth away the ſenſe. Wherefore drink thou ſo, as not to be taken, let the Patriarchs inſtruct thee, not only teaching, but erring, Noah and Lot, the example is iterated, that the Magiſtery of caution might be confirmed, wherefore the drunkards of theſe times do altogether pervert this example, by making it a ground of licenciouſneſſe, which is a caveat againſt drunkenneſſe to all, that would not from hence go on to moſt horrible offences. Some ſay that Lot was puniſhed with this double fall for his double infidelity, in refuſing to go to the Mountaine, 2 in going thither, when he had a promiſe of ſafety in Zoar. And there may be other reaſons rendered alſo, as that we may ſee how dangerous it is for a man to live with women alone to take heed hereof, and that we might ſee what the power and grace of God is, and how his providence worketh even in the vileſt actions to bring good out of them, ſeeing of this inceſt cometh Moab, and after Ruth, the Mother of a moſt Royall line, of which Chriſt afterwards came. Moreover, this was permitted, that every one conſidering, hovv ſubject he is to ſinne, might vvalk in humility and feare continually. Laſtly, he is ſuffered to fall by drunkenneſs, not only once, but the ſecond time, that vve might knovv, hovv dangerous it is to be once overcome by intemperance or any vice, for it vvill not ſo leave us, but having gotten the victory, faile us againe and againe.

Queſt.

Ambroſ. lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 6. Quæ ſobrii cavemus per ebrietatem ignorantes committemus. Ita ſtimmat libidinem, ſubruit mentem, animum capit, et ſenſum extorquet. Inſtruant nos Patriarchæ non ſolum docentes, ſed errantes, ideo iteratur exemplum ebrietatis, ut confirmaetur Magiſterium cautionis.

CHAP. XX.

AND Abraham went from thence towards the South-countrey, and dwelt between Cadeſh and Shur, and ſojourned in Gerar.

Verſe 1.

This Gerar was a City of the Philiſtines, being the outermoſt of the land of Canaan, ſix miles from the place, where Abraham dwelt before, and towards Egypt. It ſtood between two Wilderneſſes, the one called Shur next to the Red-Sea, and the other extended to the Wilderneſſe of the Saracens, called Cadeſh, according to Jerome. Gerar had the name from Gur, ſignifying a ſtranger, happily becauſe it was a place, to which ſtrangers often reſorted in their travell, for which cauſe the Hebrewes ſay, that Abraham removed thither that he might have oftener occaſions to exerciſe his hoſpitality, which he could not do in the Plain of Mamre, where he dwelt before. But the conjecture of others ſeemeth more probable, that he removed thither, becauſe in his former place he was much annoied now with the ſtinck coming from the Cities newly burnt, and it irked him daily to behold ſuch a ſpectacle of miſery and deſolation, but becauſe the reaſon is not revealed, why he removed, we can ſay nothing certainly, onely this is moſt probable, becauſe he removed ſoone after the burning of Sodom, even in the ſame yeere.

Hieron. de locis Hebr.

Hebræi.

Muſculus.

All the reſt of this Chapter is ſpent in telling how Abimelech the King of this Gerar took Sarah unto him, becauſe Abraham had ſaid of her, ſhe is my ſiſter, Verſ. 2, 3, 4, &c.

ſiſter, but God ſuffered him not to go in unto her, for he appeared to him in a dream, and charged him to reſtore her, &c. For the thing done here in generall, it is the ſame with that before commemorated, Chap. 12.11. and therefore the reader may have recourſe thither for the clearing of the queſtions, that generally ariſe here: onely I will add out of Ferus, that Sarah being now old and in Captivity, yet ſeemed amiable to theſe Heathen people, was a type of the true religion, the beauty whereof never fadeth, ſo that the Heathen, amongſt whom the Jewes lived ſometimes in miſery, yet were taken with the love of their manner of worſhipping God, and transferred it to their Idols. For other particular paſſages, as firſt, that God appeared to Abimelech in a dream threatening him, to vvhom he pleaded his innocency, whereas he did not ſo to Pharaoh upon the like occaſion, but preſently plagued him and all his houſe, the reaſon hereof might be, becauſe Pharaoh was a ſenſuall and cruell King, and one who had in all likelyhood offended often by giving himſelf over to inordinate luſts before, but Abimelech was juſt and righteous, as he here pleadeth, according to his name Abimelech my father the King, being not a Tyrant, but adminiſtring juſtice to all, and tendering the good of thoſe that lived under him, as a father the good of his children, as indeed all Kings ought to do. That he feared God and eſchewed evill, appeareth by the Lords anſvver to him.

Verſe 6. I know that thou didſt this in the integrity of thy heart, Wherefore even among the Heathen there were ſome, that applied their mindes to juſtice and righteouſneſſe out of the light of nature, as Saint Paul alſo teacheth, Rom. 2.15. Ferus ſaith, that ſome hold Abimelech not to have been juſt, but to have feigned it, ſome, that he vvas juſt onely in this matter, but he proveth him truly juſt, as Job & Naaman, who were alſo Gentiles. 1 Becauſe God ſpake unto him, and aſſented to his plea. 2 He readily obeyed God in reſtoring Sarah. Secondly, it is expreſly noted, that Abimelech had not come neer her, v. 4. and I ſuffered thee not to touch her, but of Pharaoh it is not ſaid ſo, the reaſon why this is here expreſſed, but there paſſed over in ſilence, although we doubt not but there ſhe was kept from being defiled alſo, was, becauſe ſhe was now going with Iſaac, that we might be aſſured, that he came of Abraham, and not of any other man. Thirdly, Abimelech is threatened with death even after his apology made for himſelf, being alſo approved by the Lord, which may ſeem ſtrange: but although he were a man of an innocent life, yet he was a man, and ſo ſubject to be tempted by beauty, and for this cauſe to prevent all temptations the Lord doth yet threaten him thus ſeverely. Fourthly, the Lord willeth him to reſtore Abraham his Wife, becauſe he was a Prophet, and he ſhould pray for him; and he ſhould live. How diverſly the word Prophet is taken, I have ſhewed upon 1 Cor. 14. Here Abraham is ſo called for the Revelations which he had from the Lord. The meaning is, that he was deare unto him, and ſuch an one as to whom he did uſe to reveale his ſecrets, as to his friend, and therefore if he did him any injury he might aſſuredly expect moſt ſevere puniſhments, whereas, if he did him right in reſpect of that wrong, which he had unwittingly offered unto him, through Abrahams interceding for him, the Lord would avert the death threatened from him, and he ſhould live, notwithſtanding that which he had hitherto ſaid in terrifying of him, which is not ſpoken, as though a man in miſery ſhall not be heard without the interceſſion of another, but to commend to all men in the time of miſery fleeing to the Prophets and Miniſters of God alſo that they may be healed. The Popiſh lay hold upon this to prove praying to Saints departed lawfull: but Abraham was not now dead, but living, and therefore howſoever the help of his prayers might be craved, it followeth not, that being dead they might be ſought alſo. For ſince his death the Prophet Eſay doth teach, that the prayers of holy men being dead, are no more to be ſought for, ſaith, Abraham knoweth us not, &c. If it ſhall ſeem, that Abrahams prayers were not neceſſary for Abimelech, if he reſtored Sarah to him againe immediately,

Muſculus.

James 5.16.

Eſay 63.16.

mediately, because he had not sinned, and that which he had done, was out of ignorance. I answer, hereby it appeareth, that sinne is not only of knowledge but of ignorance, and to sinne even of ignorance is dangerous and deadly. In saying that Abraham was a Prophet, and would pray for him, the goodnesse of Prophets and holy men is intimated, they are ready to requite good for evil, and not to stomack injuries offered unto them, as the wicked do, and to these Ferus addeth one more, he is a Prophet, and so knoweth that thou hast not touched her, which will make him the more ready to forgive thee this injury. Fifthly, Abimelech being thus warned, riseth early in the morning, and calleth his servants about him to tell them of the vision, then he calleth for Abraham, and expostulateth with him for his dissembling Sarah to be his Sister only, as the King conceived, and not his wife, acknowledging withall his owne great sinne, although he were ignorant of it. The good King delayeth not to do as God had warned him, but goeth about it betimes in the morning, and to the end that his servants might be the more moved to feare God, he first declareth the vision to them, who indeed were terrified hereby. And as touching Abraham, as he doth not excuse himself, so he chargeth him to have been the cause that he was towards so great a sinne: for thus he calleth Adultery, as it is indeed, Heb. 13.4. and therefore not so to be lenified, as it is amongst some: for hereby many miseries were brought upon David; Paris his adultery with Helena was the ruine of Troy, and the adultery of Sixtus Tarquinius King of the Romans with Lucretia was the overthrow of all regall power in that great Monarchy. The King also asketh Abraham, what he saw, that he so dissembled, as shewing to be willing to amend it. Sixtly, Abraham answereth, that he thought, that the feare of God was not in that place, and therefore he should be in danger of his life for her, if she were knowen to be his wife, and yet he justifieth, that she was his Sister, the Daughter of his Father, but not of his Mother, &c. About Abrahams saying, that Sarah was his sister, what the divers opinion are, see before, Chap. 11.29.

Note.

Verse 8,9,10.

Verse 11,12,13

Seventhly, Abimelech giveth to Abraham Oxen and Sheep and servants, and restoreth Sarah unto him, profferring him withall to dwell where he would in his Countrey. And to Sarah he said; Behold, I have given thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: behold, he is a covering of the eyes to all that are with thee, and with all others: thus she was reproved.

Verse 14,15,16

The ambiguity of the Hebrew words here used, hath given occasion to Expositours to differ much in Translating and giving the sense of them. For הוא first, is both of the Masculine & Neuter Gender, and so may, being referto Abraham, be translated, He, or to the gift of a thousand pieces of silver, It. Again, עינים eyes may be taken either for her eyes, or eyes in generall. Lastly, לכל־אשר־אתך, to all with thee, is either Feminine or Masculine, and so may be referred either to her maids, or to others also. If by הוא as is most probable, Abraham be understood, because he saith, I have given to thy brother a thousand pieces of silver, immediately before, the sense is, as Calvin hath it, he being thy husband, is a Covering or Veil unto thee, to keep thee from the beholding of any other man, to whom if thou wert not joned in marriage indeed, thou shouldest lie open to be taken by another, but now thou art under his shelter so defended that none may presume to take thee, wherefore thou didst ill to uncover thy self, as it were by dissembling him not to be thine husband, but saying that he was thy brother, and thus Moses noteth, that she was reproved by the Heathen King, which was a shame for her, the Mother of the Faithful, that she should do so, as to deserve to be schooled by such an one. Thus also Vatablus, who saith, that she was thus reproved, and taught to say no more that Abraham was her brother, whereby any other might afterwords be deceived. But what is meant by these words, and to all that are with thee, and with all others? To this Cajetan speaketh best of any, he is a covering to thine eyes, being known to be thine husband to keep all that are about thee

Calvin.

Vatablus.

Cajetan.

thee from deſiring to enjoy thy beauty, and all others, vvho are ſtrangers, that may happen at any time to ſee thee. And therefore Sarah is hereby implicitely admoniſhed to acknowledge him to be her husband, whereſoever ſhe ſhould come hereafter, and becauſe ſhe did not ſo at this time, ſhe was hereby reproved. Others referring נזף to the gift given, underſtand the words thus, this gift, which I have given to thy brother, ſhall be a defence to thee, to all about thee, that I have not abuſed thee and ſent thee away empty, but being compelled by the Lord have delivered thee again pure and undefiled to thy husband. Others thus, it ſhall be to buy ornaments to cover thy beauty, and thy maides with thee, that none may be any more intangled hereby. Other Expoſitions for brevities ſake I omit, as being further fetcht. But as by thoſe that follow the Hebrew theſe Expoſitions are made, ſo the Septuagint rendering it otherwiſe, are followed by ſome. Theſe ſhall be for a price of thy face, and to all that are with thee, and ſpeak all things truly; according to which Chryſoſtome going ſaith, For a recompence, becauſe unwittingly I took thee into mine houſe, which may redound to thy reproach, and was an injury to thy brother, I have given theſe thouſand pieces. Do thou therefore now ſpeak the truth, both touching my being deceived, and touching my not coming neere thee in all this time, that he being fully ſatisfied may pray for me: and much like to this ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Behold, this is for thee a vail of honour, becauſe I ſent and took thee, and ſaw thee and all that are with thee, and thou haſt been found true in all which thou haſt ſaid. But it is beſt to reſt in the firſt Expoſition. Now for the ſum of money given, a thouſand pieces of ſilver, it is is to be underſtood, that Ceſeph, a piece of ſilver, and a Shickle is all one, as appeareth by comparing with this place, *Gen.*23.16. 34,21. 2 *Sam.*18.11.12. and this is half an ounce, that is, two ſhillings ſix pence, ſo that a thouſand pieces were a hundred twenty five pound.

Hebræi.

Guili. Hamerus.

Chryſoſt. hom. 45. in Gen.

Chal. Paraphra.

Rupertus writing of the tvvice taking away of Sarah from Abraham ſaith, that hereby was prefigured the double captivity of the children of Iſrael, the one in Egypt, from whence they were brought out, the Egyptians being ſmitten with divers plagues, and being hereby conſtreined, forcing them to be gone in haſte, the other into Babylon, from whence they returned being by Cyrus much honoured and deſired to offer Sacrifice for him and his.

Rupert lib. 6. in Gen. c. 15.

Verſe 17.

So Abraham prayed, and God healed Abimelech, and his wife, and his maid ſervants, and they bare children: for the Lord had faſt cloſed up all the wombes of the houſe of Abimelech, &c.

We read not of any diſeaſe laid upon Abimelech before, and yet by theſe words it ſeemeth, that he was ſick, but now healed, and ſo Expoſitours generally thinke, and Joſephus expreſly ſaith, that he was ſmitten with ſo ſore a diſeaſe, that the Phyſicians deſpaired of his recovery. But Aben-Ezra contrariwiſe ſaith, that he had no diſeaſe laid upon him, but upon his women was laid that which is here mentioned, their wombes were cloſed up, and therefore being upon Abrahams prayer now opened again, he is ſaid to have been healed. And the cloſing up of the wombe, is generally expounded of thoſe that were great with childe, ſo that they could not now be delivered, although the full time were come, which put them to exceeding great torment. But it is plain, that ſome iudgement was laid upon Abimelech, and not upon his women onely, becauſe it is ſaid, The Lord healed him, and his wife, &c. Wherefore there was ſomething, whereof he alſo needed to be healed. And as touching the women then with childe, it is too reſtrained an expoſition to interpret this cloſing up of the wombe onely of them, becauſe it is ſaid, God had cloſed all the wombes. Calvin ſaith, that either this judgement was then perceived, by a way unknown to us, or becauſe it may be doubted, how in ſo ſhort a time, (viz. betwixt Sarahs impregnation, and puerperium) this could be perceived: touching all, he thinketh that this Hiſtory may be miſplaced, theſe things happening before the promiſe of a childe to Sarah. But if ſuch a miſplacing ſhould be yeelded to, there would follow much confuſion in the Hiſtory. I take it, that Joſeph. Antiq. lib 1. Aven-Ezra.

Calvin.

it it is much better to hold, that wombes were not onely shut up in respect of bringing forth, but also of copulation and conception, & Abimelech was stricken with an impotencie unto generation and coition, whereby he was kept from Sarah and all others, but now was healed hereof, and so all things here will excellently agree, and the reason will be plain, why Abimelech is said to have been healed, and of the shutting up of all wombes in his house. His maid-servants were such, as he took unto him, besides his wife, from amongst his servants to be his concubines.

CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1.
Verse 2.
Vers. 3,4,5,6,7

IN the beginning of this chapter is set forth the performance of Gods promise to Sarah, at his appointed time in giving her a son, who is called, as was before appointed, Isaac, at which she laugheth and greatly rejoyeth, according to the signification of the name, and Abraham circumciseth him at eight dayes old, and now saith Ferus, Abraham saw Christs day and rejoyced, for this promise of having a son by Sarah being performed, he was the more assured of the performance of that touching the Seed to come, in whom all the Nations of the earth should be blessed, and this made him most of all to laugh and rejoyce. And it is to be noted, that Sarah in her rejoycing saith, Who would have said that Sarah should have given children suck? For hence it may be gathered, that Sarah being thus old yet had milke and suckled her son, and by that which is said, verse 8. The childe grew, and was weaned, it appeareth, that she had milk in abundance to nourish him, till he was grovvn to that strength, that he might be taken from the dugge, and be fed with other meat, wherein Gods great power did yet more appear, in that he did not onely make the barren aged to bear, but also made her like unto a younger woman full of milke, for the nourishing of her childe. But why doth she speak of giving children suck, when as she had but one onely? The Jewes, saith Calvin, feign, that it was commonly reported, that Sarahs childe was supposititious and none of her own, wherefore other children were brought to suck of her for a triall: but to see that childe, which she had to suck of her was as great a proof, and therefore this is an idle fiction. It is a common phrase of speech to say of her who giveth suck to a childe, that she giveth children suck. From Sarahs giving suck to him whom she bare, it is commonly gathered, that it is a most naturall thing for all mothers, unlesse they be necessarily hindred, to give suck to their own children; so that if any to avoid the tediousnesse hereof, put them out to be nursed, they sin aginst nature. The breasts and milke given unto them for this purpose are abused contrary to the ordinance of God. Phavorinus the Philosopher calleth such mothers a certain imperfect & halfe kinde of mothers, casting their children away from them, so soon, as they had borne them. What a thing is this, saith he, with their blood to nourish them, which they saw not, and when they see them living, and men, and imploring the mothers office, to deny to nourish them with their milke?

Quest.
Calvin.
Note.

Mothers ought to give suck to their own.

Phavorinus, Imperfectum quoddam, & dimidiatum matris genus. Quale enim est in utero aluisse quod non videbant sanguine suo, at non alere postea suo lacte quod vident jam viventem, hominem, & effigiem matris implorantem.

Moreover, it availeth much, with whose milke a childe be nourished: for as the force and nature of the genitall seed availeth to forme the similtudes of the body and minde, so the milke doth avail to forme the wit and other vertues and properties. And that this is so, appeareth by other creatures, because a Lamb being nourished with Goats milk, and a Kid with Sheeps, the wooll of the one is made more harsh, and the haire of the other softer; and as trees, which bear fruit are nourished in more pleasant or soure grounds, so they bear fruits of a more pleasing or soure taste, and all the force lieth not in the seeds, of which they come. Lastly, they which put their children forth to be nourished, do cut off that band of the minde and love, whereby nature hath knit together parents and children, or at the least do diminish and wear it out. For when the childe is put out of the mothers sight, that vigour of motherly affection is by little and little extinguiſhed, and the affection of the infant is taken up with her onely that nouriſheth it, and the ſenſe and affection to the mother that bare it becometh none, as it happeneth to children expoſed; and ſo the affection to the parents afterwards is for moſt part onely civill and opionative, and not naturall. It is a property required in a Widow to be taken into the ſervice of the Church, if ſhe hath nouriſhed up her own children.

1 Tim.5.10.

Verſe 8. And the childe grew, and was weaned, and Abraham made a great feaſt the ſame day, that Iſaac was weaned.

It may ſeem ſtrange, that Moſes ſhould inſert this into his Hiſtory, as not being materiall to be known, but he doth it for the mocking of Iſhmael, and his expoſing hereupon that happened at this time, being full of Divine myſteries. Auguſtine and Ambroſe and ſome others of the Ancients have held, that no reaſon could be yeelded of telling this, but a myſticall reaſon, viz. to ſet forth the great joy, which is, when any grow from being children, which have need of milk, as the Apoſtle ſaith, to that ſtrength, that they can eat ſtrong meat. And this is further explained by Rupertus to be, vvhen leaving the rudiments of the ceremoniall law, they rely onely upon the ſacrifice of Chriſts body and bloud, which he offered up for us: for when men come to this, there is cauſe of great joy & feaſting indeed. Of following any ſuch myſticall ſenſe I can ſee no reaſon here, only by way of alluſion it maybe thus applied, the plain meaning being, as was ſaid before, to bring in Iſhmaels mocking, &c. and to ſhew, how much Abraham made account of this bleſſing of the Lord, in that he called in his neighbours and friends to rejoyce with him for his ſon Iſaac now grown ſtrong, and fit to eat meat like a man; happily he feaſted, when he was borne or circumciſed: But this is paſſed over in ſilence, becauſe no ſuch thing happened then, as for which his feaſting ſhould be recorded, but now onely, thus Calvin alſo and our new Writers generally. And yet it may be, and I think rather, that he made no feaſt for him till now, according to the cuſtome of the countrey wherein he lived, which was, when the childe began to eat meat, to invite many to come and eat together for joy, for circumciſion was painfull, therefore not for feaſting. Two reaſons are rendered by Ferus of this feaſt. 1 The cuſtome of the place. 2 Myſtically, to ſhew, that when we are weaned from fleſhly and ſinfull wayes, the Lord will feaſt our ſoules with heavenly joyes. At what age Iſaac vvas weaned I finde nothing certain, for ſome ſay, at two yeers old, ſome at three, and ſome at five, and ſome at twelve, it is moſt probable at two or three, becauſe although the infancy was longer then now it is, as men lived longer, yet it is not likely, that it was above twice ſo long, and two or three yeeres was a ſufficient time.

Aug. quæſt.50. in Gen.
Ambroſ.lib.1.de Abrah.cap.7.
1 Cor.3.
Rupert. lib.6. in Gen.c.19.
Calvin.
Lyranus.

Verſe 9. And Sarah ſaw the ſon of Hagar mocking. 10 Wherefore ſhe ſaid to Abraham, Caſt out this bond-woman and her ſon, &c.

The word tranſlated mocking, is the ſame with that from which Iſaac is derived, משחק, wherefore it is thought, that he mocked at his name, and at the great joy, that was for this childe, thus proudly contemning the grace of of God in him, and turning it into deriſion, as if he thought him but a younger brother, and himſelf the better man, becauſe elder. Wherefore it was not a laughing after the manner of Abraham and Sarah for joy, but a Dog-like ſubſannation and girning at him. And this it was that moved Sarah to ſuch indignation, that ſhe could no longer indure him in the houſe, becauſe to a godly minde nothing is ſo intolerable, as to ſee the grace of God derided, thus Vatablus; and Jerome not much differing ſaith, that he making account of the right of the firſt-born for his elderſhip derided him as a younger brother, and unworthy for vvhom ſuch joy ſhould be made, being herein a type of the Jewes lifted up, and for their priviledges, inſulting over the Church of the Gentiles. Chryſoſtome expoundeth this mocking, as if it were nothing but a playing familiarly with him, as being his equall, whereby Sarah gathered, that if Abraham and ſhe ſhould dye, he would ſtand for as good a part in their

Vatablus.
Hieron. in Gal.4.
Chryſoſt. hom. 46.in Gen.

Eſtate,

estate, as her sonne Isaac. But it is not likely, that Sarah would have been so greatly moved at their familiarity, neither would Saint Paul have called this a persecution, as he doth. The Hebrewes, whom Lyranus followeth, say, that he both challenged the rights of the first-borne, and made Idols in sport, and used Isaac obscœnely, unto which divers significations of the word he draweth some otherr passages of the holy Scripture. But I rest in the former exposition. Ishmael is a type herein of profane men, who mock at the grace in the godly, through presumption bearing themselves, as if they doubted not of atteining to the rights of the first-borne, holding the gracious carriage and conversation of the godly to be but foolish precisenesse. But herein they bewray themselves to be children of the flesh, & of the bond-vvoman, that shall be cast out, for by the speech of Sarah, it may be gathered, that his laughing vvas about the inheritance, becausse she said, he shall not inherit with my son. Origen expounding this mocking of playing, wherein no fault could iustly be found: for what harme is there or offence in childrens playing one with another? draweth it to another Allegory, understanding by Sarah, Vertue, by Isaac, the Spirit, and by Ishmael the Flesh: for so likewise when the flesh fawneth upon the spirit and inticeth to sinne, Vertue is offended, as at a persecution raised up, seeing fleshly lusts do fight against the soule, and therefore biddeth, that they should be cast out, and not suffered to have any room in our hearts. But this is onely a streine of his wit, and groundlesse, becausse he excuseth Ishmael from fault, whereas he is said to persecute, Gal. 4. 26.

Gal. 4.
Lyranus.

Note.
Gal. 4. 28.

Origen. in Gen. 21.

And the saying was very grievous in Abrahams sight, becausse of his sonne. And God said unto him, &c.

Verse 11. 12.

Abrahams naturall affection was such towards his sonne Ishmael, as he had also at other times declared, that he could not but be grieved to do, as Sarah desired, thinking this motion to come meerly from her, yet when he understood it to be the will of the Lord, against his own love and affection he obeyeth. Sarah doubtlesse was moved by a secret divine instinct, to require this, although she then knew not so much, but did it out of an indignation taken at Hagar and her sonne: but the Lord maketh it soone to appeare, that this thing came from him, in willing Abraham to do, as Sarah had said. But for somuch as Abraham was a Prophet, why was not the mystery of this first revealed unto him? To this Augustine answering a little otherwise at the first afterwards, saith that both he and Sarah were ignorant of this mystery, but she spake herein prophetically, not knowing that she did so, out of a womanish minde, being moved by the pride of her hand-maid. All this is by the Apostle turned into an Allegory, Gal. 4. by the sonne of Hagar those that seek justification by the works of the Law being set forth, and by the son of Sarah, those that seek it only by faith in Christ, for these shall finally inherit in Heaven, and those shall be cast out.

Quest.
Aug. quæst. 51. in Gen.

And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took Bread and a bottle of water, and gave it to Hagar, (putting it upon her shoulder) and the childe, and sent her away, &c.

Verse 14.

According to this reading it may seeme, that Ishmael, as well as the bread and bottle, was put upon Hagars shoulder, whereupon some have troubled themselves to resolve, how Ishmael being now 18 or 19 yeares old could be set upon Hagars shoulder. But both Jerom and Augustine have well cleared this, saying, that these words, the Childe have reference to the verb (gave) and not to this, putting it upon her shoulder. The vulgar Latine, to make it more plaine readeth the words thus, Tollens panem & utrem aquæ imposuit scapulæ ejus, tradiditque puerum, & dimisit eam. But it may justly be inquired, why Abraham being so wealthy would send Hagar and his sonne Ishmael away so meanly provided, this not being desired by Sarah, or appointed by the Lord, yea contrariwise, when a law was made afterwards of letting a servant go free, it is appointed, that he should not be sent avvay empty, but he must have something out of the flocks given unto him, of the floore and of the Winepresse? Some have thought, that they vvere not sent August. Hieronym.

Quest.
Deut. 15. 13.
Cajetan.

avvay vvith ſo little, as the vvords do ſound, but that by bread and vvater all neceſſaries for the ſuſtentation of life are to be underſtood, meat, drink, apparell, ſervants to attend them, and beaſts to carry them. But this is a fond conceit, and contrary to all circumſtances of the Text, a bottle of vvater put upon her ſhoulder, and the failing of the vvater in a ſhort time, &c. Wherefore it is certaine, that he gave her novv no more, then is expreſly mentioned. For anſvver then, it is to be held, that Abraham beleeved in God, vvho had promiſed him to make Iſhmael a great Nation, and in this confidence, that God vvould provide for him, he regardeth not to ſend them avvay better provided vvith abundance of Victualls, or Gold, or Silver, or Servants, but vvith a fevv loves of bread, and a bottle of vvater. Thus Theodoret. Moreover, it is to be underſtood, that they were not ſent farre off, but into the Wilderneſſe of Paran, and Beerſheba, where Iſhmael dwelt alwayes after, and by his Father ſomething might after this be given unto him, and that they might not wander farre off, but that he might ſtill have them neer unto him, Calvin thinketh, that he ſent them out thus ſlenderly provided. So likewiſe Toſtatus, who ſaith, that when Abraham afterwards gave gifts to the ſonnes of his Concubines, this of Hagar, and thoſe of Keturah were meant. But what if we ſhall ſay, that God would have them thus expoſed, having only ſom proviſion for the preſent, for a figure, to ſhevv, hovv Reprobates ſhall be rejected, no part or portion of the Heavenly inheritance being beſtovved upon them, but all upon elect Iſaac. They being caſt out are ſuffered to come to extreame vvant, before they are ſupplyed, that they might be puniſhed for their ſinnes. 2 That they might be moved to call upon God, and the more ſenſibly affected vvith his benefits. 3 To ſhevv the miſeries of thoſe that by their ill demeanour are caſt out of the Church, or go therefrom through errour, they are preſently in danger of periſhing, ſo Ferus.

Tl eod. quæſt 71 in Gen.
Adeò d vinis de Iſhmaele promiſſis credidit, ut non datis eis ſervis, aut ancillis, auro vel argento, ſed paucis panibus & utre aquæ domo amandaverit, &c.
Calvin.
Toſtatus.
Gen. 25.

Verſe 15. Hagar being thus diſmiſſed, wandered in the Wilderneſſe of Beerſheba, and the water was ſpent in the bottle, and ſhe caſt the Child under one of the ſhrubs, &c. That vvhich is here ſaid in calling Iſhmael the childe, and of her caſting him under a ſhrub may ſeem not ſo vvell to agree vvith his age. Wherefore it is not to be underſtood, as if ſhe carryed him in her armes, and thence caſt him dovvn, but in her minde and eye, and ſollicitous care, from vvhence ſhe caſt him, as it were, leaving him to dye under a ſhrub, when ſhe went out of the ſight of him, thus alſo Auguſtine and Jerome. And as for his being called a childe, Jerome ſaith, it is a property of the Hebrew tongue to call all Sonnes and Daughters ſo in reſpect of their Parents, and in a barbarous language, even now all ſonnes are called Infants at what age ſoever. Iſhmael, ſaith Vatablus, was ſick with thirſt, of an Ague, whom therefore Hagar cheriſhed in her boſom, till ſhe thought his life was now ready to depart from him, and then ſhe laid him down and went from the ſight of him. See here, how God bringeth down the proud and ſcornfull, that all may take heed of arrogancy and liftingup themſelves, conſidering, what miſery attendeth thereupon.

Auguſt. quæſt. 54. in Gen.
Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.
Vatablus.

Note.
Calvin.

Verſe 16. Hagar being gone from her childe ſitteth down and weepeth.
Verſe 17. And the Lord heard the voice of the childe, & the Angel of God called to Hagar from Heaven, &c. What is this, that Hagar weepeth, and the Lord heareth, not her voice, but the voice of the childe? To this Calvin and Muſculus anſwere, that he was heard, becauſe he was Abrahams childe, God remembring in this extremity his promiſe to Abraham of bleſſing him: becauſe otherwiſe there was no reaſon, why one ſhould be heard rather then another, neither of them, as farre as we can conjecture, being moved with penitency, for which the Lord ſhould have compaſſion upon them. It is moſt probable, that as ſhe wept ſilently, ſo Iſhmael cryed aloud through anguiſh unto the Lord, and thus he, who promiſeth to heare them that call upon him in trouble, heard him in his miſery, and calleth to her being ſollicitous and penſive for him, that ſhe might ſupply him with that, the want whereof bred that his great ſickneſſe.

Calvin.
Muſculus.

See how full of pitty the Lord is, even to those that are justly plagued for their faults, if in their misery they cry to him, so also he pittied Hagar before being desolate in fleeing from Sarah her Mistresse for her just correcting of her. Note.

And God opened her eyes, and she saw a fountaine of water. Some think, that this water sprang then first out of the ground miraculously, but this is rejected, both by Luther and Calvin, because her eyes are said only to have been opened to see it, so that it was before, but she being full of sorrow, her eyes were held that she could not see it. But there might happily be a pit of water hidden so with bushes, that she could not see it, although she looked diligently for it, till the Lord shewed it unto her. Ishmael being herewith refreshed liveth and groweth up in the Wildernesse of Paran, and became an Archer, and by his Mother a Wife is taken for him out of Egypt. The wildernesse of Beersheba, saith one, was 12 miles from Gerar, but the wildernesse of Paran was from thence 80 miles, being in Arabia petrea, taking the name from Paran a City of Arabia derived from fertility. Beersheba is called so by anticipation, because it had this name upon the Covenant made between Abraham and Abimelech hereafter mentioned, Beer being a Well, which Abraham digged, and Sheba an oath, because they sware there either to other. Going from hence to the wildernesse of Paran, Ishmael falleth to a course of life, shooting at wilde beasts, and pillaging, wherein his posterity the Ishmaelites have followed him ever since living thereupon. Verse 19. Luther. Calvin. Verse 20, 21 H. Bunting.

I will not here omit the Allegory of Rupertus, who saith, that Hagar was a figure of the Jewish Synagogue cast out, for deriding the true Isaac Christ Jesus, from their Father Abrahams inheritance carrying upon the shoulder only the literall sense of the Law, wherewith she is over-burthened and made crooked: for this, as Peter saith, is such a burthen, as neither we nor our Fathers could beare. And thus she and Ishmael both vvander, till they are ready to dye for thirst, so this Synagogue vvith her children is in the vvay of destruction till there seemeth to be no hope of life, and then the veil being taken avvay from her eyes, she seeth Christ to be a fountaine of the vvater of life, and so bringeth him to her children by preaching and teaching him to be the true Messiah and Saviour. Rupert. lib. 6. in Gen. c. 22. Acts 15.

At that time Abimelech and Phicol the chiefe Captaine of his Army spake to Abraham, saying, The Lord is with thee in all that thou doest. Sweare now therefore unto me by God, &c. Abraham dvvelling in the land of Abimelech, and beginning novv to settle there by his leave, for v. 34. it is said, that he dvvelt, in the Philistines Countrey many dayes, the King thinketh it not amisse for the great worthinesse of the man in respect of his wisdom and great power & favour that he was in with the Lord, to make a league with him and his posterity for himself and his, supposing happily, that he might in time grow to that greatnes, that he or his might attempt to take the Kingdome away from him. And for this cause he cometh now and requireth him to swear by the Lord unto him, it being hereby intimated, that he was not an idolater, but one that had some knowledge of the true God. Now this is related by Moses, because it tendeth to shew hovv faithfull Abraham was still prosecuted with Gods blessing, so that hereby his amity came to be desirable even to Kings. Abimelech in requiring Abraham to swear, useth these words, If thou shalt lie unto me. for so the words translated, if thou shalt deal falsly with me, are in the Hebrew, the meaning being, if thou shalt not performe according to the oath, God be judge between us, and revenge the perjury, an eclipticke kinde of speech, saith Vatablus, to expresse thus much. Verse 22. Verse 23. Vatablus.

But Abraham reproved Abimelech, for a well, which Abimelechs servants took from him, touching which he excuseth himself, as ignorant thereof. Then Abraham took Oxen and Sheepe, and gave them to Abimelech, and they made a league. Verse 25. Verse 26. Verse 27.

Abraham being required to confirme a league with Abimelech by oath, taketh taketh this opportunity, before he doth ſo, to reprove Abimelech for a wrong done to him by his ſervants, that all occaſion or offence being taken away, their friendſhip might ſtand the more firme. But how may Abraham be juſtified for blaming the King, who was without fault herein? Anſwer, Abraham knew not, till now, that it was done without his privity, and happily it was a thing but newly done, ſo as that he had no opportunity to tell the King of it till now: for it is not probable, but he having found the King ſo juſt and friendly unto him hitherto vvould have beene ſo bold as to tell the King therof, if there had been any opportunity before. For the Oxen and Sheepe here ſaid to begiven to Abimelech by Abraham, it was done according to the rites of that Countrey, ſaith Muſculus. Calvin ſaith, that Abraham gave him theſe, as a Tribute in acknowledgement of his Lordſhip over that Land. If it be demanded, whether Abraham did well in yeelding ſubjection thus in that land, vvhich the Lord had promiſed to him and to his ſeed? It is anſwered, that the time of injoying it was not to come till many yeares after, as the Lord had revealed to him, Gen. 15. and therefore in the mean ſeaſon he was content himſelf to live, as a ſojourner there, the Dominion of the Countrey being in others.

Queſt.

Muſculus. Calvin.

Queſt.

Verſe 28. And Abraham ſet ſeven Lambes of the flock by themſelves.

Here is another nevv ceremonie, not to confirme the league, vvhich vvas done before, but to confirme the well in queſtion to Abraham and his for ever. The King therefore, vvho vvas Lord of that land, taketh theſe Lambes, as a price of that plat of ground, vvhere the vvell vvas digged, that none of Abimelechs ſervants might challenge Abraham afterwards, ſaying, What had he to do to dig a well here? And ſo in memorie of the pact about this, the well vvas called Beerſheba, the well of ſeven, or vvell of ſwearing, becauſe they both ſware there. And haply, hence an oath came to be called in Hebrevv, firſt נשבע from שבע ſeven; But ſince the Hebrewes have turned it otherwiſe, ſaying, that an oath is thus called, becauſe the ſwearer deſireth to be deprived of ſeven moſt neceſſary things, if he ſweareth falſly; Bread, Water, Fire, Faith, an Houſe, a Woman, and a Grave. From this Beerſhebah, the city neere being the uttermoſt of Canaan South-ward took the name, whence it is ſaid in ſpeaking of the bounds from Dan to Beerſhebah.

Verſe 31.

Pane, aquâ, igne, pacto, tecto, muliere, ſepulchro.

Verſe 33. And Abraham planted a grove in Beerſhebah, and called upon the Name of the Lord.

The vvord אשל a grove is by ſome tranſlated a tree, or trees, by ſome a Paradiſe, by the Septuagint a field. But hereby is ſet forth, how that purpoſing now to dwell in this place he planted trees about his habitation, that it might be the more commodious for him, and in the place thus made ſhadowie and delightfull with trees, he uſed to vvalke to meditate and pray, uſing it as a Temple to ſerve the Lord in vvith ſacrificing and doing ſuch rites, as perteined to his vvorſhip. In the Targum Hieroſolymitanum it is ſaid, that having entertained ſtrangers he brought them out into this place, ſhevving them the trees, vvhich he had planted full of moſt excellent fruit, telling them, that the God of heaven ſent all that they had eaten and drunke, and requiring of them therefore nothing elſe, but that they would acknowledge and ſerve him, and amend their lives, ſo diſmiſſing them.

Targum Hieroſolymitanum.

Calvin.

For that, which is here ſaid of his calling upon the Name of the Lord, the meaning is, that here again as in other places before, he made a profeſſion of ſerving God, contrary to the manner of the people of thoſe parts, vvho vvorſhipped Idols. And this we may obſerve alwayes to have been done by his upon any nevv favour received at the hands of the Lord, vvhen he came firſt to any place to abide there, expreſſing thus his gratitude, and conſecrating the place for his habitation: for vvithout thus doing a man cannot expect Gods bleſſing, or ſhew himſelfe vvorthy to be his ſervant. He did never certainly intermit calling upon the Lord, and praiſing him, but novv ſpecially he is noted to have done ſo in a more ſolemne and publike manner for the quiet here

ſo

ſo graciouſly granted at length unto him, it being by his providence, that the King of that Countrey was moved to come unto him, and to make a league vvith him, and therefore he imputeth it not to his humanity, but to the eternall God in vvhom he truſted, and whom he had alvvayes found propitious unto him, and therefore he praiſeth him therefore, and profeſſeth to rely ſtill upon him, and not upon man, vvho is mortall and mutable. Queſt. But it may trouble the reader happily to conſider, that Abraham is the firſt author of vvorſhipping God in a grove, and yet this is ſo much condemned afterwards in his poſterity, *Hoſ.*4. and ſo ſtrictly forbidden, *Deut.*12,&c. To this I do not finde any thing ſaid amongſt my Expoſitours, but it may ſeem by that vvhich is ſpoken, Deut. 12. that the Gentiles had learned to ſerve their idols in ſuch places, vvhereby they vvere polluted, and therefore the Lord vvould reſtrain his pepole from henceforth from doing the like, and becauſe one place onely vvas afterwards appointed for publike vvorſhip, Ferus ſaith, that by this grove vvas figured out the planting of Abrahams faith amongſt the Gentiles, and the calling upon the Name of the Lord amongſt them, vvho for multitude vvere as a grove full of trees. Pliny ſaith, it vvas an ancient rite in groves and ſolitary places in ſilence to worſhip the Gods, and therefore divers trees were dedicated to them, Jovi Æſculus, Apollini Laurus, Minervæ Olea, Veneri Myrtus, Herculi Populus, and other kindes of Gods and Goddeſſes, Sylvans and Faunes, vve beleeve, ſaith he, do no leſſe impart their Deities to vvoods and groves, then to Heaven it ſelfe. Wherefore ſuch abominations having been here commited, it is no marvell, although they vvere ſo ſtrictly afterwards interdicted, and a Tabernacle or Temple vvere rather appointed. *Plin. lib.*12.*c.*1.

Philo yeeldeth divers reaſons of forbidding to worſhip in groves, but ſaith nothing of Abrahams practiſe here, as 1 Becauſe outward pleaſure doth not agree with the worſhip of God, but rather ſeverity. 2 Becauſe dung is brought to ſuch places to make the trees to fructifie. 3 Becauſe fruit-bearing trees are apt to draw the minde from the worſhip of God. 4 Becauſe malefactours ſeek to ſuch places, in the thickneſſe thereof to be hidden in their treachery, and to wait opportunities to do miſchief. But none of theſe reaſons ſerve to condemn it more now then in Abrahams time. *Philo, lib.*1. de Monarch.

Touching Abrahams dwelling in the Philiſtines Countrey many dayes, it is uncertain how many; Lyranus ſaith twenty five yeeres; the Chronologie of the Hebrewes twenty ſixe. But certainly he dwelt there much longer: for he was ſtill in this place, when he was called out to ſacrifice his ſon Iſaac, who was, as the Hebrews ſay, then thirty ſeven yeeres old, and after this he returned thither again, but onely he is finally indeed ſaid to have been in Hebron, when Sarah died, which was about the thirty ſeventh yeere, as appeareth by her age a hundred twenty ſeven yeeres, ſhe being ninety when Iſaac was borne. To conclude this Chapter, Rupertus draweth Abrahams planting of a grove to an excellent Allegory, ſaying, that hereby was figured out a thick grove, that ſhould be of the Gentiles, when the faith ſhould be tranſlated from the Jewes to them, making a Temple or ample Church of God: For thus the Prophet Eſay ſpeaking of them as dwelling in a Wilderneſſe ſaith, I will make to grow in the Wilderneſſe, the Cedar, and the Thorne, the Myrtle, and the Olive, the Firre, the Elme, and the Boxe together. Abraham therefore now dwelleth in the Philiſtines Countrey ſignifying falling, and ſuch were we in times paſt, but now fixed parts of the Houſe of God, ſerving him in the faith of Abraham.

Verſe 34.

Chap.22.

Chap.23.

*Rupert. lib.*6. *in Gen.c.*17.

Eſay 41.19.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſe 1.

AND it came to paſſe after theſe things, that God tempted Abraham, ſaying, Abraham, and he ſaid, Behold here am I. After theſe things in the Hebrew is, after theſe words, according to the Hebrew phraſe, words being put for things. How long after the birth of Iſaac is not ſet down. The Hebrews in their great Chronicle called Seder Olam Rabba, as was noted before, ſay, that Iſaac was now 37 yeares old: but that was the yeare of Sarahs death in Hebron, chap. 23. and therefore it is not probable, that ſo many yeares had now paſſed. Aben-Ezra ſaith, that it was in the 12 yeare, but Iſaac could not then have been able to do that, which is here related, viz. to carry the Wood for the ſacrifice up the hill. Wherefore Joſephus ſpeaketh more probably, who ſaith, that Iſaac was now 25. God tempted Abraham. How doth this agree with Jam. 1. 14. God tempteth no man? Anſ. The meaning of James there is only, that he tempteth no man to evill, as the Devill tempteth, or as a mans own luſt tempteth him to his deſtruction. Thus Saint Ambroſe ſaith, the Devill tempteth, that he may bring to ruine, but God tempteth, that he may bring to a Crown. And God tempteth thoſe, that are proved, and ſo he tempted Abraham after he had proved him, leſt if he had tempted him before proving, he ſhould have preſſed him. He proved him, when he bade him go out of his own Countrey, and when he promiſed him a ſonne by Sarah in their old age, &c. Now he being well proved is tempted by harder commands: for a man is proved by true things, but tempted by things compoſed and ſeeming, as here the ſacrificing of his ſonne is commanded him, which the Lord meant ſhould not be done, to try his affection, and whether he would prefer Gods precept before his ſonne, and whether by the contemplation of paternall piety he would decline in the force of his devotion. Thus Ambroſe making a difference between proving and tempting, but yet in all that he ſaith, he leaveth one queſtion unreſolved, viz. What need there was that the Lord ſhould thus tempt Abraham to know his piety towards God, when as this was well knowne unto him before? And therefore Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh more fully to cleare this alſo, making proving and tempting all one, as indeed they are. It is true, that Abraham had approved himſelfe before to be a perfect obedient ſervant of the Lord, but to make his obedience the more illuſtrious to all poſterities, and his faith to ſhine the more, he propoundeth this difficult task unto him ſo much againſt naturall affection, and therefore ſuch as then which nothing more hard could have been given in charge to any mortall man. According to the Scripture phraſe, ſaith Auguſtine, God is ſaid to tempt, when he proveth, thus it is ſaid, God tempteth you, that he may know, whether ye love him, as if he had ſaid, that he might make you know, becauſe the ſtrength of our love towards God lyeth hid from us, untill that by a tryall taken of us by God, it be made known unto us. And in another plaee he ſaith, Abraham was tempted, that his obedience might be tryed to come to light, not to God, but to all poſterities. And in another place, he ſaith, God were ignorant of things, if not knowing the heart of man he ſhould ſeek to finde it out by trying of him. But no mans heart is ſo well known to himſelfe, as to God, and by trying him, he maketh him to know that, which before he knew not. As the Phyſician knoweth the ſick better then he knoweth himſelfe, and therefore he expecteth to heare of him, vvhat his ſtate is, ſo God knovveth every man as a Maſter his Scholler. God tempteth to teach the Devill to deceive, and therefore if God ſhould not tempt, the Maſter ſhould not teach. And Rupertus moſt excellently ſaith, God the tryer of the hearts would not have the treaſury of faith, and the feare of the Lord to lye hid, and therefore he thus tempteth him being greatly proved before, not that he might know, from whom no thought is hidden, but that we who were to be his children, might not be ignorant, what manner of Father Seder Olam.

Aben Ezra.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.

Queſt.

Ambroſ lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 8. Diabolus tentat ut ſubruat, Deus tentat ut coronet.

Auguſt. quæſt. 57. in Gen. Deut. 13. 3. Quoniam vires dilectionis ſuæ homini emlatent, niſi divino experimento eidem innotſcant, lib. 16. de civit. c. 32. Tentatur Abraham, ut pia ejus obedientia probaretur ſæculis in notitiam proferenda non Deo. Auguſt. Serm. de Temp. 72. Deus tentat ut doceat, dæmon ut decipiat. Si Deus ceſſat tentare, magiſter ceſſat docere. Rupert. lib. 6. in Gen. c. 28.

ther he was, who is propounded to our imitation. Hereby then it appeareth fully, how God is ſaid to tempt Abraham, and yet tempteth no man, that is, not to his deſtruction by intangling him with ſinne, but to his ſalvation by augmenting his grace. And yet he tempteth ſometimes ſo, as that the tempted fall into ſinne, as Hezechiah, when the Aſſyrian Ambaſſadours came unto him, but this is only by leaving them, and withdrawing his grace for a time, for their greater humiliation, as it is expreſly ſaid of that King: The Lord left him to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart. 2 Chron. 33. 31

But how did the Lord tempt Abraham? he ſaid, Take now thy ſon, thine only ſonne, whom thou loveſt, and get thee into the Land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the Mountaines which I will ſhew thee. Iſhmael by Gods direction was before this caſt out, and gone with his Mother Hagar, not being counted any more to Abraham, but to her, ſo that Iſaac only now remained, and him Abraham is commanded here to offer up in ſacrifice. And of him the Lord ſpeaketh by a gradation, thy ſonne, thine only ſonne, whom thou loveſt, to make the fact the more famous, when as there being ſo many things to move him againſt it, yet at Gods command he did it. For this conſideration, that he was his ſon, was of great force to move him, but much more, that he was not one of many, but his only ſonne, yea his ſonne Iſaac, in whom he expected ſo much comfort, as being long promiſed, before he had him, and at length miraculouſly in his old age beſtowed upon him, and the only hope of that innumerable poſterity promiſed, and the mean of bleſſing to all Nations. For what might he have now thought with himſelfe, but that now at once all his hopes, wherewith he had been fed ſo long a time ſhould be fruſtrated? And therefore how could he but call in queſtion, whether this charge were from God or no, and if it were, how could he beleeve thoſe gracious promiſes of ſo great a bleſſing in him? But he by faith ſhutteth up his eyes againſt all carnall reaſoning, & believeth, that God, who firſt raiſed him out of Sarahs dead womb, could raiſe him againe, being ſacrificed, from death to life. For ſo the Apoſtle ſaith alſo of him, Heb. 11. 19. Againe, he ſaith, whom thou loveſt, he was a ſonne upon whom his affection was greatly ſet, as there was good reaſon for the grace and tovvardlineſſe vvhich he ſavv to be in him. Moreover, he muſt kill and ſacrifice him vvith his ovvne hands, and not deliver him to ſome other to do it. and Laſtly, not in a place, to vvhich he might ſoon come, but farre remote, unto vvhich he muſt be travelling three dayes, in all vvhich time vve cannot but imagine, that his minde was much more exerciſed with divers conflicts. So that he was tempted indeed with a temptation ſo great, as that never any mortall man had or could have a greater propounded unto him. All this is excellently ſpoken of by Philo in his book de Abrahamo, who addeth alſo, that being now very aged, and his Wife Sarah alſo, he could have no further hope of more iſſue, whereupon he concludeth, which of all theſe things is common with others, which not moſt notable, and not ſufficiently to be expreſſed by any eloquence? So likewiſe Origen Hom. 8. in Geneſin. The Land of Moriah, to which Abraham is bidden to go, is in the vulgar Latin, the Land of viſion, the word Moriah being derived, according to Jerome, from ראה to ſee. This is diſliked by Calvin, who ſaith, that all skilfull in the Hebrew tongue do diſallow of it, and no better doth he approve of the deriving of it from מר ſignifying bitter, or Myrrh, approving rather the derivation from ירא to feare, or from ירה to teach. Becauſe of the ſignification of this word, ſome think that Abraham was directed to no certaine place, but to ſome place, where the Lord would appeare unto him. But I think rather, that it was a place then known by that name of Moriah, becauſe otherwiſe Abraham ſhould have been uncertaine, vvhither to have directed his courſe, unleſſe vve ſhall ſay, that as vvhen he firſt called him out of his ovvn Countrey, to go to a Land, vvhich he vvould ſhevv him, not naming it, intending to guide him by his providence, ſo novv he calleth him againe to a Land of viſion,

Verſe 2.

Philo, Quid horum quæ diximus cum cæteris commune eſt? Quid non eximium, & quod non poſſit illâ æquari facundiâ? Origen. Hieronym. Calvin.

vvhich should have this name upon occasion of that vvhich should happen there, and not to any particular knovvne place, so that the Lord calleth it thus by anticipation. Hovvsoever, it hath since been famous by the name of Mount Moriah, by reason of that, vvhich vvas done betvveen the Lord and Abraham there, Abraham in obedience going about to sacrifice his sonne, and God in mercy shevving himselfe opportunely unto him, vvhereupon the place vvas called by Abraham Jehovah jireh, the Lord will be seen; and from thence may vvell be dravvn Moriah according to Jerome, to vvhom I therefore rather subscribe then to any other. And Rupertus expostulateth vvith those, that seek for any other derivation of this name, seeing by this place it appeareth plainly, that Abraham called it thus for Gods looking upon him. Happily by a speciall instinct from God it vvas called Moriah before, because of that which should thus be afterwards done there, and Abraham in giving a new name, doth but further explaine the first. This place according to Jerome, was distant from Gerar, from whence he thinketh that Abraham now went, a Journey of three dayes. But it is plaine, that he went not from Gerar, but from Beersheba, both because he now dwelt there, Gen. 21. 33. and after this he returned thither, v. 19. Others, as Jerome saith, have held, that he now dvvelt in the plaine of Mamre, but erroneously, for from thence to Mount Moriah is not above one dayes journey, and it doth altogether disagree vvith the History. One saith, that from Beersheba to Moriah is but 40 miles, Tostatus saith but 20. But how then could Abraham be going thither so long a time? He saith, that he was by the Lord held thus long in so short a way, to afflict his minde the more by thinking upon that which he was to do there. If it be 40 miles, as I rather think he might well be travelling thither two dayes, and so he came thither the third. But why would the Lord have Abraham go thither rather then to any other place to offer up his sonne? Answ. This was the place by God appointed for his worship, as was manifested afterwards: for here was the floore of Araunah, vvhere David vvas bidden to set up an Altar in the time of pestilence, and here vvas the Temple of God built by Solomon, here also saith Augustine, according to Jeromes most certaine finding out, vvas Christ crucified. But forsomuch as he vvas crucified vvithout the City, and this Mountaine vvas vvithin, it seemeth, that it cannot be so, unlesse by the Mountaine Moriah, vve shall understand both it and the tract of ground about it at the foot thereof. The Hebrevvs say, that Adam vvas buried here, and Cain and Abel and Noah offered sacrifice here. But the places of their aboad were so farre distant, that there is no probability of this.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

H. Bunting, Patriarchs travels. Tostatus.

Quest. Mount Moriah why appointed for this sacrifice?

2 Chron. 3 1. August. Serm. 71. de Tempore.

Verse 3, 4, 5.

Abraham being commanded taketh his journey early the next morning with Isaac and two servants, and upon the third day he cometh to the Land of Moriah, and seeing the Mountaine where this fact was to be done, he stayeth his servants, telleth them, that he and the childe would go yonder, and worship and rerurne to them againe. And it is said, that he took wood with him for the burnt-offering, either as Musculus saith, because there was no Wood in those parts, or because he would not use other mens Wood, or else, because this was dry and odoriferous, and so most fit for the purpose. And this Wood thus prepared it is most likely, that his servants carryed, and he rode upon the Asse. But how could he say to his servants, that they would go yonder and worship and returne to them againe, when as Isaac was not to returne, but to dye there? To this Augustine answereth, that he believed, that Isaac being sacrificed should immediately be restored to life againe. Ambrose that he spake prophetically, not knowing, how it should be brought to passe. Th. Anglus, that he spake thus, this exception being alwayes understood, unlesse the Lord should otherwise dispose of any of them. And to this do I subscribe, because this is a condition alwayes to be understood, if the Lord will, and he doth not prevent us by death, we will do this or that. For although the Lord had brought Abraham thither to sacrifice his Musculus.

Quest.

Aug. in Heb. 11. Serm. 1. Ambros. lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 8. Th. Anglus in Gen. 22.

his sonne, and he was come ready to do his command, yet it might be, that the Lord would not permit this thing to be done, and Isaac should live still. So that it being uncertaine, vvhether the Lord would have it done or no, he might well according to the common manner of speech say thus. Of all the expositions made hereupon, I mislike most that of Melchior Canus, saying, that he made a lye, although a most light one, because he would not have his servants present to behold so unnaturall a fact, because happily they might also have sought to hinder him. For it ought to be far from us to censure so great a Patriarch in any thing, wherein he was not manifestly faulty.

Melchior Canus.

Verse 6.

And Abraham took the wood of the burnt-offering, and laid it upon his sonne, and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife, &c. It may be doubted here, how Isaac could carry so much Wood, as would suffice to burne a whole sacrifice to ashes; for there must not be any small quantity for a man to carry, but much more for this purpose. Againe, the Mount Moriah was high and steep, it being as some vvrite, 600 paces to the top thereof, and there a spacious Plaine. To this the answer of Musculus is most probable, that the Wood vvas light and faire, serving rather to kindle the fire, then to burne up the sacrifice, Abraham making account to get a supply of more, vvhen he should come there, or else he believed, that God vvould miraculously make that sufficient. Then Isaac by the vvay asked him, vvhere he vvould have a sacrifice? by vvhich his speaking to him, my Father, &c. he could not certainly, but be moved vvith nevv passions, so that he vvas still more and more exercised.

H. Bunting. Patriarchs travels. Musculus.

Verse 7.

Verse 9.

And when they came to the place, Abraham built an Altar, and put the Wood in order, and bound his sonne Isaac, &c. With vvhat he built this Altar, and vvhat tools he had to vvork withall is not expressed, but certainly he brought some toole with him, and made it of the Earth digged up. And for the binding of Isaac, that he might now kill him and sacrifice him, although nothing is said of his willing submitting of himselfe, or of any speech used by his Father unto him, yet it is most probable, that now he told him, that God had commanded him this service, perswading him to be willing, who forsomuch as he knew, that it was Gods command, submitted himselfe, because otherwise he was not so infirme, but he could have resisted his Father being so much stricken in yeares. And therefore Josephus in relating this saith, when Abraham had made all things ready, he spake thus unto him: (My sonne) I have brought thee up with all care, being desired long before, it being my great joy to see thee grovv up to mans estate, that I might leave thee mine heire. But forsomuch as now it seemeth good unto God, who gave thee unto me, to require thee againe, beare it patiently to be sacrificed unto him, who will have us thus honour him, who hath so greatly blessed us both in Peace and Warre. Thou wert borne to dye, and now thou shalt not dye in a common manner, but be made a sacrifice to the God of the whole World, he counting it unworthy, that thou shouldest dye by a sickness or any other way then this. And he shall place thy soule thus departing by himselfe, &c. Then Isaac said, that he was unworthy to live, if he would not chearfully obey the will of God and of his Father, when he was bound to do it, if his Fathers will only were, that it should be so. But if Isaac were willing, what needed this binding? Ans. Lest, when the stroak should be given out of a naturall reluctation against death, there should be a disturbance in doing this service. Abraham being now ready to kill his sonne, the Angel of the Lord called unto him, saying,

Joseph. Antiq. lib. 1. Mille votis te expetitum (fili) postquã in hanc vitam veniſti, summã curã & sollicitudine educavi, nihil beatius existimans, quàm si te vvrum videre daretur, & heredem denique meæ ditionis relinquere, &c.

Quest. Calvin.

Verse 11.

Verse 12.

Lay not thine hand upon the Lad, neither do thou any thing unto him, for now I know thou feareſt God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy sonne, thine only sonne from me. It may seem, because Isaac is called a Lad or childe, that he was not so old, as hath been said, and Paulus Burgensis doth hereupon hold, that he was not above 15 yeares old, as some of the Hebrevvs have taught. But of his age enough hath been said already, that he was 25 at the least, neither doth this calling of him Puerum a childe make against it, seeing men are often in the Hebrew phraſe called ſo, as 2 Sam. 1.15. Exod. 36. Joſuah is ſo called, and thus Chriſt after his Reſurrection calleth his Apoſtles, John 21. and he himſelf is ſo called, Acts 4. But why was Abraham withheld from doing this fact, being before commanded it? To this Theodoret anſwereth, that God gave him this precept, not that he ſhould do thus, but to declare that excellent faith, wherewith he was indued. And it was a ſhadow of the diſpenſation now made for us. God gave his moſt dearely beloved Son to the death for us, and Iſaac was a Type of his Divinity, the Ram of his Humanity, and the time of the third day agreeth alſo, wherefore Paul ſaith, that Iſaac was reſtored to Abraham in a figure, Iſaac was a Type of Chriſt herein many waies. 1 He was the onely moſt dearly beloved ſon of his father, as Chriſt is of God. 2 As Iſaac, ſo he ſubmitted himſelf to the will of his Father even to the death. 3 As Iſaac, ſo he bare the Wood of the Croſſe. 4 As Iſaac was but a dead man as it were, to the third day, ſo Chriſt ſuffered death and roſe not till the third day. 5 As he, although laid upon the Altar, eſcaped, and a Ram was ſacrificed, ſo Chriſt in his humane nature ſuffered, but in the Divine he lived ſtill. 6 As the Ram vvas vvith his head in a buſh, ſo Chriſts head was crovvned with thornes. Laſtly, as Abraham and his ſon Iſaac atteined to great fame thoroughout all poſterities hereby, ſo God the Father and Son have glory in all the world for this unſpeakable love. Neither vvas this the onely end of this fact, but hereby is taught, that we muſt yeeld abſolute obedience unto God in every thing, not entering into any ratiocination vvith our ſelves, vvhether it be fit or juſt, that we ſhould do ſo or no. None are ſo dear and neer unto us, but vve muſt depart vvith all for Gods ſake, and in thus doing we ſhall not loſe, but gain, if it be father, or mother, or wife, or goods, or life it ſelfe for we ſhall receive a hundred fold in this World, and in the World to come everlaſting life, as Abraham loſt not, but gained by his ready obedience in this matter.

P. Burgensis.

Queſt. But how doth the Lord ſay, Now I know, that thou feareſt God? Did not he know this before? To this an anſwer may be gathered out of that which was ſaid before in the beginning of the Chapter, according to Auguſtine, Gregory and others, now I know, that is, now I have made known, and proved by experience. Hilary ſaith, that to know here is put for approve, as if he had ſaid, now I count thee worthy indeed to be reckoned amongſt thoſe that truly fear God, I approved thee indeed before, but now much more. For ſuch as do wickedly, becauſe God approveth them not, he is ſaid not to know them, but contrariwiſe he is ſaid to know the faithfull & obedient. Let the Reader follow whether of theſe expoſitions it pleaſeth him. And yet there is another given by ſome, that the Lord ſpake thus after the manner of men, putting, as it were, the perſon of a man upon him in ſpeaking to Abraham a man, as in divers other caſes having now again by a moſt hard thing tryed his obedience. But why did not the Lord ſuffer Abraham to proceed to the killing of his ſon indeed, that his obedience might have yet been more perfect, but ſtayed him, when he came to the fact? Anſwer, He foreſaw the proneneſſe of his poſterity to ſacrifice their own children to Idols, and therefore, although he commanded this for triall, yet he would not have it done, leſt they ſhould afterwards take example hereby, for otherwiſe God could, as eaſily after the fact done, have reſtored Iſaac to life again. One thing hitherto omitted in ſpeaking of the Type that was in this, I will add here, viz. that Iſaac was rather choſen then any other to be made a Type of Chriſt in his ſufferings, becauſe of him Chriſt was to come, and Abraham being honoured to be the father of the faithfull, it was moſt meet, that he vvith his ſonne ſhould be propounded, as examples of obedience to God to all the faithfull throughout all generations.

Verſe 13. And when Abraham had lifted up his eyes, he beheld, and lo, a Ram behinde him caught in a buſh by the hornes, and Abraham took the Ram, &c.

Rabbini. The Rabbines of the Jewes tell a tale here of this Ram, ſaying, that it was created at the beginning, and was preſerved for this purpoſe till this time, which Theod. in Gen. queſt. 71.

Heb. 11. 19.

Note.

Queſt.

Hilar. in Pſ. 1.

Paul. Burgenſ. Cajetan. Calvin.

Queſt.

which was the beginning of the seventh moneth, answering to our September, at what time afterwards the feast of sounding with Trumpets made of Horns was ordained for a commemoration hereof. But to leave this, and to come to somewhat more solid. The Lord, who had appointed a Sacrifice there to be offered at that time by Abraham, did miraculously without doubt bring that Ram thither for the purpose, that Isaac being spared, it might not yet be a frustrate act, when all things were ready for a sacrifice. And Abraham well understanding this to be the intent of the Rams being held there, took that and offered it in the roome of his sonne Isaac, never making any question, whether it were the goods of any other man, as there was no reason that he should, seeing God, who is Lord of all things, offered it unto him. And thus that was made good, which he had said before to Isaac upon the way, God will provide himself a Sacrifice.

And thus was Isaac made a Sacrifice unto God, and yet lived, the Ram being killed, but he preserved alive, to intimate the end of our mortification, viz. that being dead unto our selves we should yet be living Sacrifices unto God through the Spirit bearing sway in us, as Calvin noteth. This Ram, saith Ferus, figured out Christ, who was sacrificed for our sinnes, he was behinde Abraham, and hung in a bush, to shew, that Christ was to come long after, and to be in the midst of the bushes of afflictions. Isaac also was a figure of him in carrying his wood, as he carried his Crosse, in his obedience to his Father, and in that by his father he was brought to be slain, as Christ was. Lastly, in that, as he dyed not, so did not Christ in his Divine nature. Touching the manner how the Ram was held, the Septuagints translation goeth thus, A Ram behinde him was held by the hornes in a bough of Sabech, which Sabech, according to Jerom, signifieth a thicket of thornes or briars. Symmachus hath it, by a net, for so also Sabech signifieth, if it be written with ס, but it is written with ס Samech, and so signifieth, as was said before. Some translate Sabech, in erectione, holding, that the Ram stood upright being held by the hornes, and so was a more apt figure of Christ hanging upright on the Crosse. Theodoret and Gennadius say, that Sabech was the name of some tree, wherein the Ram stucke by the hornes.

Calvin.

Septuagint. Aries tenebatur cornibus in virgulto. Sabech. Hieronym. Theodoret.

And Abraham called the name of that place, Jehovah Jireh, as it is said to this day, in the Mount the Lord will be seene. Verse 14.

This, as Chrysostome noteth, was so called by way of gratitude for so great a mercy, according to the words used before by Abraham to Isaac, God will provide himself a Sacrifice, and hereupon, saith Jerome, it grew to a proverbe amongst the Hebrewes being in any great strait, from which they desired to be relieved, God will see, and for a rememberance of this Ram given, they used to sound with Rams hornes. But it is, God will be seen, passively, some change being made of the word purposely, according to Calvin, to shew, that God will not onely see for the helpe and comfort of his in their distresses, but also afford such succour unto them, as that they shall see and perceive him to be present unto them for their relefe.

Chrysost. Hom. 48. in Gen.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

Calvin.

And the Angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of Heaven the second time, saying, By my selfe have I sworne, saith the Lord, because thou hast done this, &c. Verse 15, 16

Some make a question here, how he being an Angell that spake, could say thus, it perteining to God onely to say so? Answer, that either it was Christ Jesus called an Angell, or an Angell representing Gods person: But no more question can be made of this, then, how the Prophets can say, Thus saith the Lord, and then speak, as if the Lord himself should speak touching this or that matter, for none otherwise doth the Angell proceed, when he saith, I have sworne by my selfe, saith the Lord, &c. But this that the Lord sweareth, hath a necessary question, viz. How could it agree with the dignity of his Person to sweare, whose simple word is sufficient to any faithfull man, and if it were agreeable, how is it justifiable, not being necessary, sith Abraham beleeved without without an Oath, and what the meaning of this forme uſed is, I have ſworn by my ſelfe? Amongſt the Romans ſuch men, as were held to be of ſingular integrity, ſaith Calvin, as that they might be believed without an Oath, had not at any time an Oath impoſed upon them, and therefore it ſhould ſeem much leſſe to become the Lord: and an Oath is to confirm men in things that they cannot otherwiſe be certaine of, but doubtfull, and therefore unneſſary here. But it is anſwered; An oath indeed is unfit to be impoſed upon the Lord, yet if he will be pleaſed to take it, ex abundanti, when there may ſeem to be no need, his mercy and Fatherly care of the faithfull, that they might reſt moſt fully aſſured of his promiſes, doth the more appeare. For in ſwearing thus to Abraham, he had doubtleſſe a reſpect unto his poſterity, and to their confirmation. As for the forme of words, the like is uſed, Eſa. 45. 23. And he ſweareth by his life, Jer. 51. 14. Amos. 6. 8. by his great name, Jer. 44. 26. by his holineſſe, Amos. 4. 2. by his right hand, Eſa. 62. 8. by the glory and magnificence of Jacob, Amos. 8. 7. which are all one in effect with this. And it is, as if he had ſaid, I will give thee my Selfe, my Glory, my Power, &c. for a pledge of that, which I promiſe, I will as ſoon ceaſe to be God, to be holy, to be glorious, as not to performe what I promiſe. For in taking an Oath either ſomething moſt deare is ſworne by, as in theſe places by the Lord, or he, that is able to take revenge, if the Oath be not juſt. Now there being none greater, that might take revenge, the Lord layeth for a pledge his own glory, as moſt deare unto him, he ſweareth by himſelfe, but every man by God, who is able to be avenged upon the falſe ſwearer. The motive, whereby the Lord was moved to ſweare thus to Abraham, was, becauſe thou haſt done this, hence Cajetan noteth, that although Gods purpoſe from eternity was the firſt cauſe of this, yet that Chriſt ſhould come of Abraham, his merit was the ſecondary cauſe. But the Apoſtle was ignorant of any ſuch Doctrine, when as ſpeaking upon this, he ſaith, God willing more abundantly to ſhew to the heires of his promiſe, the immutability of his mercy confirmed it by Oath. So that it was not Abrahams merit, but his mercy, whereby he was now alſo moved, only he commemorateth this as a cauſe in way of approbation, as if he had ſaid, becauſe he had ſhewed himſelfe through his grace, a true faithfull ſervant unto him, therefore he would proceed, as in mercy he had before purpoſed and promiſed unto him, Gen. 12. So that of meer grace this being promiſed before, no intervening merit in Abraham could any way be the cauſe hereof: but he, to whom God maketh his promiſe cannot, but alwayes take this way of obedience, to come to enjoy the ſame, and to be comforted in reſpect thereof. He propoundeth rewards of grace to be beſtowed for incouragement, ſo Calvin, that we may not think our good works loſt labour, for we ſhall ſtill be more and more confirmed hereby touching Gods favour.

Quest.

Calvin. Heb. 6. 17. Heb. 6. 13. Cajetan. Heb. 6. 17. Muſculus.

Verſe 17. In bleſſing I will bleſſe thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thee, &c. There is no new thing in all this promiſed to Abraham, but what was at divers times promiſed before, for 1 When he was yet in Chaldea 40 yeares before, he had a promiſe of being bleſſed. 2 That his ſeed ſhould be, as the duſt of the Earth, and that it ſhould be, as the Starres of Heaven in number. 3 That his ſeed ſhould poſſeſſe the gate of their enemies, that is, ſubdue them, and take their Cities in poſſeſſion, the gate which is commonly moſt munited, being put for the whole City, this was promiſed, when he bade Abraham look every way and ſaid; To thee will I give it, and to thy ſeed for ever, and when he numbereth the Nations to be ſubdued by them, the Kenites, Kenizites, Cadmonites, &c. 4 That in his ſeed all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed when he ſaid, In thee ſhall all the Nations of the earth be bleſſed, for that is the ſame in effect with this, as I have ſhewed there. But why then are theſe things ſpoken of againe, as a reward of Abrahams fact? Anſ. To ſtimulate him ſtill more on to chearfull and conſtant obedience. For by proceeding to obey God in every thiug, we ſhall ſtill be more confirmed and comforted in reſpect

Gen. 12. 2. Gen. 13. 16. Gen. 15. 5. Gen. 13. 14, 15, Gen. 15. 18. Gen. 12. 3. Queſt. Calvin. Note.

respect of his mercy towards us. It may also be said, that all the gracious promises made at sundry times are now put together, as a reward of his obedience in this matter, and he hath an Oath added for his more abundant assurance, so as he had not before. Ambrose seemeth to have held, that the promise of the Nations being blessed in his seed was now first made, and Paulus Burgensis seeketh by divers reasons to prove it. But these words, in thee, and in thy seed are all one, and therefore are promiscuously used, see Gen. 13. 15, 17. Christ Jesus was meant, when he at the first said, in thee shall all Nations be blessed, and here in saying in thy seed, but only the meaning of that is here more fully explained. And in this seed Christ especially is fulfilled that, of his seeds possessing the gate of their enemies, in that the Devill, and sinne, and the World are by him subdued, and his Dominion is set up amongst all faithfull people in all places, and as touching his seed, according to the flesh, they also, that is, David and Joshuah, and the good Judges prevailed against them every where, although the people of Israel were oft-times brought under for their sinnes, Ferus by the promise here made, understandeth that to Abrahams spirituall children, the faithfull, by the promise made before, that to his carnall children, and therefore this second being greater is made with an oath, that without, this after Isaac offered, figuring Christ, that without any reason rendering. 3 This is of things heavenly, that of earthly. After this Abraham returneth to Beersheba, and dwelt there, as he had done before. Then it was told him of Nahor his Brother, how that Milcha his Wife, of whom see Chap. 11. 29. had born him divers children, Hus, and Buz, and Kemuel the Father of Aram, &c. and Bethuel, and Bethuel begat Rebecca. This is inserted here to shew what comfort Abraham had, after the restitution of his own sonne againe, in respect of the numerous off-spring of his Brother, and specially, because Rebeccah might be a fit Wife for Isaac, as indeed she was, Gen. 24. whereas otherwise Abraham might have been sollicitous for him, as not liking the manners of the Daughters of that Countrey. Jerome thinketh, that of this Hus the Countrey of Hus had the name, of which Job was, but others hold rather, that he came of Esau. For him, that is called the Father of Aram, see before, Gen. 10. ver. 24. And his Concubine Reumah bare also Tebah, &c The difference between a Wife and a Concubine, say the Rabbins, is, that a Wife was taken by a Bill of dowry and solemne espousalls, but a Concubine without either. And Concubines, saith Demost. are only for the use of the bed.

Ambros. lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 8.

Musculus.

Verse 19.
Verse 20, 21 &c.

CHAP. XXIII.

AND Sarah was 127 yeares old, &c. and she dyed in Chiriath-Arba, the same is Hebron in the Land of Canaan. Sarah being a most worthy Matron and Mother of the Church hath this grace singularly done to her, which is not to other women, her age, when she dyed is registred by Moses, as the age of the Patriarchs of the elect line.

Verse 1.

The Jewish Rabbins bold to invent any thing say, that the Devill appeared unto her in the likenesse of a man, soon after that related, Chap. 22. and told her, that Abraham would have sacrificed her sonne Isaac, whereupon she was so stricken, that she dyed. But Isaac was now 37 yeares old, so that her death happened not immediately, but 12 yeares after that offer to sacrifice him, according to the computation made before of Isaacs being but 25 then. And as ridiculous are they in glossing upon the number of yeares here set down in the Hebrew, it being, if it be turned word for word 100 yeares, 20 yeares, and 7 yeares, the word yeares being repeated to every number, because say they, she was as faire at 100 as at 20. and as chaste, when she had lived thus long, as at seven. The phrase is usuall amongst the Hebrews to set forth numbers thus, and therefore this is but a vaine speculation, as Calvin noteth.

Rabbini.

Calvin.

teth. The place, where ſhe died was Kiriath-arba, which is Hebron, that is the place, where Abraham had long dwelt, before he came into the Philiſtines Countrey, ſee Gen. 13.18. ſo that after his returne to Beer-ſhebah, from ſacrificing of his ſonne Iſaac, he removed againe to his former abode, although that be by Moſes paſſed over in ſilence.

The name of this place was not now Hebron, but it had this name afterwards, being at the firſt called Kiriath-arbah, as is here intimated, and further plainly expreſſed, Joſ. 14.15. Of the divers reaſons of this name I ſpake ſomwhat before, Ch. 13.18. but certainly they that derive the name from four were deceived, becauſe it is plainly ſaid in Joſhua, that Arbah, was a great man amongſt the Anakims, & again, Joſh. 15.13. it is called the city of Arba, the father of Anak, ſo that from that Arba doubtleſs it took this name. But how it came to be changed to Hebron is not ſo eaſie to determine. It is true that one Hebron is ſpoken of, 1 Chron. 2.43. as being the ſonne of Mareſhah the ſonne of Ziph, the ſonne of Meſhah, the ſon of Jerameel, who was Calebs brother, but how it ſhould, as I delivered before, according to ſome, have this name from him I cannot ſee, forſomuch as it is commonly called Hebron long before his time, he not being borne till the fourth generation after Joſhuah, and therefore for ought that I know this muſt be left uncertain. The greateſt probability is, that as Arbe firſt founded that City, from vvhence it firſt tooke the name, ſo ſome other of his race called Hebron inlarged it, and thenceforth it was called after his name, not being changed any more, as is uſuall with other Cities upon their re-edifying to have their names altered, as London quaſi Ludſtone, called ſo from King Lud, who built and beautified it, when as before it had been called new Troy. But Hebron, as Engubinus noteth, ſignifieth conjunction or ſociety, and ſo was a fit place for ſo conjoyned a couple to dwell in, and for all the Patriarches to be joyned together in their buriall. This Hebron is further ſaid to have been in the land of Canaan, for diſtinctions ſake, becauſe Abraham dwelt before in the Philiſtines Countrey. And Abraham came to mourn for Sarah. From whence came he? Some think, that he was gone forth upon a journey, but now returned home, hearing of her death, but no ſuch thing is intimated. It is more probable, that he came out of his tent into hers, where ſhe died, that being preſent in the ſame place, he might bewail his loſſe of her. For that Sarah her tent, appeareth, Gen. 24.67. & this agreed well with the wife of a man of Abrahams greatneſs, that although they lived not ſeparate in two tents for any want of mutuall love, yet by reaſon of their numerous family ſhe ſhould have her tent with her maides, to look unto and to govern them, and he with his men, as Luther reaſoneth. Abraham was a moſt wiſe and faithfull man, full of courage and manlike reſolution, yet he was a man, and ſo had the affections of a man in him, and for this cauſe could not but bewaile the loſſe of his dear and vertuous wife, as the Emperour Antoninus Philoſophus ſometime ſaid of himſelfe, vvhen he was blamed, as doing a thing unworthy an Emperour and a vviſe man, Oh ſuffer, ſaith he, me to be a man, ſith that neither Empire nor Philoſophy can take man out of man, or make a man to be from the affections of man. We muſt not bewaile our dead without meaſure, as if we were without hope: but not to be moved vvith any paſſion for the loſſe of them, argueth a Stoicall ſtocke, and not a man. The word ſignifying to weep, here is vvritten with a very little letter, from whence the Rabbines note, that Abrahams weeping for Sarah vvas moderate.

Joſ. 10 23, 12,10.

Luther.

Antoninus Philoſophus. Sinite ut homo ſim, neque enim imperium aut Philoſophia hominem ex homine tollit, &c.

Note.

And Abraham ſtood up from his dead, and ſpake to the ſons of Heth, ſaying, I am a ſtranger, &c. Give me a poſſeſſion of a burying place, &c.

Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.

The ſons of Heth vvere the Hittites, who inhabited this part of the land of Canaan, and therefore to them Abraham cometh, as to the ovvners of the ground for a burying place. For vvhen one is dead, after ſome lamentation made, the next thing to be looked after is the buriall. In the vulgar Latine it is, Cùm ſurrexiſſet ab officio funeris, altogether different from the Hebrevv, and hereupon the Popiſh gather, that he did ſome Satisfactory offices of Faſting,

Fasting, Prayer, Almes and sacrifices for the dead. But to let this passe, as farre fetcht, he provideth novv for her funerall, a decent and vvorthy manner of burying the dead being alvvayes much respected amongst the faithfull, for the hope of the Resurrection, and that not onely amongst them, but even amongst the Heathen, howsoever they had no such hope, yet receiving this custome from their Ancestours, implying the resurrection, although they had none understanding thereof. And it is to be noted, that Abraham in providing to bury Sarah; buyeth a plat of ground for that purpose, not being willing that her bones should lye promiscuously amongst others, but in a place separate, where he might also be laid, and his generation, possession being thus taken, as it were, of that Land which by faith he believed should be taken for an inheritance by his seed afterwards, so Calvin. Lyranus and others, made a needlesse question here, how Abrahams buying of a place for burial is justifiable, seeing consecrated ground ought not to be bought and sold? For this place, as is most probable, was not a burying place, but made such by Abraham, and so he did but as any man, that in the want of a place for buriall should buy a plat of ground, and then dedicate it to this use and purpose. In seeking to have this plat of ground for his money, Abraham is very circumspect, that he might not be thought to incroach upon any of their possessions to their prejudice, he calleth himselfe therefore a sojourner and a stranger, and desireth not to possesse a place to live and settle upon, but to bury his dead, wherein there could be no such feare on their part. Ferus noteth here, that Abraham bought no ground for a possession, till after the death of Sarah, to shew, that possessions for this life are not so much to be sought, as after death in the place of those that dye in the Lord, but live for ever, and in this care about a Sepulchre he intimated his hope of the resurrection, and that the dead bodies of Gods Saints are not vile, but precious before him. Calvin. Lyranus.

Verse 5,6. The children of Heth being moved for a plat of ground, call him a Lord and a Prince of God amongst them, that is, an excellent Prince, not only for his wealth, but for his wisdome and integrity, and becaus they saw that he was in great favour with God, and so offer him the choice of all their Sepulchres.

Verse 7,8,9. Hereupon he boweth himselfe to them in way of reverence, and desireth them to intercede for him to Ephron the sonne of Zohar, who was one of them. For the Cave of Machpelah, which being interpreted, according to Vatablus, is the Cave of duplicity, becaus it was double, either one above another, or with a partition in the midst, which is more probable, the one being to lay the dead bodies of men, and the other of women. This is by Gregory turned into an Allegory, saying, that whosoever will live unto God, must likewise be buryed in a double Sepulchre, the one of Heaven, by contemplation, the other of assidious action: for as in a Sepulchre, hereby we are hidden and separated from the wickednesse of this World. Histor. Scholastic. p.50. in Gen. Greg. Moral. l.6 c.11.

Verse 10,11, 12,13. &c. Ephron hearing Abrahams request, offereth the place desired unto him freely, but he refuseth so to accept of it, and payeth him 400 shekels of silver, as he had named, therefore, and so had all the field and the Cave made sure unto him, and there he buried Sarah. Now a shekel was of three sorts, the common worth 1 s.d. the Kings shekel 22.d. ob. and the shekel of the Sanctuary 2.s. 6.d. and therefore if the first be here meant, the whole was 25.l. For difference of the relation made by Steven, Act.7. of this History, and how it is reconciled, see there.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verse 1. Abraham being now very aged, for he was neare 140 yeares old, he calleth the eldest servant of his house unto him, who ruled over all that he had, and he, as is most probable, was Eleezar of Damascus spoken of before, Gen. 15.2.

Verse 2. and saith unto him, Put I pray thee thy hand under my thigh, and I will Verſe 3. Queſt.

cauſe thee to ſweare by the Lord, the God of Heaven and Earth, that thou ſhalt not take a Wife unto my ſonne of the Daughters of the Canaanites, &c. A great queſtion is moved here firſt, why Abraham would have his ſervant to put his hand under his thigh to ſweare? The common anſwer of all the ancient Fathers almoſt, and of moſt of our new Writers is, that he would have him to do thus, becauſe he firmly believed, that Chriſt ſhould come out of his thigh or loines, which are words promiſcuouſly uſed, to ſet forth a generation proceeding from any man, as is alſo to come out of his bowels. For the thigh, ſee Gen. 46. 26. 49. 10. Exod. 1.5 for although in the Tranſlation it be loines, yet in the originall it is thigh, for the loines Gen. 35. 11. and for the bowels, Gen 15.4. Pſ. 132. 11. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that the ignorant are moved at it, wondring why Abraham ſhould cauſe his ſervant to put his hand upon his thigh to ſweare, but this was a kinde of Propheſying, that the Lord of Heaven and Earth was to come in the fleſh, which was to be propagated from this thigh. So likewiſe Saint Ambroſe ſaith, by Abrahams thigh we underſtand his generation, and his generation is Chriſt. And Jerome for all the reſt, rejecting the reaſon hereof yielded by the Jews, ſaith, We hold, that he thus ſware by the ſeed of Abraham, which is Chriſt. The Jewes reaſon rejected by Jerome is, that this ceremony was uſed for the reverence of circumciſion made about that place: but then it would ſtill have been uſed in ſwearing by others of Abrahams poſterity, as we cannot read that it was afterwards, but only, Gen. 47.29. Joſephus ſaith, that it was an ancient cuſtom for one to make another being under him to put his hand under his thigh, and ſo to call God to be a witneſſe of that, which they determined. And Chryſoſtome ſaith, hereby it appeareth to have been a cuſtom before this moſt anciently, becauſe Abrahams ſervant is called unto it, as to a thing common and uſuall. Muſculus approveth rather of this, then of any other, becauſe it is a cuſtom ſtill uſed by Maſters towards their ſervants to this day in ſome parts of the Eaſt Countrey. Aven-Ezra approveth of this ſpecially, as being a fit ceremony to ſet forth the authority of a Maſter over his ſervant, when he ſtoopeth and placeth himſelfe, as it were, under him being his ſuperiour, and therefore thinketh, that it was anciently uſed before Abraham. And the Maſters bidding of his ſervant to put his hand under his thigh, ſaith he, was as if he had ſaid, If thou beeſt under my power, and art ready to receive my commandements, ſhew it by ſtooping downe unto me, and putting thy hand in token of ſubjection under the thigh of me ſitting here, then the ſervant putting his hand under, as he was bidden, did hereby, as it were, anſwer thus, I confeſſe, that I ought to obey and ſerve thee, and am here ready to obey thy commandements. And this cuſtome he ſaith, ſome regions in India do ſtill uſe, and from India it was brought to Syria, where Abraham living uſed alſo, according to the manner of the place, the ſame. And this reaſon ſeemeth to me moſt probable: for as he followed the cuſtome of that place in making a Covenant with the Lord, Gen. 15. the Lord himſelfe directing him to do ſo, that is, to take beaſts and divide them, ſo I ſee no reaſon, but that there being ſuch a cuſtom in adjuring ſervants, he might alſo follow the ſame. Only whereas ſome have delivered, that this ceremony was firſt uſed by Liber pater, otherwiſe called Dionyſius, of whom the tale goeth, that he came out of Jupiters thigh, whereupon he firſt appointed the putting of the hand under the thigh in ſwearing in India, where he ruled the place, where he was brought up by the Nymphes, being alſo called in memory thereof Μηρὸς, that is, the thigh, to this beginning of this ceremony I cannot ſubſcribe, becauſe ſo Abraham ſhould by his practiſe have confirmed a ſuperſtition, and becauſe as that of his coming out of Jupiters thigh, is fabulous and ridiculous, ſo all the reſt may juſtly be held to be of the ſame ſort. If any man had rather yet ſtick to the myſtery in this ceremony, I will not contend, but whether Abraham intended any ſuch thing or no, it is altogether uncertaine.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt. 62.

Ambroſ lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 9

Hieron in tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

Hebræi.

Ioſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 48. in Gen.

Muſculus.

Aven Ezra.

Queſt. 2. Secondly, no leſſe queſtion may be made about the lawfulneſſe of Abraham hams adjuring his servant. For some have held, that to sweare hath never been lawfull, but for a time tolerated under the old Testament, as Origen and Chrysostome, which if it were so Abraham had done ill to make his servant to sweare. But the example of the Lord himselfe swearing to Abraham, Gen. 22. and the precepts to sweare, Deut. 10. 20. Jer. 4. 1. do sufficiently justifie this practise upon a weighty and urgent occasion, such as this was, although to sweare commonly be vile and abominable. There is an adjuring, when the party adjured is not made to sweare, but only he that adjureth him, seeketh by the obtestation and reverence of the Divine Majesty, or of some other holy thing, to induce him to do or speak something, or to keep him from doing or speaking. Thus King Ahab is said to have adjured Michaiah 2 Chron. 18. 15. and the high Priest Caiaphas adjured Christ. Matth. 26. 63. and Saul the people, 1 Sam. 14. and when a King, or Lord or Master, or any that have authority over others do thus adjure them, they are bound, as they respect him, by whose name they are adjured, that is the God of Heaven to do accordingly, as appeareth also, 1 Sam. 14. But it ought well to be considered by him that adjureth, that the matter whereabout, be great and weighty, and it is to be used only towards such as are under his command. Againe, there is an adjuring by making the party adjured to sweare, as Abraham did this his servant here, and Ezra the people to put away their Wives, and Nehemiah did the like, and after this manner the Priest adjured the woman suspected of Adultery, and upon many occasions an Oath is given by the Magistrate to the people.

Origen. Chrysost.

Ezra 10.

Nehem. 13. Numb. 5.

A third question may be, why Abraham abhorred so much from marrying his sonne with the Daughters of that Countrey? To this Ambrose answereth first, that he did so, because they came of cursed Canaan. 2 Because they were Idolatrous and wicked, and of this second also Chrysostome speaketh, saying, that he knew the wickednesse of the Canaanites, and so avoided matching with them. Thomas Anglus saith, that he would not have his sonne take a Daughter of Canaan, because he was a pilgrim and stranger in that Land, and would so continue without mingling with that people, till the Lord should give to his posterity that land, and secondly, because the people of Canaan were to be expelled thence, and therefore they, by whom they should be expelled, ought not to enter into any bands of marriage with them, as the Lord also afterwards provided by his Law, and Abraham here taught them that came of him by his own example. Amongst these reasons that seemeth to be of little force, which is taken from the Idolatry of the Canaanites, because Nahor the Father of Rebecca, who was sent for to be Wife unto Isaac, hath been thought to have been an Idolater also, because when Terah went from the Idolatrous Chaldeans with his Sonne Abraham, Nahor went not, but as liking well enough of their manners dwelt still amongst them, as Chrysostome, Augustine and Rupertus argue; and Laban the Brother of Rebecca is brought in afterwards, quarrelling for his gods which Rachel had stolne: Wherefore it was not for the Idolatry of the Canaanites, that he detested such a marriage, but partly for their other abominable sinnes, wherewith all places were not so greatly infected, although Idolatry had overspread all, so that unlesse amongst such, he could not have had a Wife for his sonne in any place. For it is probable, that the family of Nahor was more honest, and chaste, and hospitable. And partly, because they were the cursed posterity of Canaan, and partly because the Lord had made a distinction long ago betwixt them and Abrahams posterity, the one being to be expelled out of the Countrey, and the other to be planted in their stead, which being so, to effect matching in amity with such, had been to go against Gods revealed will, and therefore when Esau afterwards marryed a Woman of that Countrey, Isaac and Rebecca were greatly displeased at it, seeking by all meanes to prevent Jacob from so doing.

Quest. 3. Ambros. lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 9. Chrysost. hom. 48. in Gen.

Tho. Anglus.

Gen. 31. 30.

But seeing the place, to which the servant is directed to go is Abrahams Countrey,

Quest. 4.

Countrey. It may be demanded how he fullfilled his Maſters will in going to Meſopotamia, when as he was borne in Ur of the Chaldees, and that was his Countrey? To this ſome anſwer that he was borne in Meſopotamia, but that is manifeſtly falſe. Others, as Lyranus and Toſtatus, that he dwelt long in Meſopotamia, and therefore it might as well for this cauſe be called his countrey, as the place of his nativity. Of his dwelling there ſee before upon Chap. 11.26. Yet ſome holding that Abraham ſtayed not there an whole yeare, ſay that the Chaldeans Countrey and Meſopotamia are generally taken for the Countrey beyond the River, but I ſubſcribe rather to Lyranus. But it may ſeem ſtrange, that the ſervant is thus charged, and that nothing is ſaid unto Iſaac, what, had the ſervant power over the ſonne being come to this age, for he was now about fourty? Anſwer, Iſaac was ſo obedient to his fathers will, as that Moſes needed not to ſet down any thing touching his fathers ſpeaking to him, howſoever it is not to be doubted, but that he was acquainted with the motion, and conſented thereunto. The ſervant is ſpoken to as a meſſenger to go about this matter for the ſonne, not that he had power and rule over him, but as a Prince hath his Ambaſſadour into Forreign parts upon the like occaon. Rupertus admireth for this the chaſte obedience of Iſaac, as he doth alſo the faith of Abraham, the faith of Abraham, in that he ſought not any comfort in his peregrination by contracting affinity vvith the people of that Countrey, but held him to the comfort vvhich he had in God onely, and the chaſte obedience of Iſaac, in that he was not led by his eyes with beauty, but ſubmitted himſelfe to take ſuch a wife, as his father had appointed for him. A notable paterne for young men and women in theſe dayes, to teach them in buſineſſes of this nature not to runne upon their own heads, but to obey their parents. But why is not Iſaac himſelf ſent, as Jacob vvas afterwards? Anſw. becauſe there vvas a neceſſity of Jacobs going, for the danger vvherein he ſtood by reaſon of Eſaus anger againſt him, but here vvas no ſuch reaſon, and therefore Iſaac Abrahams onely ſonne is kept at home vvith his father, who could not live ſo comfortably vvithout him, and the ſervant is ſent this long journey to fetch him a vvife, that he might not be expoſed to any perils of the vvay. And yet this vvas not done altogether vvithout a myſtery: As Iſaac taketh a vvife at the appointment of his father, whom he had never ſeen before out of a farre countrey, ſo Chriſt took, according to the vvill of his Father, the Gentiles for his Spouſe, being farre off from the place, vvhere he lived: And as a ſervant vvas here ſent for this purpoſe, ſo Chriſt vvent not himſelfe amongſt the Gentiles, but vvas onely amongſt the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael, but he ſent his Apoſtles to ſpeake and to make the contract for him, the Jewes amongſt whom he dwelt, being refuſed, as here vvere refuſed the daughters of Canaan: And as Abraham ſaith, that they were his kindred, to whom he ſent, ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaking of all men, yea even of the Gentiles, ſaith, We are Gods generation, to this effect almoſt Rupertus.

Lyranus. Toſtatus. Pererius.

Queſt. 5.

Rupert. lib.6. in Gen.c.38.

Note.

Queſt.6.

The Myſtery.

Rupert. lib.6. in Gen.c.38.

Acts 17.28.

Verſe 6. Verſe 7. Verſe 8.

Abraham having ſworn his ſervant, he maketh a doubt, what to do, if the woman ſhould refuſe to come with him, and whether he ſhould then carry his ſonne Iſaac thither? Which Abrahnm by all means denyeth, incouraging his ſervant by telling him, that God ſhould ſend his Angel with him, and he ſhould prevaile, but if not, he ſhould be cleare from his oath. Which is not ſo to be underſtood, as though the ſervant had power to carry or not to carry Iſaac into Meſopotamia, but that he ſhould not in his maſters behalfe undertake any ſuch matter, he being fully aſſured, that Iſaacs dutifulneſſe to his father was ſuch, that as he determined, he would be ready to obey. But what made Abraham ſo averſe from the carrying of his ſonne into that Countrey? Anſwer, Becauſe God had brought him from thence to injoy his moſt gracious promiſes touching Canaan, and children, and all ſorts of bleſſings, of which Iſaac ſhould have been made uncapable, if he left the place, where he was planted. Abraham was very confident of ſucceſſe by commemorating Queſt. Calvin.

Gods

Gods favours paſt, but howſoever, he will not yield, that Iſaac ſhould go from his place, giving us example herein to reſolve to obey God, although in ſo doing things ſucceed not according to our expectation and deſire. Note.

And the ſervant took ten Camels of his Maſters (for all the goods of his Maſter were in his hand) and he aroſe and went to Meſopotamia to the City of Nahor. Verſe 10.

In the vulgar Latine, inſtead of theſe words (for all the goods of his maſter were in his hand) are theſe, ex omnibus bonis domini ſui portans ſecum, carrying of all his maſters goods with him, whereupon ſome have laboured to reſolve, how he could be ſaid to carry all, yea even they that follow the Hebrew reading, becauſe they hold, that this mentioning of all his maſters goods being in his hand, is to be underſtood of their being in his hand, when he went this journey, and ſo imply as much, as his carrying them with him. The Hebrewes ſay, that he is ſaid to carry all, becauſe he carryed a writing, wherein they were all ſet down, as given to Iſaac. Others, that it is an Hyperbole, he carried all, that is very many. Others, that he carried ſome of all ſorts, Gold, Silver, Pearles, Precious Stones and Jewels, which were rare in Meſopotamia, as Joſephus ſaith. But theſe words, for all his maſters goods were in his hand, ſeeme ſo plainly to be a reaſon of his taking ſo many Camels, and their lading with precious things of his maſters, which is neceſſarily implyed, that we ſhall not need to labour to clear it any otherwiſe, but by ſaying, that theſe words are interpoſed, to ſhew that it was in his power to go forth thus royally furniſhed, becauſe all Abrahams goods, who was exceeding rich, were committed to his fidelity, and ſo he might at his pleaſure take with him, and diſpoſe at his pleaſure for his maſters ends, what he pleaſed. Thus alſo Muſculus. Meſopotamia is rendered by ſome, Aram-Naharaim, that is, Aram of the rivers, and by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Aram upon Euphrates. But it is all one, that Aram being in Meſopotamia, and therein Haran the city, called the city of Nahor, ſee before, Chap. 11.42. It was about four hundred miles from Canaan thither. Touching the ten camels taken by the ſervant with other precious things, wherewith they were laden, and a competent train of men to go with them, as appeareth, verſe 32. &c. although it be here paſſed over in ſilence, he did thus, that the wealth of his maſter being in ſome part ſeen, the woman, for whom he went, might the rather be induced to come with him: for it was not probable, that ſhe would willingly go into a far countrey to live alſo poorly, but ſeeing hereby the wealth of Abraham, ſhe might well cheerfully addreſſe her ſelfe to the journey, thus Calvin. Touching theſe ten Camels, it is to be underſtood, that in thoſe parts they abounded with theſe kinde of beaſts, for Job is ſaid to have had ſix thouſand, and from the Hagerens being overcome it is ſaid, that the Hebrewes tooke fifty thouſand. It is a beaſt, that carrieth a great burthen, liveth with little, and will travell very farre in a day. Julius Scaliger ſaith, that ſome of them will carry ſeven huudred pound weight, and will endure without drinking 15 dayes together, and commonly four or five, being alſo content ſo long a time with the food eaten before, and they will travell as farre, as an Horſe in a day, but there are a leſſer ſort called Dromedaries, which will travell a hundred miles in a day. Rupertus draweth this going out of Abrahams ſervants thus inſtructed into a type of the Apoſtles going out to preach the Goſpell, the riches, that they carried with them, being a power to worke miracles, that the Gentiles ſought unto for the Lord to become his Spouſe, might not doubt of his greatneſſe and power, and ſo be induced to become his Spouſe, and as Abrahams ſervant went with ten Camels, ſo they inculcated but Ten Commandments, teaching, that other carnall inſtitutions, if they would cleave unto them, did rather hinder then further them towards Chriſt, and as he was bound by oath to go, ſo they to preach under a curſe, 1 Cor. 9.16. This Allegory is proſecuted much more largely by Ferus upon this place.

Rabbini.

Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1.

Muſculus.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Calvin.

Job 42.

1 Chron. 15.

Jul. Scaliger contra Cardan. Exercit. 229.

Rupert. lib. 6. in Gen. c. 40. Servus ad Gentilitatem convertendam miſſus, i. Prædicator Evangelicus maximis à Deo inſtructus eſt muneribus, viz. de quibus dictum eſt, Aſcendens in altum captivam duxit captivit. & dona dedit hominibus, &c.

The

Verſe 11.

The ſervant being come to the City maketh his Camels to kneele dovvn (for ſo this beaſt is wont to do to reſt it ſelfe) by a well of vvater without the City, expecting doubtleſſe, when ſome woman ſhould come to dravv water, that he might vvater them there. And this is noted to have been towards the Evening, when the women were wont to come forth to draw water. Here therefore he ſtayeth praying to the Lord for good ſpeed in his buſineſſe till they came out, and he deſireth, that when a Damſell ſhould come to draw water, that if ſhe courteouſly offered to give him ſome and his Camels, that ſhe might be the woman appointed for his maſters ſon, which praying ſo ſoon as he had finiſhed, Rebecca came forth and ſhewed this courteſie unto him, whereby he was confirmed, and praiſed God for it. But here a queſtion offereth it ſelfe, whether he did well in propounding this as a ſigne, ſeeing it may ſeem to be tempting of the Lord, upon whoſe will we ought in all things to depend, and not to appoint him, whereby he ſhall confirm us touching this or that? For when Ahaz was bidden to aske a ſigne, he ſaid he would not, neither would he tempt the Lord. This queſtion is moved, and amplified by Auguſtine, with that asking of a ſigne by Gideon, but not anſwered. Chryſoſtome, Rupertus, Lyranus and others juſtifie it, as being a thing to which he was moved by the Lord, or by his Angell that went with him, of whom Abraham ſpake before, which appeareth, as Calvin alſo noteth, by the ſucceſſe granted by the Lord. Moreover, he ſhewed himſelf to be both wiſe and religious herein, and full of faith, in that he would not truſt his own judgement in a matter of ſo great moment, but ſought unto God to be his directour, remembering and beleeving the words of his maſter, and in propounding this thing for a ſigne, he conſidered, that courteſy, affability and hoſpitality would beſt ſuit with his Maſters condition, and therefore he reſpecteth not beauty or any outward thing in his prayer, but theſe good qualities. A man may not deſire a ſigne lightly, but upon ſome great and weighty occaſion, but expect the Lords giving of what ſigne it pleaſeth him, to do otherwiſe were indeed to tempt him, and to uſurpe over him.

Verſ. 12, 13, 14. &c.

Queſt.

Eſay 7.

Aug. quæſt. 53. in Gen.
Chryſoſt.
Rupertus.
Lyranus.
Calvin.

Verſe 22.

When Rebecca had done giving him and his Camels water, he taketh out an Ear-ring of half a ſhekel weight of gold, and two bracelets for her hands of ten ſhekels weight of gold, &c.

The word tranſlated ear-ring here is an ornament of the forehead, or eares, which uſed to hang by the fillet, and half a ſhekel, the weight thereof in gold is ſeven ſhillings ſix pence, yet Jerome for halfe a ſhekel, readeth it, two ſhekels, but it is not two, but halfe a ſhekel, the ten ſhekels weight of gold, ſeven pound ten ſhillings, counting them by the common ſhekel, which is fifteen ſhillings, for the ſhekel of the Sanctuary is twice ſo much, and the Kings ſhekel twenty two ſhillings ſixe pence. This may ſeem to be a very great gift, and that Abrahams ſervant was over-prodigall of his maſters goods, upon ſo ſlender an occaſion to give ſo much away. But it is to be conceived, that the man reſolved in his minde, that this maid ſhould be his young maſters wife, when as he having prayed, God provided, that all things fell out, as he had deſired for his confirmation. And happily, although it be related after he firſt asked her whoſe daughter ſhe was, and had further communication with her, and then gave her theſe things, as pledges of the future contract, thus alſo Calvin, and when he repeateth again the ſame paſſages, verſ. 47. he placeth his queſtioning with her firſt, and then his giving of thoſe ornaments unto her. And this alſo may make for an Apology for the maid, who otherwiſe might happily be thought not to have been ſo modeſt in accepting theſe things ſo readily at the hands of a ſtranger. But it may be doubted, how the uſe of ſuch coſtly ornaments may be juſtified in a woman fearing God, ſeeing S. Peter in ſpeaking of the apparell of ſuch women, ſaith, Let it not be with broided haire, and gold put about? To this Calvin ſaith, that it cannot well be juſtified, as being without all corruption, becauſe the purity of a ſincere heart is very ſeldom to be found, where there is ſuch outward ſplendour, by reaſon of Muſculus.

Hieron.
H. Bunting, Patriarchs travels.

Calvin.

Queſt.

1 Pet. 3. 3, 4, 5, &c.

of the ambition, to which women are carryed hereby. And therefore he concludeth, that other women must not go by this example, no more then they that are of highest quality, will go by her example to carry water, and to do other servile works, yet he doth not altogether condemne the use of costly ornaments in women of high quality, commendeth to all frugality herein. It was the custome, saith Musculus, of those times, for the richer sort of women to weare such pretious things, and therefore Rebecca was now furnished accordingly. I think, that it was no way blameable in her to use them, or against the rule of the Apostle: for he groundeth it upon the example of Sarah and Rebecca, &c. saying, For thus women fearing God did of old aray themselves. Wherefore he is not to be understood, as altogether forbidding the use of Gold for ornament in all women, but the vaine and conceited use thereof, and the use of it in women of meaner quality, as thinking themselves to be greatly graced hereby, although modesty, and humility, and other Christian vertues be cast off. See Ps. 45.

Calvin.

Musculus.

The man having bestowed his gifts upon Rebecca, asketh her, whose Daughter she was, and whether there were room for them in her Fathers house? she told him, that she was the Daughter of Bethuel the sonne of Nahor, and that there was not only roome, but also Litter and Provender, whereupon he praised God, and spake so as that Rebecca understood that he came from their kindred, and went in and told them of her Mothers house thereof, &c. Hereby the hospitality of Bethuel also appeareth, as of Lot and Abraham before, in that a Daughter did so readily offer lodging and entertainement to so many: for this plainly sheweth that it was usuall with her Father to entertaine travellers, so that, whatsoever corruption was in them otherwise, yet for charity and hospitality it seemeth that they were much to be commended. She goeth to her Mothers house, not that she had an house by her selfe, where her Father dwelt not, but because women that had great families, had roomes by themselves for them, their Daughters and Maid-servants, wherein they did the works belonging to women, and the men were seperated into other roomes by themselves.

Verse 23,24

Verse 25,26

Verse 27,28

Musculus.

Luther.

Laban her Brother hearing this goeth forth to the man, and most kindly welcometh him, bringing him in, and providing for his Camels, and the washing of their feet, and then for him, and the men with him to eat. But he before he would eat, told his arrand and all the things before-going from the beginning to the end, v. 29, &c. to v. 49. wherein because there is some difference in the servants relation from the foregoing History, I will a little consider of it, and reconcile it, first he saith, that Abraham bade him go to his Fathers house, v. 38. but v. 4. it is, to my Countrey and to my Kindred. Againe, v. 40 The Lord, before whom I walk, will send his Angel with thee, and prosper thy journey, but v. 7. it is, The Lord God of Heaven, who took me from my Fathers, &c. 3 v. 41. Thou shalt be discharged of mine Oath when thou comest to my kindred, if they give thee not one, but v. 8. If the woman will not follow thee, then shalt thou be discharged, &c. Lastly, v. 47. He saith, that he first asked her, whose Daughter she was, and then put the ornaments upon her, but v. 22, 23. he first gave her the ornaments, and then asked this question. But these differences for the former three, are very small and in words only, not in substance, for the last, howsoever he is said, v. 22. to have taken those ornaments out from the place, where they lay, before he asked her of her Father, yet it is not said, that he gave her them, so that when this was done remained to be further explained. Saint Augustine speaking of this difference, saith, that it justifieth the Evangelists writing diversly contrary to the opinion of foolish and unlearned men; for it is not necessary, that all things should agree in words, but in substance, because, if it had been necessary, the same Moses writing all this could easily have made all to agree in the very words. And againe he saith, It mattereth not, whether a man relate things in order or out of order, so that there be no contrarcity in the holy Scriptures. For it is not in a-Verse 29,30, 31, &c.

August. quæst. 64. in Gen. Aug. consen Evang. lib. 2. c. 12 Quid interest quo quis loco aliquid ponat, sive quod ex or-ny

dine inſerit, ſive quod omiſſum eſt recolit, ſive quod poſtea factum antè præoccupat, &c.

ny mans power to ſet down all things in order, but as he remembereth them, and it is given unto him.

Verſe 49. The ſervant having ended his relation requireth anſwere, whether they would now let Rebecca go with him, they conſent, and then he praiſeth God, and giveth her more Jewels, and gifts to her Brother and Mother, and ſhe being called, and giving her conſent, he carrieth her away with her Nurſe and Maids, being bleſſed by her Parents and Brother, verſe 49, &c. to v. 62.

Verſe 50, 51 In dealing with them about their conſent he is not very urgent, but ſaith, If they will not, that he will turne to the right hand or to the left, that is, depart without any long tarrying.

Verſe 52, &c. The Hebrews ſay, that he meant either to go to Lots or to Iſhmaels for a Wife for Iſaac, but this is a vaine conjecture, he meant, that he had done what was injoyned him, and ſo would returne without extorting a conſent from them by forcible perſwaſions, becauſe when love in theſe caſes cometh freely it is beſt, and moſt likely to hold. He giveth Rebecca more treaſure according to the cuſtome of thoſe times to the newly eſpouſed, that thus ſhe might have an experiment of his Maſters riches, the gifts ſaid to be given to her Mother and Brother, if the Hebrew words be properly tranſlated, were Apples and other ſweet fruits, yet ſome Hebrews will have them to ſignifie any precious things.

Rabbini.

Muſculus.

Verſe 62, 63 When they came neare to their journeys end, Iſaac is ſaid to have been coming from the well of Beer-lahai-roi, for he dwelt in the South Countrey, and had gone out that way towards the evening to pray. Of this we read before, Chap. 16. 14. Luther thinketh, that he dwelt not now together with his Father, but ſomewhat remote, their ſubſtance being too great for them to dwell together, and it is ſaid to be the South-Countrey, becauſe Meſopotamia lay from thence Northward. Jerome thinketh, that he dwelt at Gerar, or at Beer-ſheba, but it is plaine by Ch. 25. 11. that he dwelt by Beer-lahai-roi which was 16. miles from Hebron. The time of his going out is noted to have been towards the evening, which being coole was moſt fit to walk abroad in, in that hot Countrey. The word tranſlated (to pray) is שוח, which as Vatablus ſaith, ſignifieth to ſpeak with a low voice, as a man doth in prayer and meditation. There are divers other tranſlations of the word. 1 By the Chaldee Paraphraſt, to meditate. 2 By the Septuagint, to exerciſe. 3 By ſome Hebrews, to walk amongſt the green Trees. 4 Symmachus, to talke. 5 Aquila, to confabulate, as if he went to ſpeak with his workmen. 6 Ambroſe, to eſtrange himſelf, that is, from worldly affaires. Moſt yet agree about that of meditating and praying, howſoever there are ſome, that referre his meditating to a Philoſophicall ſtudy about naturall things, as Lyranus and Toſtatus. But I reſt in the firſt, and thus the word is often uſed, as Pſ. 70. and Pſ. 49, &c. And here we may note, both an example of piety to be imitated, and ſomething for incouragement herein, for that vvhileſt he vvas thus buſied, his much deſired help vvas by a ſingular providence at the inſtant brought unto him.

Iſuther.

Hieron.

Vatablus.

Note.

Verſe 64, 65 Rebecca eſpying Iſaac asked vvho he vvas, and being told alighted and put on a vaile. She alighted for honours ſake, becauſe it had been unfit, that ſhe ſitting upon an higher place ſhould receive him vvho vvas to be her head, upon a lovver; and a vaile ſhe put on to cover her, for modeſties ſake: For a vaile vvas ſuch a kinde of covering of ſilk or thin ſtuffe, as did cover the vvhole head and face, and much of the body, being by the Greeks called θέρισρον, of vvhich Jerome ſaith, that it vvas the covering of the vvomen of Arabia and Meſopotamia, vvhereby their bodies vvere defended from the heat of the Sunne, having the name from θερεῖν to heat. Of covering the face vve read upon foure occaſions, firſt for modeſty and ſhamefaſtneſſe here, and 1 Cor. 11. And it hath been of old much condemned for vvomen to come abroad uncovered. Tertullian ſpeaking againſt vvomen going out vvith open face, ſaith, The Ethenick Arabian vvomen ſhall condemne you, in that they cover their head and face, being content rather vvith one eye to injoy half the light, then to proſtitute the vvhole face. Valerius Maximus lib. 6. cap. 3. telleth

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

Tertull. de veland. virgin. Judicabunt vos Arabiæ fœminæ Ethnicæ, quæ non caput, ſed quoque ità totum tegunt, &c.

telleth of one Caius Sulpitius Gallus, that he tooke his wives going abroad with open face ſo heinouſly, that for this onely he put her away. 2 Another occaſion of covering the face hath beene for ſorrovv, ſo David covered his head, when he mourned for Abſalom. 3 For reverence towards the Divine Majeſty whom mortall eyes are unworthy to behold, ſo Elijah covered his face with his mantle, when the Lord appeared unto him. 4 In the caſe of being found guilty, covering of the face now being an act of one averſe, and diſdaining the party covered, as unvvorthy to look upon him; ſo the ſervants of Ahaſhueroſh covered Hamans face, and carried him forth, and hanged him.

2
1 Sam. 19.
3
1 Kings 19.
4
Heſter 7

Then the ſervant told Iſaac, what had paſſed; and he took Rebecca into his mother Sarahs tent, &c. Here I paſſe over the Allegory made by ſome of the Fathers upon Rebecca her going down from the Camel, as by Gregory ſaying, Iſaac comming towards Rebecca towards the evening of the day, vvhen ſhe ſat upon a Camell, ſetteth forth the coming of Jeſus towards the end of the World, who being in viſible in himſelf, by taking our nature upon him became viſible to the Church of the Gentiles before ſitting upon a Camel, that is, in the midſt of great uncleanneſſe and deformity, as the Camell is an unclean and deformed beaſt, upon vvhich Rebecca ſat, who thence eſpied Iſaac. And as ſhe ſeeing him alighted and covered her head, ſo the Gentiles ſeeing and hearing Jeſus to be their Saviour, come dovvn from their vices, wherein they had lived and carried themſelves proudly before, by forſaking them all, and cover themſelves with ſhame, being aſhamed of thoſe things, vvhich they formerly did. And Rupertus Allegorizeth othervviſe, but I paſſe theſe over, and come to Iſaacs bringing of Rebecca into his mothers tent, and then taking her to vvife. The order, ſaith Calvin, is here to be obſerved, he brought her not firſt to his ovvn tent, but to his mothers to ſtay there a time amongſt the vvomen, and then he married and lived vvith her and loved her, and it is not to be doubted, but that there was then a ſolemnization of their Marriage, although it be not ſpoken of. And thus men ought to deferre, and not preſently like bruit beaſts take them wives, and go in unto them. His father appointed him this wife, but he liked and loved alſo, and ſo tooke her, and was comforted after his mothers death, this is added to intimate his great affection to his mother, ſhe having been dead now three yeeres, he ſtill ſorrowed for her, and did not quite weare away that griefe, till now that for a moſt dear mother he had gotten him a moſt loving wife. In the ſervant of Abraham, the Miniſter of Gods word is ſet forth, ſaith Ferus, and in Rebecca the Church. For, 1 As he, ſo the Miniſter is ſent. 2 He prayeth, and having found praiſeth God. 3 He adorneth her eares and hands, ſignifying Faith and good works, &c. And as ſhe, ſo the Church is a Virgin. 2 Is kinde to Chriſts ſervants. 3 Followeth them. 4 Deſcendeth by humility. 5 Covereth her face.

Verſe 66, 67

Gregor. lib 35. Moral. in Job.

Rom. 6.

Calvin.

Note.

CHAP. XXV.

THen again, Abraham tooke a wife, and her name was Keturah, and ſhe bare him Zimran and Jokſhan, &c.

Verſe 1, 2.

It may ſeeme ſtrange, that Abraham being now a hundred and fourty yeeres old, ſhould marry another wife, and beget children, he being ſpoken of as dead for any act of generation at the age of a hundred, Rom. 4.19. For 1 If he were dead then, how could he be alive now to beget ſo many children? 2 Having lived a widower above three yeeres, ſince Sarahs death, what moved him being ſo aged to marry now again? 3 Seeing he was ſo carefull for his ſonne Iſaac, that he might have a wife of the daughters of his kindred, and not of the Canaanites, why had he not the like care of himſelf, ſeeing he would marry again, but a woman, as is moſt probable, or that Countrey,

Queſt.

trey, is taken by him? The Hebrews, whom Lyranus followeth, ſay, that this Keturah was Hagar, whom he had taken before, but put her away again at the inſtigation of Sarah, and to make this the more probable, they propound the ſignification of the name Keturah, as Jerome ſaith, being copulata, or conjuncta, neither doth he reject or approve this, but leaveth it. Lyranus ſaith, that Keturah ſignifieth thurificata, as intimating, that after her ejection ſhe kept her ſelfe pure, as if ſhe had been Conſecrated to God. Tho. Anglus likewiſe is very earneſt in maintaining, that ſhe was Hagar, alleadging Jerome, for this opinion, upon 1 Chron. where he ſaith, Keturah is Hagar, as appeareth, Pſal. 82. where it is ſaid, The tabernacles of the Edomites, Iſhmaelites, Moabites and Hagarens; by the Iſhmaelites, the poſterity of Hagar by Iſhmael being underſtood, and by the Hagarens the Madianites & other peoples coming of her under the name of Keturah. And again, 1 Chron. 5. the Itureans, Napheans and Nodab are ſaid to have holpen the Hagarens, whereas theſe three peoples came of Iſhmael, and therefore the Hagarens muſt be others coming of her alſo. But theſe are onely conjectures: For the Hagarens might be the name of ſome Iſhmaelites ſingularly, and other families coming of him might be called by other names. And generally, as Lyranus confeſſeth, the Fathers underſtand not Hagar by Keturah, but ſome other younger woman. Againſt that opinion of her being Hagar maketh firſt Hagars age, vvhich muſt needs be novv about 80 yeares, and therefore could not by ſo old a man have ſo many children vvithout a greater miracle, then that of Iſaac. 2 The vvords here uſed in Hebrevv, Abraham added and took a Wife, &c. 3 The vvords follovving, v. 6. To the ſonnes of his Concubines he gave gifts, ſo that he had more then one Hagar. Laſtly, the name Keturah being a proper name, whereas if it had been Hagar, ſhe ſhould have been ſo called. She was therefore doubtleſſe ſome other younger woman, and happily of that Countrey, and moſt probably not now firſt taken after Sarahs death, and Iſaacs marriage, but rather long before, although it be not related, till now in the concluſion of his Hiſtory, that nothing concerning him might be finally omitted, although hitherto let paſſe. For as ſhe is here called Abrahams Wife, ſo 1 Chron. 1. 32 ſhe is ſaid to be his Concubine, intimating his taking of her, whileſt Sarah was yet alive: for although ſuch are called ſometimes Wives, and ſometimes Concubines, yet one woman taken alone, when a man hath none other Wife, is never called but his Wife. And this Calvin holdeth to be moſt probable, and it may be thought that Abraham was moved hereunto, although it be not expreſſed that thus many Nations, beſides the Iſraelites and Iſhmaelites, might ſpring out of him, as by this meanes it ſhall by and by appeare that they did. Yet Origen and Auguſtine hold, that he married her according to the order here followed, becauſe when he was altogether without iſſue, he never took any other woman, till that by the importunity of Sarah he was drawn to take Hagar, and therefore they think, that now much leſſe, having iſſue, he would of his owne minde take another during the life of Sarah. But to this it may be ſaid, that God having given new vigour unto his body to beget Iſaac, when he was old, he might happily being more fit ſtill for generation, be moved of his own minde to take another wife, becauſe, as Calvin ſaith, when a man hath once begun to take the liberty of having a Concubine, he groweth the more bold to take another, but he condemneth it in him, as ill done, howſoever I cannot for my part in this ſubſcribe unto him, as I have partly touched before in ſpeaking of Polygamy, Gen. 4. Saint Auguſtine holding this to have been a new marriage after Sarahs death ſaith, that Abraham had not only ſtrength ſufficient given unto him for a little time to beget Iſaac, but that by divine inſtauration he reflouriſhed all the reſt of his life, whereby as Calvin ſaith, is added to the glory of the miracle, and therefore he imbraceth it, as touching the reflouriſhing of his bodily force. And for the excuſing of him as being herein carried by carnall luſt in ſo old an age, Origen ſaith, that it was done by an inſtinct from God for a myſtery, this marriage

Lyranus.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

Tho. Anglus. Calvin.

Gen. 12.

Origen. Hom. 11. in Gen.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt. 70. Non exigui temporis tantum datum fuit illi robur, quod ad gignendum Iſaac ſufficeret, ſed divinâ inſtauratione in reliquum vitæ tempus reflоruit. Origen. Hom. 11. in Gen.

marriage setting forth the marrying of wisdome to the minde, which is not, till old age cometh on. But Augustine better, that, as his taking of Hagar and getting a childe of her was done in a figure, as likewise the begetting of Isaac of Sarah, viz. the wicked, which are children of the flesh being set forth by the one, and the faithfull, who are the children of promise by the other, as Saint Paul teacheth, *Gal.*4. so his taking of Keturah, and begetting children of her, may be figurative and mysticall also; Hereticks being set forth by these children, who are not permitted to inherit with the faithfull, but are sent away as well as the wicked, although they have all some common gifts given unto them, as wealth and prosperity, and wit and learning, and this World. These things being thus premised, I come now to the answering of the doubts put before. First he took this woman, as he did Hagar, before the death of Sarah, for which she is called his Concubine, 1 Chron 1.32. and not being so old, as is supposed. Secondly, although he were old, when he took her, for I suppose that it was some good space after the birth of Isaac, yet the naturall force by God miraculously renued and still continued in him, made him, as if he had bin younger. Thirdly, he was not so solicitous for him self in this matter for the choice, as for his son Isaac, because it was said, that in Isaac his seed should be called, and he was to be the seminary of the Church. Lastly, this was not done by so great a Patriarch carryed through the love of a woman, after the manner of other ordinary men, but by a singular providence in a mystery, as hath been said. Now for the children begotten of Keturah; Zimran, Jocsan, Medan, Midian, Isbach, and Suah, two of them only are spoken of as having issue, Jocsan and Midian; the off-spring of the other foure is omitted, as inhabiting peradventure parts more remote, & therefore unknown to the Hebrews. Josephus saith, that all of them possessed the Region of the Troglodites, and Arabia Fœlix unto the Red-Sea. And that it was reported, that Epher the sonne of Midian, whom he calleth Ophres, went with an Army, and took Lybia, & that from him Africa took the name. Hieronymus having said the same with Josephus addeth, that Assurim one of the sonnes of Dedan gave the name to the Syrians, according to some, and that divers of the children of Keturah here mentioned, went and possessed the Regions of India. Moreover, he saith, that Midian gave the name to the City Madian beyond Arabia towards the South in the desert of the Saracens, whence they were called Madianites. And of this Madian & Ephah the son of Madian he saith, that the whole Province, where these people dwelt, is called by a general name Saba, from whence the Q. of Saba came. Of Madian & Epha, Esaiah writeth, saying, The Dromidaries of Madian and Epha all shall come from Saba, bringing Gold and Frankincense, &c. Of the Madianites joining with the Moabites against Israel it is written, Numb. 22. 25, 31. And of Dedan the sonne of Jocsan Ezechiel writeth, saying, The sonnes of Dedan were thy Merchants. Of the rest we read nothing afterwards, and therefore we must leave them without saying any more of them, but only that Sheba the sonne of Jocsan may seeme to be he, that gave the name to Saba, where Madian and Epha also dwelt. For of three men of this name we do read. 1 The sonne of Chus. 2 Of Jectan, who came of Heber, and 3 This Sheba; and accordingly there were three Sabaes. 1 In Arabia Fœlix, and these came of the Seba here mentioned, as Jerome saith. 2 By the Persians. 3 In India according to Dionysius. It is to be noted, that none were more infest enemies to the Hebrewes, then some of these, as we shall divers times read of them in this kinde, and of the other Kinsmen of theirs, the Moabites, Edomites, and Ishmaelites, and even so the Church of God is most exercised with the enmity of Hereticks springing from the same fountaine with themselves.

Augustin lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap 34.

Verse 2.

Joseph. Antiq. lib. 1.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

Lib. 17. in Esaiam.

Esay 60.

Ezech. 27.

Dionys. de Situ Orbis.

5. Now although Abraham had thus many children besides Isaac, yet he gave all that he had to him, and to the rest he gave gifts. According to the manner of leaving the inheritance to a sonne begotten of a Wife, so did Abraham, but for the chidren of his Concubines, he first gave them gifts, that is bestowed

Verse 5,6.

ſomething upon them to carry away with them, to help towards their maintenance, and ſo ſent them away, whileſt he yet lived, then all, which remained, came to Iſaac. A Concubine, as the Hebrews ſay, is an hand-maid taken to the bed of her Maſter, without any Writing being made, or Matrimoniall ceremonies, but a Wife hath both. If it be demanded, why Abraham ſent theſe his children away, reteining Iſaac only with him? It is anſwered, that this was done, becauſe Iſaac ought by Gods promiſe to inherit that Land, leſt, if they had ſtayed there ſtill, they ſhould have been ſome interruption unto him. And againe, he believed, that each of them would be multiplyed into a Nation, according to that of the Lord, A Father of many Nations have I made thee, and therefore it was neceſſary to ſend them into other parts, forſomuch as that Land could not be able to conteine them. Laſtly, he feared envy, that might grow in them againſt Iſaac poſſeſſing all that he had, they having but little beſtowed upon them. Wherefore he ſent them away, whileſt he lived, Eaſtward, into the Eaſt-Countrey, that is, not Eaſtward in the Land of Canaan, but quite out from all thoſe bounds, to Arabia, Armenia, Meſopotamia, and Perſia, which, as farre as the Perſian Gulph, are uſually called in the holy Scripture the Eaſt-Countrey. And from amongſt them againe, moſt probably from Arabia Fœlix, came the Magi to worſhip Chriſt, who are ſaid to have come out of the Eaſt.

Queſt.

Gen. 17.5.

Verſe 7,8. After theſe things thus done, Abraham dyed and was gathered to his people, being 175 yeares old, for which he is ſaid to have been of a good old age, and full of dayes. The words uſed to ſhew that he dyed, are, He gave up the Ghoſt, and dyed, whereupon Aven-Ezra noteth, that he dyed not any painefull death by any ſickneſſe, but his ſpirit gently departing from his body, the force of nature being in this long continuance of time quite ſpent in him, and therefore it is ſaid, he was of a good old age, and full of dayes; and thus the promiſe of the Lord made unto him, Gen. 15.15. was fulfilled. Touching the words added, and was gathered to his people, they are diverſly expounded by divers. Firſt by Philo, who will have thoſe things, whereof man was made, his Fathers or people, unto which he is againe gathered, when he dyeth, viz. Water, Fire, Earth and Aire, of vvhich the body is compoſed, and to vvhich it returneth, and the ſky, of vvhich the ſoule is a part, and unto vvhich it is elevated, being placed vvith the ſtarres, but this is rather Platonicall then Theologicall.

Aven-Ezra.

Philo.

Secondly Saint Auguſtine underſtandeth by his people, the company of Angels, unto vvhom the ſoules of juſt men are aggregated, vvhen they dye. For ſaith he, in ſpeaking of Jacob, concerning vvhom the like phraſe is uſed if it had been ſaid, unto his Fathers, there had been no doubt, vvho vvere meant, but in that he ſaith, to his people, conſidering that there vvere very fevv before Jacob of his people, and ſo it may be doubted, whether they could be called a people or no, I cannot think, that his Progenitours are meant, but the Angels of Heaven. And this is followed by the interlinear gloſſe, the Maſter of the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, and Toſtatus.

Aug. quæſt. 28 in Gen.

Gen. 49.

Thirdly, Theodoret expoundeth it, as an intimation of the immortality of the ſoule, and of the reſurrection, becauſe if men in death did altogether periſh, it would not have been ſaid, that they were gathered to their people. And Rupertus ſaith, that the phraſe is borrowed from the gathering in of Corne out of the field to be layd in the Barne, the meaning being, that even ſo the elect in death are gathered out of the open of this World into the ſecret of thoſe that are at reſt. So likevviſe Lyranus, but that he maketh the place of their reſting Limbus Patrum. And Luther followeth Theodoret, and divers others, holding that the mortality of the ſoule is here obſcurely intimated, becauſe otherwiſe in death there could be no gathering unto a people, but now that men dying are gathered unto their people, it muſt needs be yielded, that they periſh not, but paſſe from one people to another, that departed hence before them. And he is ſaid to be gathered unto his peoples in the plurall

Theod. quæſt. 109. in Gen.
Rupert. in Gen. cap. ult.

Lyranus.
Luther.
Muſculus.

plurall number, becauſe the peoples of divers Countreys, that have lived and dyed well, come together after death into one place of reſt. Fourthly, ſome other new Writers there are, that underſtand theſe words only, as an Hebraiſme to expreſſe death, to be gathered unto his people, to be gathered to his Fathers, and to go the way of all fleſh being one and the ſame thing, that is, to come to the ſame eſtate with others, that have dyed before. This laſt, howſoever it cannot be denyed to be true, yet as in many other Phraſes in the Hebrew tongue, under the literall a myſticall ſenſe lyeth hid, ſo it may be in this phraſe, forſomuch as men dying are ſaid to be gathered to the people, they periſh not, as do beaſts, but continue ſtill in their ſoules, and according as they have been of the ſort of the good, or of the bad people, that have gone before them, they are gathered unto them, the one ſort being together in one place, and the other in another. That by this phraſe is not meant a gathering into the company of the good Angels is plaine, becauſe the ſame is uſed alſo touching Iſhmael, v. 17. and by the ſame reaſon it appeareth, that a gathering into the ſecret of thoſe that be at reſt, is not alwayes meant, but only when he is a good man, touching whoſe death it is ſpoken. Otherwiſe he is gathered to the people of his own quality and condition.

Abraham being dead is buried by his ſonnes Iſaac and Iſhmael, where Sarah was buried before. Iſhmael is ſaid before to have been caſt out, but it ſeemeth, that he went not ſo farre, but he could heare of his Fathers death, and come to do a filiall duty towards him, of the coming of his other ſonnes by Keturah we read not, for they were ſent further off into the Eaſt-Countrey, and Iſhmael was more beloved of his Father then any of them, as is moſt probable by his expreſſions ſometimes. There had been great difference between Iſaac and Iſhmael in times paſt, but now their Father being dead, they agree in one about his buriall. Nothing ought to hinder us from doing this laſt duty towards our deceaſed Parents: for mens bodies are not any way to be put into the ground, as the carkaſes of beaſts, but as precious things to be laid up there with ſome ſolemnity, as being bodies that ſhall riſe againe. After the buriall of Abraham, it is ſhewed in brief how God bleſſed Iſaac, and that he dwelt by the Well of Beer-lahai-roi. Then of Iſhmael it is ſaid, that he had 12 ſonnes, Nebaioth, Chedar, Abdeel, Mibſam, Miſmah, Dumah, Meſah, Hadar, Themah, Getur, Naphis, Chedma, who were Princes, which is inſerted to ſhew the verifying of Gods promiſe to Abraham that he ſhould beget 12 Princes, Chap. 17. 10. And it is ſaid, that theſe were their names in their generations, the Tribes that came of them being called by their names, as the Tribes of Iſrael by the names of their Fathers, of Nebaioth, thus the Nabathen Countrey being a part of Arabia, had the name, becauſe they dwelt there, viz. from Euphrates to the Red-Sea. We read alſo of the Tents of Chedar, of the plaines of Dumah, of Thema alſo Southward, and Chedma Eaſtward, ſo Muſculus.

And Iſhmael being 137 years old dyed. But his children dwelt from Havilah to Sur before Egypt, as a man entereth into Aſſyria, in the ſight of all his Brethren. This Havilah cannot be in India, as ſome ſuppoſe, but in Arabia, ſee before, Gen. 2.11. becauſe the other bound of their dwelling is ſaid to be Zur, or the Red-Sea before Egypt. And Iſhmael is ſaid in his poſterity to have dwelt before all his Brethren, to ſhew the fulfilling of that promiſed touching him, Chap. 16.11. where the meaning of this phraſe may be ſeene. The word tranſlated dwelt is נפל, which ſignifieth, as Calvin ſaith, to reſt or to dwell, or to fall, as Vatablus, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt, who ſupplyeth it with this word Lot, as if it had been ſaid, his lot fell to him before all his Brethren, and ſome underſtand it, as if it had been ſaid, he fell or dyed before all his Brethren, that is, they ſurviving, but he at this age being cut off. But as Calvin well noteth, this is a forced Expoſition, and forſomuch as the word may be expounded, dwelt, we ſhall not need to ſupply it with, Lot, but expound it thus. The meaning is, that the Iſhmaelites dwelt neare

Verſe 9,10.

Note.

Verſe 11.
Verſe 12,13, 14,15,16.

Calvin.

Muſculus.

Verſe 17.
Verſe 18.

Chald. Paraphraſt.
Vatablus.
Calvin.

neare the Iſraelites, but were not mingled with them. And ſo Moſes ſoone endeth his relation touching Iſhmael, that he might henceforth dwell altogether upon the Hiſtory of Iſaac, of whom Gods Church came, for the cauſe whereof this Hiſtory was undertaken by him. It may be noted, that Iſhmael is the only wicked man, whoſe age is ſet forth in all the Bible, and of whom it is ſaid, as of Abraham, he was gathered to his people, whereupon ſome have thought that he repented before his death, but the phraſe of gathering to his people may as well be underſtood of the wicked like unto him, as it is of the faithfull, when it is applyed to Abraham and ſuch like.

Verſe 20, 21

Iſaac, he ſaith, was 40 yeares old, when he married Rebecca, and ſhe being barren, he entreated the Lord for her, and ſhe conceived. His age of 40 is not ſet down in vaine, but to ſhew his continency, in that he kept himſelfe chaſte hitherto, not being carryed by the luſts of youth, which are moſt violent. And this example is in ſome ſort to be followed by others, it is their duty to ſtrive againſt the fleſh, and not at the firſt aſſaults to yield unto it, for they do ſo either intangle themſelves by immature marriages with many diſtracting troubles, or elſe ruſh into fornications or adulteries to their utter overthrow. The barrenneſſe of Rebecca continued til the 20 yeare, as appeareth, v. 26. If it be demanded, why ſhe was ſo long without fruit, as Sarah alſo was farre longer, and other good women after them? It is anſwered by Chryſoſtome, that thus a way might be made to our believing, that it was poſſible with God to make a Virgin to conceive and to bring forth a Son: for this reaſon is uſed to the Virgin Mary, Behold, thy couſin Elizabeth hath alſo conceived, for nothing ſhall be impoſſible with God. And againe, that men might not love their Wives the leſſe being barren, nor they be the more diſcouraged hereby, becauſe barrenneſſe is a thing incident to the very beſt. Theodoret ſaith, that God would hereby ſhew, that the Iſraelitiſh ſtock was to be multiplied not by naturall ſucceſſion, but by his grace and favour, becauſe Chriſt was to come of them. And truly all theſe reaſons put together may ſerve fully to ſatisfie this doubt: for why ſhould we doubt of the conception of a Virgin, when as Wombs naturally barren and dead through age have conceived? And Iſrael being the Church of God, it doth excellently ſerve, to ſhew Gods grace to be the fountaine hereof, and of all election.

Luther.
Muſculus.

Queſt.
Chryſoſt. Hom. 49. in Gen.

Theod. quæſt. 74 in Gen.
Volens Deus genus Iſraeliticum componere, oſtendit illud non naturali ſucceſſione, ſed gratiâ & favore ſuo eſſe multiplicandum.

If it be further demanded when Iſaac began to pray, that his Wife might be fruitfull? Some ſay, when in continuance of time he found that ſhe was barren. But the anſwer of Chryſoſtome and others is more probable, that he began to pray thus ſoone, as he was married, perſevering herein 20 yeares together. For he knew well, that the fruit of the womb is of Gods ſpeciall bleſſing, and he hoped for an holy ſeed, wherefore being married, it is not to be doubted, but he ſought this preſently by prayer, and although the Lord did long deferre to grant his requeſt, yet he continued to pray till he had obteined, and ſo muſt every faithfull man do, and being never weary of praying, he ſhall at length prevaile in that which may be to Gods glory. Iſaac, ſaith Calvin, in being thus delayed was no leſſe exerciſed, then Abraham had been before. An innumerable off-ſpring was promiſed; but what conflicts muſt he needs have in his faith, and Abraham alſo, who was ſtill alive, to ſee, how ſlowly Gods promiſe took effect? yet he believed ſtill and prayed. The word tranſlated (for Rebecca) may alſo be rendered in her preſence, or being over againſt her, as if he had taken her to pray together with him, and ſo ſome, ſaith Vatablus, underſtand it, but it is more ſimple to read it, in reſpect of her, or for her. The Hebrews have a tradition, that he took her with him to Mount Moria, and there prayed. Laſtly, it may be demanded, why Iſaac prayed thus, when as he was ſure by reaſon of Gods promiſe, that he ſhould have iſſue, and how his Wives bearing fruit can be aſcribed unto his praying, as it is in this place? To this Gregory anſwereth ſaying, Things not predeſtinated cannot be obteined by prayer, but ſuch things, as holy men obteine by prayer, are ſo predeſtinated, that they ſhould be obteined by prayer. For Queſt.

Chryſoſt.
Vatablus.

Note.

Calvin.
Vatablus.
Pirke R. Eliezer cap. 32.
Greg. lib. 1. Dialog. cap. 8.
Obtineri nequaquam poſſunt quæ prædeſtinata non fuerunt, ſed ea quæ ſancti viri orando efficiunt, ita prædeſtinata ſunt, ut precibus obtineantur, &c.

even even the predeſtination of the eternall Kingdome is ſo by Almighty God diſpoſed, that the elect muſt come to it with labour, in that by prayer they come to obteine that which from eternity God hath decreed to give unto them, as appeareth in the example of Iſaac praying for his Wife. Wherefore Iſaac did herein but his duty, and his Wife conceiving, both Gods decree took effect, and he obteined that which he ſought by prayer.

Verſe 22. Verſe 23.

And the Children ſtrugled within her, and ſhe ſaid, If it be ſo, why am I thus? and ſhe went and inquired of the Lord. 23 And the Lord ſaid unto her, Two Nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people ſhall be ſeparated from thy bowels, and the one people ſhall be ſtronger then the other, and the elder ſhall ſerve the younger. The word tranſlated, ſtrugled witkin her, is diverſly tranſlated, by Ambroſe exultabant, by Auguſtine geſtiebant, by Jerome ludebant, vel calcitrabant, by Aquila conſtringebantur, by Symmachus, they were carried after the manner of a ſhip upon the ſuperficies. The word is רצם ſignifying confringere, ſo that they did ſeem to fight and to teare one another. And this colluctation was not naturall, but ſtirred up extraordinarily by God, to portend ſomething to come, as Rupertus ſaith. Theſe children ſmote one againſt another, not out of a deſire to contend, or out of any skill to ſtrive, or affectation of victory, but being moved by the ſame inſtinct of God, whereby unreaſonable beaſts and inanimate Elements are wont to be moved for a preſage of things to come. VVherefore Rebecca was troubled greatly at this ſtrange accident, ſaying, Why am I thus? that is, if the Infants within me ſhall teare one another, why have I conceived? it had been better for me not to have conceived at all. It is the ſpeech of one much perplexed, and doubtfull, whether God cauſed it to be thus, as a ſigne of his anger, or otherwiſe. Wherefore ſhe goeth to aſk of the Lord. But whither went ſhe, ſeeing there was now no Prophet, or Prieſt to go unto? Some ſay, that ſhee went to Melchiſedeck, who was Shem, that dwelt at Jeruſalem, and lived till the 48 yeare of Jacob. But this is meerly conjecturall, and therefore not to be grounded upon. Others ſay, that ſhe went to Abraham being a Prophet, or to ſome other Prophet of thoſe times: but then it would have been ſo expreſſed, as when Joſiah ſent to Huldah the Propheteſſe to inquire of the Lord. Others, that ſhe went to the Prieſt; but ſay not to what Prieſt. Others, to the place of ſacrificing before ſome Altar, and that ſhe prayed there. Some, that ſhe went only in private, and prayed, and had anſwer, as Diodorus Tarſenſis, Calvin, and Muſculus. And ſome, that ſhe went no whither with the feet of her body, but with her minde, lifting it up to God, as Origen. I ſubſcribe to them that are for her going to ſome place, becauſe otherwiſe it would not have been ſaid, that ſhe went to enquire, but only that ſhe enquired. And for ſo much as there were Altars ſet up by Abraham, where he uſed to call upon the Lord, it is moſt probable, that ſhe went to one of them, hoping, that as God had ſometimes ſpoken unto him, ſo he would now to her to reſolve her in the midſt of her doubts. Touching the Lords anſwere to her, Two Nations, that is, the heads of two Nations are in thy wombe, and the one ſhall grow in time ſtronger then the other, that the younger then the elder; this is not ſpoken ſo much, as all obſerve, in reſpect of worldy preeminence, but of Gods grace, whereby the poſterity of the one ſhould be made Gods Church, and peculiarly beloved people, the other being rejected, as if it had not come of Iſaac, but of heathen Parents. Of the Apoſtles applying of this to prove election to be of grace, Rom 9,10. ſee what is ſaid in my expoſition thereupon. Certainly none other reaſon can be rendered, why the younger ſhould rather be choſen then the elder, but becauſe God would hereby magnifie his grace in electing any, ſeeing if any reſpect were had herein unto man, the eldeſt ſhould rather have been preferred. That which is thus Hiſtorically ſaid, touching theſe two children in the womb of Rebecca, is myſtically alſo expounded by the ancient Fathers. Firſt, by theſe two peoples, the people of the Gentiles, and of the Jewes being underſtood, of which the elder, that is, the Jewes ſerve the younger, Rupert. lib. 7. in Gen. cap. 3. Colliděbantur, parvuli, non ſtudio contendendi, vel ſcientiâ certandi, vel affectatione vincendi, ſed eodem Dei nutu permoti, quo irrationalia pecora, & inanimata elementa præſagio futurorum moveri ſolent. Vatablus.

Queſt. Hebræi. Euſeb. Gennadius. Aben-Ezra.

Chryſoſt. Theod. quæſt. 75. in Gen. Diodorus Tarſenſis. Calvin. Muſculus. Origen.

younger, that is, the Gentiles. For we Gentiles according to the order of our calling, are younger, and the Jews elder, as Rupertus hath it, and as Eſau ſerved Jacob, when by David the Edomites were ſubdued and made tributary, ſo the Gentiles came to be ſuperiour to the Jews, when the Jews, as the naturall branches of the Olive-Tree were broken off, and they being branches of a wild Olive were graffed in. And this Saint Auguſtine ſaith, hath been ſo commonly received, that none almoſt of ours hath underſtood it otherwiſe, and he ſaith, that the Jews ſerve the Gentiles, becauſe they carry about the Books of the Law and Prophets, wherein Chriſt is ſet forth, and by looking into which (being the Books of Chriſts enemies) every one may be the more confirmed. Again, the ſame Auguſtine by theſe two peoples underſtandeth two ſorts of people in the Church of Chriſt, waſhed and borne againe in the ſame fountaine of regeneration Baptiſme, as thoſe two came of the ſame Mother Rebecca, that is, the Godly and the wicked, of which the wicked may be ſaid rightly to be the Major, tranſlated Elder, becauſe they are more by farre then the Godly, or the greater part at all times, as the word properly ſignifieth, and they ſtrive continually together, as theſe children did in the womb, but the elder, that is, the company of the wicked ſhall ſerve the younger, that is, the Godly, becauſe they ſhall in their perſecuting of them be made, as the fire and hammer ſerveth Gold, to purifie it, and the Mill wheat, to make fine meale thereof. Origen by Rebecca her conceiving of theſe two, underſtandeth every good Chriſtian, who conceiveth evill thoughts many more in his minde then good, and before them, yet by grace he ſubdueth them, and is carried, moſt by the good and ſo the ſpirit overcometh the fleſh, and vice giveth place to vertue in all ſuch.

Rupert. in Gen. lib 7. cap. 4.
2 Sam. 8.
Rom. 11.
Aug. de Civit. Dei. lib. 16. c. 25 Nemo ferè noſtrûm aliter intellexit quàm majorem populum Judæorum minori populo Chriſtiano ſerviturum.
Aug. Serm. 78. de Tempore.
Origen. hom. 12. in Gen.

Verſe 24. And when her dayes to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were Twinnes in her Womb.
Verſe 25. 25. And the firſt came out red all over like an hairy Garment, and they called his name Eſau, Verſe 26. 26. And after that came his Brother out, and his hand took hold on Eſaus heel, and his name was called Jacob, &c.

The firſt of theſe Twinnes appeared monſtrous, becauſe it is contrary to nature for the childe of a woman to be borne with haire upon it, except the head only: but this childe was borne hairy like a beaſt, as we may ſee afterward in that Jacob to make his Father believe, that he was Eſau, covered his hands with skinnes of Kids. Ariſtotle ſaith, that very much haire upon the body of a man doth ſhew abundance of excrements, and therefore that ſuch are moſt libidinous, and moreover, of a very ſtrong body, and hot conſtitution, and one ſubtle, and fierce, and cruell. His outward phyſiognomy therefore ſhewed his quality, although it be not alwayes to be taken heed unto, as Muſculus noteth. Touching the reaſon of his name Eſau, it ſeemeth to come of עשה to make, becauſe he was made ſo at the firſt, as others grow to in time, viz. hairy, and therefore ſome ſay, that Eſau is quaſi perfectus, as it were perfect. But Jerome, who obſerveth, that he had three names Eſau, Edom, and Seir, ſaith, that Eſau ſignifieth either a making an heap of ſtones, red, or vaine, yet coming to ſcanne the reaſon of the name Edom, that he was ſo called, becauſe of the red pottage, which he ſo deſired, and of the name Seir, which ſignifieth hairy. He ſeemeth plainly to diſlike that of his being called Eſau from redneſſe; Yet Origen and Rupertus alſo are for this, that he was thus called, becauſe red. I reſt in the firſt, Eſau, was ſo called, as who was a perfect man at the firſt, having haire all over him when he was borne, as men have afterwards, yea and much more.

Ariſtot. lib. 3. hiſt. animal.
Muſculus.
Muſculus. Oleaſter. Cajetan. Hieron. interpret. ominum Hebraic.

The other of the Twinnes from his manner of comming forth, viz. holding Eſau by the heel, is called Jacob, that is, a ſupplanter, who is properly one that holdeth another by the heel, that he can go no further, or do no more, but metaphorically to ſupplant is to deceive, as Eſau afterwards applieth it. Jacobs coming forth in this manner ſhewed his after-ſtrife with Eſau about the birth-right, by holding him thus in the going out, his plucking of him back, that he might be in his place, being declared. Now Iſaac

Gen. 27.

is ſaid to have been 60 yeares old, when theſe children were borne, ſo that Abraham lived ſtill, and 15 yeares after this, wherefore all things are not ſet down in order, as they were done, ſeeing Abrahams death is ſet forth before this. Verſe 26.

And Eſau was a cunning hunter, but Jacob a plaine man dwelling in Tents. Verſe 27.
The vulgar Latine hath it, Eſau was a cunning hunter and an Husbandman, but erroneouſly, the Septuagint render it better, a man of the field, that was of a ſtirring ſpirit, and loved to range abroad in hunting, Jacob contrariwiſe had not that cunning in him, but was a ſimple plaine man, that kept at home, giving himſelf to look to Sheep and other cattel, and to domeſticall affaires, as his progenitours Abraham and Iſaac had done, preferring thus to lead a quiet life, yet Gregory and others of the Ancients follow the vulgar Latin, Eſau was a cunning hunter and Husbandman, and whereas Jacob is ſaid to have been a plaine man, they having reſpect to the word תם here uſed, which ſignifieth perfect, innocent or ſincere, ſay, that it is meant, that he was ſuch an one, as our Saviour Chriſt commandeth us all to be, viz. innocent as a Dove, and perfectly juſt. And ſuch doubtleſſe he was, for, as Jerome ſaith, Wit without goodneſſe is malice, and ſimplicity without reaſon is folly, wherefore he is to be thought to have been ſo a ſimple plaine man, as that he had wiſdome withall to take heed of other mens treacheries, and to work for his own good, when opportunity was offered, as appeareth by his getting of the birth-right from Eſau, and by his peeling of rods, and laying them before the Sheep and Goats to make them bring forth partie-coloured, whereby he was inriched. But becauſe in ſaying that he was a plaine man, Moſes oppoſeth him to Eſau a cunning hunter, he doth not meane hereby to ſet forth his wit, but his innocency, and that he had not that dexterity and art, which Eſau had to hunt and kill wilde beaſts, but like a ſimple man contented himſelf to go on in ſuch a courſe as every one might do, in keeping about home, and looking to ſheep, &c. And touching Eſau his being an Husbandman, there is nothing, whereby this may be gathered, but only an hunter, and ſo one, that for his following that courſe of life might well be called, A man of the field. We read but of one before, that was an hunter, and he alſo was wicked, viz. Nimrod, and the wicked are often ſet forth by the name of hunters, as Pſ. 91. He will deliver thee from the ſnare of the hunter, and Pſ. 124. Our ſoule is eſcaped, as a ſparrow out of the hand of the hunters, &c.; Mich. 7. yet it is not to be thought, that hunting in it ſelfe is evill, or that all hunters are wicked: for it is a kinde of art and exerciſe, that ſtrengtheneth the body, and maketh men fit for Warre, as Xenophon teacheth, neither would Iſaac doubtleſſe have incouraged Eſau herein, as he did, if it had been an evill courſe. And God ſeemeth to allow hereof, when he directeth to cover in the Earth the bloud of that which is killed in hunting, if the beaſt or fowle taken thus, were ſuch as he might eat of it. And more plainly when he ſaith, Pſ. 132. 15. I will abundantly bleſſe her proviſion; for the word here uſed in the Hebrew, is her hunting. Moreover, why were wilde beaſts, as wellas tame appointed to be food for man, and how ſhall man ſubdue thoſe that be hurtfull, but by hunting and killing of them? The only fault is, that ſuch as give themſelves to hunting, and all that live a ſtirring and turbulent life, being ſo much in action, lay aſide for the moſt part contemplation, and therefore their mindes, not being formed hereby, they are more rude and fierce, and more tainted with vice, then ſuch as lead a more quiet and retired life, as Jacob did. But what is meant in ſaying that he dwelt in Tents? The Chaldee Paraphraſt readeth it, Erat vir integer, & miniſter domûs doctrinæ. And accordingly the Hebrews ſay, that by Tents here are to be underſtood places of teaching, which he frequented there to learne Wiſdom and the feare of the Lord, ſuch as were the Schooles of Melchiſedeck and Heber. But as Muſculus obſerveth well, this is to go from the plaine meaning to uncertaine conjectures. For Abrahams and Iſaacs Tents are alſo ſpoken of before, and in like

Muſculus.

Hieron. in Matth. c. 10. Prudentia abſque bonitate malitia, ſimplicitas abſque ratione ſtultitia nominatur. Gen. 30.

Note.

Gen. 10. 9.

Xenophon. Venatoria exercitatio eſt quaſi bellorum progymnaſiſma. Levit. 17.

Chald. Paraphraſt. Lyranus.

Muſculus.

like manner nothing elſe is meant here, but that Jacob alſo kept in his Tents, which were pitched here and there, as was moſt fit to look to and to feed his Fathers cattel. Gregory ſaith, it is in one tranſlation, he dwelt at home, making an excellent Allegory hereof. By Eſau an hunter, their life is figured out, who being addicted to outward pleaſures follow the fleſh, but Jacob a ſimple plaine man, who dwelt in Tents, or at home, ſuch as will not be diffuſed into outward cares, but do ſimply keep within the habitation of their conſcience by meditation: for to dwell at home is to reſtreine a mans ſelfe within the ſecrets of the minde, and not to be diſſipated outwardly by deſires, leſt whileſt they gape after many things abroad, being eſtranged from cogitations they ſhould fall from themſelves. The divers diſpoſitions of theſe Twinnes do plainly evince, that Genethliacall Aſtrology is vaine: for if there were any power in Conſtellations in this reſpect, theſe two being borne under the ſame Conſtellation, muſt needs have been of like conditions. If it be ſaid, the Conſtellation might vary in that little diſtance of time that was betwixt the birth of the one and of the other: Saint Auguſtine anſwereth, that if in ſo ſhort a time there be ſo great a variation, no mortall man can ſo juſtly pitch upon the point of time, as to finde out any thing certainly hereby. And Gregory, that by this reaſon there ſhould be divers conditions of one and the ſame man, ſeeing none come forth wholly at the ſame inſtant, but by degrees, and therefore there ſhould be as many fates of ſome, as there are members of the body.

Greg. lib. 5. Moral. Quid aliud per venationem Eſau, niſi eorum vita figuratur, qui in exterioribus voluptatibus ſuſi carnem ſequuntur. Jacob autem vir ſimplex in tabernaculis, vel domo habitavit, quia omnes, qui in cu as exteriores ſpargi refugiunt ſimplices in cogitatione ſua, atque in conſcientiæ ſuæ habitatione conſiſtunt. Domi enim habitare eſt ſe intra mentis ſecreta reſtringere, nec exterius per deſideria diſſipari, ne dum ad multa foràs inhiant, à ſemetipſis alienati cogitationibus v e ant. Auguſt. lib. 5. de Civit. Dei, cap. 4 Gregor. hom. 10. ſuper Evang.

And Iſaac loved Eſau, becauſe he ate of his Veniſon, but Rebecca loved Jacob. It may ſeem ſtrange, that Iſaac ſhould love Eſau moſt, he being worſt, for he was to Jacob as Cain to Abel, nothing is ſpoken of him to commend him, but all of Jacob, he was ſincere and innocent, and followed the works of a moſt honeſt vocation, unto which Iſaac had alſo applyed himſelfe. Rupertus juſtifieth Iſaac herein, ſaying, that he loved not Eſau abſolutely, as Jacob was beloved of Rebecca, but for his Veniſons ſake. But it appeareth by that which followeth afterwards, that he loved him ſo, as that he would have conferred the bleſſing of the birth-right upon him, the Oracle of God being neglected. Wherefore he is greatly blamed by Calvin, as being carryed with an inordinate affectiou for his palates ſake, yet he ſaith, that this came to paſſe by Gods permiſſion, that it might appeare, how firme and conſtant the decree of election is, ſeeing no obſtacle can hinder it from taking effect, as is manifeſt by this example. He alſo maketh ſome doubt touching Rebecca her love to Jacob, whether it proceeded not from a ſtudy to be contrary to her Husband, although he rather inclineth to think that ſhe was moved hereunto by the Oracle. I cannot herein ſubſcribe to Calvin, for Rebecca certainly having ſo manifeſt cauſe to love Jacob both by the Oracle, and by his honeſt and good manners, he being alſo alwayes at hand to ſhew his duty towards her, could not but upon a right ground be exceedingly affected towards him. And happily Iſaac was not yet acquainted with the Oracle, and therefore Eſau being his firſt-borne, and alſo getting him meat daily that he loved, he was moſt affected to him, but loved Jacob alſo, as Chriſt loved all his Apoſtles, but John chiefly, as Muſculus noteth. His ill manners he could not but diſlike, yet if he knew nothing to the contrary, he being obſequious towards him, naturall affection could not but carry him before his death to bleſſe him, as his firſt-borne. Such an affection was in David towards Abſolom, and before in Abraham towards Iſhmael; grace doth not ſo extinguiſh nature in Parents, but that they are ſometime carryed hereby only contrary to reaſon, and yet in this God had a ſpeciall hand, as was ſaid before, to make his election to be known to be moſt firme, and ſuch as that it cannot be diſappointed.

Verſe 28.

Rupert. lib 7. in Gen. cap. 6. Calvin.

Muſculus.

And Jacob ſod Pottage, and Eſau came from the field, and was faint, and he ſaid unto Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, with that ſame red pottage, for I am faint, therefore his name was called Edom. And Jacob ſaid, Sel me this day thy birth-right, &c.

Verſe 29.

This

This pottage is ſaid to be of lentiles, which the Jews ſay uſe to be eaten in mourning, and Jacob ate ſuch, as one that mourned for the birth-right, which was not his, but Eſaus, ſo highly did he eſteeme thereof. That we may the more orderly proceed in expounding this Hiſtory of Jacobs buying, and Eſau his ſelling of his birth-right, it is firſt to be inquired, what this birth-right was? Vatablus anſwereth according to the Hebrews, that it was a right of ſucceeding in the Fathers principality, dignity and honour, ſo that he which had this, his Bretheren were to riſe up and to miniſter unto him, as children to their Father; yet others, he ſaith, hold, that it was a right unto two parts of his Fathers goods, viz. Prieſthood and rule, and had alſo reference to the Kingdome of Heaven. And this indeed, that the right of the firſt-borne was not only unto dominion, as is further expreſſed, Chap. 27.29.& 37. but unto the Prieſthood, Jerome teacheth, ſaying, All the firſt borne of the ſtock of Noah, who are in order ſet down in the Scripture, unto Aaron, were Prieſts, according to the tradition of the Hebrews. And this is the common received opinion, and it ſeemeth to have been ſo by that which is ſaid, Exod. 19.32. Let the Prieſts, who come neare to the Lord, be ſanctified: This being ſpoken, before that any other Prieſts were ordained, wherefore they muſt needs be the firſt-borne in whoſe roome the Levites were afterwards ſubſtituted. Ainſworth ſummeth up together the excellency of the birth-right thus. The firſt-borne were conſecrated to God, Exod. 22.29. next in honour to their Parents, Gen. 49. 3. had a double portion of their Fathers goods, Deut. 21.17. ſucceeded them in the government of the family, 2 Chron. 21.3. and in the adminiſtration of the Prieſthood, Numb. 8.14,17. wherefore by this name, ſuch as are deare to God are ſet forth, Exod. 4.22. and higher then the reſt, Pſal. 89. 28. figured Chriſt, Rom. 8. 29. and the heires of Heaven, Heb. 12:23.

Queſt. 1.

Vatablus.

Hieron. Epiſt. ad Evagrium.

Numb. 3.13.

Secondly, ſeeing the birth-right was a right unto the Prieſthood, how Jacob could juſtly buy it, forſomuch as ſuch things may not be bought and ſold, Act. 8?

Queſt. 2.

To this it is commonly anſwered, as Lyppomannus hath it, that the birth-right being indeed a right to bleſſe and to offer ſacrifices in ſolemne meetings, as well as to rule over the reſt of the Brethren, and to have a double portion to them, could not lawfully be bought and ſold, but it belonging to Jacob by Gods appointment, as he had doubtleſſe learned of his mother, he might redeeme it, being for the preſent held by another, to whom it belonged not. Or it may be ſaid, that the right of dominion, and unto a double portion might be bought, and forſomuch as the Prieſthood was annexed hereunto, that might be bought withall. But I preferre the firſt, God offering him an opportunity to atteine to that to which he had appointed him, it was wiſely and rightly done of him to lay hold upon it.

Lippomanni Catena.

Thirdly, forſomuch as common humanity requireth, that one Brother or Neighbour ſhould help another with food in his need, and not to take advantage hereof againſt him to benefit himſelfe, how can Jacob be juſtified in doing contrariwiſe? Againe, if he might be juſtified for buying of Eſau his birth-right, yet ought he not to have given him a better price for it? To this it is commonly anſwered, that whatſoever is ſaid to have been done here, was done by divine diſpenſation, this right was by the Lord before appointed unto Jacob, and therefore nothing remained to be done on Jacobs part, but to draw Eſau to conſent to the transferring of it, who by birth had it, from himſelfe unto him, how little a price ſoever he gave therefore. The Lord, ſaith Calvin well, ordered it thus by his ſingular providence, that the divers diſpoſitions of theſe two might appeare, how ſenſually minded Eſau was, and how little he favoured the things of God, and how heavenly minded Jacob was, in that having made ready for himſelfe, he would rather abſteine from his neceſſary food for a time, then neglect this opportunity to benefit himſelfe in reſpect of things perteining to God and godlineſſe. And thus is it with all the elect and reprobate. For touching Eſau his guloſity, it cannot be thought, but that he could otherwise have satisfied his hunger, only being a man given to the belly, he would have no delay, whatsoever it cost him.

Queſt. 3.

Calvin.

Quest. 4. Fourthly, because it may seem strange, that for this his name should be changed into Edom, as a name of disgrace, how great his fault was? To this it is answered, that his fault was very great and manifold. First, of intemperance, in that he was so earnestly set upon, having meat for his belly instantly. Sinne is committed about meats, as Gregory noteth, five wayes. 1 By anticipating the set time, so Jonathan sinned in eating Honey, 1 Sam. 14. 2 By desiring more delicate meat, then a man hath, so the Hebrews sinned in the Wildernesse by desiring flesh, Num. 3. 3 By desiring a more delicate preparing of it, as did the sons of Ely, 1 Sam. 2. 4 By excessive eating, as it is said of Sodom, fulnesse of bread was in her, Ezech. 16. 5 By being over-eager and desirous of meat without al delay, as here Esau was. The second sin of Esau was the carnality of his minde, whereby he set nought by spiritual & Heavenly privileges, being only intent to the filling of his belly; for although he had bin ready to dye for want of food, as Calvin reasoneth, he should rather have suffered a 1000 deaths, then to have consented to deprive himself and his posterity of perpetuall felicity. He thought, as Musculus hath it, that his Father was yet living, and it should be long before any benefit would by his birth-right redound unto him, and therefore, so that he might have something for the present, he regarded not that. His third sinne was his selling of a sacred thing, for which he is said to have been prophane. His fourth perjury, in the purpose of his heart, for he thought, that although he sware to Jacob in this regard, yet he should not have it, as appeareth by his taking it so heinously, when it was confirmed unto him, Chap. 27. that he would have slaine him therefore. His fifth sinne was impenitency, after this foule fact done. for it is said, Verse 34.

Greg. Moral. lib. 30.

Calvin.

Musculus.

Heb. 12.

Verse 34. He arose when he had eaten, and went his way, and contemned his birth-right; so sottish and sensuall was he, that it grieved him not to have done thus vilely, but as being hungry he set by his birth-right as a thing of nought, so he did also his belly, being filled. He was herein worse, then the Lacedemonian captive, who when the Army, of which he was, had yielded it selfe to the enemy for want of water, and they had now drunk at a River, said, O fellow-Souldiers, for how little a pleasure have we lost an inestimable good thing? Chrysostome noteth another sinne to have been ingratitude, that he esteemed not, neither cared to keep the gift given by God unto him, Hom. 50 in Gen. For the Phrases used here, in the originall it is, Feed me with that red, that red, either the lentiles of which it is said to have been made, v. 34. gave it this red colour, or something else, which Esau not knowing, calleth it only a red thing, expressing a greedy desire unto it, from whence and for his most foolish match he was called in disgrace Edom, and they that came of him Edomites for ever after.

Musculus.

(O Commilitones!) quantulâ voluptate inæstimabile bonum perdidimus

The Allegory. Esau doth aptly set forth, as the Apostle applyeth his example, prophane and worldly men, and Jacob the Godly. 1 The one sort is at continuall strife with the other, as these two were in their Mothers womb. 2 The wicked are rough and harsh in their manners, as Esau, but the Godly quiet, and gentle, as Iacob was smooth. 3 They prosper at the first, but in the end they meet with trouble, as Esau came forth first, but was afterwards hindered by Iacobs laying hold of his heel: contrariwise the Godly suffer many things at the first, but their end is comfortable. 4 They are in honour amongst men; and the godly are poore and contemptible, either because they have not that wealth or those gifts of nature, that they have: but before God the Godly are most honoured, and the wicked despised, as Esau amongst men was commonly taken for the first-borne, and so esteemed by Isaac and others, but in Gods decree Jacob was superiour, and so most esteemed by Rebecca, who was taught of God. 5 As Esau was an hunter and ranged daily abroad in the fields, so the wicked, as hath been already shewed, follow their pleasures, being alltogether gether eſtranged from retired meditations, but the Godly dwell in them. 6 As Eſau was moſt earneſtly ſet upon meat for the belly, but regarded not his birth-right, ſo the wicked are marvellouſly intent to worldly things, but they make no reckoning of things Heavenly: but the Godly or the other ſide paſſe not for their ſufferings, in regard of worldly things, but do willingly permit the wicked to injoy them, ſo that they may have grace, and be in Gods favour. 7 As Eſau having thus deprived himſelfe of his birth-right was not grieved for it, ſo the want of grace never troubleth the wicked. 8 As he after this was made ſervant to his Brother, ſo the wicked are made to ſerve for the good of the Godly, as hath been already ſhewed, and they ſhall finally be brought under them for ever, when the Godly ſhall be ſet upon thornes, and made Judges over them. 9 As he wept afterwards, when he loſt the bleſſing, and with earneſt crying ſought it, but in vaine, ſo the wicked ſhall one day be affected with a ſenſe of the want of Gods grace, and crave for mercy, but all in vaine. 10 As Eſau after this hated Jacob, and ſought to kill him, ſo the wicked beare a malicious minde againſt the Godly, but God provideth for their preſervation, as Jacob was provided for. 11 As Eſau grieved his Father and Mother by his marriages, ſo the wicked by their inordinate living cauſe much grief and vexation to the Church. Laſtly, as in time Iſau was diſcovered to be unworthy of the birth-right, and Jacob more worthy, which may ſerve for an Apology for Gods decree; ſo the wicked are not made reprobates, but moſt deſervedly, and the Godly atteine to life alwayes by right means. Although election be free, and floweth only from Gods grace, yet by the divine providence it is ſo ordered, that none but wicked and prophane perſons are damned, and none but the Godly and Heavenly wiſe are ſaved.

CHAP. XXVI.

AFter all thoſe things before related, touching the children of Iſaac and Rebecca, and the death of his Father Abraham, here are briefly ſummed up together the other moſt notable accidents of his life, till his very old age, when his ſight failed him, as Chap. 27. There was a famine in the Land, where Iſaac dwelt, which was, as is moſt probable, by Beer-lahai-roi Southward, and in the way to Egypt; whereupon he had thought to have gone into Egypt a Countrey of great plenty, but the Lord appearing unto him, forbiddeth him ſo to do, commanding him to go and ſojourne, where he ſhould ſhevv him, and promiſing to give all thoſe Countreys to him and to his ſeed, and to bleſſe him, and to performe his Oath to Abraham, and that in his ſeed all the Nations of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed, becauſe Abraham his Father had obeyed his voice. And hereupon he vvent to Gerar to Abimelech King of the Philiſtines, vvhich vvas eight miles. For although his going to this place be ſpoken of before the Lords appearing unto him, yet it may eaſily be gathered, that he firſt appeared, becauſe if he had come to Gerar firſt, there had been no need to forbid him to go into Egypt; vvherefore, he having yet only meditated upon going ſome-vvhither, the Lord averteth his thoughts from Egypt, and ſhevveth him this place, vvhich vvas vvithin the limits of the promiſed Land, and let the vvord (appeared) be read in the Preterpluperfect tenſe, had appeared, as ſome read it, and it vvell may, and this expoſition vvill aptly agree. But vvhy vvould not the Lord have Iſaac to go into Egypt, as vvell as Abraham had upon a famine before done, Gen. 12. 10? Anſ. The Hebrevvs ſay, becauſe Iſaac vvas once conſecrated for a ſacrifice to the Lord, and therefore he ought not to go out of the promiſed Land. But this is a vveak reaſon, ſeeing the Land of Canaan vvas then as prophane a Land, as any other by reaſon of the levvd manners of the Inhabitants, and Abraham and every Godly perſon is alſo a ſacrifice to God. Theodoret examining the reaſon,

Verſe 1.
Verſe 2.
Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.
Verſe 5.

H. Bunting, Patriarchs travels.

Queſt.

Hebræi.

reaſon, why neither Abraham the Father, nor Jacob the ſonne of Iſaac being held from going into Egypt, yet he was forbidden, ſaith, that Abraham was permitted to go into Egypt, that the vertues in him might be ſeen in that Countrey, to provoke the people there to imitate him, but Iſaac was held from going, that it might by Gods providing for him in Canaan now ſuffering by famine appeare, that he could thus have provided for Abraham alſo, if it had pleaſed him: for when all others laboured with want, God bleſſed Iſaac ſo, that he reaped a manifold increaſe. And to this do I ſubſcribe, the Lord in dealing diverſly with theſe two his holy ſervants ſhewed, that he hath not one only, but divers wayes to ſupply the want of his in their neceſſities, as he can lead them forth to a place of plenty, when he pleaſeth, as he did Abraham, ſo he can even in a place of greateſt ſcarcity ſupply them with plenty, as he did Jacob, & the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, that we may never deſpaire of his help in the time of need. Muſculus ſaith, that God would thus exerciſe his faith. Calvin, that he was not ſo ſtrong in grace, as Abraham, as therefore the Lord would not expoſe him to the temptations of Egypt. But for the exerciſe of his faith can be no reaſon any more, then to Abraham, and who knoweth, whether Iſaac were weaker in grace then Abraham or no? It is beſt therefore to reſt in the former ſolution.

Theod. in Gen. quæſt. 76.

Note.

Muſculus. Calvin.

For any other paſſage here, as that Iſaac was afflicted thus in the Land of promiſe, that God promiſeth to bleſſe him, &c. and rendereth this as a reaſon, becauſe Abraham obeyed his voice, the like have been treated of before in ſpeaking of Abraham, Chap. 12. and Chap. 22. Iſaac being come to Gerar, as Abraham had done before, biddeth his Wife to ſay, that ſhe was his Siſter, touching which I will ſay nothing, becauſe the like was alſo ſpoken of before in the Hiſtory of Abraham, Gen. 20. After a while Abimelech the King looked out at a window, and ſaw Iſaac ſporting with Rebecca, and he called him, and ſaid, Surely ſhe is thy Wife, how ſayeſt thou then, ſhe is my Siſter? The ſame word, which was uſed before in ſpeaking of Iſhmael playing with Iſaac, is uſed here againe, ſome think, that under this word is honeſtly covered over the carnall copulation, wherein he eſpied them. It was certainly in ſome ſecret place, where he thought that he ſhould not be expoſed to the beholding of any man, which is intimated in that the King by chance looking out at a Window eſpied him: yet happily he ſaw him only imbracing and kiſſing her in a moſt familiar manner, as is uſuall betwixt none that are of a godly and grave converſation, as Iſaac was, except they be man and wife. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that this ſporting of Iſaac with Rebecca was myſticall, becauſe as this being ſeen by Abimelech ſhe vvas perceived to be his Wife, vvhich vvas a thing that lay hid before, ſo by diligent looking into the holy Scriptures, the Church vvhich is a Congregation of faithfull men and vvomen, is found to be the ſpouſe of the ſonne of God, vvho being equal unto God, condeſcended to take upon him the forme of a ſervant, that he might dvvell in us. Iſaac being thus challenged, anſvvereth nothing, but that he feared his life for her ſake: Then the King blameth him, ſaying, What is this that thou haſt done to us? one of the people might haply have lyen with thy Wife, and ſo thou ſhouldeſt have brought ſinne upon us. Then he charged all his people, ſaying, Whoſo toucheth this man or his wife, ſhall ſurely dye.

Verſe 6,7.

Verſe 8,9.

Auguſt in Fauſtum lib. 22. cap. 46.

Verſe 10.

Verſe 11.

Iſaac vvould not, but acknovvledge his fault in lying, yet he excuſeth it by the feare of his life, vvherein he vvas: but this vvill not excuſe it: for evill is not to be done, that good may come of it, ſo that his vveakneſſe herein appeared. Abraham in the like caſe had his Wife taken from him tvvice, but Iſaacs Wife is not taken by any man. God maintained the chaſtity of Sarah one vvay, and of Rebecca another, vvorking miraculouſly for Sarah, that ſhe vvas not taken, and reſtreining men admirably, that Rebeccah, although moſt beautifull alſo, vvas not hitherto deſired by any. But vvhat meaneth the King to give ſo ſtreight a charge, threatning death to ſuch, as ſhould touch Iſaac or his Wife? To this Calvin anſvvereth, that God did partly by his Quæſt.

providence

providence move him to this, for the greater security of his servant in a strange Land, and partly by the piety and goodnesse of Isaac procured him so great reverence and respect before the King, that he gave as strict a charge touching him, as touching himselfe, which was not a thing ordinary to other strangers. By touching is meant hurting him or his Wife.

And Isaac sowed in that Land, and found in that yeare 100 fold increase, and the Lord blessed him, and he increased, &c. and he had possessions of flocks, and of Herds, &c. Verse 12. Verse 13,14.

It may be doubted here first, what ground Isaac had to sowe in Gerar, he being but a stranger there? To this Calvin answereth, that he had not any which he bought, as some think, for this was contrary to the Lords direction, who bade him but to go and sojourne there, but that it was hired ground, which by the leave of the Inhabitants there he occupied for the time, for the supply of his family with necessaries. But how great was the increase which he had of his sowing: for it is said only in the Text, that he received an 100 fold in estimation, and not increase, and the Septuagint render it 100 fold of Barley, but there are two words Soerim, and Searim saith Jerome, so like the one to the other, as that there might easily be a mistake. Searim signifying estimations, and Seorim barley, the first of which is here used, and not the latter, so that it is 100 fold estimation, but how is this to be understood? Answ. It may be taken either for 100 fold more then the ground usually yielded, or more then others, or then he expected, but it is most commonly understood of 100 measures for one sown; which howsoever it may seem incredible, yet if we compare it with that which others have written, we shall finde that the usuall increase of some excellent grounds in some parts have been much more. That is a good soile, saith Herodotus, which Euhesperites till, in times of great plenty, yielding 100 fold, and that of the Cynips about 300. And Pliny saith, that Wheat in Byzantium a field of Africa yieldeth 150. To Augustus was sent a root with little lesse then 400 stalks, and to Nero one with 340. But those grounds were the richest in all the World, and this was in most plentifull yeares, but Isaac had this great increase in a Land not so fruitfull, and in a yeare of famine, when others laboured with want, for it is said to have been that yeare. And this is noted by Chrysostome, saying, that God made Isaac to abound in the midst of the want of others, that all might understand by how great a favour of God that just One was cherished, and so the Heathen might be compelled to acknowledge and admire his power and providence over his. And God blessed him, this is taken by all to be added as the cause of his increase, God blessed him, and the earth did not of its owne nature yield him so great plenty. And for his other substance he by the same blessing grew so great, that the Philistines amongst whom he lived, envied him, and for a despight unto him, filled up with earth all his Wells of water, which were digged in Abrahams time, & the King biddeth him to depart, saying, for thou art mightier then we. Envy doth usually attend upon the prosperity of others, and where there is envy, the eyes are blinded, as here the Philistines looked not at their owne commodity, but knowing, what would be discommodious to Isaac, who had abundance of Cattel, they fill up his Wells, whereby they might have had benefit also together with him. And the King biddeth him to depart, but what reason hereof was there saith Chrysostome? because he was greater, for this they should rather have held him still, seeing Gods favour was so much towards him, hoping to fare the better for using him kindly, and keeping him amongst them. But malice and envy blinded them so, that they looked only at his greatnesse, and that was to them matter enough of vexation, according to the saying, An envious man pineth away at the prosperity of another.

Isaac then departed, and dwelt in the valley of Gerar, eight miles from the City, and he digged againe all the Wells, which were digged in the dayes of Abraham, and called them by their old names. Such was Isaacs mildnesse, that he Quest. Calvin.

Quest.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

Herodot. l. 4. Plin. l. 18 c. 10.

Chrysost. hom. 52. in Gen.

Verse 15. Verse 16.

Chrysost. hom. 52 in Gen.

Invidus alterius rebus macrescit opimis.

Verse 17,18

he neither resisted being bidden to depart, nor sought to be revenged upon them that did him so great a despight as to dam up all his Wells, but he quietly cleanseth them againe, although it is not to be thought, that he wanted power, seeing Abraham his Father did sometime arme of his own servants at once 318 persons. That which is here said of his digging over the Wells which the Philistines had stopped up, must needs be understood, as done whilest he dwelt in Gerar, and not after his remove; for then he was out of those parts, where an abiding was no longer permitted unto him, and so could not digge thereabouts any more. Wherefore, it is to be thought, that Isaacs digging againe of these Wells is spoken of after his remove, not because it was done in this order, but because Moses would relate together, first the acts of the Philistines against him, and how they caused him to depart, wherein he yielded unto them; and then the acts of Isaac done partly before his remove, although he quietly set his men to work, to open those wells againe, which the Philistines had stopped up, yet they pursued him so with their envy, that he was driven from thence, and then having pitched in the valley of Gerar, a place where it is likely that none dwelt or kept Cattel before Verse 19. he diggeth a new well. But the herd-men of Gerar follow him to this place, &

Verse 20. strive with his herd-men for this Well, wherefore he called it Esek contention, Verse 21. & went further and digged another, for which they strove also, wherefore he Verse 22. called that Sitnah hatred, & went yet further, & digged another, for which they strove not, wherefore he called it Rehoboth, that is, roome. Isaacs digging over of the wells, which Abrahams servants had digged before, is Allegorically applyed by Origen to Christs purging of the Law and the Prophets, from the corrupt glosses of the Scribes and Pharasees. Moses and the Prophets, the servants of God, had of old digged, as it were, these wells of water, as Abrahams servants did those about Gerar, but the Scribes and Pharisees had by their corrupt glosses marred them, as the Philistines those wells by casting earth into them, wherefore Christ cometh and diggeth them over, as it were, againe, by teaching the true meaning of the Law and Prophets. Then he diggeth a well of living water, that is, preacheth salvation by himselfe to all believers, but about this great contention ariseth first with the Jewes, and then with the Philosophers amongst the Gentiles. Lastly, he commeth to have Rehoboth, that is, roome enough, when the Gospell is imbraced amongst the Gentiles.

Origen. Hom. 13. in Gen.

Verse 23. And he went from thence to Beersheba, where the Lord againe appeared unto Verse 24. him, and there he built an Altar, and called upon the Lord, and pitched his Tent there, Verse 25. and there his Servants digged a well.

To Beersheba was foure miles, of which see before, Chap. 21.21. where Abraham is said to have dwelled, and to have made a Covenant with Abimelech. Why Isaac removed to this place, it is not said, but it is most probable, as Calvin hath it, that some new strife had happened at Rehoboth, which is passed over in silence, and therefore to be further off from the quarrelsome Gerarites, he goeth to his Fathers old habitation, and there that very night the Lord appeareth unto him to comfort him againe after all these troubles. And the first thing which he intendeth here, is to build an Altar, and then to digge a well, first, he seeketh the things of Gods Kingdome, and then of this World. But this place, as was shewed before, had the name from a well, what meant he then to digge a well here againe? It is answered, that the envy of the Philistines, as is most probable, was such, that in stopping up the wells of Abraham they came even to this place also: but then he should only have been said to digge the same over againe, wherefore I think rather, that the well digged by Abraham there was by some casuality decayed, and so the place being without water, he was forced to digge another. For that the Philistines came thus farre to stop up the wells that Abraham had made, is but a conjecture, it being said of them before, which they had stopped, that he digged them over againe, and when this well was digged at this time, Isaacs

Calvin.

Quest.

servants

ſervants came to him rejoycing, as if they had found a thing of which there was great want, ſaying, We have found water, v. 32. Iſaac having pitched his Tent here, Abimelech the King with others come unto him to make a league with him, as he had done before with Abraham, with whom he firſt expoſtulateth, but then feaſteth them, and they ſweare one to another, and ſo this place hath againe the ſame name confirmed unto it Beer-ſhebah. The conſcience of Abimelech, ſaith Chryſoſtome, telling him, that he had done ill, in putting Iſaac away, made him thus againe to come and to ſeek unto him. Calvin conjectureth, that he was brought by an inſtinct from God, who provided thus to grace his ſervant, after that he had appeared unto him. Whereas it is ſaid, Abimelech came untohim,and Ahuzzath one of his friends,ſome of the Hebrews, ſaith Vatablus, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt read it, a Troope of his friends, deriving אחוזת from אחז apprehendit aut tenuit, becauſe they which accompany a King keep continually about him, as if they held him but he preferreth the reading of it, as a proper name, Ahuzzath his friend. But Jerome is for the other, and Lyranus and Rupertus, but it is moſt likely, that it was one prime man ſo called, his other attendants being underſtood. When Abimelech cometh to him, he ſpeaketh of his doing nothing but good unto him: but this was to curry favour, and to draw him the rather to a league,he being not willing, that any unkindneſſe or injury offered him ſhould be remembred, and Iſaac was of that gentleneſſe and patience, that he would not urge him now therewith. Touching the name Shebah given to this well, in the vulgar Latin it is rendred abundantia, but, as Jerome, and all the learned acknowledge, the word ſignifieth alſo an Oath, yet he preferreth rather his Latin Tranſlation. But the Septuagint are for an Oath, and Calvin, holding that the ſame name was now renued againe to this place, in honour to Abraham, who firſt called it thus.

Verſe 27, 28 &c to V. 34. Chryſoſt. Hom. 52. Calvin.

Hieron. Rupert.

Hieronym.

It is worth the obſerving here, that the ſame things befell Iſaac the Sonne in his peregrination, that had befalne Abraham the Father: for both ſuffered by famine in Canaan, and both hereupon removed to another place, both were in feare in reſpect of their wives, and were both delivered, both digged wells in Gerar, and Beer-ſhebah, and had indignities offered to them by the Philiſtines, but at laſt the friendſhip of them both was ſought by thoſe that had maligned them. So what troubles ſoever the righteous ſuffer, their end ſhall be honourable and joyous, and if they that maligne them, be ever touched with true penitency, what malice ſoever they have borne towards them, they will count them moſt worthy and bleſſed of God. Againe, it is to be noted, that as for the generall it happened to them both alike, ſo in divers particulars their conditions differed. Abraham went into Egypt in the time of famine at the firſt, and not to Gerar till afterwards, but Iſaac was with-held from Egypt, and went immediately to Gerar, a part of the Countrey,where the famine was. 2 Abraham had his wife taken from him, but God wrought for him miraculouſly, and ſo ſhe was reſtored: but Iſaac kept his wife, and ſhe was otherwiſe diſcovered to be his wife, and ſo he injoyed her without danger. 3 Abraham hath gifts given to him, and ſo he groweth very rich, but Iſaac ſowed, and by the wonderfull increaſe, which he had, waxed very rich. 4 Abimelech came to Abraham only with Phicol, but to Iſaac with Ahuzzath alſo. It being here intimated, that God doth not bring his juſt all one way to the ſame bleſſed end, but through divers and different conditions in many reſpects,but ſtill the Father of the faithfull is exerciſed with more and ſtronger temptations then the Sonne, God moderating herein, as he giveth ſtrength of grace and ability to beare more or leſſe. More over, this Hiſtory of Iſaac, as Rupertus hath well obſerved, doth notably ſet forth the ſtate of Chriſt Jeſus in his Apoſtles and Miniſters. For firſt, as Iſaac through the neceſſity of a famine was forced to Gerar, and there was much honoured and increaſed, ſo the Jews rejecting the Goſpell, Chriſt is forced as it were to go in his Miniſters to the Gentiles, and there they are highly eſteemed, and

Note.

Rupert. in Gen. lib. 7. c. 8.

sowe the seed of the word to incredible increase. Secondly, as Isaac afterwards had much trouble and envy, so the faithfull Preachers of Christ had much trouble and envy at the hands of the Jews and Hereticks. Thirdly, as he yet at length was quiet, and had roome enough, and was sought unto by Abimelech for a league; so the time shall come, that the Jews shall be converted, and then all controversies shall be appeased, and there shall be a most firme league and amity amongst all. These things whoso desireth more largely to read of, may see them in every circumstance, wittily set forth and applied by the foresaid Author, but there is more wit in it then edification. For he maketh that the famine of the Apostles, that they could not feed upon the Jews by converting them, as is intimated, Act. 10. And that Isaacs denying of his wife, that they were forced through persecutions to flee to lurking holes, and not openly to Preach, and that Abimelechs looking out at a window, and finding that she was his wife, that those things which were done, and taught by them in secret, were in time taken notice of, the greatest being converted hereunto, &c. Ferus of the wells digged first by Abraham, and stopped by the Philistines, but digged againe by Isaac, saith, Hereby is set forth Gods opening of the well of his word by the Prophets, and the Pharisees corrupting it by their false glosses, but the purging of it againe by Christ, whereupon envy followed in the Pharisees, and Christ departed, and digged wells in other places by his Apostles amongst the Gentiles. And finally, all his enemies shall come in by faith, and he will make them a Feast in Heaven.

Verse 34,35

After these things concerning Isaac, it is said that Esau being 40 yeares old, took to wife Judith the Daughter of Beeri, and Bashemath the Daughter of Elon Hittites, and they were a grief of minde to Isaac and Rebecca. Isaac was then 100 yeares old, so that he was not without trouble to his very old age. And this is aptly premised here as a præludium of the rejection of Esau, seeing he by marrying with these, cut himselfe off from having his posterity counted the holy seed, which should afterwards inherit that Land. It is to be thought, as Musculus hath it, that these women were mens Daughters of note in that Countrey, by meanes of marrying with whom there might be a likelihood of more love and concord to grow betwixt that people and Isaacs family: but he being an holy man, and not looking at carnall things, but spirituall, took no content herein, but both he and Rebecca were grieved at it. Now that they were of that note and quality, he gathereth from the naming of their Fathers, and Rupertus holdeth the same from the signification of their names, Judith signifying praysing, and Beeri, my wells, Bashemath in names, and Elon an Oake or a Queach, saying, that hereby Esau did shew in himselfe a minde not regarding the dislike of his Grandfather Abraham, or of his Father or Mother, or Gods blessing promised to Abrahams seed, but that he thought rather to make himselfe great and famous by matching with the Daughters of that Countrey, then by Gods help and blessing. Touching the griefe, which is said to have been to Isaac and to Rebeccah hereat, in the Hebrew it is, they were bitter, and exacerbating their spirit. And how this was, is shewed in the Targum Hierosolymitanum, saying they were rebellious and inflate in mind, worshipping Idols, and would not receive the Doctrine of Isaac and Rebecca, and therefore the Septuagint read it accordingly, they were contending and altercating with Isaac and Rebecca. So that Isaac it seemeth, did not so much dislike these marriages at the first, but afterwards for their ill conditions appearing in time. His affection towards Esau did so work with him, that he connived at these things, and still bare so great an affection towards him, that he would have blessed him, as his first-borne, before his death, as is declared in the next Chapter. There was then most probably a fault in him, that he opposed not his sonne in these his proceedings, neither was grieved, as is generally conceived that he was, at his thus marrying, but these undutifull, quarrelsome and disobedient women, whom his sonne Esau had married, were a cause of much grief and disquiet both to him and Rebecca. See also

Musculus.

Rupert. lib. 7. in Gen. cap. 12. Ille horum judicium contempsit, nec Dei promissiones curavit, viz. affinitate hominum eam regionem inhabitantium honoratum se & inclytum fieri posse credens magis quàm ope & gratiâ Dei.

Targum Hierosolym.

also, how she is said by means of them to have been weary of her life, Chap. 27.46. In that Esau his marrying with women of a contrary Religion, was a fore-runner of his rejection, which was by God therefore justly brought upon him, and bred great disturbance to his Father and Mother, note that such marriages are by all Christian people by all means to be avoided for feare of the like dangers. That of the Apostle must ever run in our mindes, Be not unequally yoaked with Infidels. As the prophane, which set light by spirituall things, so any beleever, who marrieth with a woman an unbeleever, or an Idolater, hath Esau for his ring-leader, and therefore with him he may justly look to be rejected with his posterity from the dignity of the holy and elect seed of Abraham for evermore.

Note.

2 Cor.6.14.

Heb.12.16.

CHAP. XXVII.

AND when Isaac was old, and his eyes were dim, so that he could not see, he called Esau, &c.

Verse 1.

That, which is here set forth, did not certainly follow immediately after the things related in the former Chapter, but many yeares coming betweene. Eusebius saith, when Isaac blessed Jacob, he was 137 yeares old, and Jacob and Esau 75. wherein he speaketh some what neare the matter, for he misseth but one yeare, seeing when Isaac was 137, his sonnes were 74, as must needs be granted, because they were borne in the yeare 63 of his age. And that Isaacs sonnes were 74 at this time, may be proved by considering the History of Jacob and his children after this. For he was sent away after this into Mesopotamia to avoid the fury of Esau, and to take him a wife, where after seven yeares service, he took Leah, and then Rachel to wife, by whom he had Joseph in 7 yeares more, who is said to have been 30 yeares old, when he was advanced by Pharaoh, and so he must needs be 39, when his Father Jacob came into Egypt, he being then 130, which being so, Jacob must needs be 81 when he begat Joseph, and therefore 74 at his coming into Mesopotamia, betwixt which, and Joseph were seven yeares, at what time he was married to Leah, and divers yeares more, before that Rachel had Joseph, and yet not above seven, for after two sevens, Jacob served Laban for cattell 6 yeares, and abode, with him but 20 in all, now deduct 14 out of 98, and 84 remaine, wherefore this was certainly Jacobs age at his coming into Mesopotamia, and then betwixt his Fathers blessing of him and that passed 7 yeares. For now Esau his hatred conceived against him coming to light, permitted not any long stay nigh unto him. And thus it appeareth, that Isaac was now when he blessed his sonnes, 137 yeares old, and so that many yeares passed after Esau his marrying, before his blessing of them, viz. 37. And the circumstance of his being very aged, and dim-sighted then evinceth no lesse, seeing he lived to 180, that is, 43 yeares after this, so that in all likelihood not much more then halfe his time being expired at 100, he could not then have this symptom of old age, but many yeares after. And this I have thus laboured to cleare the rather, because in some there is so great a mistake, holding these things to have been done soone after one another, and that Jacobs great continency might the more appeare, staying so long without a wife, rather then he would marry in that Countrey; and lastly, that it might appear, how wicked men, as Esau, find not presently the effect of their prophanenes, but after many years, unto vvhich although God doth delay his Judgements, yet he vvil surely bring them upon such at the last: & on the other side, that godly men, such as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob vvere, shall have his gracious promises performed unto them, although it be very long before they seem to take effect. For since the promise of multiplying the holy seed of Abraham exceedingly, untill that there vvas any appearance of performance, passed 169 yeares, 25 before that Abraham could have Isaac, and he vvas then so old, and Sarah also, that Euseb.lib.9. de præpar. Evang.

Gen.41.46. Gen.43. Gen.47.9.

Gen.31.41.

Chap 35.28.

Note.

in mans reason there vvas no hope of issue, then 60 before that Isaac could have Jacob, he having lived first vvith his vvife Rebecca 20 yeares almost vvithout a childe, then Jacob 84 before he took a vvife, but after this their unites are in a short time turned into multitudes.

Verse 2, 3. Verse 4. Quest.

Isaac now being very aged commandeth his eldest sonne Esau to get and prepare him Venison, that he might blesse him before he dyed. It may be demanded, why Isaac being an holy man disposed himselfe thus to crosse Gods Ordinance in giving Esau the blessing, which belonged to Jacob, whence it proceeded, that he thus singularly would blesse his first-borne before his death, when as none else of his Progenitours, that we read of, did the like to their-first borne, and seeing his minde was to blesse him, why did he require this Venison-feast to be thus prepared for him, before he would do it? Calvin. Calvin saith, that the blessing, which is here spoken of, was no common praying, but a lawfull authority given by God, to testifie the grace of election. Gen.17.7. For God had promised to the holy Fathers, that he would alwayes be their God, and the God of their seed; wherefore they, that there might be a certaine right to this blessing by succession to their posterity, gave them the possession thereof, thus delivering the grace received from God, as it were, from hand to hand. Thus Abraham in blessing his sonne Isaac, did make him the Heire of the spirituall life, by this solemn right, and in like manner Isaac, that the eternall Covenant of God might reside in his family, would now before he dyed, blesse his first-borne sonne. And this course of blessing was not rashly, or by private motion taken up by the Patriarchs, but they were of God ordeined to be publick vvitnesses. Heb.7.7. It was an usuall thing, as vve may observe from the Apostle, for the greater to blesse the lesser, and for one man out of charity to blesse another. Numb.6.24. But there vvas a blessing ordeined by God, vvhereby the Priests aftervvards blessed the people, and novv the Patriarchs their children, and therefore Isaac in blessing of his sonne susteined not the person of a private man, but vvas Gods Prophet and Interpreter. And this may serve in part for answver to the question, hovv it came into Isaac's minde, to propound to blesse his first-borne at this time? But vvhereas it is said, that Abraham also blessed Isaac in a like solemne manner; Chap.25. I cannot read any vvhere thereof, unlesse it be understood to have been done, vvhen he gave him all that he had. But I do think, that God novv first stirred up Isaac to this solemne kinde of blessing, that the povver of his election might appeare outvvardly, and mystically to teach us many other things, as aftervvards we shall see. From hence Jacob learned to do the like, before his death, not to one, but to all his children, and to the tvvo children of his sonne Joseph. Gen 49. And faithfull Parents do vvell in imitation hereof to blesse their children, and to teach them to come and crave their blessing to this day; although their blessing be but a praying for a blessing upon them, and not a Prophesying, as these of Isaac and Jacob vvere. Novv for Isaacs going about to crosse Gods Ordinance; herein, saith Musculus, Musculus. he vvas blindly carryed by the love of his first-borne to preferre him before the younger, and to strive against the Oracle of God: for it could not be hidden from him vvhat God had pronounced, before that they vvere borne: vvherefore the perverse love of this sonne vvas more blindnesse in him, then the blindnesse of his eyes, and so he cannot be excused herein. But happily he knevv not yet of the Oracle, and so vvhat he intended to do here, he intended according to the course of nature, that is, to give the principality to the first-borne. Whereas Musculus and others think, that he could not but know it, all circumstances seeme rather to evince, that he knew it not: for first, it was not revealed to him, but to Rebecca, then in all this time; although Esau was faulty, he remitted nothing of his love towards him, but loved him still most, as his first-borne, and out of this his great love, he would now blesse him, as his first-borne, and when he had erred herein, he was exceedingly perplexed, whereas if he had known the will of God, he would doubtlesse at last have cryed peccavi, or else elſe before that he would not ſo palpably have ſet himſelfe againſt it. Moreover, if it had been Gods will that Iſaac ſhould have known it, he would have revealed it to him, as well as to her, but now he did not only not do ſo, but directed Rebecca to keep it ſecret to this day, as is moſt probable, becauſe otherwiſe it had been eaſieſt for her now to have told him of it, that he might not have proceeded in his purpoſe. Laſtly, we ought to be very wary of caſting ſuch an aſperſion upon ſo holy a man without plaine evidence. It is moſt probable therefore, that Iſaac ignorantly and not knowing any thing touching Gods will to the contrary, went about to have bleſſed Eſau, and the Lord for the great myſtery of the paſſages hereabout, did in his providence appoint it thus to be. Laſtly, for Iſaac his ſending Eſau to get him Veniſon, before that he would bleſſe him, ſome think, that the reaſon hereof was, becauſe he would have him do a filiall duty, and ſo orderly come to receive a paternall bleſſing, as Fathers commonly look for duty and obſervance from their children, and ſo proceed to the giving of them their bleſſing. Others hold, that the reaſon was only myſticall, Iſaac being by a ſingular providence moved to require this firſt at his hands, purpoſing then to bleſſe him; thus Auguſtine, but he ſheweth not what this myſtery is. Gregory ſaith, that hereby was figured out Gods deſire to feed upon the good works of the Jewes, but whileſt they delayed, hardening their hearts, and ſeeking works abroad, the Gentiles being inſtructed by the Mother of grace, preſent to the almighty Father the meat of their good works, and are bleſſed in their ſtead. Rupertus ſaith, that hereby were figured out ſuch Prelates of the Church, as for gaine preferre unworthy men to the Miniſteriall office, but contrariwiſe, as Rebecca the Church ſhould provide, that they may be prevented, and the worthy promoted. Others hold, that the receiving of carnall things, by ſuch as miniſter ſpirituall, is hereby figured out. But I preferre that of Gregory, being corrected as follows; becauſe things done in the old Teſtament were in many things a preladſum of things ſet forth under the new; and Eſau his labouring abroad in the fields doth aptly repreſent the Jewes labouring by the ſtrict obſerving of the vvorks of the Lavv to be juſtified, vvhereas Jacob in the meane ſeaſon ſtaying at home, as the Gentiles depending only upon the mercy of God in Chriſt, and not ſeeking out by their ovvn vvorks to be juſtified, vvas bleſſed, and Eſau miſſed of the bleſſing. This then may be the myſticall, the other the literal reaſon. Or elſe vve may ſay vvith Ainſworth, that Iſaac vvould firſt eat ſavoury meat, and drink vvine to cheare up his ſpirits, that he might be a more fit inſtrument of the Spirit of God herein. For anger, and ſorrovv, and other like paſſions diſtemper the minde, and by ſuch outvvard things it is mitigated and refreſhed, Pro. 31.6,7. For the Phraſe uſed here, That my ſoule may bleſſe thee, it is an Hebraiſme, it being meant, that I may bleſſe thee. Rebeccah repeating to Jacob the ſame thing, v. 7. hath theſe vvords, That I may bleſſe thee before the Lord, that is, that I may bleſſe thee vvith all happineſſe, the Lord ſeconding it and making it effectuall.

Lyranus.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt. 79.

Gregor. Hom. 6. in Ezech.

Rupert. in Gen.

The Myſtery.

Eſau being thus ſent avvay by his Father for Veniſon, Rebecca certifieth Jacob hereof, bidding him to go to the flock, and to fetch thence tvvo good Kids, vvhich ſhe vvould dreſſe and prepare, as Iſaac loved beſt, and herevvith he ſhould go and get his Fathers bleſſing inſtead of Eſau. All vvhich, after ſome objection, he doth, and ſo he is prepared to go in to his Father. The maine queſtion here is, vvhether Rebecca and Jacob ſinned not, the one in counſelling, and the other in diſſembling ſo greatly? for there were three diſſimulations at this time in Jacob. 1 In that he ſaid he was Eſau. 2 That he had done his Fathers command. 3 That he called his Kids fleſh Veniſon, as if it had been taken by hunting?

Verſe 6,7.
Verſe 8,9.
&c. to V. 15.

Queſt.

The ancient Fathers generally anſvvere, that there vvas no fault in all this, but by an inſtinct from God it vvas thus done for myſticall inſtruction to others. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that this vvas no diſſimulation, but a divine diſpenſation ſation, and that deceit in this kinde is not to be called deceit: for as there is an evill, ſo there is a good deceit, vvhereby Jeremiah ſaith, Thou haſt deceived me (Lord) and I was deceived. And in another place he ſaith, I cannot call that deceit, vvhich is not vvith a fraudulent minde, deceit, but a certaine Oeconomy, and Wiſdome, & Art rather, vvhereby to eſcape out of the midſt and unbeaten ſtraits of things being deſperate, the vices of the minde being corrected and amended. He only is vvorthy of the name of a deceiver, vvho vvith a vvicked minde, and ſtudy to hurt, vveaveth the Web of diſſimulation and fraud, for otherwiſe it hath done good oft-times to deceive, the ſafety of many being by this art provided for. And laſtly, upon this place, Weigh not the diſſimulation uſed, but the end wherefore God would have his prediction touching Jacob fulfilled, and ſo diſpenſed all things accordingly. And that God had an hand herein is plaine, becauſe Iſaac was kept from knowing the deceit, which might eaſily have been diſcerned, and Eſau was kept from coming in, till that Jacob, all things being finiſhed, went out againe, and Iſaac, after that he knew the deceit, was not angry with Iacob, but confirmed unto him the bleſſing. Caſſianus the Scholler of Chryſoſtome likewiſe ſaith, We muſt uſe lying as Hellebor, which if it be taken in the danger of a deadly ſickneſſe, it is healthfull, but out of this great danger being taken it is preſent deſtruction. Who can reckon up all the Saints and Patriarchs, which for the ſafety of life, or ſome for the deſire of a bleſſing, ſome for mercy, ſome for the hiding of a myſtery, ſome for the zeale of God, and ſome for the examination of the truth, have taken to them, as I may ſo ſay, the patronage of lying. And againe, nothing is more to be reproved then lying, yet Iacob was not only not reproved for this, but bleſſed, becauſe he lied not out of a covetous deſire of the birth-right, but out of a ſanctifying faith, there being none other way to attaine unto it. Origen alſo, as he is alledged by Ierome, ſaith, that lying indeed is unſeemly and unprofitable for God, but ſometimes profitable for men. For ſometime there is a neceſſity of lying, as to Heſter, Iudith, and Iacob, whom we ought to imitate, uſing lying, as a medicine, for neceſſity, but then keeping within a meaſure. And hitherto the firſt way, whereby Jacob is juſtified, and according to theſe ancients, in the caſe of great neceſſity a man may diſſemble, and lie to ſave life, as the Midwives of Egypt, and Rahab, or in zeale towards God, as Iacob here, and Iehu, who, that he might deſtroy Baals Prieſts, diſſembled ſacrificing to Baal. For of this Ierome ſpeaking ſaith, that diſſimulation is profitable, and to be uſed ſometimes, appeareth by the example of Iehu, and of David feigning himſelfe mad, and of Chriſt himſelfe, who came in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh. But Auguſtine contrariwiſe, and Gregory, and Theodoret, and many more acknowledge no lying to have been here, but that either all things ſaid and done were figurative and myſticall, Iacob being herein carried on, as it were, by a Propheticall ſpirit, or that all, which was ſaid, is very true in that ſenſe, wherein it was ſpoken.

Chryſoſt. hom. 6 in Colloſ.

Saint Auguſtine ſaith, if we look into the next cauſe of Iacobs diſſembling, he may ſeeme to have lied, but if this be referred to that, for which indeed it was done, by Goats skinnes, we may underſtand ſinnes, but by him, that covered himſelfe herewith, he was ſignified, who bare, not his own, but other mens ſinnes. Thus alſo Hyppolitus the Martyr; Rebecca knowing, vvhat ſhould aftervvards be don by Chriſt, bade Iacob go and fetch tvvo good Kids, to figure out Chriſts coming in the fleſh to redeem us from ſinne, for Kids were uſed in ſacrifice. And two muſt be taken, to ſignifie two ſorts of people redeemed, and they muſt be good and tender, to ſhew that they muſt be docible and gentle. She putteth upon him alſo the Garments of Eſau, ſetting forth hereby the faith and Scriptures, which were, as it were, the Jewes Garments put upon the Gentiles, and the skinnes, wherewith his neck and hands were covered, ſignified our ſinnes borne by Chriſt. Ambroſe underſtanding by the goodly raiment of Eſau his Robe, referreth it to the new Teſtament, Jer.20.

Lib.1.de Sacerdotio.

Hom.53. in Gen.

Caſſian.lib. de mendacio coll. 17.c.17. Cap.25. Quis propemodum enumerare ſufficiat omnes Patriarchas & innumerabiles alios ſanctos pro vitæ tutamine, alios pro deſiderio benedictionis, alios pro miſericordia, alios pro occultatione myſterii, alios pro zelo Dei, alios pro veritatis examinatione patrocinium utilitâ dixerim aſſumpſiſſe mendacii.
Origen lib.6. Stromat.
Hieron. in Gal.2.
Aug. lib. contra Mend.c.10. Si cauſam proximam requiramus, mentitum putabimus. Si autem hoc factum ad illud, ad quod ſignificandum revera factum eſt referatur, per hœdinas pelles, peccata, per eum verò qui eis ſe operuit, ille ſignificatus eſt, qui non ſua ſed aliena peccata portavit.
Hyppolitus martyr.
Ambroſ.lib.2.de Jacob & vita beata,c.2.

Teſtament, which as a Propheticall and Sacerdotall Robe being taken from the elder Brother, the Jew, was put upon the Gentile, the younger Brother. Gregory by the covering with Goats Skinnes underſtandeth the confeſſion of ſinnes in the convert Gentiles, &c. as Hyppolitus. Againe, others there are, that juſtifie all things ſaid to be true, holding that there was no lie herein, as Theodoret, who ſaith, that Jacob lied not, when he ſaid, I am thy firſt-borne, becauſe he had before bought the right of the firſt-borne of Eſau for a meſſe of Pottage. Thomas Anglicus likewiſe upon this place ſaith, This was no lie, but a certaine deceit of a ſimple plaine man, conteining under it covertly a profound myſtery of truth. As Chriſt lied not, when he ſaid, Math. 11. of John the Baptiſt, This is Elias. For ſo Jacob ſaying, that he was Eſau, was to be underſtood, as ſpeaking not of the perſon, but of the prerogative of right, and the dignity of the Primogeniture given unto him by God, and conveyed unto him before by a ſacramentall buying. This then was thus done by Propheticall inſpiration, and divine authority, as alſo appeareth, becauſe Iſaac coming to underſtand, what was done, was not offended with Jacob, as abuſing him with lies, but as acknowledging all to have been ordered and guided by God, he confirmed the bleſsing given unto him. Moreover, Iacob was before ſpoken of as a plaine and ſimple man, and ſo free from deceit; and laſtly, after this, God to ſhew, how greatly he loved him, and approved of his doings, appeared unto him divers times, and comforted him, and for his greater grace took his title from him, as from Abraham and Iſaac, the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob. Thus alſo Saint Auguſtine ſometime defendeth Iacob, ſaying, that his words were figurative, and the ſame in effect with thoſe of Chriſt, The laſt ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt, for ſo the laſt and the younger here had obteined the primacy of the elder. And this is followed by many, as Beda, Iſidore, Rupertus, &c. Laſtly, yet even ſome of them that defend Jacob, from the myſticall ſenſe of his words acknowledge that he ſinned venially both in his diſſimulation and ſpeeches; as Lyranus, who ſaith, that although the words of Jacob may be ſome way expounded, ſo as that they may be true, yet there was ſome lying herein: ſo alſo Scotus, and Toſtatus, and Hyppomannus, ſaying, that it was an officious lie, and that he ſinned venially. And Cajetan argueth diverſly to prove Jacob a liar. 1 Becauſe he ſaid, that he was his firſt-borne Eſau, and being asked, If he were that his ſonne Eſau, he anſwered. Yea; ſo that although he might ſpeak myſtically at the firſt, meaning the right of the Primogeniture, and not the perſon, yet now Iſaac deſiring to ſift the ſenſe of his words out, and therefore asking him of the perſon, he could not ſpeak truly. 2 Becauſe he ſaid he had done, as his Father commanded him, and bade him ariſe and eat of his ſonnes Veniſon. 3 Becauſe in all things he carried himſelfe ſo, as one that would purpoſely deceive his Father. Calvin condemneth greatly both Rebecca for preſcribing this deceit, and not leaving all to God, and Iacob for groſſe lying, and when he was once intangled, keeping no meaſure in lying and ſpeaking untruly, although he ſaith, that the faith of Rebecca wrought with her, and was the occaſion of her deviſing this fraud. And they ſay, We ſhall not need ſo anxiouſly to ſeek to excuſe Jacob from ſinning, becauſe he vvas a man, and ſo as a man had his infirmities, as all even the beſt have had. So that there are foure opinions touching Iacobs fraud. 1 That it vvas no lying, but myſticall ſpeaking. 2 That he diſſembled not, but figured out moſt notably things to come, vvhich are profitable for us to knovv. 3 That although he lied, yet he ſinned not, it being done for a neceſſary good not othervviſe to be atteined, and that by divine motion and diſpenſation. 4 That he diſſembled and lied, vvhich vvas a fault in him. For mine ovvne part, I do rather incline to the ancient Fathers, vvho excuſe Iacob and Rebecca in all this, rather then to thoſe, that accuſe him. To deceive Iſaac indeed by actions and vvords I grant, that they had a purpoſe, forſomuch yet as that it vvas for godlineſſe, and Gods hand vvent vvith them to proſper their project, neither vvas there any thing ſaid, but Gregor. hom. 6. in Ezech.

Theod. in Gen. quæſt. 80.
Emerat privilegia primogenituræ ab Eſau, ideoque verè ſeiſſam appellabat primogenitum.
Tho. Anglicus in Gen. 27.
Auguſt. lib. contra Mendac. cap. 10.
Lyranus.
Cajetan. in Gen.
Calvin.

but in some sense true. I dare not say, but that he which giveth man wisdome, secretly wrought by his Spirit with Rebecca and Iacob in all this, and if so, we must take heed that we charge them not with any fault for so doing. Touching the speeches used by Iacob, not only Christ saith in like manner of Iohn the Baptist, that he was Elias, but also Ezechiel in speaking of the Messiah to come calleth him David, and with a purpose to deceive the Jews, the Lord calleth his body a Temple, saying, Destroy this Temple, &c. And whereas Isaac requiring to know, whether he were that his sonne Esau, it is true which he answereth, I am that Esau, preferred as thy first-borne by God, and so he whom thou oughtest to blesse. Touching the next words of Iacob, I have done as thou commandedst me, they are true in this sense, I who am in right thy first-borne have done, as thou commandedst thy first-borne, and for his calling his meat Venison, this he might well do, because in the manner of dressing it, and in the forme, in which it was represented to him, it was as Venison. So he that hath other flesh, but no true Venison, having prepared it, and baked it in the manner of Venison, is wont to say, Come and eat of my Venison, neither doth he offend in so saying. For any other meanes used to deceive, as the putting on of Esau his Apparell, and Goats skinnes, there could be no fault in this, seeing he did it, not to wrong any man, but to get that which properly belonged unto him. For although to dissemble after the manner of Hypocrites, or to hurt others any kinde of way in our dealings, being our Neighbours and Brethren, be a grosse sinne, yet for our owne safety in time of danger to dissemble, as David did before Achish King of Gath, or only for good, as wise Physicians deale with their patients, or by policy in time of Warre, as Joshuah was directed to dissemble a feare of the men of Ai, or when God willeth, as the Hebrews borrowed precious things of the Egyptians and so robbed them, is no sinne, because no direct lying, sith shews dissemblingly made may have a divers construction. But lying is in many places condemned, as Ps. 5.6. Prov. 12.22. Joh. 8.44. Revel. 14.5. Revel. 22. &c. and the order of nature, which is for the tongue to declare, what is in the heart, is perverted by lying, and God is truth, and by speaking the truth he hath glory, and of lies the Devill is the Father, Joh. 8. 44. Wherefore it is to be acknowledged, that the holy servants of God, who lied upon any occasion shewed herein their weaknesse, and who is there that liveth and sinneth not? that we may not by any of their examples be incouraged to lying in time of danger, but either be silent or speak the truth for the event, casting our care upon God, who careth for us. And above all we ought to flee pernicious lying, which is to the prejudice of our Neighbours life, goods, liberty or good name, or to feed his minde and eares with fables, which is idle speaking and a great abuse, or to abuse lawfull authority to escape danger in some, to the indangering of many more. As when Popish Priests and Jesuites are convented before Magistrates, & examined touching their profession for the common safety, in this case to deny it, or to equivocate is abominable lying, seeing their profession is either evill, and so what is said falsely for the patronizing thereof, is not for God, but for the Devill, or good, and so to deny or to hide it, is the fruit of cowardize, and of an heart false to God and to his Truth, in that they flee suffering therefore. For the things mystically set forth in this disguised coming of Jacob before Isaac for his blessing, I cannot see, how Christ should be figured out in Jacob thus covered, for he came not in the raiment of our sinnes to the Father to be blessed, but being a covering to us rather by faith we attaine to this blessing, God smelleth the sent of his righteousnesse upon us, and so blesseth us, and dignifieth us. Or in the faith of our elder Brother, the Jew, we the Gentiles come to be blessed, we seeking not justification by our own righteousnesse, but in the acknowledgement of our sinnes, and by faith in Jesus Christ, which may be called the Jews Garments, because first offered to them, and made, as it were, for them. This last way Rupertus applieth it excellently, saying Ezech. 37.

1 Thess. 4.6.

Calvin.

ſaying, The Lord, the World waxing now old, offered his bleſſing firſt to his eldeſt ſonne, the Jew, ſeeking to call him home by faith and repentance, but he delaying to come, Rebecca, the Mother, that is, grace ſtirreth up the Gentile, the younger, to go and fetch two good Kids, &c. Not that any one man can at once eat ſo much, but hereby were ſet forth the two Teſtaments received by the Gentiles, for to confeſſe and hold theſe is the meat of God, and we do (as it were) bring him delicate meat to feed upon, when we do thus. Rupert. lib. 7. in Gen. c. 15.

Verſe 9.

Jacob being inſtructed by his Mother, yet feareth ſo to be curſed, and not bleſſed; but ſhe to add confidence unto him, in obeying her, ſaith, Upon me be the curſe, my ſonne; obey thou my voice, and go. Verſe 10,11 Verſe 12.

Here againe, both Jacob and Rebecca are blamed by ſome, as ſinning, the one, becauſe he doubted, and yet went about this deceit, and the other, becauſe ſhe through raſh zeal was ſupinely confident, not fearing the curſe. But others rather commend Iacob from hence, as being manifeſtly without deceit, and therefore not knowing that this motion came from God, ſhewing an averſneſſe herefrom. And touching Rebecca, her faith, that the Oracle of God ſhould certainly take effect in Iacob, made her thus confident: for ſhe was aſſured, that he could not be curſed, but bleſſed altogether. Calvin. Auguſt. lib. 16. de Civit. c. 37.

And Rebecca took goodly raiment of her elder ſonne Eſau, which were with her in the houſe. Verſe 15.

Muſculus noteth here, that ſome hold this raiment to have been deteined by Rebecca from Eſau, when he married contrary to her liking. The words tranſlated, goodly rayment, are deſiderable raiment. The Septuagint render it a goodly Robe, or Stole, it may ſeem to be ſuch as the Prieſts did afterwards uſe in their miniſtration, for they are ſo called, Exod. 28.2,3. and happily it was one received from Anceſtours, and therefore laid up carefully by Rebecca in ſome ſweet Cheſt, and therefore the ſweet ſmell hereof is ſpoken of, verſe 27. Muſculus. Vatablus.

Who art thou (my ſonne?) knowing that it was not his ſonne Eſau his voice, and not thinking, that Jacob would come now in his ſtead, he moveth this queſtion: for I cannot think with ſome, that although his ſight failed him, that his underſtanding failed him alſo, ſo as that he could not know Jacob by his voice, becauſe he doth by and by declare the contrary, ſaying, The hands are Eſau his hands, but the voice is Iacobs voice. Verſe 18. Marlorat.

The Lord thy God brought it to my hands. Verſe 20.

Here, ſaith Luther, he lied magnifically; and Calvin, he mingled prophanely a ſpeech touching Gods providence with his owne lies. But the Veniſon, which he preſented, was truely brought to his hands by Gods providence, Rebecca being ſtirred up by God to ſet him a work thus ſpeedily to get it. And in calling God Iſaacs God, he ſought to inſinuate the more into his favour, and to make him the more credulous. Luther. Calvin.

And Iſaac knew him not, and bleſſed him. Verſe 21.

Herein, Calvin ſaith rightly, Iſaac was uſed as an inſtrument only, bleſſing he knew not whom; and yet God, who uſed him, made it effectuall, although he doubted touching the perſon, and had no certaine faith, whether of his two ſonnes he was. Something like unto which is daily done by the Miniſter of the Word, he ſoweth the ſeed of grace and reconciliation with God, but is uncertaine to whom it ſhall be effectuall; yet through God, who ſetteth him a work, it is effectuall. The fiction therefore of the Papiſts is overthrowne, who ſay, that all the force of the Sacraments dependeth upon the intention of the Prieſt, as if for the want of his intention Gods bleſſing could be made fruſtrate. Iſaacs bleſſing of Iacob is here ſpoken of by way of anticipation, for he bleſſeth him not, till that having queſtioned againe whether he were Eſau or not, he received his Veniſon at his hands, and had beene refreſhed herewith, and with his Wine. For then he biddeth him to come neare, and kiſſeth him, and beginneth to ſpeak of the ſmell of his Garments, and ſo proceedeth to bleſſe him. He ſaith, that the ſmell of his ſonne, was like Verſe 24,25 Verſe 26,27 the smell of a field, which the Lord had blessed. Setting forth a wonderfull great delight, that he took in him, that his blessing following being uttered with life and spirit, might appeare to come from the very desire of his soule. For the smell of a field bearing corne after a raine is most pleasant to the Husbandman, and therefore most aptly he sheweth, how his spirits were revived now, when he spake thus. And to blesse thus with the soule, and not with the mouth only is effectuall. Some commend, and that not unjustly, the temperance of Isaac, in that he would not, though he loved this kinde of meat greatly, eat of it, when Iacob first brought it in, but stayeth in debating, who it was, that brought it him, and then proceeded to eat thereof. Gregor. Hom. 6. in Ezech. applying this to the Church, saith, Here the Grape smelleth in Preaching, the Olive in charity, the Rose in Martyrdom, the Lillie in Virginity, the Violet in humility, and the ripe eare in perfection of good works.

Musculus.

Verse 28. God grant thee of the dew of Heaven, and of the fat of the earth, and abundance of Corne and Wine. As he had compared him to a field, so he wisheth the blessings of a field unto him. Whereas he may seem in all this not to have had any sense of Heavenly things, but only of earthly, because he mentioneth none else, They are deceived, saith Calvin, that think so, for the Land of Canaan, and fruitfulnesse there unto Abrahams posterity were types of Heaven and the comforts therein. The Lord indeed did not then carry his servants directly to Heavenly things, by speaking so plainly of them, as now under the New Testament, but reserved this to the revealing of his owne sonne in the fulnesse of time, when he should come into the World, but before he carried them, as it were, a further way about, teaching them by types and figures of earthly things, and hereby, as by helps, raising them up to Heavenly. For the forme of blessing by way of wishing, Iosephus saith, that he prayed thus unto the Lord, saying (O Lord) thou hast promised to my Father the greatest good, &c. Let this thy favour now be perpetuall, &c. But this his wishing or praying is to be understood, as a propheſying, as if he had said, God shall give unto thee of the dew of Heaven, and the imprecations of holy men in Scripture are to be understood likewise. This blessing is fourfold. 1 of Riches, 2 Of Victory. 3 Of Principality in his family. 4 Of Honour and Glory; which are not to be understood, as spoken of only to the person of Iacob, but of his posterity, and if at any time they wanted any of these, it was either for their sinnes, or they were made good in blessings spirituall and Heavenly: so Tho. Anglicus. But why doth he speak of the Dew and not of Raine and Snow, and the heat of the Sunne? Answ. Because the dew in those parts without doing any hurt, did most conduce to fertility, raine by the sudden falling, and the Sun by the parching heat sometime doing hurt. For ordinarily it rained there but twice in the yeare, in October, the seed being committed to the ground, and in April or May to ripen the Corne, which were called the early and the latter raine, at other times, the dew still supplyed the office of raine, gently moistening the ground, and making it fruitfull. He blesseth him with Corne and Wine, as the chief fruits for the sustentation and comfort of this life, all other good fruits being also hereby understood. Some, besides these two read Oile also, but neither the Hebrew, Chaldee or Greek Copies have this. Theodoret applieth this Allegorically to Christ, whose divinity is, as the dew of Heaven, not being seen when it cometh down, but perceived afterwards, and his humanity, as the fat of the earth, and his divine mysteries the Corne and Wine. And to this it is alluded, Ps. 71. He shall come downe as the dew into a fleece of woll, and as the raine upon the earth.

Joseph lib. 1. antiquit.

Tho. Anglicus in Gen. 27. Quest.

Theodoret. qu. 81. in Gen.

Verse 29. Let people serve thee, and Nations bow unto thee, be Lord over thy Brethren, and let thy mothers sonnes bow to thee, &c. That is, saith the Targum, or Paraphrase of Ierusalem, the people that come of Esau, the divers Nations coming of Ishmael, the sonnes of Keturah, and the sonnes of Laban, thy Mothers Brother. And he that curseth thee, shall be cursed, as Balaam, and he that blesseth thee, blessed, as Moses. But by people and Nations seeme rather to be understood Targum Hierosolymitan.

Musculus.

underſtood divers Nations ſubdued afterwards by the Iſraelites, & by Brethren and Mothers ſonnes Eſau his poſterity, ſo alſo Muſculus. Or myſtically the ſeed of Jacob, Chriſt Jeſus hath all ſubjected unto him, as Rupertus ſpeaketh, for before him bow all the ſonnes of his Mother, that is, the Citizens of Jeruſalem, which is above, and they are curſed, that curſe him, becauſe deſtitute of the Spirit, &c. And he and his faithfull people, ſaith Auguſtine, rule over the Jews, his Bretheren, and Princes are ſubjected unto him. He is bleſſed of Iſaac, that is, the Jew, ignorantly, of him is the dew of Heavenly inſtruction and the fatneſſe of the earth in the gathering of the people to him, and Corne and Wine in the Sacrament of his body and bloud.

Rupert. in Gen. lib. 7. c. 17.
Gal. 4.
Aug. de Civ't. Dei, lib. 16 c. 37
Chriſtus ex ore Judæorum benedicitur, cum legem & Prophetas cantant, licèt alius benedici putetur ab eis errantibus exteſtatus.

The bleſſing of Jacob being thus finiſhed, Eſau cometh with his Veniſon, ſaying, when his Father asked who he was, that he was Eſau, his firſt-borne, whereupon Iſaac feared with a very great feare, &c. Calvin ſaith, that now he remembred the divine Oracle touching Jacob, and recounting withall his own errour through a prepoſterous affection to his firſt-borne he was aſtoniſhed, but by faith he overcometh naturall affection, and confirmeth his bleſſing to Jacob. Saint Auguſtine will have that, which is ſaid to have been a very great feare here, to have been an extaſie, for ſo it is in the Septuagints Tranſlation, ἔξεση δὲ Ἰσαὰκ ἔκστασιν μεγάλην σφόδρα, and that hereby ſuch a change of the minde happened, and alienation thereof, as that now it was revealed to him, and he was admoniſhed touching the bleſſing of Jacob, becauſe otherwiſe he would have been greatly offended with him, as mocking him, whereas he contrariwiſe confirmed immediately unto him the bleſſing. And this is moſt probable, becauſe, as hath been already ſhewed, Iſaac knew it not before.

Verſe 30, 31
Verſe 32, 33
Calvin.

Auguſt. quæſt. 80. in Gen.

Then Eſau cryed with a great cry and bitter, Bleſſe me alſo (my Father.) Eſau hoped, ſaith Vatablus, that by his Fathers bleſſing he might have againe recovered the right of the Primogeniture before ſo lightly paſſed away, and this made him, ſeeing that he was diſappointed thereof, to break out into this bitter crying. In his example we may ſee, that prophane men think to obteine mercy at their owne wils, but for neglecting the grace offered, when at the laſt mercies ſhall be diſtributed, it ſhall appeare, how vaine theſe their hopes have been, whereupon they ſhall vex themſelves and cry out for mercy, but without all benefit.

Verſe 34.
Vatablus.

Note.
Heb. 12. 19.

Thy Brother came with deceit, and took away thy bleſſing.

By this ſpeech of Iſaac it ſhould ſeem in his judgement, that Jacob ſinned by the ſinne of deceit, and therefore is not excuſable, becauſe a true Iſraelite is without guile. But it may be anſwered, the word deceit is ſometime taken in a good ſenſe, for prudence to effect ſome good thing, as where Saint Paul ſaith, ſeeing I was crafty, I took you with deceit. And Ulpianus noteth, that the Ancients ſometimes uſed the word, deceit, for a good deceit, or for wittineſſe, eſpecially againſt an enemy or againſt a Thief: ſo likewiſe Gellius, Theſe words, Tempeſtas, Valetudo, Facinus, Dolus, &c. were of a doubtfull ſignification amongſt the Ancients, ſometime a bad, ſometime a good one. Lyranus ſaith, the Hebrews expounded ברמה, with deceit, providenter, becauſe it is of a doubtfull ſignification, ſometime ſignifying deceit, and ſometime prudence or a good warineſſe, and thus he ſaith, it is to be underſtood here, becauſe by this time God had revealed his will to Iſaac touching the bleſſing of Jacob, and therefore it is not likely that he would now lay any evill imputation upon him. His meaning then is, that Jacob by this his witty invention had gone beyond Eſau to obteine this great good of his bleſſing, neither did he wittingly conferre it upon him, thus illuding Eſau.

Verſe 35.

John 1. 48.

2 Cor. 12.

Ulpian.

Gellius lib. 12. cap. 9.
Lyranus.

Eſau hearing this, falleth a railing upon Jacob, carping at his name, but is without grace to ſee into his own prophaneneſſe, to repent thereof. And he asketh his Father, whether he had not reſerved one bleſſing for him? Iſaac anſwereth, Behold, I have made him thy Lord, &c. Which is not to be underſtood, as though any but God had power thus to ſet up and to pull downe, Verſe 36.

Verſe 37.

but because Isaac stood now in Gods stead, and represented him, Esau yet is importunate, & saith, Hast thou but one blessing? blesse me, even me also, my Father, &c. Although Isaac had conferred the blessing of predominancy upon Jacob irrevocably, yet Esau thinketh, that he might blesse him otherwise, so that he might be as rich, and as honourable as Jacob, which was the only thing, as Philo saith, that he aimed at, and therefore he so much importuneth him for a blessing. If it be demanded here, why Esau ascribed so much to his Fathers blessing? I answer, it is a thing imprinted in nature, and confirmed by often experiments, that the Parents blessing or cursing are of great force, but much more of most holy Fathers, such as Isaac and Abraham, so greatly in grace with the Lord, as he could not but observe. But why then did not Isaac in like manner crave Abrahams blessing? Answ. The will of God was revealed touching Isaac from his very birth, and although the like may be said of Jacob, yet it was not so commonly known, as being only revealed to Rebecca, and Ishmael was cast out, so that there was no danger to Isaac in respect of him, and consequently no such reason to seek a further confirmation. But considering that Jacob blessed all his sonnes severally afterwards, and the two sonnes of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh, why did Isaac stand at blessing one after another, as if he could blesse but one only? Answ. The sonnes of Jacob were all the holy seed, but Esau was cut off from being such, and therefore Isaac knowing it is stounded, as it were, at his demand.

Verse 38.

Philo. Quest.

Quest.

Quest.

Verse 39. Then Isaac answered, In the fat of the earth shall be thy habitation, &c. Here Isaac seemeth to be moved by the crying and weeping of Esau to blesse him, which he had not otherwise done; whereas Saint Paul saith, He found no place for repentance, although he sought the blessing with teares: How do these agree together? Answ. The Apostle seemeth indeed to deny two things implyed here. 1 That Esau repented, for what did his weeping argue else but his repenting? 2 That he prevailed with his Father, for he saith, he was rejected, whereas he was not so rejected, but he obteined a blessing at the last; but the Apostle meaneth nothing else, but that he could not move Isaac to repent of that which he had done, to take the blessing away againe from Jacob, and to conferre it upon him. So that, although he obteined a blessing, yet it was not the blessing principally desired by him, but only a blessing, common to the wicked and to the Godly. And if Esau his repenting be spoken of his weeping was not any fruit of true repenting, but of envy against his Brother, whom he saw thus preferred before him, as Theodoret saith. It was not repentance for the sinne of selling his birth-right, but for the dammage of losing the inheritance, as the damned in hell repent, as saith Thomas Aquinas. But did not Isaac before seem to have given all the blessing that he could, to Iacob? How then doth he now blesse Esau also? Answ. He blesseth him, but as Ishmael was blessed, in temporall things, the great blessing resting still entire in Iacob only. But how is this blessing verified, when as by Malachy it is said, God gave a fruitfull Land unto Jacob, but made Esau to dwell in desert places, in Mount Seir? To this Calvin answereth, if Mount Seir be compared with Canaan, as then it was, it was but a barren place, yet simply considered, it was sufficiently fruitfull to susteine the Inhabitants, and it was watered with the dew of Heaven also,

Heb. 12. 16.

Quest.

Theodoret. Thom. Aquinas in Hebr. Non pœnitebat de peccato venditionis, sed de damno perditionis.

Quest.

Mal. 1. 3. Calvin.

Verse 40. And thou shalt live by thy Sword, and serve thy Brother, and it shall come to passe, when thou shalt get the Mastery, thou shalt breake his yoak off thy neck.

Joseph. lib. 4. de bello Jud.

This was verified in the Edomites, that came of Esau, as Josephus testifieth; for they were a turbulent Nation, delighting in innovations, and alwayes in Armes, going to Warre, as to a Feast, being also most bloudy and cruell. And they served the Israelites 700 yeares after this, in the time of King David, but brake this yoak in the dayes of King Joram, setting up a King of their own, yet afterwards they were subjected againe in the time of Hircanus, the sonne of Simon, of the family of the Asmonei, untill that Herod an Idumean got the Sovereignty contrariwise over the Israelites, through the favour favour of the Roman Emperour, continuing ſo to reigne, till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. This being ſubject to his Brother, Ambroſe expoundeth, as a bleſſing; ſaying, Eſau by his importunity obteined a bleſſing, but ſuch, as agreed with the former, he ſhould ſerve his Brother, the holy Patriarch herein, providing for the good of them both, as a man having two ſonnes, one fooliſh and diſſolute, the other wiſe and temperate, in turning over the fooliſh to be ruled by the wiſe Brother and not to the dominion of a ſtranger, is provident for his good. As Eſau, he is ſervile, that hath not the authority of a pure conſcience; for piety is over cruelty, and mildneſſe over harſh conditions. He is ſervile, that is broken with feare, or intangled with delight, or drawne with luſts, or exaſperated with indignation, or caſt downe with croſſes. For he that committeth ſinne is the ſervant of ſinne, Joh. 8.

2 Sam. 8. 2 King 8. Ioseph. Antiq. lib. 13.

Ambroſ. lib. 2. de Jacob & vita beata, cap 2. Servitem vis, qui vel metu frangitur, vel delectatione irretitur, vel trahitur cupiditate, vel indignatione exaſperatur vel mœrore deprimitur.

Theſe things being thus done, it is ſaid that Eſau hated Iacob for this bleſſing, meditating revenge by killing him at the time of his Fathers death. Hereby it is manifeſt, that his former teares were not the teares of repentance, but of envy and madneſſe. For mad he ſeemed to be indeed, to think of fruſtrating Iſaacs bleſſing upon Iacob by killing him, that the birth-right might thus againe returne to him, for thus he armed himſelfe againſt God. But why would he ſtay till his Fathers death? Anſ. Without doubt, for the great love and reverence, which he bare to his Father, who had alvvayes loved him ſo dearely, but for his Mother he paſſeth not, becauſe ſhe had alwayes ſhewed moſt love to Iacob. The Septuagint render it, Let the d yes of my Fathers mourning draw nigh, that I may kill, &c. A ſpeech of one thinking long for that time, that he might put in practiſe his bloudy intention. Some, ſaith Ferus, will have this to be the meaning, I vvill make my Father dayes of mourning, for I vvill kill Iacob, and this the Hebrevv vvill beare, vvhich is, The dayes of my Fathers mourning will or ſhall approach. And this made Rebecca to haſten Iacob avvay vvithout any deferring of time: Rebecca hearing of the purpoſe of Eſau, ſendeth her ſonne Iacob avvay to Padan-Aram a farre off, to avoid the danger; and to move Iſaac to be vvilling vvith it, ſhe complaineth of the Daughters of Heth, ſuch as Eſau had married, impugning the like in Iacob, that he might be ſent for a vvife to their ovvn kindred. Saint Auguſtine thinketh, that Rebecca came to knovv Eſau his purpoſe by divine Revelation, but it is ſaid, it vvas told unto her, vvhich is not vvont to be ſpoken of Gods Revelations, and therefore it is more probable, that Eſau ſpake of his purpoſe amongſt his friends, by vvhom it came to light. But vvhat meaneth ſhe by ſaying, Why ſhould I be deprived of you both in one day?

Auguſt. quæſt. 81. in Gen.

Verſe 45.

To this Calvin anſvvereth, It is not likely, that Jacob vvould alſo by fighting kill Eſau, but rather, that ſhe thought ſo heinous a murther could not go unrevenged by God, hovvſoever ſhe ſhould never abide Eſau after, but exterminate him from her, and ſo be as if ſhe had no childe at all. In that Rebecca doth not tell Iſaac to grieve him, of Eſau his purpoſe, but deviſeth another occaſion of ſending Iacob avvay, ſhe doth moſt vviſely, and in that ſhe ſendeth him not vvithout his conſent, moſt orderly. Neither doth ſhe herein any thing vitiouſly, for the Daughters of Heth vvere truly diſtaſtfull to her, only ſhe concealeth that vvhich vvas not needfull to be revealed, and vvhich being revealed might have bred much diſtraction in the family, Iſaac being oppreſſed with griefe, and Eſau the more incenſed, and therefore herein other Miſtreſſes of families ought to imitate her. Here we may ſee, how danger and trouble at the firſt followeth the bleſſing received, but great comfort and good came of it at the latter end, and the like is to be expected by all the faithfull.

Calvin.

Verſe 46.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1,2. Verse 3,4.

HEre Isaac being moved before by his wife Rebecca, sendeth his sonne Iacob away into Padan-Aram to take a wife there amongst his Mothers kindred, and in dismissing him blesseth him, praying God that he and his might have the blessing of Abraham, that is, the inheritance of the promised Land, thus excluding Esau and his posterity from being counted amongst the holy seed, that came of Abraham. And herein Iacob obeyeth, whereupon Esau, seeing that the Daughters of Canaan displeased his Parents, went to Ishmael, and took Mahalath his Daughter to wife. Here a question is moved by Calvin, whether Isaacs blessing of Jacob before were invalidous, that he now iterateth it againe? And he answereth, that this second blessing was for further confirmation, as the Lord did not once, but divers times make the same promises to Abraham, providing herein for his weakenesse, and not disparaging the former by the latter. And here Jacob is againe blessed by his Father Isaac, the rather, because when he blessed him before, he knew not who it was that he blessed, wherefore Jacob might otherwise have doubted, but now Isaac voluntarily doing it, he might be the more confirmed. And unto this we may adde that this was done upon the time of his departing into a farre Countrey, when piety requireth, that Parents should wish all good unto their Children, and one friend unto another, as before the Brethren of Rebecca at her departing had done unto her. The Rabbins say, that this second blessing was greater then the former, for that was of the dew of Heaven, and of the Corne of the Earth, but this had an eternall foundation, and there is no end of it, as it is written, God Almighty blesse thee, and the blessing of Abraham, &c.

Verse 5,6,7. Verse 8,9. Quest. Calvin.

Quest.

Another question also ariseth here, why Isaac would send Jacob into Padan-Aram for a wife, and not rather a servant to fetch one thence, as Abraham before had done, especially because Abraham then charged his servant not to carry his sonne Isaac down thither? But it is answered, that if a servant had been sent, and so much care had been shewed more about the marriage of Jacob then of Esau, it would have increased the envy of Esau against him, so Calvin. And for Abrahams charge touching Isaac before of not carrying him thither in case the woman would not follow him, it was not that Isaac might not at all go to Padan-Aram, but that he should not go out of the Land of Canaan to dwell there, so Musculus. And to this we may add, that the charge touching Isaacs not going thither was not without a mystery, as hath been shewed upon that place, Gen. 24.

Calvin.

Musculus.

Quest.

Moreover, it may be demanded, whether Esau in taking a Daughter of Ishmael sought now to please his Father, whom he had before offended by taking the Daughters of Canaan? I answer, by the Text it is plaine, that he did it to please him, for it is said, that he saw the Daughters of Canaan to be displeasing in the eyes of his Father, therefore he went and took, &c. But as Calvin well noteth, having done ill divers wayes, he sheweth a desire to please againe only in the matter of taking a wife no more of the Daughters of that Countrey, but he putteth them not away, but keepeth them still also, and in making choice of Ishmaels Daughter he little mended the matter, because he was cast out long before from having communion with the holy seed. It was then a way to please, of his own devising only; that which he ought chiefly to have done, being neglected, viz. to humble himselfe for his prophaneneſse in selling so vilely away his birth-right, professing such sorrow and submission therefore, as that he thought himselfe worthy to be subjected unto his Brother, craving only, though he might not be the chiefe, yet that he might be a member of the Church of God. And as for the matter of wiving, he should have craved pardon, and the advice of his Father.

Calvin.

Note.

The repentance of Esau is the repentance of many men, they will happily

reforme

reforme in ſome one thing, that they may have peace with God againe, but not in all, neither will they take counſell of God, but flee to ſome courſe of their owne deviſing, thinking thus to pacifie him, as diſſolute livers amongſt the Papiſts, to the life of Monks, Eremites, or Anchorites. But it may be ſaid, who hath required theſe things at your hands? Iſa. 1.

Laſtly, it may be queſtioned, whether Iſhmael were yet living, that Eſau could go to him? Anſw. It is not meant of the perſon of Iſhmael, but of the people coming of him called after his name, for Iſhmael was dead 14 years before this, as appeareth, becauſe Iacob and Eſau, as was ſhewed before, Chap. 27. 1. were now 77 yeares old, and Iſaac 137, before whom Iſhmael was 14 years, and dyed, Anno 137 of his age. Queſt.

Jacob therefore went from Beer-ſheba to Haran, and came to a certaine place, and lay there all night, &c. Verſe 10, 11.

A great queſtion is made here, what place this was? The Hebrews ſay, that it was Mount Moriah where Abraham was appointed before to offer up Iſaac in ſacrifice, this place called Bethel or Luz, being the ſame with Jeruſalem, and this is followed alſo by Lyranus, and the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, and many more, yea, Saint Auguſtine alſo ſeemeth to have been of the ſame opinion, for he ſaith, The words of Iacob, calling it the houſe of God, were a very Propheſie of the Tabernacles erecting there, and he promiſed Tithes to Gods houſe, that ſhould be erected there. And hereupon an old Verſe hath been uſed. Queſt.

Hebrai. Lyranus. Scholaſt. hiſt. in Gen. c. 73. S. Auguſt. qu. 83. in Gen. & qu. 85.

Solyma, Luza, Bethel, Jeruſ. Jebus, Elia, Urbs ſacra Jeruſalem dicitur atq; Salem.

And this opinion hath been the rather received, becauſe, if it were ſo, the place where God would be worſhipped of old, was alwayes one only from the dayes of Abraham, and ſo forth, and not only after the erecting of the Temple by Solomon there. And by this ſo plauſible an opinion I confeſſe, that I alſo have been formerly led, but now conſidering, that Bethel is another place in the tribe of Benjamin, and not the ſame with Jeruſalem, as appeareth, Joſ. 18.22. being compared with v. 28. (For Bethel and Jeruſalem are ſaid to be two diſtinct Cities of Benjamin farre diſtant the one from the other, that is, 12 miles, according to Jerom.) I rather hold it for certaine, that Bethel where Jacob now lay, was not in the ſame place, where the Temple was afterwards built, but elſewhere. Moreover, if we recount the coming of Abraham from thoſe parts, to which Jacob was now going, we ſhall finde it not to have been this Bethel, where he lodged, in the tribe of Benjamin, but another Bethel in the Tribe of Ephraim, which was more remote from Jeruſalem, even 36 miles in the Countrey of Samaria, neare to the City Sichem. For Abraham came to Sichem, and upon a Mountaine neare it pitched his Tent betweene Bethel and Ai. Wherefore Jacob being to go the ſame journey, it is moſt likely, that he went by the ſame place, and not by Jeruſalem, which ſtood Weſtward from Beer-ſhebah, from whence Iacob went, whereas Padan-Aram was Eaſtward leaning to the North, and ſo this Bethel was in the way thitherward, as all that deſcribe the holy Land conſent. But Borcardus, who ſpent much time in the holy Land, and exactly deſcribed it, ſaith, that this Bethel, to which Iacob came, was in the tribe of Benjamin. Yet when the expeditions of the ſeverall Tribes are ſpoken of, the houſe of Ioſeph is ſaid to have gone up againſt Bethel, which was before called Luz, and to have taken it, that is Ephraim and Manaſſeh. And the Mountaine of Bethel was their lot at the firſt aſſigned unto them, as far as Luz. Wherefore there was a Bethel belonging to the children of Ioſeph, as well as that of the Tribe of Benjamin, howſoever ſome deny that there were any more Bethels but one, in Benjamin. And this appeareth more plainly in that Jeroboam, whom ten Tribes followed, ſet up two Calves, the one in Bethel, and the other in Dan, leſt if the people ſhould go to worſhip in the Kingdom of Rehoboam, they ſhould revolt unto him. For if this Bethel had Hieron. in locis Hebr.

Gen. 12. 6.

Borcardus.

Judg. 1. 22

Joſ. 16. 1.

H. Bunting Patriarchs travails.

1 King. 12. 29.

had been that in the tribe of Benjamin, under the Dominion of Rehoboam, that project of his had been to no purpoſe. And hereunto we may adde the ſaying of the woman of Samaria to Chriſt, Our Fathers worſhipped in this Mountaine: For whom elſe could ſhe meane, but Abraham, who firſt built an Altar in this place, and Jacob, who worſhipped here at this time, and afterwards, calling it Bethel, although for Jeroboams Idolatry the name was changed from Bethel into Bethaven, the houſe of wickedneſſe? If it be demanded, why Jacob went not into the Town to lodge, but lay abroad in the field? It is anſwered by Joſephus, that the Inhabitants of the Town being Canaanites, and ſo enemies, he would not go amongſt them: but Muſculus miſliketh this, yielding rather onother reaſon, viz. becauſe he came late thither, as is noted in the text, the Sun being downe, and ſo in all likelihood the Gates being ſhut: but that of Joſephus ſeemeth to me the beſt, Men were hardy, and not ſo delicate in thoſe dayes to be curious about their lodging, but contented themſelves ſometimes in their travell upon the way to lie in the open aire. A man would think, that Jacob having a Father ſo wealthy ſhould not have been thus ſimply ſet forth alone without ſervants or Camels, only with a ſtaffe in his hand, as he afterwards ſpeaketh, eſpecially ſeeing Abrahams ſervant going the ſame journey for Iſaac before upon the like occaſion, had Camels, and ſervants, and treaſures with him. But to this Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh rightly, Although the holy Patriarchs were very wealthy, yet they laboured and fared hardly, and in travelling, and in the courſe of their lives, they often-times made no ſuch ſhew of greatneſſe, but did like the pooreſt. So Rebecca was found coming out with her Veſſel for water, and Eſau came hungry from the field, being glad of a meſſe of Pottage, &c. And here Jacob is ſent out thus ſolitarily. But, as others note, this was done by a ſpeciall divine providence, that in his example we might learne, of what great power and vertue Gods protection and bleſſing is, in that he was hereby protected from all dangers, and greatly increaſed from a ſtaffe to droves of Cattel in a few yeares. And ſome take this to have been done in a myſtery, Iacobs going out thus ſhewing Chriſts coming into this World, poor and void of all outward pomp, for a ſtaffe carrying his croſſe, who alſo, as both Iſaac had done before, and Iacob now, leaving the Daughters of Canaan, that is, the Jewes, ſought him a wife amongſt the Gentiles, that is, a Church. And he took of the ſtones of that place, and laid them for his Pillows, and lay downe and ſlept.

As he ſhevved hardineſſe in lying abroad, ſo he did alſo in that he vvas nothing carefull for a ſoft Pillovv, after his travell; but for a Pillovv uſed a ſtone, vvhich by Gregory is myſtically expounded of ſetting the minde upon the imitation of Chriſt. For he ſaith that Father, ſleepeth vvith Iacob, vvho in his minde is ſequeſtred from vvorldly troubles, and he layeth his head, vvhich is his principall part, upon a ſtone, vvho being ſequeſtred from vvorldly cares ſetteth his minde, vvhich is his principall part, upon the imitation of Chriſt the ſtone. He that only ſequeſtreth himſelfe from the vvorld, ſleepeth indeed, but not having his head laid upon a ſtone, as Iacob, and ſo not ſeeing the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending, vvhich is the favour not to all that are ſequeſtred from the World, but vvhich novv ſet their mindes upon the imitation of Chriſt; others, vvho come from the World to live in idleneſſe, being counted as laying their heads upon the earth, and not upon a ſtone: For to ſuch it oft-times falleth out, that the more ſecurely they ceaſe from earthly actions, the more largely they gather unto them a company of uncleane cogitations. Some others vvill have his reſting upon a ſtone, to ſet forth our reſting by faith upon Chriſt the corner-ſtone; vvhich if vve do, vve ſhall ſee the Heavens opened unto us, and the Angels coming to carry us up thither to our eternall comfort.

John 4.20. Queſt. Joſeph.

Chryſoſt. hom. 54. in Gen.

Theodoret. qu. 82. in Gen. Auguſt. Serm. 79. de tempore. Rupert. lib. 7. in Gen. c. 21. Greg. Moral. lib. 4. in Job. Jacob dormiens angelos vidit, qui caput in lapide poſuit, quia ille, qui ab exterioribus operibus ceſſat, internat penetrat, modò intentâ mente, quæ principale eſt hominis, imitatur: ſui redemptoris obſervat. Caput enim in lapide ponere eſt Chriſto mente inhærere. Qui enim à præſentis vitæ aſſiduæ remoti ſunt, ſed ad ſuperna nullo amore rapiuntur, dormire poſſunt, ſed videre angelos nequaquam poſſunt, quia caput in lapide terreno contemnunt, caput non in lapide per ſtudium, ſed in terra per otium poſuerunt, quibus plerunque contingit, ut quantò ſecuriùs ab externis actionibus ceſſant, tantò latiùs immundæ in ſe cogitationis ſtrepitum per otium congerant.

And

Verſe 12.

And he dreamed, and behold, a ladder ſet upon the earth, and the top of it reached to Heaven, &c.

Moſt opportunely doth the Lord comfort Jacob here by ſhewing him his provident care over him, now that he was come from his Fathers houſe alone and without all company, lay in the open aire expoſed to the danger of wilde beaſts and other enemies, being towards a kinde of exilement into a farre Countrey, where he muſt live amongſt ſtrangers and men unknown unto him. And it is not to be doubted, but that divers temptations might hereupon by the ſuggeſtion of the Devill ariſe in his minde, to afflict him the more, as Luther noteth. Wherefore now for the Lord thus to appeare unto him, and to give him ſuch comfort was moſt ſeaſonable. Dreaming was of old one of the wayes, whereby God revealed himſelfe unto his ſervants, and by this meanes God revealeth himſelfe at this time to Jacob, he that made him thus to dream, making him by his Spirit to underſtand and know, that this was no vulgar or common dreame, but a revelation from God. But why did the Lord ſhew him ſuch a ſight, and not only ſpeak unto him, as to others of his ſervants, in his dreame? To this an anſwer may be gathered out of Theodoret, who ſaith, that God ſhewed hereby his providence unto Jacob: for by this Ladder, and the Angels aſcending and deſcending by it, the Lord ſtanding at the top, he ſhewed him, that nothing is negligently and without care adminiſtred by the God of us all, but that he diſpenſeth all things by the miniſtery of his Angels, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 1. And certainly it was a moſt apt thing to repreſent the divine providence, Heaven and Earth touched by the ends of this Ladder ſhewing, how all things both here below and in Heaven, above are under this providence, the two ſides ſhewing the power and wiſdome of God, whereby all things are ſuſteined, ordered and moderated the ſtaves of this Ladder, the divers degrees of things in the World governed hereby, ſome being high, and ſome low, ſome Celeſtiall, ſome Aereall, and ſome Terreſtriall, the Angels aſcending and deſcending by it, the Miniſters of Gods providence, whereby he governeth all things in this World, both touching men and other creatures, touching men in things ſpirituall, their praying and being inclined to good, to move unto which he ſtirreth up by his Angels, and their ſafety from their ſpirituall enemies, againſt whom he uſeth them to defend them, and in things temporall, governing by them States and Kingdomes, and preſerving his from many dangers, which they deſcend to do, and then aſcend, as it were, to certifie the Lord, who yet needs not to have notice given him, for he is omniſcient, and to carry up the ſoules of his Saints departing, as of Lazarus. And Laſtly, by the Angels he oftentimes ſendeth from Heaven to reveale his will unto men. Touching other creatures, the Miniſters of his providence are commonly the divers inſtincts in their natures, whereby they are carried to this or that, and the ſecret influences of the ſtarres working upon them. And Gods ſtanding unmovably at the top of this Ladder ſheweth, that although he be in Heaven above, yet he beholdeth all things here below, and that without labour or moving from place to place, he ruleth in all the World. And thus farre forth touching this viſion, as it repreſenteth the divine providence. Now beſides this, many learned Expoſitours expound it of Chriſt myſtically ſet forth hereby, ſaying, He is the Ladder ſtanding upon the earth with the nether part, and with the upper touching Heaven, becauſe through him Heaven is joyned unto earth, both in the uniting of God and man together in his own perſon, and alſo becauſe through him all things both in Heaven and in Earth are reconciled unto God. For by ſinne we are ſeparated from God, but in him againe reconciled, and by him it is, that the Angels now aſcend and deſcend, as the Lord ſpeaketh of himſelfe. And whoſoever will at the laſt aſcend to Heaven, muſt come thither by him only, for he is the way, the truth, and the life. Moreover, by him all graces flow into our hearts, and the foot of this Ladder ſtandeth not in one part of the earth only, but is dilated into all places, ſo that

Luther.

Numb. 12. 6.

Queſt.

The myſtery of the Ladder.

Theodoret. qu. 82. in Gen.

John 1. 51.
John 10.
Tertul. lib 3. contra Marcion.
Calvin.
Muſculus.

whereſoever the faithfull are, hereby grace cometh down to them, and they aſcend up to God at their departing hence. Thus Tertullian, but only in the maine, touching Chriſt, and Calvin more fully and Muſculus. Saint Auguſtine hath ſomewhat a divers myſticall ſignification from this, The Lord ſtanding at the top of the Ladder, ſetteth forth Chriſt hanging upon the Croſſe, and forſomuch as this was before Jacobs taking of a wife, who in going afarre off for one was a figure of Chriſt, it ſignified that Chriſt ſhould take him a ſpouſe of the Gentiles, not before, but after his paſſion. The Angels aſcending ſet forth the Preachers of the Goſpell ſpeaking of deep and myſticall points; and deſcending, the Preachers ſpeaking of things eaſie to be underſtood for the reformation of manners. And ſome underſtanding Chriſt by the Ladder, make the ſteales thereof the degrees in his Genealogies; the ſides, the mercy and truth of God; the aſcending and deſcending, the two Evangeliſts, the one proceeding by aſcending, the other by deſcending. But we muſt take heed of ſuch curioſities. Of this Ladder yet we may make a morall alſo, as ſome have done, we are like unto it, when (as we ought) though we live here upon earth, our converſation is in Heaven, and we are as the Angels aſcending and deſcending, when we are alwayes either in holy contemplations or actions: for it is to be noted, that none ſtood ſtill upon this Ladder, but were ſtill either aſcending or deſcending, to ſhew, as Bernard hath it, that between profiting and falling away, there is no medium in this life, but as our body doth continually grow or decreaſe, ſo our ſoules are better or worſe daily. And as there were ſteales of this Ladder, yet it ſtanding moſt ſteep, it was hard for men to aſcend by it, ſo there be degrees of vertue, by which it is moſt hard to aſcend, yet hereby we muſt aſcend, if ever we will come to God at the top of the Ladder. The way to life is narrow, and we muſt ſtrive to enter in, the firſt degree, as Baſil hath it, bringing thither, is to depart from evill, as to take the firſt ſtep up a Ladder, is to go from the earth, ſo in divine matters the firſt profiting is a receding from evill. The ſecond ſteale or degree, is not to love the World, or the things of the World, 1 Joh. 2.15. The third, to account them all as droſſe and dung in compariſon of the knowledge of Chriſt, Phil. 3.8. The fourth, not to love kinsfolks and friends ſo, as for the love of them to be hindered from following Chriſt. The fifth, not to love our life it ſelfe. The ſixth, patiently to beare our croſſes, for in theſe two ſtandeth the denying of our ſelves. The ſeventh, to be humble and lowly. The eighth, to be loving even to our enemies, and thoſe that hate us, for in theſe two ſtandeth the following of Chriſt, when we have taken up our croſſes. The ninth and laſt, to have the heart lifted up to things above, for hereby the ſpirit is united unto God, becoming with him one ſpirit. By theſe degrees whoſoever aſcendeth, ſhall certainly enjoy God, who is at the top of this Ladder, and partake at length of all ſuch comforts as he hath to beſtow upon his Elect, world without end. R. Maimony ſaith, that the appearance of this Ladder to Jacob, was a parable, and was expounded unto him, the foure Monarchies of the World, Propheſied of by Daniel being ſet forth hereby.

Auguſt. Serm. 79. de Tempore.

Note.

Bern. Epiſt. 253. Videt ſcalam Jacob & in ſcala angelos, ubi nullus reſidens, nullus ne ſubſiſtens apparuit, ſed vel aſcendere vel deſcendere videbantur, ad intimandum, quòd inter profectum & defectum in hac vita nullum medium invenitur, &c. Matth. 7.14. Baſil. in Pſal. 1. Vt primus ſcalam aſcenſus eſt receſſus à terra, ſic in divino negotio primus profectus eſt à malis receſſus.

Verſe 13.

And the Lord ſtood above it, and ſaid, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy Father, and of Iſaac, the land whereupon thou lyeſt, will I give to thee, and to thy ſeed, v.14. And thy ſeed ſhall be as the duſt of the earth, &c.

Muſculus,

Some, ſaith Muſculus, for above, render it beſides it, but they overthrow the ſenſe, for by this ſite was ſet forth, how the Godhead dwelleth in Chriſt bodily. Vatablus therefore readeth it, innixus erat ei, and ſo the Septuagint: he leaned upon it, and ſtanding over and leaning upon this Ladder Chriſt, he made theſe gracious promiſes to Iacob, to ſhew, that all grace and favour with God is obteined only by and through Chriſt Jeſus. And here the Lord firſt declareth, who he was, viz. the God of Abraham, to intimate both Abrahams living ſtill, now that he was dead, and to give him occaſion, by calling to minde the promiſes formerly made to Abraham, to beleeve the conſtancy of God in his favour towards him the childe of Abraham, and his poſterity after him. There were three things, about which Jacob might now be troubled. 1 For his going away from his Countrey. 2 For his preſent ſolitary & deſolate eſtate. 3 For his going into a ſtrange Countrey, where he knew not how he ſhould be intreated. Againſt theſe three therefore here are three conſolations. 1 God promiſeth to bring him back againe to this Land, and to give it him and his. 2 That his poſterity ſhould be innumerable, and that in his ſeed all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed. 3 That he would be with him and keep him unto the end.

Vatablus.

But how doth he ſay, that he would give that Land to him and to his ſeed? Anſw. It is to be underſtood, as Calvin hath it, that under that Land a Heavenly Countrey was ſet forth, which was given to Iacob, although the Land of Canaan, the figure hereof, was never actually poſſeſſed by Iacob himſelfe, but only by his ſeed afterwards, he being but a Sojournour there all the time of his mortall life. Queſt. Calvin.

And when Jacob awaked from his ſleep, he ſaid, Truly God is in this place, and I knew it not. Verſe 16.

How could Iacob ſpeak thus, ſeeing all the faithfull know, that God is every where? Anſw. He ſpeaketh not of his generall preſence, but of the ſpeciall manifeſtation of himſelfe in an extraordinary manner, as when he appeared to Abraham in former times, and to Moſes in the buſh. He meaneth not, that he had not ſought God by Prayer there, (for the faithfull call upon him in all places) as blaming himſelfe, that he had forgotten his duty, as Calvin noteth, but he meaneth, that Gods favour and grace was more towards him then he was aware of, ſo that he did not carry himſelfe worthy the ſame, thus humbling himſelfe before ſo glorious a preſence in that place, where now he ſaw was one of his holy houſes or habitations. Queſt. 1 Tim. 2. 4. Calvin.

And he was afraid, and ſaid, How terrible is this place! this is none other then the houſe of God, this is the Gate of Heaven. Verſe 17.

It may ſeem ſtrange, that Iacob being ſo greatly comforted, ſhould be thus afraid, and call the place, where, terrible. But we muſt know that it was both terrible and comfortable, the preſence of the higheſt Majeſty ſtriking terrour into his heart, as being conſcious to himſelfe of his owne infirmities, he finding now, that he was before the Holy of Holies, and in the midſt of Heavenly Angels, as a meane man coming before an earthly Majeſty cannot but feare and tremble, leſt any thing diſpleaſing ſhould be in him. To feare thus before God is to yield an holy reverence, and to be humble and lowly in heart, which the Lord ſtriketh purpoſely into men, as being moſt neceſſary that they may ſtand pleaſingly before him. That which is ſpoken here touching this place, is drawne by Bernard to all places dedicated to Gods worſhip, ſaying, If this place, were terrible, how much more terrible is our place, in which God is more certainly and evidently, where not only two or three, but many are gathered together in his name? A terrible place indeed, and worthy of all reverence, where faithfull men dwell, the holy Angels frequent, and to which the Lord vouchſafeth his preſence. For there truly is the Lord, where Angels and men are gathered together in his name, not that he is not every where, but here he is more ſignificantly, as we ſay, (Our Father which art in Heaven) becauſe he exhibiteth himſelfe there otherwiſe in a peculiar kinde of manner, not being divers from himſelfe, but diſtinguiſhing divers things. Rupertus alſo draweth it to the Church of God, ſaying, Iacob was not afraid for the Lord, but he calleth the place terrible, by the ſpirit of Propheſie, ſeeing into that which was figured out hereby, viz. the Church of God, and his terrible works, that ſhould afterwards be done therein, the ſumme of which is the opening of Heaven by Chriſt, and the joyning of earthly and heavenly things together. And Luther ſaith, This is an admirable ſpeech, the like unto which is not found againe in all the Bible, and it is, as if he had ſaid, this is the Kingdome of Heaven. And what is this Kingdome or Gods habitation, but that, by grace, whereby he is ſeen to dwell, and by the miniſtery of men and Angels, according to his word: and this is where the elect, who are capable of his grace abide together, for otherwiſe God cannot be ſaid to dwell any where. Thus alſo Calvin, who addeth, that the Sacraments are the gates of Heaven, becauſe they admit us into Gods preſence, wherefore it is moſt comfortable to be of the Church of God, for here he dwelleth, and here only is an entrance given into Heaven, all that are out of the Church being ſhut out. And in the very place it is neceſſary, that we be with all humility and reverence, as in the more ſpeciall preſence of a Majeſticall and dreadfull God, for which cauſe it is ſaid, Take heed to thy feet when thou entereſt into the houſe of God, &c.

Bernard. Serm. 6 in anniverſ. die dedicationis Eccleſiæ. Quanto terribilior eſt hic locus noſter, quanto evidentius & certius Dominus eſt in hoc loco, ubi non modo duo aut tres, ſed multi in ejus nomine congregati perſeverant? Terribilis planè locus, & omni reverentiâ dignus, &c. Rupert. lib. 7. in Gen. c. 23. Luther.

Calvin.

Note.

Eccl.5.1.

Verſe 18. And Jacob roſe early in the morning, and took the ſtone, which he laid for his Pillows, and ſet it up for a Pillar, and poured Oile upon the top of it. It was ſaid before, that he took the ſtones of that place for Pillows in the plurall number, here a ſtone in the ſingular is made a Pillar, yet Joſephus ſaith, he made a Pillar of thoſe ſtones, happily the plurall was put before for the ſingular, as is uſuall in the Hebrew tongue, for it is moſt probable, that he took but one great long ſtone for a pillow to lay his head upon, and that ſuch an one as was fit to be ſet up upon one end. This he now ſetteth up, as a laſting Monument to thoſe that ſhould live afterwards, of Gods favour towards him, to expreſſe his great thankfulneſſe therefore. The word tranſlated Pillar is יצב מצבה to ſtand, ſome tranſlate it in metam, ſome in ſtatuam, and ſome, as the vulgar Latin, in titulum, the Septuagint, ut ſtatuam, for a Pillar. He ſet it up and made it firme, and therefore moſt aptly it may be tranſlated a Statue or ſtanding Monument. The ſame word is uſed, *Levit.*26.1. where it is forbidden to be erected to bow down unto it. But Jacob ſet it not up for ſuch a purpoſe, but for a Monument, as was ſaid before, and as the twelve ſtones taken out of Jordan were ſet up afterwards rough & unpoliſht, and ſo not after the manner of an Image, which might be turned to idolatry. For his pouring Oile upon it, that was a ceremony, ſaith Calvin, of conſecration, that it might be fit for this holy uſe, this Oile ſetting forth the Holy Ghoſt, without the ſanctification whereof nothing is holy, but prophane, that is done in Gods worſhip, and therefore as this Patriarch did thus now not out of Superſtition, but at Gods inward direction, ſo afterwards all things were conſecrated with anointing at the appointment of the Lord, that were to be uſed about his worſhip. Saint Auguſtine ſpeaking hereof ſaith, that Jacob did not thus ſuperſtitiouſly after the manner of Idolaters, but becauſe the name of Chriſt cometh from anointing, there was a great Sacrament doubtleſſe herein. And what this Sacrament was others tel, viz. Chriſt was repreſented by the ſtone and by the Oile the Spirit, becauſe he was anointed with the fulneſſe of the Spirit, it being poured out upon him, and from him we all receiving the ſame. Indeed Idolatrous people have anointed ſtones with Oile in like manner, as Arnobius writeth of himſelfe before his converſion, ſaying, If I had at any time come, where a poliſhed ſtone was anointed with Oile, as if ſome power had been therein, I preſently ſpake unto it, flattered with it, and deſired benefits of it, in the meane while underſtanding nothing: of this anointing of ſtones amongſt the Heathen, Apuleius alſo ſpeaketh, and Siculus Flaccus. But herein the Devill played Gods ape, his inſtruments imitating the faithfull, as in many other things. Hence ſome have approved anointings under the New Teſtament in devotion, as Theodoret, who ſaith, that ſome Godly women anointed the entries of Temples, and the Monuments of Martyrs, ſhewing hereby the piety of their mindes. And from that which was done by women they have proceeded in the Church of Rome ſince to conſecrate Oile, and therewith to anoint many things, placing great vertue therein, but this being a reviving of old ceremonies, although it were in ancient times devotion, when many things were taught by figures, yet now it is groſſe ſuperſtition. See my Vatablus.

Muſculus.

Joſ.4.8.

Calvin.

Aug. de Civit. Dei, lib.16.c.38

John 1.16.

Arnob. lib.1. adver. Gentes.

Apuleius lib.1. Floridorum.

Theod. quæſt.83 in Gen.

Antidote againſt Popery for Popiſh anointing. If it be demanded, where Jacob had this Oile? It is moſt probable, that he brought it with him for his uſe upon the way, according to the manner of that Countrey.

Verſe 19.

And he called the name of that place Bethel, but the name of that City was called Luz at the firſt.

Calvin.

Calvin ſaith, that if it ſhall ſeem not to agree together, which is ſaid here, the place where Jacob lay, and the City, becauſe, if he lay abroad in the fields, he could not lie in the City; Anſwereth, that no City was yet built here, but afterwards, but the name Bethel being long obſcured, a City was built after this viſion by the Inhabitants of that Countrey, called Luz, which when the children of Iſrael came to inhabit, they called after this nomination Bethel: But this is only a conjecture, neither ſhall it be needfull thus to reſolve this doubt, for a City commonly hath fields belonging to it, which beare the ſame name, and ſo it is moſt probable, that the place where Jacob lay, being near unto Luz, did The Septuagint for Luz have Ulammaus, but corruptly, as Jerome noteth, Ulam, which ſignifieth veruntamen, but, being by them joyned to the proper name. Jacob calleth it Bethel, that is, the Houſe of God, for the viſion, and becauſe it was famous for this, in time the name of the City to which it belonged, was changed, being alſo called after this name. Some have taught, that Bethel and Luz were two Cities, the one neare to the other, but in time being joyned together, they had this one name only, the like unto which hath ſometime happened to other Cities alſo, but of this there is no probability in the holy Scriptures. It is true indeed, that one Bethel and Luz were two divers places, viz. that in the Tribe of Benjamin, ſpoken of before, and this in the Tribe of Ephraim, but theſe were ſo farre aſunder, that they never came to be one, but alwayes continued two diſtinct Cities. Of two Bethels, although in a divers manner, ſpeak two Rabbins, Hay and Chimhi, ſaying, that the Bethel before called Luz was in Benjamin, but this hath been confuted before.

Septuagint.
Hi. on.

Lyranus in Joſ 16.
Toſtat. ibid.

Hai, Chim'i.

Verſe 20.

And Jacob vowed a vow, ſaying, If thou (O God) wilt be with me, and keep me, and give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, &c. Here Jacob further expreſſeth his piety, God having in the viſion promiſed to be with him, he now aſſumeth, if he would, that he might ſafely returne againe, then God ſhould be his God, that Pillar ſhould be his houſe, and he would pay the Tithes unto God. But what? doth Jacob ſpeak doubtingly after ſo plaine a promiſe, or if this ſhould not be performed, would he reject him from being his God? Anſ. He did not certainly doubt hereof, but forſomuch as God had vouchſafed him ſo great a favour, he hereby ſeeketh to binde himſelfe by vow to a walking in ſome ſort anſwerably to the ſame, uſing vowing, as a ſpurre and an help hereunto, neither diſtruſting, nor in a ſervile manner compacting to ſerve God for a reward, as Calvin ſpeaketh. Who alſo from hence commendeth vowing to us all, as Euchariſticall ſacrifices in way of gratitude brought for Gods benefits, ſo that we vow only things lawfull, and that we may be likely to have power to performe, and propounding for our end the glory of God, as Jacob vowed his vow in this place. Here then is no ground for Popiſh vowes of chaſtity and living Monaſtically, becauſe it is to go from a calling, which is a thing unlawfull, to live upon the ſweat of other mens browes, and, as wofull experience teacheth, to lay the very ground of impure living, and of all licentiouſneſſe.

Verſe 21,22

Queſt.

Calvin.

But it may be further demanded, why he voweth to give Tithe, and how he could give them to God, there being then no Prieſts to take them? Anſ. It may ſeem by this thing vowing, either that giving Tithes to God was Arbitrary and not his due, or elſe that he was defective in promiſing nothing ex abundan i, but only that which he muſt needs do: but that which hath been already ſaid, of his vowing that God ſhould be his God, may ſerve for a ſolution of this alſo. It was great piety in him to binde himſelfe by vow to do his duty, as in ſetting up there the worſhip of God, ſo in offering that up,

Queſt.

which

vvhich perteined unto it. He had learned from his Anceſtours doubtleſſe, ever ſince Abraham paid Tithes to Melchiſedeck, that to give Tithe to God vvas a duty, and therefore in promiſing an expreſſion of his thankfulneſſe he pitcheth upon this, vvherein Abraham vvho vvas ſo greatly accepted of, had gone before him. For that Tithes vvere alvvayes due to God from his faithfull ſervants, cannot be doubted, becauſe by a divine inſtinct holy men vvere moved thus to pay them, before the lavv enacted for the yearly paying of them in the dayes of Moſes. It is to be held then, that God invvardly by his Spirit firſt taught this payment, as a means of acknovvledging from vvhom all increaſe came and then coming to cauſe his vvill to be ſet forth by vvriting, he expreſly commanded the ſame to all his people. Wherefore in ſetting dovvne the lavv of Tithes-giving, he yieldeth this as a reaſon, All the Tithe of the land is the Lords. For giving of them to God, ſome think that it was by giving them to the poore, or partly to them, and by offering them in ſacrifice. But I doubt not but that Jacobs charity was ſuch, that he would give Almes to the poore, and as for his Tithe, herewith he meant to furniſh Gods Houſe which he promiſed to make that place, that there his publick worſhip might be thus maintained.

Levit. 27. 30. Vatablus. Muſculus.

CHAP. XXIX.

Verſe 1.

THen Jacob went on his journey, and came into the land of the people of the Eaſt
In the originall it is, he lifted up his feet; A moſt ſignificant ſpeech, ſaith Calvin, to ſet forth the ſtrength of his faith now that he had been confirmed by a divine dreame, it is meant that he went on chearfully, ſaith Muſculus.

Calvin. Muſculus.

Verſe 2.

And behold, there was a Well in the field, and by it three flocks of ſheep, &c.

As Abrahams ſervant had come before to a Well of water, when he ſought for a wife for Iſaac, and thither ſhe was by a ſingular providence brought out unto him; ſo by the like providence Jacob cometh to this Well, and Rachel who was afterwards his wife, is brought forth unto him; and Moſes alſo at a Well met with his Zippora, which ſaint Auguſtine draweth to an Allegory thus: Theſe three Patriarchs were types of Chriſt, and therefore they were thus ordered to ſhew, that Chriſt likewiſe meeteth with his Church and Spouſe at the water of Baptiſme, and as Jacob having watered Rachels ſheep then kiſſeth her, whereas he might have done ſo before, hereby is ſhewed, that Chriſt then beginneth to kiſſe and to love his Church, when ſhe hath been waſhed in the water of Baptiſme from her ſinnes. And that which is added of three flocks of ſheep being there, he likewiſe draweth to an Allegory thus: Theſe three flocks prefigured three ſorts of men and women living in the Church of Chriſt, and watered with his Baptiſme, who are in the Doctrine of the Lord otherwiſe diſtinguiſhed, when he ſaith, Two ſhall be in the field together, of which one ſhall be taken, and the other ſhall be left, two women ſhall be grinding at one Mill, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left, two in one bed, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left. The two in the field are Miniſters of the Goſpell, for they are called Gods Husbandmen, the two women at the Mill are ſecular people, who toile in the World, as it were in a Mill, the two in bed are ſuch as have ſequeſtred themſelves from the World to live quietly and free from trouble. Now amongſt all theſe, one is taken, and the other left, becauſe amongſt Miniſters, as ſome be faithfull and diligent, which ſhall be taken into the Kingdom of Heaven, ſo others are remiſſe and ſlothfull, which ſhall be left, amongſt ſecular men, and thoſe that are ſeparated from worldly incumbrances, ſome are good, and ſome bad, and ſo ſhall be diverſly dealt withall, according to their divers conditions. And by women grinding at a Mill, and not men are ſuch ſet forth, as toile in this VVorld, becauſe women of ſervile condition were wont to be imployed in the work; ſee Exod 11. Eſa. 47.

Auguſt. Serm. 80. de Tempore. Jacob ad puteum veniens prius gregem Rachelis adaquavit, deinde oſculatus eſt eam; ſimiliter niſi prius per aquam baptiſmi quis abluatur à peccatis, oſculum à Chriſto accipere, id eſt, pacem ejus habere non meretur. Auguſt. in Pſal 99. Matth. 24. Quæ ſunt in molendino pœnes ſignificant. Sed cur in molendino? quia mulieres in ſæculo circuitu rerum tempora tum volvuntur, & quaſi ad molam continentur.

And a great stone was upon the Wells mouth, &c. This stone, as Musculus thinketh, was laid here, to keep the water that no filth might be cast into it, and that none passing by might fall into it, and that an order might be observed in watering their flocks, he that came first not being able to remove it, and to prevent another. VVhereas Jacob cometh and removeth this stone, Luther saith, that the Hebrews hold, that he did this by the Spirit of God coming upon him, which he also thinketh probable from the Text, or that he did it with the help of the Shepherds. R. Eliezer saith, that like a mighty strong man he rolled away the stone, and the Shepherds about him saw it and wondered. But it is more likely, that the Shepherds were children and young Maids, and so too weak to do that many of them, which one man could do, and therefore they stayed, till more were come together, that joyning their strength they might remove this great stone. For not only Jacob did this, but Moses afterwards alone drove away the Shepherds from Jethro his Daughters, that kept his Sheep. For the friendly conference betwixt Jacob and the Shepherds, he asking them, Whence they were? and whether they knew Laban? and how he did? unto which they answered accordingly, &c. I shall not need to say any thing, but that others considering their kinde greeting of one another may be ashamed of their harsh and churlish Answers to strangers questioning with them, which is a thing too common. Rachel, the Daughter of Laban being come to the Well with her flock, Jacob removeth the stone, and so the flock being watered, he kisseth her: of this kissing Calvin speaking saith, Such was the integrity of the manners of that age, that Jacob might kisse his Kinswoman, because in a chaste and modest life there was much more liberty then now, that impurity and intemperance of lusts have made not only kisses to be suspected, but even looks to be feared. And Musculus saith, that men are such now adayes, that they cannot use those manners of the Ancients chastly. But it is to be understood, that there have been divers sorts of kissings used. 1 In salutation, amongst friends and acquaintance, wherein the Romans exceeded so much, saluting thus so many, as they met upon the way, or received them to house, as that it grew to great tediousnes & trouble; whereupon Tiberius Cæsar by a publick edict forbade it, as Suetonius remembreth. 2 Out of the motion of naturall affection and good will towards such as are very neare and deare, as Isaac kissed Jacob and Jacob Rebecca. 3 An holy kisse, which was not only of the lips, but also of the head, the cheeks, the eyes, the forehead, the hands and the feet, after Prayers ended in their publick meetings and before the Communion, when one said to the other, Pax tecum, as Justine Martyr sheweth. 4 In shew of love, but with a fraudulent heart, as Judas kissed Christ, and Joab Abner; see Prov. 27.6.5. Out of fleshly lust, which is an whorish kissing, and impure. Lastly, besides these, there was a kissing of Kinswomen, in use amongst the Romans, to smell whether they had drunk any Wine, which was unlawfull for them to do. Howsoever a man kisseth a woman where he meeteth her, whether in salutation, or out of naturall affection, if he be carried by fleshly concupisence herein, it is sinfull, otherwise (without doubt) allowable.

Musculus.

Verse 10.

Luther.

Exod. 2.

Verse 5,6.
Verse 7,8.

Verse 9,10.
Verse 11.

Calvin.

Musculus.

Kissings of divers sorts.

Justin. Martyr Oat. ad Antoninum.

Prov. 7.

And Jacob told Rachel, that he was her Fathers Brother, and Rebeccaes sonne.

Verse 12.

The Preterperfect tense, saith Calvin, is here put for the Preterpluperfect, he had told this, before he kissed her. Her Fathers brother, he saith, he was, because his Sisters sonne, as Abraham before said to Lot, his Nephew, We are Brethren: for Hebrews commonly called Kinsmen Brethren. Now Laban being told of him by his Daughter Rachel running in, came forth unto him, and imbraced and kissed him, and brought him into the house, Jacob telling him the cause of his coming. For this was necessary for him to do at the first, that Laban might not suspect him, as coming without the knowledge of his Parents. And it is to be noted, that a man coming thus alone into a strange place was presently believed: For he case is now much altered, there being not

Calvin.

Verse 13.

Note.

not one amongſt many that we can believe, who come to us in ſuch a manner, by reaſon of the great deceit which is uſed now adayes in the VVorld.

Verſe 14. Judg.9. 2 Sam.5. Then Laban ſaid unto him, Thou art my fleſh and my bone, &c.

Thus Adam ſaid of Evah, and Abimelech to the Shechemites, and the Iſraelites to David. It is a Phraſe peculiar to the Hebrews to expreſſe Kinsfolk; who amongſt the Latins are called Conſanguinei, of the ſame bloud.

Verſe 15,16 V.17,18,19. Jacob being thus entertained by Laban, when he had ſtayed with him one moneth, he agreed to ſerve him ſeven yeares for his younger Daughter Rachel, for he had two Daughters, Leah, who was tender-eyed, and Rachel, who vvas beautifull and vvell-favoured. The vvord tranſlated tender-eyed, in ſpeaking of Leah is רכות, v vhich properly ſignifieth vveak, and ſo is uſed by Jacob in ſpeaking to Eſau, vvhen he ſaid, the children vvere vveak. Novv becauſe weakneſſe may be referred to the ſight, and then one weak-eyed is ſaid to be purblinde, the vulgar Latin hath it, lippis erat oculis, or becauſe tender and delicate are ſometimes put the one for the other, the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendreth it, the eyes of Leah were elegant, as if it had been meant, that ſhe had a beautifull paire of eyes, but was not otherwiſe ſo comely, whereas Rachel was every way amiable. It is moſt likely, that ſhe had ſome blemiſh in her eyes, or elſe this tenderneſſe ſhould not have been oppoſed to Rachels beauty, which cauſed, that Jacob loved not the one but the other, to chooſe her to be his Wife. And when he had taken them both, it is ſaid, that he loved Rachel more then Leah, yea Leah ſaid, that the Lord ſaw that ſhe was hated. In that Jacob being allured by Rachels beauty, deſireth to have her to Wife, it may be doubted, whether he did well herein? and if ſo, why he propounded this way to obtaine her? Calvin anſwereth, that his affection to faire Rachel may be excuſed, as free from vice, becauſe oftentimes there is a power in nature that ſecretly carrieth the affection to one woman more then to another, cauſing a deſire rather to have her to Wife. But he ſaith, that intemperance muſt be taken heed of, affection not ruling over reaſon, but reaſon moderating in all things, yet he addeth, that peradventure there was a fault in Jacob, in that he deſired Rachel with the injury of Leah, and was drawn more by the beauty of the one then by the vertue of the other. But herein Jacob may eaſily be defended alſo, becauſe he was not bound in chooſing of a Wife to reſpect ſeniority, but what manner of woman he could moſt delight in, that he might not afterwards lie open to the temptations of others, and herein beauty, as a ſingular gift of nature, beareth great ſway. Plato called it Principatum naturæ. Carneades, Regnum ſine cuſtodibus: Socrates, Tyrannidem non diuturnam: Ariſtoteles, potiorem omnibus Epiſtolis in commendando; and being asked, why we willingly look upon the beautifull? he anſwered, This is a blinde mans queſtion. There are three things good in the body, Strength, Sanity, and Beauty, but of them all, the moſt forcible to draw affection is beauty. Yet Jacob was not drawn hereby, but to deſire matrimoniall ſociety, and not to ſatisfie carnall luſt. And for vertue, although a chief reſpect ought to be had unto it, yet meerly for this, when the outward forme pleaſeth not, there doth not alwayes follow ſuch a conjunction of affections, as is requiſite between man and wife.

Vatablus. Gen.33.13.

Verſe 33. Queſt. Calvin.

Now for the way propounded to obteine her, viz. by ſerving ſeven years, he was ſent thither by his Parents to take him a wife, in which caſe a dovvry of old vvas vvont to be given, but he coming thither his naked ſelfe, and vvanting other dovvries, offereth to give his ſeven yeares ſervice. Cornelius Tacitus vvriting of the old Germans, ſaith, that a man vvas tied to give a Dowry to his wife, and if he did not, there could not be any thing firme in the marriage. And Strabo writeth the like of the Cantabrians and Indians. And as in other Countreys, ſo in Meſopotamia and Paleſtine, and in all the Eaſt-parts, the cuſtome was for the man to give ſome money to the woman in way of dovvry, and in caſe that he vvanted money, he ſerved her Parents for a certaine time, vvhich vvas accounted her dovvry. And as the man gave

Cornel. Tacitus de German. moribus. Strabo lib.3.

gave something, so in many places the woman brought some substance to the man, and thus they did, as it were, buy one another, the Husband being hereby tyed to the wife, as she was unto him. Thus saith Brissonius did both the Romans and Grecians, and Iulius Cæsar writing of the old Gaules saith, that how much the wife brought to the Husband, so much he was bound to give to her for a dowry. And Strabo saith, that amongst the Cretians, the Brother must give to the Sister the halfe of his Goods, which she might bring to her Husband as a dowry. Thus it was in many places, but here it seemeth that the Husband only gave to the wife, or for her, but not she unto him. And we often read of the man giving a dowry to the woman, but not of the womans giving to the man in the sacred History. For Shechem offered to give any dowry to Dinah, and Saul required of David a dowry for his Daughter of 200 fore-skinnes of the Philistines, and Hoseah the Prophet saith, that he bought him a wife with 15 pieces of silver, and an Homer and halfe of Barley. Wherein there is also a similitude betwixt the corporall and the spirituall marriage made by Christ with his Church: for he gave for a dowry his own most precious bloud. The Egyptians were so averse from the womans giving of any thing to the man, that if any man did take a dowry of his Wife, they adjudged him to be for ever a slave unto her. And Brissonius saith, that amongst the old Saxons, the dowry given by the man was 300 s. Touching Jacob, it is certaine, that although Laban, whose Daughters he had to Wife, was rich, yet he had nothing with them: for of this they complaine, saying, We have no portion or inheritance in our Fathers house, hath he not sold us as strangers, and quite devoured our money also? But in that they brought him nothing, we may gather, that the custome there was otherwise, or else they could not thus have complained.

Brissonius lib. de ritu nupt. cum. Iulius Cæs. Comment. lib. 6. Strabo lib. 10.

Gen 31. 1 Sam. 18. Hos. 3.

Gen 31. 14, 15

The Covenant being made betwixt Laban and Jacob, he serveth Laban seven yeares, & although the time was so long before he went in unto her, it is said,

Verse 20.

That it seemed but a few dayes, for the love which he had unto her.

But how could this be, seeing when we are kept from injoying the thing which we love, a short time seemeth very long? Saint Augustine answereth, that this is said in respect of the labour of all that time, he passed not for it, because he esteemed so highly the reward that was to be received, in comparison whereof he thought his hard and tedious service so long a time a small matter, as when a covetous man is promised 1000 l. to take most extraordinary paines for so many moneths or yeares, his love to the reward so worketh with him, that all the toile of that time seemeth nothing unto him. Thus also Calvin, and Musculus, who saith, If Jacob thought all his toile of seven yeares little for Rachel, how much more should we be likewise affected in thinking upon our reward in Heaven? And this sheweth that Jacob was not carried by inordinate lust, for then the time would have seemed much longer, but by reason and judgement, considering the great comfort, that he should afterwards have in his beloved Rachel: so Thomas Anglicus.

Quest. August. in Gen. quæst. 88.

Calvin. Musculus.

Note.

Tho. Anglicus in Gen.

Jacob having fulfilled his seven years service, demandeth his wife of Laban, who thereupon made a marriage-feast, and at night brought Leah to him instead of Rachel; But this being by Jacob perceived in the morning, he expostulated with Laban about it, who excused the matter by the custom of that Countrey, which was not to give the younger in marriage before the elder, and then he agreed for other seven years service to give him Rachel also. And thus it is said, he went in to Rachel also, and loved her more then Leah, and served with him yet seven other yeares. In that Jacob demandeth his wife of Laban, that he might go in unto her, we may gather both a betrothing to have been at the first, because a woman betrothed to a man is thenceforth called his wife, and great continency to have been in Jacob, in that all this time he refreined himself, living in the house together with her, to the shame of such as are carried inordinately by fleshly lusts, being impatient of any stay, especially when they once make account of such women to be their

Verse 21, 22
Verse 23, 24
Verse 25, 26
Verse 27, 28
Verse 29, 30

Luther.

Note.

Calvin.

Musculus. vvives, and also much modesty to have been in him, in that he offered not to take her, but expected to have her given him by her Father, to the shame of those, that steale and carry avvay mens Daughters utterly against their vvills. In the Hebrevv Text no marriage is said here to have been made, but only Laban gathered together all the men of that place, and made a Feast. But in the Septuagints translation, and the vulgar Latine it is, he made a marriage, and the vvord γάμος used in the Greek signifieth both a Marriage and a Feast, as Julius Pollux observeth. The marriage, in respect of the substance vvas made before, vvhen they vvere contracted, but that it might be the better knovvne and to avoid confusion, there hath anciently been a custom upon a set day to solemnize it vvith feasting and joy, the Father delivering his Daughter to her Husband openly. And thus it vvas done at this time. Of feasting at marriages see *Ioh.*2. *Matth.*22. *Luk.*14. *Iudg.*14. And Ælianus giveth an example of Alexander, keeping a great festivall time at his Marriage, he and his friends that married together being 90, for vvhom so many Chambers vvere prepared, the men keeping a Feast by themselves in a place vvherein vvere 100 silver tables and one of Gold for Alexander, their guests accompanying them, and this continued five dayes together, there being singers and actours of Comedies and Tragedies present to make the delight the greater. Whereas all the men of that place are said to have been gathered together to this Feast, it is most probable, that all Labans kinsfolks and friends only are meant, and in the vulgar Latin it is, vocatis multis amicorum turbis. The Feast being ended, at night Laban bringeth Leah to Iacob instead of Rachel. Here a question may be made, why this was done at night? As touching Labans doing thus, it may easily be resolved, he did it to hide the fraud, but it is to be known, that amongst the Romans and Grecians, the custome was at night by Torch-light to lead the Bride into the house of the Bride-groome, five children carrying either of them a Torch before her, she being also vailed, and the darke time of the night being chosen for this purpose for modesties sake, she going now to the place, where she should lose her Virginity, and therefore to marry was set forth by the word nubere ab obnubendo, from covering or hiding. It was a custom also, saith Plutarch, for the Bride not to go, but to be carried, to shew, that she went unwillingly, so precious was her Virginity unto her. If it be demanded, why Laban was so desirous to bestow Leah upon Iacob also? Ferus answererh, that his covetous desire carried him to this, that he might injoy Iacobs service seven yeares more, and also because he thought Iacob a good man, and therefore that he could not bestow his Daughters better, then by matching them unto him. Rachel was already espoused unto him, and he thought, if Iacob had once gone in unto Leah, he would not readily put her away againe. But whilest they were doing these things after the manner of men, he saith, that God by a singular providence, ordered them so for a mysticall signification, as by and by shall be shewed. It is to be demanded, how it could be, that Iacob should not know that it was Leah, till the morning? I answere, she being brought to him in the night covered with a vaile, and refreining from speech, as it is likely that she was directed by her Father to do, Iacob might easily take her for Rachel, till that by the light of the day coming on she was discovered.

Plutarch.

Quest.

Ferus.

Quest.

Musculus.

Hereby it seemeth, that there was not then used any publick solemne joyning of man and wife together, but the Fathers bringing of the Daughter at night, after a Feast to the mans Chamber, and delivering her unto him was all the marrying then used. That of Iosephus, saying that Iacob was drunken, and therefore could not distinguish betwixt her and her Sister, is to be abhorred, as a foule imputation, whereinto the holy History giveth no light. for being most sober he might easily be deceived, as hath been already shewed.

Marbrat.

*Joseph. lib.*1. Antiqu.

Quest. If it be demanded, how Leah durst consent with her Father to offer this abuse, prostituting her selfe thus, as an vvhore: for Rachel vvas his vvife, and not not ſhe, and it was to be doubted, that Iacob diſcerning the fraud vvould take ſuch indignation at it, that he vvould reject her being diſliked before, but novv much more? I Anſvver, that the obedience of Daughters in thoſe dayes vvas ſuch to their Fathers, as that vvhat they vvilled in giving them to ſuch or ſuch men, vvas to them a lavv, and ſhe hoped, that Iacob diſcovering the fraud vvould pitty her, as being forced hereunto by her Fathers command, and therefore keep her for his vvife, and not leave her againe, vvho ſhould ſo become moſt ignominious all her life after, and unfit to make a vvife for any other man. Muſculus ſaith, that happily ſhe knevv not that Iacob took her to have been Rachel. But this is improbable, becauſe it could not but be commonly knovvn, that Iacob ſhould have Rachel to vvife, and not her. Leah therefore cannot be excuſed from ſinning herein, although ſhe knew not happily but that ſhe was bound to obey her Fathers will in thus doing. But Laban her Father ſinned much more, both by perfidious breaking of his covenant made with Iacob, who had faithfully ſerved him ſo long a time for Rachel, and by putting another upon him, whom he loved not, thus laying a continuall burthen, as it were, upon his ſhoulders. And hereunto we may adde a ſinne of lying, in that he falſely excuſed this his fact, ſaying it was the manner of that Countrey, not to give the younger in marriage before the elder, when as the true reaſon was his covetouſneſſe, he thought that Iacob having gotten Rachel would be gone, and ſo he ſhould loſe his ſervice, which was moſt profitable unto him. And laſtly, he was moſt injurious to Leah, being the author to her of whoredom, yea of inceſt, and ſo of becoming moſt ignominious for ever after. If Laban would not have done contrary to the cuſtome, he ſhould at the firſt have told Iacob ſo, when he required to have Rachel to wife.

Muſculus.

Luther.

Fullfill her week, and we will give thee this alſo for the ſervice, which thou ſhalt ſerve with me ſeven other yeares. Verſe 27.

Vatablus ſaith, that by her week is meant a week of yeares, wherein he ſhould ſerve for Rachel: but it is plainly meant of Leah, to whom now that by his going in unto her he had made her his wife, he vvould have him to keep her ſeven dayes, vvhich vvas the uſuall time of keeping marriage-Feaſts, as vve may ſee, *Judg.*14.12. and then for ſeven other yeares ſervice, vvhich he ſhould novv covenant to ſerve, he ſhould, theſe ſeven dayes being expired, have Rachel alſo. Thus Jerome and Auguſtine, rejecting the former expoſition, as repugnant to the Text, and Ferus alſo vvith many others. And the Hieroſol. Targum, and Chald. Paraphr. apply it to the ſeven dayes feaſting. And Maimony ſaith, that vvhoſo married a Maid in Iſrael, aftervvards did refreine from all vvork ſeven dayes, and feaſted and made merry all that time. And that the vveek here muſt be thus underſtood, appeareth by the birth of his children, and the Hiſtory of his life, Gen. 30.24.41.46.47.9. And having hereupon agreed, Jacob vvent in to Rachel alſo, and loved her more then Leah, and to each of them there vvas a Maid given by their Father, Zilpah to Leah, and Bilhah to Rachel, happily, that being gone vvith Iacob from their ovvn Countrey, vvhere all others vvere ſtrangers unto them, they might have the ſolace of their ſervice and company.

Vatablus.

Hieron. tradit. in Gen.
Auguſt. quæſt. 89. in Gen.

But how could Jacob marry two Siſters, and afterwards their Maids, as the Hiſtory ſheweth that he did? Anſw. Calvin cenſureth Jacob, as ſinning herein, and ſo doth Luther, and Artopœus, and others, who hold Polygamy to have been alwayes unlawfull, Yea ſaith Calvin, he doubled and trebled his ſinne by an inceſtuons marriage. But Auguſtine, and Jerome, and other Ancients defend him, ſaying, that he ſinned not, becauſe he did nothing herein againſt nature, the cuſtome of the times, or againſt precept. For that precept againſt taking a Wives Siſter was not given, till afterwards. The Patriarchs doubtleſſe in taking more vvives reſpected nothing but the multiplication of poſterity, and not the ſatisfying of carnall luſt, which only maketh ſuch an act unlawfull, where there is no law prohibiting it. But now, if any man Queſt.

Calvin.
Luther.
P. Artopœus.

Auguſt. contra Fauſt. cap. 47.
Hieron. Epiſt. 83.

ſhould take two wives together, he ſhould ſtand guilty of a foule ſin, it being commanded to one man to have but one wife, 1 *Cor.*7.1. See *Gen.*4.20. Touching the Allegory, to which this Hiſtory is drawn by Ferus, and before him by Rupertus; Iacob, he ſaith, going into Meſopotamia to take a wife, figureth out Chriſt Jeſus coming into this World to take his Spouſe, his Church; the Well, to which Iacob cometh, figured out the Scripture; and the Shepherds about it, the Phariſees, who gave no drink to the ſheep, but Chriſt openeth the VVell and doth it, teaching them the right way of watering the Sheep, that is of teaching the people, as Iacob did the Shepherds. The two Daughters of Laban figure out two ſorts of people in the World, Rachel the Jews, and Leah the Gentiles: for the Nation of the Jews was faire for their peculiar election and priviledges, but the Gentiles deformed by Idolatries, and tender-eyed, becauſe they were ignorant and ſaw not as the Jewes did. And as Rachel came firſt to Iacob, ſo did the Jewes to Chriſt, as Iacob kiſſed Rachel, ſo did he them by taking fleſh, as Iacob wept, ſo he wept over Jeruſalem, and as Iacob had moſt affection to Rachel, ſo had he to the Jewes, and ſerved for them here, for he came in the forme of a ſervant. But when he had thought to have injoyed his Rachel, the Jewiſh Nation, a Leah of the Gentiles is by God, the Father of all brought unto him in her ſtead, yet, as Iacob, he was offended and grieved, that the Jewes were kept from him, as appeareth in his Apoſtle Paul, Rom. 9. but he rejecteth not the Gentiles, as he did not Leah, and the week of the Gentiles being fulfilled, he ſhall have for his Spouſe the Jewes alſo, viz. at the end of the World. Gregory upon this Hiſtory Allegorizeth thus, The Miniſter of the Word is as Iacob, for he applying himſelfe to the ſtudy of the Scriptures, which is as Iacobs coming to the Well of water, is much delighted with contemplation, as Iacob was with Rachel, and would dwell only in the imbracing hereof, but he muſt firſt be exerciſed in good works, which is as Iacobs going in to Leah, ſignifying labour, wherein indeed whileſt he is buſied, as Martha, who was troubled about many things, there is ſome impediment in the eyes of his contemplation, but he is more fruitfull by his aſſiduous labours in the Miniſtery, then ſuch as addict themſelves wholly to contemplation, for what knowledge ſoever they attaine unto, it is to themſelves, and they remaine barren, as touching children bringing forth unto God. And thoſe, that are ſtayed by the Leah of labour, ſhall injoy in time the benefit of faire contemplation alſo, vvhileſt they are teaching others themſelves increaſing in all good learning and knovvledge. Thus alſo Auguſtine lib. 22. Contr. Fauſt. c. 52. and Ferus maketh the ſame, moral hereof.

Rupert. lib.7. in Gen. c.29.
Ferus.
Phil.2.6.
Greg. Mor. al. lib.6.
Auguſt.

Verſe 31. The Lord ſeeing, that Leah was hated, opened her womb, but Rachel was barren.

Calvin. It is not likely, that Iacob hated Leah, but becauſe he loved her not ſo much as Rachel, as vvas ſaid before, and ſo neglected the one in compariſon of the other, this is counted before the Lord hating. The Lord ſeeing this, made her fruitfull, he vvas not moved by the externall forme, as man, but vvhere this is vvanting and man loveth leaſt, he may love moſt. He diſtributeth his gifts diverſly, not giving all to one, but the gift of beauty to Rachel, and of fruitfullneſſe to Leah, that one may not inſult over another, and hereby vve alſo ſee, that fruitfulneſſe is of God.

Muſculus.
Note.
Ferus.

Verſe 32. And ſhe bare a Son, and called his name Reuben, &c.

See here the gratitude of Leah unto God, and her piety, & how rightly ſhe was diſpoſed towards her Husband, in preferring his loving of her as a chief thing in her deſire, as all good Wives do. Reuben ſignifieth, ſee a ſonne, or according to ſome, the ſonne of ſeeing, ſhe imputed it to Gods ſeeing, how ſhe was deſpiſed.

Verſe 33.
Verſe 34.35

Her ſecond ſonne ſhe calleth Simeon, hearing: her third Levi, Conjunction, or Adheſion: her fourth Judah, praiſe, becauſe, as ſhe was thankfull for for the firſt, ſo now much more, larger matter of praiſing God being miniſtred unto her.

CHAP. XXX.

WHen Rachel ſaw, that ſhe bare Jacob no children, ſhe envied her Siſter, and ſaid to Jacob, Give me children, or elſe I dye. Verſe 1.

The word tranſlated (envied) is by Saint Auguſtine rendred Zelavit, which ſome will not have to be underſtood of envy at her Siſters fruitfulneſſe, but of griefe and anger for her owne barrenneſſe, becauſe her want of children is ſet forth as the ground here of, and not her Siſters abounding with children. But it is more probable, that both being conſidered together wrought thus with her. She was, ſaith Calvin, proud of her beauty, and ſeeing another thing now in her Siſter, which might make her more amiable to her Husband, ſhe taking it indignly to become in any thing inferiour to her, grew thus envious and impatient. He alſo noteth theſe differences and chidings in Jacobs family to have been a puniſhment for his Polygamy, although he were not reformed hereby, but proceeded yet to take more Wives. And it cannot be denied indeed, but that a mans having more wives together is an occaſion of trouble and diſtraction in the family, as was alſo in Abrahams, when unto Sarah he had taken Hagar. But if Jacob ſinned in his marriages, and being thus caſtigated, proceeded to ſinne ſtill in the ſame kinde, I cannot ſee how he may be counted ſo juſt and holy a man, as he was.

Auguſt lib 22. cont. Fauſt. c. 54

Calvin.

The ſcope of this place, as Ferus ſheweth, was rather to ſet forth, what an earneſt deſire theſe women had to beare children to Jacob, and to multiply the ſeed ſo greatly favoured of God, and whereof Chriſt was to come, as it is not to be doubted but that Jacob had informed them, wherefore Rachel wanting children thought that ſhe was altogether forſaken of God, and was thus greatly moved. And ſo earneſt a deſire muſt be in every one of us to bring forth children unto God, which is when we convert any unto him. Give me children, or elſe I die, ſome Hebrews give this for the ſenſe of theſe words, ſeeing thou art moſt gracious with God, and he will not deny that, which thou prayeſt for, pray for me, that I may have children, or elſe I had rather die, then live. But Iacobs reproofe ſheweth plainly, that ſhe ſpake not in this, but in a contrary ſenſe, as being blinded through impatience not to ſee in whoſe power it is to give children.

Ferus.

Note.

Hebræi.

Jacob was angry at this, and ſaid, Am I in Gods ſtead, who hath with-held from thee the fruit of the wombe? And ſhee gave him Bilhah her maid to wife, &c. Verſe 2, 3, &c.

There be four things ſaith the Hieroſolymitan Paraphraſt, the keyes whereof God only keepeth, not committing them to any Miniſters of his will, the key of raine, Deut. 28.12. the key of food, Pſ. 104. 28. the key of the Sepulchre, Ezech 37. 12. and the key of the wombe, as in this Chapter, v. 22. There be ſometimes natural cauſes of barrenneſſe & ſometimes God puniſheth thus for ſinne, as he puniſhed Michal, and Rachel here for the contempt of her Siſter, and ſometimes he ſhutteth up the womb a long time, to manifeſt his power the more, as in Sarah, Elizabeth and Hanna. Touching other women here taken by Jacob by the motion of his wives, all that is done and ſaid hereabout, is utterly condemned (as ſinfull and erroneous) by thoſe that hould Polygamy to have been alwayes ſinfull, but Auguſtine, and Rupertus, and Ferus, and other Ancients excuſe both Rachel and Leah in their offering of their Maids to their Husband, and Iacob in taking of them, becauſe all this was done only to multiply the holy ſeed, and not for carnall concupiſcence, Iacob at the firſt propounding to himſelfe to take but one wife, but then he had another by fraud put upon him, and theſe Maids by the entreaty of his Wives, in all which there was a ſingular providence ordering things thus for a myſticall ſignification. Auguſtine and Rupertus ſay, that hereby was figured out, that as Chriſt ſhould have twelve wives, that ſhould beare him children, ſo he ſhould Paraphraſt. Hieroſolymit.

God ſhutteth up the wombe.

Auguſt. lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. c. 54 55.

Rupert lib. 7. in Gen. c. 39.

Cant.4. ſhould have Concubines, according to that in the ſong of Solomon, 60 Queens and 80 Concubines. They that bring forth children to him, as wives, are Gal.4. faithfull and Godly Preachers, who as Paul, travel in birth, till Chriſt be formed in their hearers, they that bring forth as Concubines, are ſuch as preach out of a ſiniſter end, by whoſe paines yet, if any may be won to Chriſt, the faithfull Preachers rejoyce, as Saint Paul did, *Phil.*1.18.

Ferus. But Ferus more particularly Allegorizeth upon every thing in this Hiſtory.
1. The divers wives, ſaith he, do ſet forth the divers Nations bearing children
2 to Chriſt; the great deſire of theſe wives to multiply children, the great deſire
3 in all Countreys where the Goſpel is Preached, that the faithfull have, that Rom.9. many may be converted; and the great griefe of Rachel being barren, their 4 great grief, when the preaching of the Goſpel doth not thus prevaile. Jacobs
5 having children by free-women and by ſervants, Chriſts having children by the Miniſtery of the ſincere and of the mercenary-minded, which children yet inherit alike, and are ſet upon the knees of the free-women, as their own, their Mothers ſtill remaining in a ſervile eſtate, ſo the converted by any Miniſter are as well eſteemed of in the Church, as if by the beſt, and ſhall have an Heavenly inheritance, but the mercenary Miniſters converting them, remaine ſtill in ſervility. Rachel being faire ſetteth forth the ſpirituall beauty of 6 the Church of Chriſt; Leahs bleared eyes, her outward deformity by troubles Pſal.45. and perſecutions, in which eſtate yet, as Leah ſhe is very fruitfull. And the 7 twelve ſonnes brought forth unto Jacob, figure out the 12 Apoſtles of Chriſt,
8 and their names intimate the vertues to be enſued by us all, for every one muſt be a Reuben, a ſonne of ſeeing; a Simeon, hearing and obeying God; a Dan, judging himſelfe; a Levi, addicted to the ſervice of God; a Judah, praiſing God, &c. For which cauſe their names are ſo punctually ſet downe, and alſo the Apoſtles names by the holy Evangeliſts. Of this Hiſtory and the like R. Menahem ſaith, Marvelous myſteries are in the Hiſtories of the holy Law, that none is able to tell the praiſe of the excellency thereof, yea even when Hiſtories are found in the Law, which may ſeem unneceſſary and unprofitable. Therefore when we read in the Law, we bleſſe God for the Hiſtories, by which he hath planted eternall life amongſt us. For when the veile of blindneſſe is removed from off a mans face, he ſhall finde in it a Mountaine of ſpices and frankincenſe.

Luther. For the Phraſe uſed by Rachel touching her Maid, She ſhall beare upon my knees, the meaning, as Luther noteth, is, ſhe ſhall beare children for me, as is explained in the next words, I will become a Mother by her, and take and nouriſh up her children, as mine owne.

Verſe 5. And Bilhah conceived, and bare Jacob a ſonne, &c.

Calvin. As Rachel hoped, ſo it fell out, which ſheweth, that in this motion of giving her Maid to Wife unto Jacob, there was a divine providence guiding her, but Calvin expoundeth this, as a common bleſſing to Whores, as well as to Wives, God thus ſuffering them yet to lie in their ſinne. But as Leah, ſo Rachel looketh up to God the giver of this iſſue, naming it accordingly, Dan:

Verſe 6. yet Calvin noteth here alſo, that ſhe ſinned, in making God, as it were, to be on her ſide, as if he did ſee, that injury had been done to her by her Siſter, which he had hereby judged. But it may be, that ſhe ſpake thus, becauſe ſhe ſaw, that in regard of her Siſters fruitfulneſſe, and her barrenneſſe, the caſe was now altered, ſhe being moſt dearly beloved before, was neglected, whereupon being puft up ſomevvhat happily before, ſhe had ſince humbled her ſelf, and prayed, as Ferus noteth.

Ferus. After this Leah ceaſing to beare followed the example of her Siſter, and Verſe 9,10. gave her Maid Zilpah to wife to her Husband alſo, vvho bare him Gad and Verſe 11,12 Aſher. The vvord גגד of vvhich גד cometh, ſignifieth felicity, according Vatablus. to Vatablus, and Calvin noteth, that other Expoſitours conſent herein, yet Calvin. ſome, he ſaith, think, that גד ſignifieth the Starre called Jupiter, or Mercury, or good fortune, of vvhich it is ſpoken, Eſa 65.11. They offer a drink-offering unto unto Gad. But it is not probable, that Leah was ſo ſuperſtitious, as to have any reference to the Idols of the Heathen, for ſhe had more knowledge doubtleſſe of the true God, and that he was the author of this bleſſing.

Verſe 14.

And Reuben went in the time of Wheat-harveſt, and found Mandrakes, and brought them to Leah his Mother, &c.

The word tranſlated Mandrakes here is דודאים, vvhich by ſome are thought not to have been Mandrakes, but a kinde of vvhite Lilies, becauſe this vvord being uſed in the book of Canticles, a ſvveet ſmell is aſcribed unto it, vvhich is not in Mandrakes. But Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that having upon a time the apples of Mandrakes brought unto him, vvhich vvere very rarely ſeen, he had a great deſire for this Hiſtories ſake, to learne the nature of them, and therefore he diligently vievved them, ſmelt them, and taſted them, and he found them faire to look upon, ſvveet in ſmell, but in taſte unſavoury. And he addeth moreover, that ſome have held a vertue to have been in them to make women fruitfull, which he did not believe, becauſe Rachel after that ſhe had theſe, conceived not, till after that her Siſter had brought forth two children more. And as Saint Auguſtine, ſo the Septuagint and Ierome, men moſt skilfull in the Hebrew tongue, have alwayes tranſlated the word, Mandrakes. The nature of Mandrakes indeed is cold, and ſo ſuch as may ſeeme in reaſon not deſirable by women to make them fruitfull, but, as Auguſtine ſaith, Rachel deſired them for their beauty and ſweet ſmell and rarity. Galen, Avicen, Pliny, and Dioſcorides write of Mandrakes, that they are cold, and procure ſleep; and Avicen, that they purge the womb of a woman, by reaſon whereof happily they may availe unto fertility, but that they have ever been uſed to make the barren fruitfull, none have written. And touching that conceit, that they reſemble a man in the root, Mathiolus ſaith, that if the root be well taken up, it hath ſome reſemblance of a man, whoſe armes are cut off, but the roots carried about reſembling man, and ſold as being good to make women fruitfull, are not the roots of Mandrakes, but made of the roots of the reeds of Briony, and of other plants. Reuben, who is ſaid to have found theſe, was very young, not being above five yeares old at this time, and therefore he did herein after the manner of children, who when they have found any goodly thing, are wont to bring it to their Mother. And hereby, ſaith Muſculus, it appeareth, that Rachel knew not any ſuch vertue to be herein, as is imagined, becauſe then ſhe would have bluſhed openly to deſire this fruit, The Septuagints Tranſlation hath it, the apples of Mandrakes. If any man ſhall wonder, why ſuch a childiſh ſtory as this, is inſerted here, Calvin reſolveth it, that this is done to ſhew the baſe originall of the Jewes, ſome of them coming into the World accidentally, ſome of bond-maids, and ſome of a woman by craft put in the roome of another, to beat downe their pride, in that they exalt themſelves ſo highly above all other peoples. Reuben Leahs ſonne bringing her Mandrakes, Rachel is very deſirous of them, and conſenteth that for them Iacob ſhould lie with her that night, which he doth, and ſo ſhe beareth him Iſſacar, which is expounded by Ierome, eſt merces, as being two words, יש eſt, and שכר merces. It ſeemeth hereby, as Chryſoſtome noteth, that Iacob ſtill clave to Rachel, as to his only choſen wife, wherefore Leah uſeth this means to get leave of her Siſter, that he might come in unto her at that time: but others think, that all his wives had their times appointed, when to come in to one, and when to another, and this being Rachels time, ſhe yieldeth it to Leah for her ſonnes Mandrakes. And becauſe when ſhe had conceived again, ſhe was ſo joyfull, imputing this to her, giving of her Maid to her Husband, that he might have children by her alſo. It appeareth that theſe women did not affect the company of Iacob for carnall concupiſcence, but for the increaſe of poſterity, thinking it to be the part of a Mother of a family to ſeek to build up her Husbands houſe by many children bearing.

Oleaſter. Cantic. 7.13. Auguſt lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. c. 36

Galen. Avicenna. Dioſcorides.

Mathiolus.

Muſculus.

Calvin.

Verſe 15, 16
Verſe 17, 18
Hieron. Chryſoſt. Auguſt. lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. c. 48

Verſe 20.

After this, Leah beareth a ſixth ſon, calling his name Zebulun, of זבלני, Vatablus.

be

he will dwell with me, according to the Septuagint, eliget me, but the word ſignifieth (habitabit) which is ſpoken in reſpect of her neglect for Rachels ſake.

Verſe 22. Then God remembred Rachel, &c. Some make a queſtion, whether this be ſet downe in order or no, becauſe, if Joſeph were borne after all the other ſonnes of Jacob, of Rachel at this time, his age will not ſeem to agree, Chap. 41.46. where he is ſaid to be 30 yeares old, when he firſt ſtood before Pharaoh, and then he muſt needs be 39 at Jacobs coming into Egypt, at what time Jacob was 130, and therefore he muſt be borne Anno 91 of his age, if after all the reſt? But to this it may eaſily be aſſented, as I have already ſhewed, Chap. 27. 1. and then there is little reaſon to make queſtion of order kept in this place. The name Joſeph, by which Rachel calleth her ſonne, ſignifieth, will adde, becauſe ſhe had hope, that God would give her another ſon.

Verſe 25,26 Verſe 27,28 Verſe 29 &c to Verſe 36. After the birth of this childe, the ſeven yeares being expired, in which he was to ſerve againe for Rachel, Jacob requireth of Laban to be diſmiſſed, but he entreateth him to ſtay ſtill, offering him whatſoever wages he would require, and thus they agree upon the ſpotted of the Sheep and Goats, which were ſeparated three dayes journey from the uni-coloured, Laban and his ſons being with the party-coloured, and Jacob with the reſt. And this was done by Laban for more ſecurity, that there ſhould be no confuſion, or coming together of the party-coloured and others, leſt more ſuch ſhould by this meanes be bred to the increaſe of Iacobs part, whom he laboured by this means to keep downe, that he only might ſtill be more inriched.

Verſe 27. Aug. de locut. in Geneſ. For the particular paſſages here, v. 27. If I have found favour in thine eyes, &c. This ſpeech being Eclipticall is well ſupplyed with this word (tarry) for I have learned by experience, &c. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, in the Greek Tranſlation it is, (auguratus eſſem) as if he had ſaid, O ſi auguratus eſſem, i. e. ad bonum augurium te in domo haberem, O that I might have thee ſtill in my houſe for good luck. The Hebrew word is Nihaſti, and is of doubtfull ſignification, and therefore by the Septuagint is tranſlated, auguratus ſum, but by Ierome, experimento didici, Aben Ezra rendreth it tentavi. Origen rejecteth auguratus ſum, as prophane and heatheniſh, yet he followeth the Septuagints tranſlation, and ſo doth Theodoret, but they ſay, that this ſpeech and the like of fortune and luck came from Laban, and before from Leah his Daughter, who was brought up in ſuperſtition, but it was never heard to come from Iacob, neither is it to be uſed by Chriſtian people. See alſo Auguſt. qu. 61. in Geneſ. Hieron. Origen.

Verſe 30. It was little, which thou hadſt before I came; in Hebrew it is, at my foot, in the Greek tranſlation, at the entrance of my foot, a Phraſe of the Hebrews to ſet forth a mans coming to a place. And now when ſhall I provide for mine owne houſe alſo? that is, for my family.

Verſe 31. I will againe returne, and feed thy flock. Ierome Paraphraſing upon theſe words ſaith, Wilt thou have me ſerve thee ſeven yeares more, do this, that I ſhall require of thee, &c. but Iacob agreeth not to returne and ſeven yeares, but only to returne without any time ſetting, neither did he ſerve ſeven but ſix yeares more, and is not challenged by Laban for going away at ſix yeares end, as he ſhould doubtleſſe have been, had the terme of ſeven yeares been ſet.

Verſe 32. I will paſſe through all thy flock to day, removing all the ſpeckled coloured, and ſpotted, &c.

Hieronym. The ſenſe, ſaith Ierome, here is much confuſed in the Septuagints tranſlation, but it is, as if Iacob had ſaid, If thou wouldeſt have me tarry ſtill, do this that I require, ſeparate all the ſheep and Goats that be of divers colours, putting them into the hands of thy ſonnes, and deliver to me thoſe that are of one colour only, either white or black, and if any ſhall be bred of theſe of one colour party-coloured hereafter, it ſhall be mine, but if of one colour only, it ſhall be thine. This is a ſmall requeſt, the nature of cattell of one one colour being to bring forth uni-coloured, wherefore Laban accepteth of it, and maketh this ſeparation, putting ſuch as were now party-coloured into the hands of his ſonnes afarre off from the other flocks: and ſo Jacob had nothing as yet to begin withall, and proviſion was made that he might not have any of thoſe, that were already party-coloured by their confuſed comming together; neither was there any great likelihood, that the uni-coloured would bring forth many ſuch. The Cattel of divers colours here ſpoken of are little and great ſpotted, for ſo Nachod & Talu the words here uſed ſignifie, & the yellow, red, or brown, for ſo the next word Hom ſignifieth. Diodorus noteth, that ſheep of one colour were moſt eſteemed in Padan-Aram, but the divers coloured in Paleſtine, and therefore would be beſt for Jacob. As for Camels and Aſſes, which he alſo is ſaid afterwards to have in abundance, he might exchange ſheep and goats for them, and ſo come to have flocks and herds, as he had of all ſorts.

Diodorus præceptor Chryſoſt.

And Jacob took him rods of green poplar, cheſnut and hazel, and pieled white ſtrakes in them, &c. Verſe 37.

Three queſtions here offer themſelves. 1 Of what force ſuch rods laid before the ſheep in ramming time were? 2 Whether this was not a wicked deceit in Jacob to rob Laban? 3 Why he took rods of divers ſorts, ſeeing rods all of one ſort had been as good for the purpoſe, forſomuch as the vertue lay not in the ſort, but in the diverſe colours, when they were partly pieled, and partly unpieled? All theſe queſtions are touched upon by St. Auguſtine, who ſaith to the firſt, that the like hath happened unto women, for they have brought forth according to the colour of that vvhich they have looked upon: Hippocrates inſtanceth in the example of one woman, vvho vvas ſuſpected for adultery, becauſe ſhe brought forth a fair childe, unlike both to her and to her husband; but he ſaith that he bade them ſee, whether there were not a fair picture in the chamber, which being ſearcht was found, and this vvas judged the cauſe of the childes beauty. Rabanus alſo addeth an example out of Quintilian, of a woman, that upon a like reaſon brought forth a Blackmore, and he ſaith, that the like is proved in the Mares in Spaine, this comming to paſſe by the imagination of the female in the time of conception, for her nature is ſuch, that vvhat ſhe ſeeth or imagineth that ſhe ſeeth in that time, the like unto it ſhe vvill bring forth.

Auguſt. quæſt. 39. in Gen.

Queſt. 1. Chryſoſt. hom. 57. ſaith, that this was not done according to the courſe of nature, but by miracle.

Raban. Maurus

To the ſecond, Auguſtine ſaith, that he cannot be cenſured for fraud in this, becauſe he did it by divine Revelation, and hereunto ſubſcribeth Calvin, Tremelius, &c. proving that God directed him thus to do, from chap. 31.9. Ferus bringeth divers reaſons to juſtifie it. 1 Becauſe it vvas done by divine inſtinct. 2 God gave his policy effect. 3 He took nothing by ſtealth or violence, but his induſtry drevv it unto him. 4 There vvas much ovving him from Laban, both for his vvives dovvries, and for their ſervice. But it vvill be ſaid, Doth God teach deceit to any man? Anſw. Deceit vvhich is evill and ſinfull he teacheth not, but being Lord of all Labans goods, and ſeeing Iacob greatly vvronged by him, and abridged of his due, he reſolveth that Jacob ſhall novv be paid out of Labans goods, vvhether he vvill or no, and then ſetteth him dovvn this vvay to attein hereunto, as it vvas at his liberty to take any vvay that it pleaſed him to take. He preſcribeth him not a courſe to get another mans goods, but his ovvn due, vvithout all ſtrife by this ſubtlety. And if he gave him out of Labans goods double or fourfold as much as vvas his due, it vvas juſt notvvithſtanding, as it is vvith a Judge to cauſe a thief or an extortioner to reſtore four-fold. Thus by Gods direction the Hebrevvs borrovved and carried avvay the Egyptians goods, and poſſeſſed them vvithout injuſtice, they being due unto them for their ſervice, and the land of Canaan vvas taken from the old inhabitants, and given unto them. Here is nothing yet to patronize deceit in any man tovvards thoſe that have done them vvrong, but in caſe that God particularly directeth, as he did Jacob.

Queſt. 2. Calvin. Tremelius. Ferus,

Rupert. lib. 7. cap. 38.

To this third Auguſtine ſaith, that Jacob did take divers kindes of rods, as a Prophet, and therefore ſome Prophetical ſignification hereof muſt be inquired into. But what this may ſignifie he ſheweth not. But Gregory ſheweth it, ſaying, To put pieled rods of divers ſorts before the ſheep ſignified, the laying of the lives and ſayings of divers holy Fathers before the eyes of the people, both according to the letter ſet forth by the parts unpieled, and according to the myſtery by thoſe, that were pieled, the laying of them in the watering Troughs ſignified Gods fixing of theſe unto Books, wherein theſe holy Fathers are written of, and the ſheeps ingendring before them and bringing forth party-coloured, the forming of our underſtandings and lives according to thoſe things, which we ſee there ſet down, both for matter of Theory, and ſeeing into things myſticall and of practice, and living, as we ſee theſe Fathers have done before. For the Phraſes uſed, inſtead of theſe words green Poplar, Haſel and Cheſnut, the Septuagint have arborem ſtyracinam, nucinam, & platani. Tremelius for the two laſt hath coryli & platani.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 21. Ante oculos conſiderationis noſtræ, quaſi virgæ variæ patrum ſententiæ proponuntur, in quibus dum intellectum literæ fugimus, quaſi corticem ſubtrahimus, dum ſequimur quaſi corticem referamur.

There are divers names of Trees in Hebrew not well knowne to the Hebrews themſelves, and hence ariſeth this diverſity. Theſe rods Jacob pieled in part making white ſtrakes to appeare in them, and laid them in the watering Troughs, to which when the cattel came to drink in the coole of the day, which he obſerved to be the time of the Rammes, and He-Goats, leaping up upon the Females, the ſhadow of the Males appearing in the water, together with the party-coloured rods repreſented ſuch a figure to the Ewes ſight, that it availed much to make them bring forth party-coloured, thus Jerome. And there may be ſome reaſons hereof yielded in nature, firſt, becauſe the ſoule is to the thing begotten, as a work-man repreſenting any thing artificially to his work, he primus mover and beginner of all actions of the compoſitum, ſo that as an Artiſan hath the forme, which he will draw firſt in his imagination, and then it is made accordingly, ſo in the act of generation by the power of the ſoule ſuch a thing is produced, as is in the imagination thereof, thus in effect oſtatus. Secondly, becauſe any living creature conſiſting of Soule and Body becometh ſuch, as by a ſtrong imagination is apprehended thereby, ſeeing it thus receiveth into it ſelfe the likeneſſe of the thing imagined, wherefore Ariſtotle ſaith, that the ſoule is after a ſort all things, becauſe it knoweth all things, and then it is moſt naturall, generare ſibi ſimile.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebraic.

Toſtatus.

Ariſtoteles.

Verſe 40. And Jacob ſeparated the Lambs, and ſet the faces of the flocks towards the ring-ſtraked, &c.

That is, as Vatablus hath it, he put aſide the white Lambs, and put the party-coloured thus brought forth in a flock by themſelves to be driven before the flocks, that having them in their eye, this bringing forth of party-coloured, might yet be more furthered, thus uſing further policy. But I think that in the firſt words there was a miſtaking in Vatablus, the Lambs ſeparated were not doubtleſſe white, but party-coloured, of which it was ſpoken, v. 39. put by themſelves in a flock before the face of the other flocks. And as being ſo meant Tremelius readeth it, rendering the reſt of the verſe ſo too, that it may be better underſtood. Then Jacob did ſeparate the Lambs, that is, thus brought forth, and turned the faces of the flocks, that is, of the flocks of Laban towards theſe party coloured and browne.

Vatablus.

Tremel.

Verſe 41. And when the ſtronger conceived, Jacob laid the rods, &c. v. 42. but when the cattel were feeble, he put them not in.

Verſe 42.

Theſe words are ſo rendered by the Septuagint, as if he put them not in, when they had brought forth, but this is juſtly rejected by Jerome. And although the word עטיף Haatiph will beare our Engliſh Expoſition, feeble, yet it alſo ſignifieth ſerotinum, late, and ſo it is taken by Jerome and all Expoſitours. Jacob obſerved the cattel in the ſpring, when they were moſt luſty and then he uſed his pieled rods, but when any went to Ram later, that is, about Autumne, knowing that they were feeble then, he put them not in, ſo he had the former breed, which was ſtrongeſt, and Laban the latter, for it is Hieronym.

note,

noted, that as in Italy, ſo there theſe kinde of cattel brought forth twice a yeare, in the Spring and fall. Aug. q. 95. in Gen. He would not uſe means to have all, leſt Laban ſhould have him in ſuſpition for ſome fraud, but thus he increaſed abundantly, and his cattel were the beſt, and Labans the worſt.

Touching Jacobs Camels and Aſſes ſee before, v. 32. This Hiſtory of Jacobs providing for his houſe now at length is drawne by Rupertus to this Allegory: He did herein figure out the Shepherd Chriſt; for as Jacob, ſo he ſerved at the firſt taking nothing, but having inriched the World with his knowledge and grace, as Jacob did Laban with ſheep, he provided for his houſe, his Church, taking largely of Kings and Princes for the maintenance of his Miniſters, the building of Temples, and the relief of his poore Members.

Verſe 43. Rupert. lib. 7 in Gen. c. 37. Juſtum fuit Deum aliquando prouidere domui ſuæ, de regum pauperum & principum prædis ac theſauris ſuas ditando Eccleſias, ut eſſet, unde haberet ſufficientiam in ſuſtentatione miniſtrorum, & pauperum, in reſtaurationes Eccleſiarum & Cœmeteriorum.

CHAP. XXXI.

HEre Labans ſonnes murmur againſt Jacob, as being made great and glorious with their Fathers wealth, and Iacob obſerveth, that Labans countenance was altered towards him, which are commemorated, as impulſive cauſes of his departure thence to his own land of Canaan againe. Calvin layeth ſome blame upon Iacob, for being drawne with the hope of gaine to ſtay out of the Land of Promiſe all this while, noting, that it is good ſometime for Gods ſervants to be ill intreated, this being an occaſion unto them to take their hearts off from the World, and to lift them up to Heaven and Heavenly things. But for Labans and his ſonnes diſcontent, there was no cauſe, if they had conſidered the wealth gotten already by Iacobs meanes: but this is the manner of Worldly men, to hate the children of God, by whoſe meanes much good redoundeth unto them. And thus it is with the covetous, to their eye of envy any thing that another getteth, ſeemeth to be very much, but they overlooke all their owne abundance. Iacob being moved by the inhumanity of Laban and his ſonnes, God alſo ſtirreth him up now to depart into Canaan, promiſing to be with him; that is, to protect and to bleſſe him, if he ſhould fear any evill from Laban at his departing, and he calleth Canaan the land of his Fathers, becauſe promiſed for an inheritance unto them.

Verſe 1,2. Calvin. Note. Note. Ferus. Luther.

Iacob hereupon calleth for his wives into the field, where he kept his flock, becauſe he would not neglect it, and telleth them, what he obſerved touching their Fathers countenance, that it was not towards him, as heretofore. In the Hebrew it is, yeſterday and th'other day, a Synecdoche, whereby the next times are put for the whole time before going. But the God of my Father, ſaith he, hath been with me. This is by Tremelius underſtood of his appearing to him mentioned, v. 13. But Vatablus underſtandeth it of his continuall being with him to bleſſe him and increaſe him ſo greatly, and Muſculus, as ſpoken, that it might not be thought, that by fraud he had gotten any thing from Laban, but if part of his goods were tranſlated to him, it was done by God; ſo likewiſe Chryſoſtome, and to this do I ſubſcribe.

Verſe 3. Luther. Verſe 4. Verſe 5. Tremel. Vatablus. Muſculus.

Your Father hath deceived me, and changed my wages ten times, but God ſuffered him not to hurt me.

Verſe 7.

For ten times, the Septuagint have, ten Lambs, but the word מנים ſignifieth times, and not Lambs. But Auguſtine following that reading, ſaith, that ten lambs are all one with ten times, as ten Harveſts may be put for ten yeares, and reckoning theſe times, he ſaith, that as in Italy, ſo in thoſe parts ſmall cattel brought forth twice a yeare, ſo that in ſix years there were twelve times of bringing forth young, but becauſe happily one time of the firſt of theſe yeares was paſt, when Jacob bargained with Laban, and the ſecond time of the laſt yeare was not yet come, when Jacob departed, there were but ten times of bringing forth, every of which times Laban altered his bargaine, having allowed Jacob the party-coloured at the firſt, he would, the next time, ſeeing them to multiply moſt, allow the uni-coloured, and keep the party-coloured to himſelfe, but Jacob then not laying his rods, and all bearing one-coloured, he then altered it againe, and ſo continually from time to time.

Auguſt. quæſt. 95. in Gen.

Calvin. Muſculus. Some hold, when he ſpeaketh of ten times, that he meaneth no certaine number of times, but many times, a certaine number being put for an uncertaine, but the words may well enough be properly taken, although we make no ſuch exact account of the times, as Auguſtine doth, for there being twelve times in ſix yeares, it is more probable, that Laban would ſometime ſuffer Jacob to enjoy his bargaine twice together, and then alter it every time, but onely once more, when he permitted him in like manner. Thus alſo Jerome.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebraicis.

Verſe 8. If he ſaid, the ſpeckled ſhall be thy wages, then all the Cattel bare ſpeckled, but if ring-ſtraked, &c.

For ſpeckled and ring-ſtraked, the Septuagint and the vulgar Latin render divers-coloured and white, but the ſecond word עקדים ſignifieth neither white nor ring-ſtraked, but ligatos, by which name happily the one-coloured were called, becauſe Jacob was tyed by Covenant before not to take any of them.

Verſe 10, 11 Verſe 12. Now to prove, that he robbed not Laban by any fraud of his Cattel, but that God gave him them, he telleth his wives moreover, that in a dreame the Angel of the Lord ſhewed him the party-coloured cattel ingendring together, which by the Lord was ſo directed to be, becauſe Laban had ſo greatly wronged Jacob, that he might thus come to enjoy of the goods of Laban, which were unjuſtly deteined from him.

Verſe 13. Calvin. I am the God of Bethel, &c. This is ſpoken, not becauſe God was the God of that place only, but to keep him to the worſhip of the true God alone in the midſt of the Idolatries, whereby men were ſwayed in all places, and to put him in minde, and to confirme him touching his providence over him, as there he had found by experience.

Verſe 14, 15 16. The wives of Jacob hearing him ſay thus, conſent to go with him, complaining of their Fathers covetouſneſſe, whereby he not only kept back all Portions of his goods from them, as if they had been no Daughters, but ſtrangers, but alſo the increaſe, that came of their Husbands labour he unjuſtly raked unto himſelfe, thus depriving them, as much as in him lay, of neceſſaries for themſelves and 12 children.

Verſe 17, 18 19, 20, 21. Then Jacob ſetteth his wives and children upon Camels, to go into Canaan, and carrieth away all his goods, Laban being then abſent about the ſhearing of his Sheep, and it is ſpecially noted, that Rachel ſtole away her Fathers Idols, and Jacob came to Mount Gilead, whither he directed his courſe, before that Laban had notice of his flight, and could overtake him.

Verſe 23. Luther. Although Jacob had been incouraged by God to this journey, yet he wiſely watcheth an opportunity to be gone, becauſe he would not tempt God, teaching us likewiſe the moſt carefully that we can, to provide for our owne ſafety in all dangers. And as he having a command from God obeyed without asking the conſent of Laban, ſo muſt we without conſulting with fleſh and bloud readily obey our Heavenly calling. Labans Sheep-ſhearing, as is moſt probable, was three dayes journey from thence, becauſe it was ſaid before, that he put three dayes journey betwixt his Sheep put into his ſonnes hands, and thoſe in Jacobs. For the Images or Idoles, as the Septuagint render it, ſtolne by Rachel, they are called Teraphim, which properly ſignifie Images of men, which were by the ſuperſtitious worſhipped and conſulted withall, and uſed to give anſwers, ſo, Ezech. 21. the King of Babylon is ſaid to have conſulted with the Terakim, and, Zach. 10. the Teraphim are ſaid to have ſpoken lies. Toſtatus ſaith, that Teraphims were Images made of mettall, according to the art of Aſtronomy in part, and in part of Necromancy, which at ſometimes did ſpeak and give anſwers by the Devill to ſuch as inquired of them. The Hebrews alſo ſay, that the head of a childe being the firſt-borne, hath uſed to be taken and dedicated dedicated to the Devill, and being preſerved with Aromaticall things from corruption, and the tongue covered with Gold, and ſome Devills name given unto it, this was made one of the Teraphim, and was ſought unto, as an Oracle. But the word Teraphim doth not only ſignifie Images of men, which give anſwers, but any Image, as the Image made and put in the bed, when David did flee away for feare of Saul, is called Teraphim: and divers pictures in works, as where it is ſaid, the children of Iſrael ſhould be divers dayes without ſacrifice and Altar, without Ephod and Teraphim, that is, without Prieſts ſet forth by Ephod and Cherubims, and imbroidred pictures ſet forth by Teraphim, ſo Jerome, who hereupon reſolveth, that Teraphim do not only ſet forth ſhapes of men, wherein the Devill uſed to give anſwers, but alſo any kinde of Image or figuration. Here ſuch Images, as Laban worſhipped, are meant, for he calleth them his gods, v. 30. But why did Rachel ſteale them away? Aben-Ezra ſaith, that Laban might not conſult with them, to know which way Jacob went, which ſeemeth probable, becauſe he being in ſuch haſte, miſſed them, as if it had gone to conſult with them, but found them not. Joſephus ſaith, that ſhe did not ſteale theſe Images to worſhip them, for ſhe had been better taught by her Husband, but leſt if her Father ſhould happen to overtake them, they might have theſe to flee unto from his fury.

Note. Ferus. Artopœus. Toſtatus.

Rabbi Solomon, who is alſo herein followed by Baſil, Nazianzen, Theodoret and Lyranus, ſaith, that ſhe did ſteale them away, that her Father might not have them hereafter to worſhip them, and Nazianzen exhorteth, that we ſhould as Rachel take away Idols with us, not to worſhip, but to deſtroy them. Chryſoſtome, who is herein followed by Rupertus, Calvin, Muſculus, and moſt new Writers, ſaith, that ſhe was tainted with Idolatry, and therefore although ſhe neglected all things elſe, that were her Fathers, ſhe would not neglect the carrying away of theſe Idols, as being to her moſt precious. Laſtly, ſome think, that becauſe they were made of Silver and Gold, ſhe carried them away for their worth, that ſhe might at the leaſt have theſe for her portion. The ſecond of theſe opinions ſeemeth not to be true, becauſe when Laban came, ſhe did not flee to theſe Teraphim, but hid them: nor the third, becauſe then ſhe would not have feared to tell her Husband Jacob thereof: and the firſt is improbable, becauſe ſhe knew, that her Father, if he purſued them, would without conſulting follow on in the way to Canaan, and it is uncertaine, whether theſe were ſuch Teraphim, as gave anſwers. Touching the fourth, if ſhe meant to have worſhipped them, how could ſhe have uſed them ſo unreverently, as to ſit upon them? and yet it ſeemeth by that which followeth, of Jacobs purging his houſe from Idols, that although he worſhipped the true God only, yet ſome about him worſhipped Idols, and therefore moſt probably Rachel was one of theſe, coming of ſuch a Father, ſhe was ſtifly addicted to the like ſuperſtition. And it may be, that ſhe did ſteale them alſo for their worth. This is the firſt mention made of Idols, and it is ſtrange, that Laban coming of Nahor of the holy line ſhould be thus tainted: but from his Fathers he took the ſerving of God, and from the Inhabitants of that place Idolatry, thus joyning God and Idols together.

For the place to which Jacob came, where Laban overtook him, it was Mount Gilead, not called ſo before, but at this time, of their covenanting either with other as by and by we ſhall ſee, and therefore here it is thus called by anticipation of Gilead, Jerome ſaith, that it is a large mountaine at the back of Phœnicia and Arabia, and joyned to Mount Libanus, being extended by the deſert to that place, where Sihon the King of the Amorites dwelt beyond Jordan, which afterwards fell to the lot of Reuben, Gad and halfe Manaſſe. So that Jacob had both paſſed the River Euphrates, meant by the River ſpoken of, v. 21. and was come into the land of Canaan, in ſome part thereof, before that Laban overtook him. How great a journey this was one hath ſet downe, viz. 330. miles, and in this journey there are that ſay,

1 Sam. 19. 13, 16.

Hoſea 3.

Hieron. Epiſt 113 ad Fabiolam.

Queſt.

Aben-Ezra.

Joſeph. lib. 1. Antiqu.

Sigilla deorum ferebat, non ut deos coleret, quorum contemptum à marito didicerat, ſed ſi fortè fugientes pater aſſequeretur, haberet quò confugeret veniam impetraturus.

R Solomon. Baſil. in Prov. Nazianzen. de Paſchate. Chryſoſt hom. 57. in Gen. Rupertus.

Verſe 23.

Hieron.

H. Bunting Patriarchs travails.

Muſculus. ſay Jacob was 13 dayes, 3 before Laban knew of his going, 7 of his returne to his own houſe, after he knew it, that he might go out accompanied with ſome power, and 7 wherein Laban purſued him. And if the journey were ſo great, 13 dayes would not ſuffice unto it to paſſe on with ſuch a company of children and cattel, becauſe ſo they muſt have travelled 30 miles a day. Wherefore I think rather, that Laban being three dayes journey from home, when he was firſt told of it, returned not immediately, but firſt made an end of his ſheep-ſhearing, and then returned home, where finding that he was gone indeed, after that he had ſpent ſome time in gathering his friends together, he with them purſued after him, entring upon this journey happily not till twelve dayes after Jacobs flight, and ſo coming to him the nineteenth, and thus the journeys gone by him were twenty miles a day, and by Laban 54, who doubtleſſe with his friends rode upon Dromedaries moſt ſwift in travell.

Verſe 20. Whereas, v. 20. it is ſaid, that Jacob ſtole away unawares to Laban, in the Vatablus. Hebrew it is, He ſtole away Labans heart, this being an Hebraiſme to ſet forth thus much.

Verſe 24. Laban being come to the place, where Jacob was, God chargeth him by Verſe 25,26 night, not ſo much as to ſpeak any ill to Jacob, thus ſhewing his great Verſe 27,28 providence over his ſervants. And Laban accordingly doth only expoſtulate Verſe 29. with him, about his ſtealing away, pretending, that if he had been acquainted Ravan. Taurus with his departure, he would have ſent him away with mirth and muſick, Verſe 30. herein as the Devill transforming himſelfe into an Angel of light: But laſtly, he challengeth him for ſtealing away his gods. Not daring to offer any violence in deed or word, he feigneth a great deale of fatherly affection, but in one thing he layeth great blame upon Jacob, viz. for ſtealing away his Images, which he calleth his gods, not becauſe he thought any Deity to be in them, but becauſe they were made in honour of the gods, and when he would worſhip them, he turned to theſe images. The anſwer of Iacob is ſhort, that Verſe 31. he thought happily Laban might take his Daughters from him, but for thoſe Verſe 32. Images, he offereth them to be put to death with whomſoever they were found, and if there were any thing elſe of Labans, he willed him to take it. And in offering the ſtealer of the images to death, he ſaith, Let them be put to death before our Brethren: This is by Jerome expounded of Iacobs ſonnes, who Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen. in the Hebrew Phraſe, by which all kinſ-men are called Brethren, he ſaith, might be called ſo, and this is followed by moſt, but it ſeemeth rather, that Toſtatus. the men brought thither by Laban are meant, according to Toſtatus, both becauſe they were moſt fit to be offered on Iacobs part to be Judges, and not his own children, and becauſe the eldeſt of his children was but of thirteen yeares at that time. In that Iacob ſo ſuddenly offereth him to be put to death, who had ſtolne the Images, not having firſt called his wives, children and Calvin. Muſculus. ſervants to aske them thereabout, he is blamed as over-raſh by Calvin, but Muſculus rightly imputeth this to his zeale againſt Idolatry, he would not endure ſuch an one to live about him. If Iacob had ſimply denied either that he or any belonging to him had ſtolne them, he ſhould have ſinned, but not in offering the offender to puniſhment, he being ignorant of the committing of ſuch an offence. R. Eliezer ſaith, that forſomuch as the vvord of a juſt man is as the vvord of an Angel of God, vvhich muſt ſtand; Rachel vvas ſmitten vvith death before her time in child-bed.

Verſe 33,34 Then Laban ſearched in Iacobs tent, in Leahs tent, and the tents of the two Verſe 35. Maids, and laſtly, in Rachels tent, where they were hidden in the Camels litter, Rachel ſitting upon them, and pretending to labour at that time of her flowers, for vvhich cauſe ſhe roſe not up. Here vvas a great thirſting after bloud Ferus. in Laban, but by Gods providence, to vvhich it is to be imputed, that he found nothing vvith all his ſearching, leſt nevv troubles ſhould have come upon Iacob. For although Rachel uſed policy, yet it vvas of God, that Laban vvas infatuated hereby, not to ſearch any further.

All

All things working thus on Jacobs ſide, he is bold at length to challenge Laban for purſuing him without cauſe, as a Thief, ſeeing he could finde nothing of his there, and when he had done him faithfull ſervice 20 yeares, for deceiving him of his wages ten times. In ſpeaking of his fidelity he ſaith, that his Ewes & Goats had not caſt their young, which may ſeem to have been ſuch a thing, as he ſhould not have ſpoken of, becauſe not he, but God was the cauſe thereof. But becauſe God bleſſed Labans cattel thus for the favour, which he bare to Jacob, he might well ſpeak of it, as whereby Laban was obliged to him. The other part of his ſpeech ſheweth his wonderful diligence, care and fidelity, he being in this a worthy example for ſpirituall Shepherds to follow.

Verſe 36,37

Verſe 38,39 &c.

Muſculus.

Ferus.

Then he concludeth, that if the God of Abraham and the feare of Iſaac had not been for him, he had ſent him empty away. Here a queſtion ariſeth, why he varieth the word, and ſaith, the feare of Iſaac, and not, the God of Iſaac, as well as the God of Abraham? To this it is anſwered, that by the feare of Iſaac is meant none other but God, as he is alſo ſet forth by this title or feare, Eſa. 8. 13. And the reaſon, why he is called ſo with reference to Iſaac, was becauſe Iſaac was yet living, and was ſingularly affected with the feare of the Lord, as a thing moſt eminent in him, as faith had been moſt eminent in Abraham. Thus Aben-Ezra, and Cajetan. And it is to be noted, that God is ſaid to be this or that, either effectivè, as he is ſaid to be our light and joy, or objectivè, as he is ſaid to be our feare, hope or expectation. And Jacob doubtleſſe ſpake of God, as the feare of Iſaac, becauſe by his fearing, and reverencing God, and praying for him, he ſped the better. And as God was to Iſaac, ſo he ſhould be to us all, that in regard of him, we may feare to ſin and reverently ſerve and do worſhip before him.

Verſe 42. Queſt.

Aben-Ezra.
Cajetan.

Note.

Then Laban being convinced, that Jacob was faultleſſe, falleth from raging againſt him to Propoſitions of peace, Theſe Daughters, ſaith he, are my Daughters, &c. doing herein better, then many others, who being convicted by the ſtrongeſt arguments yet will not yield: But his fault was ſtill, that he would not confeſſe his injuries done to Iacob to repent thereof, wherein wicked men take after him, in that they cannot be brought to repentance. Come let us make a league, &c. Iacob being required by Laban to a league, yieldeth forthwith for the mutuall ſafety of them both and theirs after them. And this he might lawfully do, though Laban were an Idolater: for we ought to have peace with all men, as much as in us lieth, but not to make the nemies of Idolaters as our enemies, for ſo we might happily thruſt our ſelves into their deadly dangers, as Iehoſhaphat did in conſorting with Ahab.

Verſe 43. Note.

Verſe 44.

Then Jacob took a ſtone and ſet it up, and ſaid to his Brethren, Gather ye ſtones, and they made an heap, and ate thereupon. In all leagues-making in thoſe dayes they uſed externall ſignes, and here an heap of ſtones is made for a Monument of their peace, to put them and theirs after them perpetually in minde of it. In that ſtones are choſen, which are moſt durable, it appeareth, that Iacobs minde was, that the league entred upon ſhould continue alwayes: in whom we may ſee a paterne of meekneſſe, in that being ſo greatly wronged, yet now upon the ſudden he layeth away all anger, and is towards Laban, as if he had never done him any injury, and this is the true forgiving of treſpaſſes required at our hands. For their eating together upon that heap, it is ſet down out of order, for this was the laſt thing done after their ſwearing either to other, which is next ſet down, and therefore it is againe repeated, v. 54. with an addition, that Iacob ſacrificed a ſacrifice, and invited his Brethren to eat bread, he did not ſweare but with invocation upon Gods name.

Verſe 45,46

Note.

Calvin.

Verſe 54.

The heap of ſtones then being laid they ſweare either to other, and Laban calleth it Jegar-Sahadutha, that is in the Syrian tongue, the heap of teſtimony. Iacob, (Galeed) ſignifying the ſame in the Hebrew tongue, ſo that Laban by living amongſt the Syrians, had learned both the manners and language language of the Syrians, for which he is called Laban the Syrian, v. 24. The Verſe 48,49 &c. heap being called diverſly, according to the Syriack at the firſt by Laban, Moſes addeth, that he called alſo Galeed in Hebrew, and Mizpah, that is, a place to look from.

Verſe 47.

Verſe 53. The forme of the oath on Labans part was, The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor judge between us, the God (I ſay) of their father, that is of Terah, of whoſe ſerving other gods, ſee Joſ. 24.3. Hereby it appeareth, that Laban worſhipped the true God, but withall the Idols which Terah and Nahor had ſerved before, whereby all the good of worſhipping God was overthrown: but Jacob is not tainted, he ſweareth onely by the true God.

Verſe 55. The next morning Laban kiſſeth his ſonnes and daughters, and bleſſeth them, and departeth: that is, his daughters and grandchildren, wiſhing them all good.

Note. See how God can change the moſt furious and fierce at his pleaſure, that if we have him on our ſide, we may not fear our greateſt enemies.

CHAP. XXXII.

Verſe 1. Rupert. lib 8. in Gen. c. 2. IN this Chapter Jacob being rid of Laban goeth on, and the Angels of God are ſaid to have met him. After his long abode in Padan-Aram, ſaith Rupertus, where he encountred with many troubles, and had even now overcome them all, Gods Angels are not ſaid to be ſent, but to have come unto him in way of meeting to congratulate, as it were his victory, as Melchizedeck met Abraham having conquered thoſe Kings that carried Lot away captive, and as they came out to meet Saul and David returning from the victory againſt the Philiſtines with timbrels and dances. He had laboured greatly in obeying his father Iſaac, and now returning to him triumpheth, ſo to every faithfull perſon, after obedience finiſhed to our heavenly Father, there ſhall be a return granted unto him, and the comfort of divine Revelations, and ſometime in the way of the viſion or heavenly ſpirits, as unto our Saviour, after his encounter ended againſt the Devill, the Angels came and miniſtred to him. Thus alſo Ferus, and although we ſee them not, the Angels of God pitch their tents about all that fear God, ſo that they ſhall not need to fear any dangers. The Hebrews think, becauſe the word Mahanaim, by which Jacob calleth them, v. 2. is of the duall number, that there were two tents of Angels, one before him, of Angels appointed to the land of Canaan to welcome him, as it were, into thoſe parts, and to ſecure him againſt the next encounter that was at hand with Eſau, and the other of Angels, who had hitherto guarded him in coming from Padan-Aram. They are not ſaid to have ſpoken any thing, but onely to have met him, this being a ſufficient argument of the divine protection over him. Calvin thinketh, that the tents of Angels were on both ſides of him, to ſhew, that he was every where guarded, being therefore called Mahanaim, and this is moſt probable, or he alloweth of that Expoſition, taking the plurall to be meant by the duall number, and ſo that they came round about him. And Muſculus noteth, that this was done, when he was in that way, wherein God would have him to go, to note, that Gods Angels are not about any but in the way of obedience, ſo likewiſe Ferus. For the forme wherein they appeared, the name given to the place doth declare, viz. after the manner of an army inſtructed with weapons, chariots and horſes, as they afterwards appeared to Eliſhah. And Jacob called the place Mahanaim, two tents, thus expreſſing his gratitude for this great favour to all poſterities. About this place there was afterwards a City called Mahanaim inhabited by Prieſts Joſ. 21.38. Of Angels we read, Dan. 10 20. that there are of them ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and Heſiod an Heathen Poet ſaith, there be thrice ten thouſand of immortal Angels of God here upon earth, the keepers of mortall men, and obſervers of their vvorks both juſt and unjuſt, they are clad vvith the air, and go abroad all over the earth.

Matth. 4. Ferus. Pſal. 34. Hebræi. Calvin. Muſculus. Ferus.

Then

earth. Then he ſent Meſſengers to his Brother Eſau into the Land of Seir, putting words into their mouthes to ſpeak unto him, full of humility, and tending to pacifie his wrath againſt him, if it might be. Mahanahim was afterwards a City of the Levites 44 miles off Jeruſalem.

Verſe 2, 3, 4.

A queſtion may be made here, how Eſau came to dwell in Mount Seir, and how Jacob knew thereof, and ſeeing he was not in that Land, to which he was going, why he ſent thus unto him? To the firſt it is anſwered, that by a ſingular providence of God Eſau departed from his Fathers houſe out of Canaan, that the inheritance of that Countrey might be left unto Jacob. He was hatefull to his Mother, becauſe of the Daughters of Heth, whom he had married, and pleaſed not his Father, and being growne now to great ſubſtance it is likely, that to live at home as a Son with his Father under him, did not agree with his proud minde, and therefore he voluntarily ſought him a new place, where he might have more liberty, but that he was carryed to ſo barren a place, God, who would herein expreſſe his hatred of his ill manners, had an hand, as is ſet forth, Mal. 1. 3. It is not to be thought then, that he was by his Father driven out, but went of his owne accord. For Jacobs knowing of it, he might have intelligence given him by ſome Meſſenger from his Mother, and to what greatneſſe and power his Brother was growne, that he might beware of him, bearing ſtill an hatred againſt him. Seir was 40 miles from Jeruſalem, and 80 from Peniel, to which place Eſau came to meet Jacob, and therefore becauſe he was to come neare him, even upon his borders, as Ferus ſpeaketh, and he could not paſſe unſeene with ſo great a troope, fearing his fury, he ſent, when he was thus farre off, to pacifie him The Land of Seir was ſo called from Seir the King thereof, but he being driven out by the ſonnes of Eſau into Arabia Petrea, it had the name of Edm from Eſau, ſo that it is here thus called by anticipation.

Queſt.
Calvin.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

For his calling Eſau his Lord, and himſelf his ſervant, this may ſeem to be a voluntary departing in him with his right of dominion, through a preſent ſlaviſh feare, to obteine which when he bought his birth-right and laboured to get that bleſſing with the hazzard of his life, he paſſed not formerly for any danger. If he would have granted him this againe, he ſhould not have needed to take this long and dangerous journey, or to have lived hitherto, as it were an exile. But Calvin reſolveth this well, that herein he yielded only a temporall Lordſhip unto his Brother, being grown greater, then he in his outward eſtate, but he went not from the right of the ſecret bleſſing belonging unto him. He knew that the effect of Gods promiſe was yet ſuſpended, and therefore being content with the hope of a future inheritance, he is content for the preſent to prefer his brother in honour before himſelfe, and to profeſſe himſelfe his ſervant. Muſculus noteth hence, that it is lawfull, when neceſſity requireth it, by the inſinuation of humility to pacifie the mindes of the mighty, although they be reprobates.

Calvin.

Muſculus.
Note.

But what doth he meane to ſend his Brother word of his riches? This was not done, as Ferus noteth, in oſtentation, but that Eſau might not think, that he returned home gaping after his Fathers goods, that thus Eſau might be deprived of them, but he had enough of his own, it would ſuffice him, if he would but ſuffer Jacob to live, although he took all to himſelfe. And Calvin addeth further, that this might be of force to reſtreine Eſau from coming againſt him, it being a moſt ſhamefull thing to chaſe one away comming from afar inriched with Gods bleſſings, ſo as Jacob was. Here is little appearance yet of Gods favour more to Jacob, then to Eſau, but this is not to be meaſured by externall things, wherein the worſt do oft-times moſt abound.

Ferus.
Calvin.

Note.
Calvin.
Qui fiduciam imaginantur omni timore vacuam, nunquam guſtârunt, quid ſit vera fides.

In that Jacob being ſo wonderfully aſſured of Gods protection, yet feared Eſau, we may ſee, what the weakneſſe of the faith, even of the beſt is, that we may pray, Lord, increaſe our faith. They that imagine, ſaith Calvin, faith to be void of all feare, have never taſted yet what true faith is; for God doth not promise to be present unto us in the time of danger, that we might then be without all feare, but that feare might not prevaile and overwhelme us with despaire. And hereby we are made to humble our selves, and the more earnestly to seek to the Lord for succour. Ferus saith that God permitted Jacob to feare thus, that we might not be proud; and alwayes acknowledge help in danger to be the gift of God.

Ferus.

Verse 6,7.
Verse 8,9,
Verse 10, 11
Verse 12, 13
Verse 14, 15
Verse 17, 18
Verse 19, 20.

Jacobs messengers returning bring word that Esau was comming with 400 men, which filled Jacob with feare, and straitened him, that he knew not what course to take for his owne safety, but in the end he divideth his company and flocks into two, prayeth to God, and sendeth a present unto Esau, directing his servants, that went with it, what to say. Chrysostome and Calvin say, that Esau went out thus accompanyed in good will to meet Jacob, although he feared the contrary: but this is improbable, because then he should have understood so much by his messengers, whereas they doubtlesse told him, that he came in an hostile manner, thus putting him in so great feare. Moreover, he bare a deadly hatred against him before, and it is altogether improbable, that he was now altered, it being not the manner of wicked men, when they have conceived an hatred, to lay it down againe in time, but rather to grow more and more infence, wherefore I rather hold with Ferus, that he came out thus appointed against his Brother and his company, that he might by no meanes escape his hands, and so we may note, as when Laban had ceased pursuing Jaacob behinde, here was a brother ready to come against him before, so the Church of God hath not only trouble by Enemies abroad, but also by false brethren at home. And God suffereth Esau in much pompe and pride to come forth thus, but turneth him so at length, that he is ridiculous in all his preparation, as he did Pharaoh and Sanneherib, &c. Jacob being full of fear divideth his company, that if he could not save all, yet he might save some, teaching us not desperately to neglect all, if we must needs lose somewhat. Then he prayeth, shewing, that faith wrought with him even in this extremity.

Chrysost.
Calvin.

Ferus.

Note.

Verse 10.

I am lesse, then the least of thy mercies. In the Hebrew it is, I am little before thy mercies, for the Hebrews have no comparative, and therefore they are wont to expresse this by a positive and a preposition. By mercies he understandeth benefits, and truth is added hereunto, that we might know, that by faith we come to be capable of them, as the word mercies set forth their free collation without any merit on mans part. See Ps. 25.10.26.3.36.6.

Calvin.

Verse 11.

Deliver me out of the hand of my Brother Esau, for I feare him, &c. A Question is here made, how this feare in Jacob could stand with faith? To this Lyranus answereth, that he feared, because of his living so long amongst Idolaters, where he could not be without some steine of the same. But Augustine better saith, that this feare was in him, through humane infirmity, but his prayer sheweth still the faith of his piety, and in this example we learne to provide us men against dangers, which we may feare, although we distrust not, but have faith in God to be delivered.

Lyranus.
August. quæst. 102. in Gen.
Satis hinc humana viri infirmitas & fides pietatis apparet.

For his gifts sent to Esau, they were very great, and gotten with hard labour, in which case men are more hardly drawn to part with their goods, yet Jacob doth willingly give all these away to be suffered quietly to injoy a place in the promised Land; whereby we may gather, that by faith he esteemed so of that inheritance promised, as that he regarded not worldly things in respect thereof.

Calvin.

Verse 21,22

Jaacob having thus ordered all things to pacify his brother Esau lodgeth there that night with his family, but before the whole night was spent, he sent away his Wives and Children also, passing over the brook Jabbok with them, but they being all gone he remained there alone, and a man wrestled with him, till the breaking of the day, &c. Some make a question, whether Jacob went away from Mahanaim that same night, that he sent away his present, or the night following? but to him that shall compare,

Verse 23,24

v. 13 with this v. 21. it will plainly appeare, that the night ſpoken of, v. 13 was another night and not the ſame with this, when he had prayed, and divided his companies, he ſtayed together with them all night, the next day he ſpendeth his time in ſetting forth a preſent for Eſau, and ſending his ſervants away with it, the night following he tarryeth not for the day-light, but paſſeth after himſelfe with his Wives and Children, and the reſt of his ſubſtance, making them to go before, even over the brook Jacob, of which Jerom ſaith, that it runneth betwixt Philadelphia and Geraſa, being 4 miles from the place, from which he removed, and running a little further it falleth into the River Jordan, mention is made of this Brook, Numb. 21. 24. Deut. 2. 37. The word אבק ſignifieth to wreſtle, and hence the name יבק ſeemeth to have come, and then it had not this name before this time, but now firſt obteined it, being ſo called by Moſes here, as alſo many other places, by anticipation: the word here uſed to ſet forth his wreſtling, is uſed no where elſe but in this place only, a ſpirituall wreſtling by prayer being hereby typified. Touching Jacobs tarrying alone after all his company, this was not as Calvin well noteth, to avoid the danger by flight, if he ſhould heare of the deſtruction of his by Eſau, but that he might be the more free to pray againe, and whileſt he vvas thus occupied, it is moſt probable, that the man here ſpoken of came and vvreſtled vvith him. But here a great queſtion offereth it ſelfe, vvho this man vvas, and hovv, and vvhy he vvreſtled vvith him, and laſtly, vvhy he touched Jacob on the hollovv of his thigh, ſo that he halted thereon? Touching the firſt, Muſculus ſaith, that ſome of the Hebrevvs hold him to have been Eſau his Angel hindring him from going over the ford to enter into the Land of Canaan; but this is abſurd, having all circumſtances of bleſſing him, and telling him, that he had prevailed with God, &c. againſt it, and ſo is that, which Lyranus ſaith, was the opinion of the Hebrewes, viz. that a Devill in the likeneſſe of Eſau wreſtled with Jacob, an Angel helping him againſt the Devill, and finally, leaſt he ſhould think, that by his owne ſtrength he prevailed, touching the hollow of his thigh, although Procopius Gazæus ſaith, that he had this from a certaine learned man. Theodoret ſaith, that he was the Son of God in the likeneſſe of a man, who both now and at ſundry other times appeared thus, as giving an hint herein of the nature of man, which he vvould aftervvards take upon him, ſo likevviſe Juſtin Martyr cum Tryphone. Tertullian. lib. 2 contra Marcon. Hilar. lib. 4 de Trinit. Ambroſ. lib. 1 de Fide cap. 5. Chryſoſt. in Act. 7. And Theodoret vvriting upon that appearing of the Lord to Moſes in a flame of fire in a buſh ſaith, that God the Father never appeared to any man, and an Angell he could not be, that appeared, becauſe he ſaith, I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and I am that I am, and therefore he muſt needs be the Son of God, and upon this he ſaith, theſe vvords do agree, that he vvas not an Angel, Thou haſt prevailed with God and therefore ſhalt prevaile with men, and in that he craved his bleſſing, and vvhen this viſion vvas ended, he vvas comforted, ſaying, I have ſeen God face to face, and my life is preſerved. Yet there are others, vvho hold that he vvas an Angel, and that alvvayes vvhen the Lord is ſaid to have appeared under the Old Teſtament, it is to be underſtood of the Angels. Dionyſius ſaith, that all Revelations have been made of old by the holy Angels, whether it were matter of admonition to do any thing, or whether of reformation from ſacrilegious errour, and from a prophane life, or of inſtructions, or ſecret viſions of heavenly Sacraments, or of divine predictions, for which cauſe thoſe heavenly ſpirits had the name of Angels. And Jerome ſaith, Where an Angel is firſt ſaid to have been ſeen, and then to have ſpoken, as if he were the Lord, it is to be underſtood, that he, is truly one of thoſe Angels, which in great multitudes miniſter to the Lord, but in him the Mediatour ſpeaketh. And Gregory ſaith, The Angel, which appeared to Moſes, is ſometime called an Angel, becauſe by ſpeaking outwardly he ſerved, and ſometime the Lord, becauſe the Hieron. tradit. Hebr.

Muſculus.

Queſt. 1.

Lyranus.

Procopius Gazæus. Theod. quæſt 91 in Gen.

Dionyſ. Areopagita lib. 4. de Cœleſti Hierarch.

Hieron. in Gal. 4.

Lord ſitting inwardly as preſident did miniſter unto him the efficacy of ſpeaking. Thus David alſo ſaith, O my people attend unto my Law; whereas neither the people were his people, nor the Law his Law, but Gods: for taking upon him the perſon of him, by whom he ſpake, he ſpake in the authority of that perſon, with whoſe inſpiration he was filled. And this is imbraced by all the Schoolmen. Luther and Calvin ſpeak of this apparition, as if it were God that appeared. But becauſe both in the buſh to Moſes, where God is ſaid to have appeared, and when the Law was given upon Mount Sinai, this being afterwards ſpoken of, it is ſaid to have been an Angel, Act. 7. 30. Gal. 3. 19. and this man, with whom Jacob wreſtled alſo, Hoſ. 12. 4. He had power over the Angel, and prevailed. I hold rather with them, that are for an Angel. I confeſſe, indeed, that the Sonne of God hath ſometime been called likewiſe an Angel, becauſe he was ſent by his Father, as Mal. 3. 2. but not without an addition, as, the Angel of the Covenant, ſo as he is not ſpoken of by Hoſea, with whom Jacob prevailed. God came then by his Angel here in the ſimilitude of a man, and becauſe God ſpake in him and by him, he taketh upon him, as if he were God himſelfe. Having thus found out, who this man was, let us in the next place inquire how he wreſtled with Jacob, and wherefore, and how it could be, that a mighty Angel could not prevaile againſt a weak man? Some have held, that this wreſtling was not bodily and externall, but ſpirituall, and that the Angels wreſtling with Jacob was not againſt him, but on his ſide, helping him againſt thoſe contrary principalities and powers, as they are called, Eph. 6. 12. and as every faithfull perſon hath a wreſtling, ſo Origen and Jerome likewiſe ſaith, they are ridiculous, who ſay, that Jacob wreſtled after the manner of other wreſtlers. For what great matter could it be, if his wreſtling were in that manner, whether he overcame or were overcome? but we are to hold, that he had ſuch a wreſtling as agreed to ſo great a Patriarch, as they have, that can ſay, We wreſtle not againſt fleſh and bloud, &c. as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Thus alſo Thomas Anglicus I do not think, that Jacob wreſtled, ſaith he, with an Angel appeariug as a man, as one man wreſtleth vvith another, but that he was held by Jacob, when he appeared unto him, vvith attractive hands and imbraces of prayers. And vvhen he made a ſhevv of departing, then he held him more firmly, and endeavoured himſelfe to draw him back againe, untill that he heard him for the preſervation of him and his, out of Eſaus hands, as appeareth by the vvords hereafter uſed: Let me go, ſaith he, I will not, ſaith Jacob, unleſſe thou bleſſe me.

And of this kinde of wreſtling Rupertus ſeemeth alſo to underſtand it, when he ſaith, that the wreſtling of Jacob continued, till the Incarnation of Chriſt, for many times was the Lord about to depart from his ſeed for their ſinnes, but firſt Moſes by prayer held him, when he had been provoked by the Golden Calves, and afterwards other faithfull perſons, ſo that he left not that Nation, till that he had ſent the bleſſed ſeed, in whom all the Nations of the earth are bleſſed, and ſo he gave him his bleſſing. Thus they. Yet moſt hold, that this wreſtling was corporeall, becauſe he touched his body on the hollow of his thigh. So Ferus alſo, and for this he urgeth the narration of the thing, ſaying, that the Lord hereby tryed Jacobs faith yet more by a greater temptation, then had hitherto befalne him. He ſendeth an Angel like a man to come ruſhing upon him, being alone, and in the darkneſſe of the night, whereby he might feare, that even God was now againſt him, and not Eſau with his company only; yet he truſteth in the promiſe of God by faith, and ſo is not overthrowne, but at length prevaileth, being hereby comforted againſt the feare of Eſau. And ſome, ſaith he, hold, that this was Jacobs Angel who ſtrove to go from him, becauſe having been ſo greatly confirmed before, he ſhewed now ſo little faith; but he by weeping and praying, as Hoſea ſpeaketh, held him ſtill. It ſeemeth to me, that his wreſtling was both corporeal, as with a man, and ſpirituall alſo, as vvith God, or one repreſenting God, Gregor. Præfat. in Job. Angelus videlicet propterhoc, quod exteriùs loquendo ſerviebat, Dominus autem quia interiùs præſidens loquendi facultatem miniſtrabat. Cùm ergo loquens exteriùs ab interiore regitur, per obſequium angelus, per inſpirationem Dominus nominatur, &c.

Queſt. 2.

Origen. lib. 3. περὶ ἀρχῶν. Hieron. in Eph. 6.

Th. Anglicus in Gen. 32. Angelus, ſive Deus in ſpecie hominis apparens precibus & attractivis manibus & amplexibus tenebatur à Jacob. Et fingens ſe velle abeo diſcedere, firmiùs & vehementiùs à Jacob tenebatur & retrahebatur, &c.

Rupertus lib. 8. in Gen.

Ferus in Gen. 32.

Hoſea 12. 4.

God, by prayer; ſo that partly with his hands he wreſtled and ſtrove, that he might not be overthrowne to the ground, and knowing, that this was no ordinary man, he prayed and beſought him for his favour, and not to offer ſuch violence to him. And ſo I hold with Ferus, Calvin and others, that this aſſault made upon Iacob was for the triall of his faith, wherein it being proved in the end, that he was moſt ſtrong, he might go on with the leſſe feare of his brother Eſau. All this being but as if the Lord ſhould have ſaid, I have now ſhewed thee, of what power thou art with God by Faith, Prayer and perſeverance, go on therefore armed with theſe graces thus ſtill, and feare not, but much more, thou ſhalt go away unfoiled of men, with what power ſoever inſtructed they come againſt thee. But how is it ſaid, that he could not prevaile againſt Iacob? To this ſome anſwere, that he only made a ſhew, as though he could not prevaile, to make Iacob the more courageous. But this is againſt the ſacred ſtory. Others therefore better ſay, that the Angel appearing uſed his power, according to the preſcription of the divine will, which was that he ſhould aſſume a body in ſuch a meaſure of ſtrength as to be able only to wreſtle and aſſault Iacob, but not to overthrow him, or to get from him being once cloſed, or that God ſtrengthened Iacob extraordinarily beyond the power of the Angel to reſiſt him, or taking this man with Calvin to have been God, he aſſaulted not Iacob with any more power, then is in one man, ſupplying Iacob with more ſtrength to reſiſt, then he exerciſed againſt him, being againſt him as it were with his left hand, but with him with his right hand. Having thus reſolved two queſtions, let us come now to the third, why he touched the hollow of Iacobs thigh, hereby making him lame, and then required him to let him go, becauſe the morning was riſen, but Iacob refuſed ſo to do, untill that he had bleſſed him? The word tranſlated the hollow of his thigh is כף ירכו Caph Iericho, which word Caph, becauſe it hath divers ſignifications, is diverſly rendred by divers, by the Septuagint, Latitudinem fœmoris, by the Caldee Paraphraſt, curvitatem, by Vatablus, volam. Rabbi Chimhi ſaith, that the bone, into which the bone of the thigh goeth, is called Caph, becauſe it is crooked; others, becauſe hollow, and the bone of the thigh at the end being round goeth into it being knit by a ſinnew, which was now looſened, and ſo lameneſſe muſt needs enſue hereupon. Thus the Angel did for divers reaſons; 1 That Iacob might have a taſt, of that power, which was in him, and ſo aſcribe his victory, not to his owne ſtrength, but to God inabling him: for he that with his touch only reſolved one joint, could have in an inſtant likewiſe diſſolved his whole body, and have brought him to nothing, if God had not reſtreined him. 2 That ſome effect of that wreſtling remaining, it might not ſeeme to have been an imaginary, but a true wreſtling, to be made uſe of accordingly. 3 That herein there might be a figure for our learning. 1 That we muſt not look, when we wreſtle with temptation, to go away altogether unhurt, for our humiliation, even when we have prevailed, yet although by wreſtling we be hurt and made lame, we ſhall through him that helpeth us, prevaile. 2 Becauſe it was but one leg, upon which he was touched and handled, the other remaining ſound; hereby was figured out the fleſh and the Spirit in every one of Gods elect people, becauſe although in ſpirit and full purpoſe of the minde he be ſet to obey Gods will, yet in the fleſh, when temptation cometh, he ſheweth infirmity. 3 Becauſe the thigh is a Symbole of generation, hereby were figured out the children of Iacob, both which were elect by the ſound leg, and the reprobate by the lame, and conſequently in the Church of God whereſoever: yet for ſo much as this lameneſſe befell not Iacob, before he had begotten them, but after, it was not through any vice derived from him, that ſo many proved Reprobates, but his halting now, was only a figure of it. Some yield other reaſons, as that Iacob might be the more confirmed, ſeeing even when he was lame, yet he could hold the Angel, and that he was thus ſmitten after the manner of men, who when they ſtrive together, and Toſtatus. Teo. Anglicus.

Cajetan.

Hebræi.

Calvin.

Queſt. 3. Verſe 25, 26

Theodoret.

Tho. Anglicus. Calvin. The Myſtery.

Muſculus.

Toſtatus.

Ferus.

and one would be gone from the other, as having the worſt of it, he will do him what hurt he can, that he may be willing to let him go. And figuratively by this was ſet forth, that concupiſcence being touched by the Spirit of God in a man preſently languiſheth, and that the carnall ſenſe of the Law held by the Jewes ſhould languiſh at the comming of Chriſt, and ſo their Religion ſhould be maimed, ſome coming to Chriſt, and ſome oppugning him. But the former reaſons may ſuffice, theſe being let paſſe as further fetcht.

Tho. Anglicus.

Gloſ. ordinaria Marlorat.

Muſculus.

Ferus.

Oleaſter.

Tho. Anglicus.

Touching the reaſon, why he would now be gone, becauſe the morning was riſen; One ſaith, that this was ſpoken in favour of Jacob, his buſineſſe being reſpected, that he might now follow after his company. Another, that the time of the viſion, it being a night-viſion, was now at an end. Another, that he would not be ſeen of other men, who were unworthy of this ſpectacle, which is thus further amplifyed by Oleaſter, the Angel like unto a great man ſaith thus, as intimating, that he would not commonly and familiarly be ſeen, but ſeldome and ſparingly. But of all reaſons that of Tho. Anglicus ſeemeth to be moſt apt, He ſpake thus, as one, that muſt not ſtay alwayes in a place, but go ſpeedily about other buſineſſe appointed him at that time by the Lord, and that reaſon of the Hebrews is moſt improbable, becauſe he would in the morning be in Heaven amongſt the other Angels ſinging praiſes unto God, that being a ſpeciall time for this purpoſe: for they praiſe God without ceaſing, and not at any ſet times. For Iacobs ſaying, that he would not let him go, except he firſt bleſſed him, by the reſolving of his joint with a touch, he perceived of what divine vertue he was, and therefore ſtood earneſtly by prayer for his bleſſing, before his departure; for that which is here ſpoken, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſſe me firſt, is by Hoſea ſet forth, as a moſt earneſt praying with teares. He knew then, ſaith Calvin, that this was God, in whoſe power it is to bleſſe, and thus Moſes held him, ſo that he is brought in ſaying unto him, Let me alone. By prayer then God is held, when it is made in faith, and we perſevere without wearineſſe.

Hebræi.
Job 38. 7.
Revel. 4.

Hoſea 12. 4.

Calvin.
Note.

Verſe 27.

The Angel having yielded the victory as it were to Iacob, by asking him that he might depart; now that he ſaw he would not let him go without bleſſing him to prepare hereunto, asketh him his name, and telleth him that his name ſhall no more be called Iacob, but Iſrael, becauſe he had, as a Prince, power with God, and with men, and had prevailed. The reaſon of the name Iſrael is here ſo plainly rendred, that a man would wonder, how any learned Writer could give any other Etymology; and this Jerome ſometime acknowledgeth, ſaying, What need have I to ſeek after the opinions of others, when as he hath given the Etymology of the name, who gave the name. Iſrael cometh of Sarith a Prince, and El God, as if he had ſaid a Prince with God, and not a ſupplanter, as before; for as I am a Prince, ſo thou that couldeſt wreſtle with me, ſhalt be called, and if thou couldeſt wreſtle with me and prevaile, how much more with men? And yet Ierome himſelfe in other places varieth here from, ſaying, Iſrael ſignifieth, rectus, and from hence he was ſo called, and others, A man ſeeing God, as Philo. lib. de temulentia. Origen. Hom. 2 in Numer. Baſil. in Eſa. 1. Nazianzen. orat. 2 de theologia, Chryſoſt. Hom 58 in Gen. Auguſt. lib. 16 de Civit. c. 39. and Gregory. But the word cometh of Sar or Sarah, as Pagninus hath it, with a prick in the left horne, ſignifying a Prince, and only before, and not of אדם a man, ראה ſeeing אל, God, as it muſt be derived, if hereby be ſignified a man ſeeing God, as Ierome alſo reaſoneth, and as for that expoſition rendring it by Rectus, that is ישר with a prick in the right horne: thou haſt power as a Prince with God and with men, and haſt prevailed, that is, as Muſculus ſaith ſome expound it, thou haſt power with God, and ſhalt have power with men and prevaile, theſe words and ſhalt have power, being underſtood. Others, ſaith Vatablus, becauſe thou haſt ſhewed thy ſelfe ſtrong in wreſtling with Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

Hieron. in Eſa. 44 & in Hoſ 12

Muſculus.

Vatablus.

with an Angel in likeneſſe of a man, and haſt prevailed, and therefore thou ſhalt go on prevailing: for that man or Angel came in the power of God to wreſtle with him, and therefore having power with him, he had power with God and man. The word tranſlated, thou haſt power, is שרית, thou haſt had principality, intimating, that God being with thee, thou ſhalt be as a Prince, whereſoever thou commeſt.

But it may be demanded, how was Jacob in his ſaying thus bleſſed, for here is nothing but a giving of him a new name? Anſ. The giving of him this name was a bleſſing of him, ſeeing God doth not give the bare name but the thing ſet forth hereby, making him invincible amongſt men by thus ſaying. Queſt. Tho. Anglicus.

Againe it may be demanded, why this name was given him againe. Gen. 35.10? Anſ. For his further confirmation, becauſe he was then in feare of the Inhabitants thereabouts, becauſe of the act done by his ſonnes at Shechem, ſo Rupertus. But others that here this name was foretold only, there impoſed, ſo Jerome, Author Hiſtoriæ Scholaſticæ, and Lipomannus, but it is plaine, that this name was given him here, becauſe he is called by it, before the next apparition both Chap. 33. and Chap. 34. Queſt. Rupertus.

Laſtly, it may be demanded, why he was called Jacob moſt commonly after this, ſeeing it is ſaid, thou ſhalt no more be called Jacob? Anſ. The meaning is not, that he ſhould alwayes after be conſtantly called by this name only, but he ſhould have the thing ſet forth by this name, viz. ſuch power, that none ſhould be able to do him hurt. Some ſay that the meaning is, he ſhould be called not only Jacob, but Iſrael, but it is not ſaid ſo, but the one is taken away, that the other may ſtand. And it is not unuſuall to ſay, that one ſhould be called by ſuch a name, as he is not ſo oft called by afterwards, for the thing in him ſet forth by the name. So our Lord Jeſus is named Emanuel, Counſeller, &c. but had not uſually theſe appellations, but Jeſus or Chriſt. Queſt.

Then Jacob asked him his name: and he ſaid, Why doſt thou inquire after my name? and he bleſſed him there. In the vulgar Latine it is, Why doſt thou inquire after my name, which is wonderfull? Verſe 29.

But this addition is neither in the Hebrew nor Greek Copies here, but Judg. 13. 18. from whence it is likely, that it was taken and put in this place. But why did Jacob aske him his name, conſidering that he knew him to be an Angel of God, and therefore required his bleſſing? To this Calvin anſwereth, that he did it out of a deſire of atteining a more cleare knowledge of him, of whom yet he had only ſome obſcure knowledge, and for his denying to tell his name, he ſaith, that it was becauſe God would not yet ſo clearly manifeſt himſelfe, but reſerved this knowledge, till the coming of Chriſt, when the light, that was before only as it were in the morning, brake out as the perfect day-light. Toſtatus ſaith, that he denyed to tell him his name, becauſe Angels have not names like men, whereby they know one another, but are knowne one to another by their ſubſtance, and when any of them is called by a name, it is in regard of his office and miniſtery, about which he is imployed. But this ſeemeth not to be the true reaſon, becauſe at other times Angels have told their names, nor that of Calvin, becauſe to Moſes, who was long before Chriſts time, God told his name: wherefore I hold rather, that he denyeth to tell him his name, giving him a kinde of check for asking, becauſe this was but a curious queſtion for him to make at this time. And therefore it is, as if he had ſaid, Let it ſuffice, that thou art bleſſed by me, which is the thing, that will do thee good indeed, but as for knowing my name, this not being materiall againſt thy incounter with Eſau, but rather a queſtion moved to ſatisfie thy curious minde, I would not have thee to inſiſt upon it. So likewiſe Ferus, who will have the rejection of this Quere like that of Jeſus to his Diſciples, when they asked, Lord, wilt thou now reſtore the Kingdome to Iſrael? It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons. His bleſſing Queſt. Calvin. Toſtatus. Ferus. Acts 1.

of

of him here further mentioned is not expreſſed, in what words, but it is likely, that it was with Lordſhip over his Brother, increaſe of poſterity and riches in Cannan, as at other times.

Verſe 30. And Jacob called the name of that place Peniel, for I have ſeene God face to face, and my life is preſerved.

For the name given to the place, it is taken from the face of God, the ſight whereof becauſe it was granted to Jacob, he greatly gloried therein, and in way of gratitude ſetteth up a monument hereof to remaine to poſterity by naming that place ſo. But how could he ſay, that he ſaw God face to face, when as the Lord ſaith, No man ſhall ſee my face, and live? To this Tho. Aquinas anſwereth, that the ſeeing of God, or of his Angel, in ſome repreſentation outwardly made, is called a ſeeing of him face to face, although he ſaw not his eſſence, and this was a kinde of eminency of ſeeing God after the manner of Prophets. He may alſo be ſaid to have ſeen God face to face, who heareth him ſpeaking, as preſent, and not by a Miniſter, as abſent; for thus Moſes telleth the Iſraelites, who he ſaith, ſaw no ſimilitude, Deut.4. that God had ſpoken to them face to face. For the words added, and my life is preſerved, this is ſpoken, becauſe it was a common received opinion, that if any man did ſee God, he ſhould forthwith dye, which made Gideon, when he had ſeen an Angel, ſo afraid, and Manoah. For who can beare Gods preſence, before whom goeth a devouring fire, and the Mountaines are rent, and the whole earth trembleth?

Queſt. Exod.33.20. Th.Aquin.part. 1.*qu.*12.artic. 11.

Deut.4.12.

Judg.6. Judg.13. Muſculus.

Verſe 31. And as Jacob paſſed from Peniel, the ſunne roſe upon him, and he halted, &c.

This halting Calvin thinketh was without paine, and that it continued to his dying day: but ſome, that it ceaſed againe, before he met with Eſau. And Calvin attributeth it to ſuperſtition, that the Iſraelites ate not after this of the ſinew upon the hollow of the thigh: but Ferus to piety, as they that would by this obſervation continue the memory of the great favour ſhewed unto them in their Father Jacob, to whom this divine viſion and bleſſing and change of his name was vouchſafed, when his thigh was touched, and he was thereupon made lame. And to this do I rather ſubſcribe, it being the commendation of thoſe times, that upon any notable event, they would ſtill erect ſome Monument thereof, to ſhew their thankfulneſſe unto God, they having alſo great need of ſuch externall remembrances, the Church being then in the very infancy, and ſo ſuch as had need to be taught by ſignes; the care of the Jewes therefore about abſteining from this ſinew-eating in any beaſt was ſo great, that if any man ate thereof, he was beaten with 40 ſtripes. And to provide againſt it, they cut out the ſinew of every beaſt, which they killed, and the branches underneath, and the Muſcle wherein it was. Talmud. Babyl. and Maimony.

Calvin. Pererius.

Verſe 32. Ferus.

The Myſtery. For the myſtery of this place, ſomewhat hath been ſaid already out of Calvin and Muſculus, unto which another Allegory made by Auguſtine may be added. For he ſaith, that Jacob here figureth out the Jewes, the Angel Chriſt, with whom the Jewes wreſtled, and by his giving way unto them prevailed, when they crucified him; for if he had would, they could not have had that power over him. And as the Angel made one leg of Iacob lame the other remaining whole, ſo Chriſt laid a judgement upon the Jewiſh Nation in part, that it ſhrunk from him through infidelity, but part believed, and ſhrunk not. And as the ſame Iacob was bleſſed and lame, ſo the Jewes were bleſſed and craved Chriſts bleſſing in the part believing, but were curſed on the part unbelieving. And the Angels willing Jacob to let him go in the morning did ſet forth Chriſts riſing in the morning, when the women held his feet, but he forbad them, telling them, that he would go to his Father. And Gregory ſaith, that hereby was figured out a contemplative life, which whoſo leadeth, atteineth to heavenly knowledge, thus overcomming the angel, as it were: but then his thigh is touched and withereth, that is, his concupiſcence Auguſt. lib. 16. *de Civit.c.*39.

*Gregor.Moral. lib.*4. in Job. Omnis qui uno pede claudicat, illo ſolo pede nititur, quem ſa- concupiscence is dryed up and taken avvay, so that he standeth no more after that, but upon one foot, holding up the other, that is, being suspended from carnall things, he setteth his minde only upon heavenly. For this is the effect of his Allegory set forth in more words. Let the reader consider, and vvisely make use of these mysticall applications.

num habet, sic is, cui jam desiderium terrenum ære factum fuit, in solo pede amoris Dei se sustinet, quia sedem amoris sæculi, quem ponere in terra consueverat, jam à terra suspensum portat.

CHAP. XXXIII.

IN this Chapter Jacob is said to have seen Esau with his 400 men comming towards him, and then he divideth the women with their Children, placing the Maid-servants first, then Leah, and lastly Rachel with Joseph; that being thus divided, if some were destroyed, some yet might escape. But why is Joseph placed last, and most out of danger, and not Judah, of whom he afterwards saith, that Shiloh should come? Ans. Because he loved Joseph most, not knowing, as is most probable at that time, the prelage touching Judah, but having that afterwards revealed unto him.

Verse 1, 2. Calvin.

Quest.

Then Jacob placeth himself before them all, as a true Father and Husband, that if any violence should be offered, it might be offered first to his person, they being suffered to escape, and to reconcile the favour of Esau the more unto him, he boweth himselfe, as he went towards him seven times to the ground. Whereas Calvin will have this done to God, and not to Esau, it is most improbable. The salutations used to great men in those parts were farre more reverent and ceremonious, then are used elsewhere, as Calvin first noteth, and therefore Jacob doth here accordingly, bowing himselfe in the most lowly manner to the ground, as Nathan did once unto David, another kinde of reverent salutation is by bowing downe with the head to kisse the hand, of which Pliny writeth, and to which it is alluded, Psalm. 2. Kisse the Son, lest he be angry; and lastly, by bowing the knee in prayer, as Psal. 95. and so the servants of the Idol Baal are described, as bowing the knee to Baal, and kissing him, that is, either hand or foot, as proud Emperours and Popes of Rome would be saluted since. Wt read not of any such bowing on Esau his part to Jacob: and moreover, Jacob calleth him his Lord. Here there may seeme to have been none effect of the birth-right conferred upon Iacob, but contrariwise. The solution is, that the time was not yet come, and in the meane season necessity requiring it, for Iacob to give externall reverence to Esau, did not infringe his secret right to that, which was more spirituall and inward, then outward and temporall. Esau seeing Iacob, hasteneth unto him, and imbraceth him, and weepeth. See how God can turne the heart of any man at his pleasure, that of an enemy he shall suddenly become a friend.

Verse 3. Musculus.

1 Kings 1.

Plin. lib. 26. c. 2.

1 Kings 19.

Verse 4. Note.

After their meeting and imbracing thus, the women and children come on, and do reverence: Then Esau asking of the flockes and droves, which he met, Jacob saith, that it was a present sent to him, that he might finde favour in his eyes, aud he refusing, urgeth him to take it, saying, I have seen thy face, as if I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me. Whereas Iacob may seeme herein not to have spoken truly, and to have derogated from God, in comparing so wicked a man unto him, for it is probable, that if he had spoken his conscience, he must have said, that he would most gladly have shunned meeting with him. Calvin answereth, that being reconciled he could not but be most joyfull of this meeting, and that God having thus wrought upon Esau he was, as it were, an Image of his grace and goodnesse, and therefore such an expression might well be made, to shew how gratefull his presence was to Iacob, this being an Hebraisme to expresse exceeding great joy, for a thing most pleasing. The Chaldee Paraphrast hath it, as if I had seene the face of a Prince. Saint Augustine, as if one

Verse 5, 6, 7, Verse 8, 9,

Verse 10.

Calvin.

Auguſt.105.in Gen.

Verſe 11.

Verſe 12,13

Verſe 14.

Queſt.

Auguſt.qu.106. in Gen.

Calvin.

ſhould ſee the face of a God ſo called (for there are called gods many, and Lords many,) but not of the true God, becauſe in the Greek θεῦ is put without an Article, ὡς πρόσωπον θεῦ, and not τοῦ θεοῦ, as it never is, when the true God is ſpoken of. But I reſt in the former. I have all things, that is, I want nothing, but have great abundance. Eſau then offereth to take Jacob a long with him, but he excuſeth himſelfe for ſo doing, willing him to go before, and promiſing to come ſoftly after unto him to Mount Seir, wherein he may ſeem not to have ſpoken truly, for that he had no purpoſe to go thither. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that he had a purpoſe to go then, but changed his purpoſe afterwards. But Calvin ſaith, that he diſſembled herein, which he ought not to have done. The truth is, he was unwilling to live neare Eſau, as being one of whoſe minde he was uncertaine, and therefore he thought it not ſafe to commit himſelfe and his unto him, although he found him loving and friendly for the preſent. For which cauſe he deſired to be left unto himſelfe, meaning haply to go afterwards and viſit him at Mount Seir, when he had ſettled his company once in Canaan, as one friend viſiteth another, and ſo to returne home againe And ſo it is likely, that he did, although Moſes who writeth not all things, hath not ſet it downe. His meaning could not be with all that he had to come to Eſau, for they were ſo great in ſubſtance, that they could not both dwell together. And thus I think it fit rather to juſtifie Jacob, then lightly to lay the imputation of lying upon him.

Verſe 15,16

Eſau then offering to leave ſome of his company with Jacob, he refuſeth, and ſo Eſau returneth to Seir; But Jacob went to Succoth, and built him an houſe, &c.

Verſe 17.

This place obteined now the name of Succoth, becauſe Iacob built and made Tents there for his Cattel; the word ſignifying Tents or Coverings. He had pitched his Tents elſwhere before, but ſtayed not ſo long, and therefore not any other but this place is ſingularly thus called, but there was a place in Egypt thus called alſo afterwards, Numb 33. 5. In naming this place thus, it is intimated, that he meant not to make any fixed aboad there. Succoth was but two miles from Peniel.

Verſe 18.

And Jacob came to Salem the City of Shechem in the Land of Canaan, &c. Here becauſe Jeruſalem is commonly held to be the City Salem, which was farre diſtant from Shechem, the word Salem is by many taken not for a proper name, but for an appellative, ſignifying ſafe: So the Chaldee Paraphraſt and the Hebrews ſay, that when Iacob had been a yeare and a halfe at Succoth, finding it inconvenient to dwell in, he removed to Sichem 8 miles off, and came ſafe thither, becauſe he was now healed againe of his lameneſſe. But Ierome contrariwiſe ſaith, that Salem is the name of a City, otherwiſe called Shechem, from Shechem the Lord thereof, of which name we may read alſo, *Ioh.*3.23. as being neare to Enon and Jordan, where John Baptized. And here he ſaith Melchiſedeck was King, and that it is an errour to hold, that Jeruſalem was the ſame with Salem: but for this ſee ſomewhat before, Gen. 28.10. Toſtatus ſubſcribeth to Jerome, and I ſee no reaſon, but we all ſhould, ſeeing it is not unuſuall for a place being called by one name more anciently, in time to obteine another. Into this City Jacob entreth not, but pitcheth nigh unto it, and buyeth a part of a field for 100 pieces of Silver, and buildeth an Altar there. This is the place ſpoken of, John 4.5. being called Sichar, where Jacobs well was. For 100 pieces of Silver, the Septuagint, Pagnin, and the vulgar Latine have it for 100 Lambs, and ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt. The word is קשיטה, of doubtfull ſignification, being ſometime tranſlated Lambs or Sheep, and ſometime pieces of money, for ſo the Arabians call it, as ſaith Muſculus. But why did Jacob make this purchaſe, and not ſtay till that God gave him that whole Land, as he had promiſed, ſeeing Abraham and Iſaac would not buy any thing there? Anſ. Haply he could not quietly dwel there without a price, and being deſirous to continue in that place, and to build an Altar to the Lord, that he might the more freely do it, he purchaſed this Cald.Paraphr. Hebræi.

Hieron. Epiſt. 126. ad Evagr. Toſtatus.

Verſe 19,20.

Muſculus.

Queſt.

Calvin.

this plot, as Abram had done before a place for buriall. He is said to have bought it of the sons of Hamor, the father of Shechem, who is so called, because Shechem was the eldest, and this belonged to his younger sonnes. The building of an altar here shewed his gratitude to God for his benefits, and it was in effect a setting up of the publick worship and service od God, as Abraham had done before, *Gen.*12.7. and Isaac, *Gen.*26.25. that his family might have a place to resort unto. And he called it El Elohe Israel: the mighty God of Israel, that is a memoriall of him and of his power, that looking upon it, he might be put in minde, that by his strength and power he had been delivered from all dangers. Something like to this we may read of, Exod. 17.15. and *Ezech.*48.35.

CHAP. XXXIV.

IN this chapter is set forth another great affliction, wherewith Jacob was exercised again, after that he had long lived about Salem, viz. the ravishing of his daughter, Dinah by Shechem, and the horrible murther committed thereupon by his sonnes, putting him into great danger of the peoples rising up against him, that dwelt in those parts round about. The time when these things were done, could not be, but after divers years of his dwelling there, because the eldest of his sonnes was but twelve years old at his coming into Canaan, whereas now they must needs be men grown, at the least some of them, and of man-like courage, or else they could never have been able to undergo such an enterprize. Eusebius out of Alexander Polyhistor, saith, that Dinah was now of the age of 10 years, and Simeon 21, and that Jacob had lived there at this time 10 years. But this cannot be true, because one of 10 years old is not marriageable, as she was: and it is contradictory in it selfe, because her father having lived 10 years in this place, and she being born long before his coming from Padan-Aram, must needs be much above 10. The Hebrews therefore reckon more rightly, who say that all the children of Jacob were born six years before his coming from Padan-Aram; and therefore that this Dinah was then 6, and this happening 10 years after, at this time she was 16. For this is consonant to the History of Moses, who telleth first of the birth of Dinah, and of Joseph, and then sheweth that Jacob served Laban still 6 years. So that she was 6 years old at the least, if not 7 at the time of his departing thence, and Joseph 6, after which if one year and a halfe be allowed for his staying at Succoth, and 10 at this Salem, she must needs be now above 17 or 18. And more she could not be, because Joseph, who was born not long after her, was but 17, Gen. 37.2. and then Simeon was not above 22 or 23. Having thus guessed at the age of Dinah, and at the time, after Jacobs coming to dwell at Salem, when this happened, viz. 8 years and a half, for as was shewed before, he dwelt a year and half at Succoth, which being put to this number make up 10, we will now consider the history particularly. Dinah went out to see the daughters of the land. This, as Josephus saith, was done upon a festivall day of the Shechemites, which they celebrated with great riot and concourse of people; for then Dinah out of her curiosity went into the City, to see the fashions of the women there. The Septuagint trannslate it, καταμαθεῖν, to learn of them in what manner they attired themselves. Musculus saith, that some have held, that she went forth oftner. But I had rather hear Josephus, then conjectures, and at a festivall time women were most curious in adorning themselves, and therefore it is most probable that she would go out to see them then. This was the ground of all the wickednesse ensuing, and therefore parents ought hereby to take warning to keep in their daughters, and not to suffer them idly to gad abroad, to see and to be seen.

Dinah coming thus into the City, is taken by Shechem and ravished, and Euseb.de præparat. Evang. lib.9.cap.ult.

In Sedar Olam Rabba.

Verse 1.

Joseph.lib.1.de Antiqu.

Musculus.

Note.

Verse 2,3.

for the great love which he bare unto her, he ſpake kindely to her, as deſiring to have her for his wife. He dealeth prepoſterouſly, firſt offering ſo great an abuſe, and then ſeeking to win her love, which he ought to have done firſt, coming in the way of marriage. But inordinate luſt made him blinde, and ſo without reaſon like a brute beaſt to ruſh into this ſin, and when he ſaw her full of ſorrow for the injury offered, he ſought to draw her by ſpeaking things pleaſing unto her: in the Hebrew it is, he ſpake to her heart. Gregory draweth this to an excellent allegory thus; As Dinah, ſo the minde of man wandreth into the City of Shechem, when as neglecting his own ſtudies, he is carried to look after this or that vanity, then the Devil like Shechem, finding him corrupteth him, and if he with Dinah, conſidering what hath been done unto him to his ignominy and hazzard, be made to weep and to grieve therefore at any time, then the Devil to remove this grief again from his minde, uſeth flattering ſpeeches to him, ſaying, it is nothing which he hath done, others have done worſe, God is mercifull, and he may yet have time enough to repent: whereby he is ſuſpended from repentance, not being any longer ſad for his wickedneſſe, and ſo he cometh to be overwhelmed with pangs, who now joyeth in ſins.

Gregor. paſtor. Curæ part. 3. Dinah ut mulieres extraneæ regionis videat, egreditur, cùm mens ſua ſtudia negligens actiones alienas curans extra habitum, atque ordinem proprium vagatur.

Then Shechem ſpeaketh to his father, and his father to Iacob, who hearing of this raviſhment held his peace, as being greatly grieved for it, till his ſons were come, who were then in the field with their cattel. So that Iacob grieved invvardly, but uttered nothing outvvardly to Hamor, neither vvould treat about a marriage till his ſonnes return home: vvhen they vvere come, Hamor intreateth for his ſonne, making offer upon this condition of free trading in his countrey, and his ſonne Shechem added, that he vvould give vvhatſoever dovvry and gifts they ſhould deſire. But the ſonnes of Iacob very deceitfully propound a condition of circumciſing every male amongſt them, promiſing hereupon to be vvilling vvith the match. And this by the perſvvaſion of Hamor, the father, and Shechem the ſonne is forthvvith done. Touching Shechems offer of dovvry and gifts, the dovvry is that vvhich the man giveth to the vvoman, and is by the Lord appointed to be given, although he marrieth her not, vvhen he hath once deflovvered her, in vvay of recompence for her Virginity loſt: the gifts vvere ſuch as men uſed to give to the parents and brethren of the vvoman married, as vvhen Iſaac took Rebecca. Touching the circumciſion of the Shechemites, the Hebrevvs ſay, that Iacobs ſonnes propounded this out of zeal, deſiring their converſion from idolatry to the true God, neither would they have killed them, but that they treacherouſly intended to deprive them of their goods. But this is moſt falſe and frivolous, for the text ſaith, that they ſpake deceitfully to them, ſo that they intended this miſchief at the firſt. They were full of rage for the indignity offered to their ſiſter, and therefore machinated a revenge not onely upon Shechem, but upon all the men of his city. And accordingly the third day, when they were ſore, Simeon and Levi, taking their ſwords with them went into the city, and ſlew all the males of the city, &c. Joſephus relateth this ſtory otherwiſe, viz. that theſe two brethren of Dinah hearing of the deflowering of their ſiſter, conſulted to enter upon the city in the night of their feſtivall day, making no mention of their propounding circumciſion, and accordingly entred, and ſlew them being aſleep. But this is falſe, and it is to be thought, that Joſephus did purpoſely conceal that of their circumciſing, becauſe it tended ſo greatly to the diſcredit of their Anceſtours. But why did they come upon the third day? Anſw. Becauſe as the text ſaith, they were then ſore, that is, by experience it was obſerved, that the third day after cutting is the greateſt ſoreneſſe of any part of the body, they were hereby held as it were by fetters, that they could not ſtir to help themſelves. And this, as Hypocrates ſaith, is the caſe of all wounds, the third and fourth day breed the greateſt exacerbations, becauſe of the flux of ſharp humours to that part at this time. Whereas Simeon and Levi are ſaid to have entred the city; Luther thinketh that they en-

Verſe 4,5,6,
Verſe 7,8,9,
Verſe 10, 11
Verſe 12,13
Verſe 14,15

Verſe 16,17 &c to V.24.

Exo.22.16,17.

Gen.24.53.

Hebræi.

Verſe 25.

Joſeph.

Queſt.

Hypocrat.lib.de fracturis.

Luther.

entered not alone, but as Captains of thoſe, whom they led with them out of their fathers family, which was great. And Muſculus ſaith, that theſe two are ſpoken of, becauſe moſt earneſt and forward in taking revenge. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that they went alone, and might well do ſo, becauſe the Shechemites were wounded and unable themſelves. But I think rather, that they went firſt with ſome ſmall retinue of ſervants, and then the other ſons of Iacob came with the reſt to drive away the prey. Touching the fact of Iacobs ſonnes here in deſtroying an whole city for the fault of one man; a great queſtion is made, whether it were lawfull or not? For much is ſaid by ſome for the juſtification of it, as Thomas Anglicus ſheweth, as namely, that the Shechemites moſt probably were guilty, and conſenting to the ſin of Shechem, becauſe otherwiſe they would not doubtleſſe have raged ſo againſt them all: again, Iacobs ſonnes did not onely ſlay the men, but took their cattel and women for a prey, neither did Iacob, that we read, make them reſtore them again, which he would doubtleſſe have done, had it not been a juſt revenge. Moreover, Iacob ſpeaking afterwards of the Shechemites field, which he gave to Ioſeph, calleth it that which he took out of the hands of the Amorites with his ſword, and with his bow, as if with his allowance this invaſion had been made, and victory obteined.

Muſculus.

Tho. Anglicus.

Gen. 48. 22.

Laſtly, Iudith an holy woman in praying, when ſhe went to deceive Olofernes, ſaid, O God of my father Simeon, who gaveſt him a ſword to take vengeance on ſtrangers, and again, thou gaveſt their Rulers to be ſlain, ſo that they dyed their bed in blood, being deceived, and gaveſt their ſubſtance for a prey to thy children, who were moved with thy zeal, &c. whereby ſhe altogether juſtifieth them, and ſpeaketh of them, rather as worthy of all praiſe, and of no blame. And whereas Iacobs reproving of them for it, and afterwards diſ-inheriting them therefore, and appointing Iudah for his heire, may ſeem to argue the contrary; it is anſwered, that Iacob ſpake ſo, not as condemning the fact, but propheticall, becauſe of Levi ſhould come the Prieſts, and of Simeon the Scribes for the moſt part, who ſhould be the chief in putting to death our Lord and Saviour Chriſt. And this he ſaith he found in an Apochryphall book, called the teſtament of the 12 Patriarchs, wherein Simeon and Levi are praiſed for this fact, as moſt zealous againſt ſinne. And thus far the ſaid Thomas Anglicus ſpeaketh in relating the arguments of ſome, who juſtifie Simeon and Levi. Then he addeth that there is another opinion of Ricardus, that they were moved firſt by zeal againſt ſinne, but afterwards were carried by a furious kinde of force to exceed meaſure in taking revenge. They were juſtly diſpleaſed with that monſtrous wickedneſſe, neither could the circumciſion received pacifie them, as which they conceived was not done for God, but for Dinah. So that this fact vvas in ſome part juſt, and in part raſh and inordinate, and therefore vvorthy to be by Iacob reproved. It cannot then be excuſed as free from ſin, yet God that ſavv into the hearts of the Shechemites, that in their circumciſion, they intended not religion, but the ſatisfying of their concupiſcence and avarice, did juſtly move Iacobs ſonnes to take this revenge upon them, even after that propoſition of circumciſion diſſemblingly made, as the Hebrevvs in diſſimulation borrovved treaſure of the Egyptians, as if they vvould reſtore it again, but never meant it, and as Iudith made a ſhevv of marrying Holofernes, that ſhe might thus get an opportunity to kill him. Laſtly, he ſaith, that others hold the ſonnes of Iacob to have ſinned greatly herein. 1 By diſſimulation in a ſacrilegious manner, uſing the ſacred rite of circumciſion, to hide and colour it over. 2 By immoderate fury and rage, vvherevvith they vvere carried to kill not onely the guilty, but all the people, and that at ſuch a time, as vvhen they vvere already full of pain and ſmart, and ſo to be pitied. To the ſecond of theſe opinions yieldeth Thomas Anglicus and Carthuſianus, and Author ſcholaſticæ hiſtoriæ. But to the third ſubſcribeth Calvin, and generally all other Expoſitours inferring the free grace of God to the Jevviſh Nation, in that he took the ſtock of ſuch a bloody and ſacrilegious perſon, as Levi vvas, to

Gen. 49.

Carthuſian.
Author Schol. Hiſtor.
Calvin.

to be his Prieſts, that they might not be inſolent in regard of their parentage, and that Moſes who wrote this, regarded not himſelf and his own credit, for he came of Levi, but the ſetting forth of Gods mercy to his praiſe and glory. I cannot for my own part yield to them, that are for the juſtifying of this fact, ſo much as in part, and much leſſe to thoſe that ſtand to defend it; becauſe although they began in zeal, yet this was eft-ſoones turned into unjuſt rage, to ſlay promiſcuouſly the guilty and the innocent, and that by expoſing the holy inſtitution of circumciſion to the danger of contempt, by uſing it as a ſtale for their own bloody ends; & therefore Iacob ſharply reproved them for it, *v.*30. & forgetteth not to ſpeak of it, as a thing odious to him, when he was ready to depart out of this life. For the arguments uſed, there is moſt force in that of Iacobs ſpeech, in ſaying that he took this field from the Amorites with his ſword and his bow. But it is anſwered, that although the fact of his ſonnes were wicked and by him deteſted, yet there being none remaining to inherit this ground after this deſtruction made by his forces, although they went forth againſt his will, he might well ſpeake of it, as his own, being by the divine providence caſt upon him, as ſubdued by the force of his armes, and ſo diſpoſe of it accordingly. Touching the ſaying of Iudith, happily ſhe took this fact without the circumſtance of propounding the condition of circumciſion, as Ioſephus did, and ſo was induced to think better of it, then it was worthy, or ſhe looked onely at the judgement of God herein brought upon the Shechemites for ſo heinous an offence, perpetrated amongſt them; for although they were carried with rage, yet God wrought by them for the puniſhing of a moſt wicked Prince, in deſtroying both him and his people. For the guiltineſſe of the men of Shechem, it was a thing that they could not but be ignorant of, whether they favoured Shechem in that attempt or no, and as for reſtitution-making, there were none remaining to reſtore the prey unto again. Wherefore theſe reaſons being anſwerd, that onely muſt needs ſtand, which condemneth this fact as moſt horrible and wicked.

Gen.49.5,6.

Note.

1 They dealt inſolently, to go about this revenge, their father being unconſulted. 2 They dealt treacherouſly. 3 They abuſed the Sacrament of Circumciſion. 4 In taking revenge, they did altogether exceed meaſure. 5 They exerciſed cruelty towards men in paine and miſery, voluntarily brought to this for their friendſhips ſake. 6 They took in poſſeſſion their cattel and ſubſtance unjuſtly. 7 They took captive, and made ſlaves of their women and children. Yet a good uſe hereof may be made by us to deteſt whoredome, as producing ſo foule and fearfull effects; by the licentiouſneſſe of one, an whole city was brought to deſtruction. Maimony ſaith, that the men of Shechem were guilty of death, becauſe he committed a rape, and they ſaw and knew it, and did not judge him for it. So one Achan ſinned, & all the hoſt of Iſrael ſuffered for it, *Ioſh.*7. For all Nations are bound to puniſh malefactours, *Gen.*9.4.

Verſe 30.

When this was done, Iacob reproved his ſonnes Simeon and Levi, telling them, that they had troubled him, and made him to ſtinke, &c. his meaning is, that he was hereby brought to that paſſe, that the neighbouring people would no more indure him amongſt them, but caſt him out as a moſt ſtinking thing with deteſtation, forſomuch as he was permitted to dwell by the Shechemites, as a ſtranger, and now by his ſonnes they had been thus requited.

Calvin.

Calvin maketh a queſtion here, why he did not rather tell them of the offence, that it was againſt God, and of the ſcandall that would come upon his religion hereby, but onely of the bodily danger, into vvhich they vvere brought? and anſwereth, that they vvere ſtupified vvith fury, and therefore it vvas fitteſt to ſpeak of that, vvhereby they might be moſt moved, deferring the other till ſome more fit time: and happily Moſes delivereth not all, but one part of his ſpeech onely, vvhich vvas moſt apt to vvork upon them. Yet they made none other anſvver, but ſtoutly expoſtulate vvith their father, Should he abuſe our ſiſter as an whore? vvhereby they adde unto their ſinne obſtinacy and impenitency, in that they defend it vvith ſuch malipertneſſe. And this may ſeem seem to be noted in that the first letter of זונה an Whore, is written extraordinarily great.

CHAP. XXXV.

THen God commanded Jacob to go and dwell at Bethel, and there to set up an Altar, he therefore purgeth his house from Idols, and telleth his family of this his remove, and taketh the Idols and ear-rings, and hideth them under an Oake in Shechem. Bethel was 28 miles from Salem or Shechem. Verse 1,2, Verse 3,4.

Jacob was much troubled and feared greatly, without doubt, after that horrible destruction made by his sonnes, because of the neighbouring people, who, he might well think, would be revenged upon him therefore, when the report of it should come to their eares. To ease him then of this trouble the Lord directeth him what to do for his safety, viz. to go away from that place to Bethel. And here Ferus noteth well, that it was a fault in Jacob, that he had deferred going to Bethel thus long, when as he had before vowed, that he would make Bethel Gods house at his returne from Padan-Aram, and pay unto him the Tithe of all that he had. And so it is, as if he had said, These troubles are justly come upon thee (O Jacob) for thou art here out of thy place, thou oughtest by thy vow long ago to have gone to Bethel, wherefore if thou wouldest be out of danger, now go thither, and build an Altar there, and make it Gods house by sacrificing, praising of God, and praying there unto him. And going to Bethel at this time was the fittest meanes of comfort for him, that could be, because, when he fled from his Brother Esau before, God appeared there unto him and comforted him; so that the remembrance of the consolation past might well afford unto him new comfort for the present; and the building of an Altar commanded unto him at this time, being for praise and thanksgiving, was an intimation of coming thither in safety unto him, because by thus doing he should there praise God for his preservation. He might justly feare with all his company now to stirre any way, wherefore God thus assureth him, and so in greatest dangers he will be present to all that put their trust in him. Whereas it is said, Make there an Altar to the God that appeared unto thee, when thou fleddest from thy Brother Esau; Hilary noteth that the second person in the Trinity is hereby intimated, for God the Father speaketh of God the Sonne. And Augustine maketh a question, whether this mystery be here intimated, or it be a kinde of speech, whereby God is wont to speak thus of himselfe. There be some other places, wherein God speaketh in the third person of himselfe, as Ierem. 2.17. Thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, that led thee in the way, &c. whereby it may seem, that his meaning here is nothing else, but as if he had said, Go, build an Altar to me at Bethel. Touching Iacobs bidding of his houshold to put away the strange gods from amongst them; Josephus in relating this History saith, that God appeared unto him, when he was at rest, and bad him search his houshold, and then go and offer the sacrifice, which he had vowed at Bethel, and so to be of a good courage, and not to feare any thing. And accordingly Rupertus making a question, how Jacob knew now more then at any other time of these Idols, saith that God in the same vision might reveale it unto him, telling him, that he could not look to prevaile against his enemies, whilest an execrable thing was in his house, as afterwards was declared to Josuah touching Achan. But whereas Josephus will have these Idols to have been only those stolne by Rachel, which Iacob knew not of till this time, it appeareth, that more of his Family had Idols, because he biddeth them in the plural number to put away the strange gods from amongst them. And it is most probable, that living in an Idolatrous Countrey, in such a numerous family, divers might be infected, and it

Calvin.

Ferus.

Luther.

Calvin.

Note.

Hilar. lib. 4. de Trinit.

August quæst. 110. in Gen.

Verse 2.

Joseph. lib. 1. Antiqu.

Rupertus.

Jos. 7.

it may alſo be conjectured, that they had taken of the Idols of the Shechemites amongſt other ſpoiles at the deſtruction thereof.

Note. Note, that Jacob going about building an Altar to the Lord, firſt removeth things contrary unto him, and ſo muſt we do in offering our ſervice unto him, that it may be acceptable. And it is to be noted, that he bad put away not only Idols, but ear-rings, that is, Jewels, wherewith the Idols were adorned, to ſhew that all appurtenances of Idolatry muſt be put away, *Deut.*7.26. Deut. 12.2,3. Exod. 32.3,4. *Hoſ.*2.13. *Judg.*8.24. ſo Maimony of Idol. 1.7. Moreover Jacob biddeth his houſhold to cleanſe themſelves, and to change their apparel, that by their outward purity and putting other apparel upon them, they might ſhew their inward purity and change of their hearts from Idolatry to the pure ſervice of God. A like thing unto this was afterwards commanded, when the Iſraelites had defiled themſelves with the golden Calves, for they were bidden to lay aſide their beſt apparel. We may learne hereby, that ſinne defileth, and that he which liveth in ſin, is as one cloathed in filthy ragges, which muſt be put off, that he may be accepted before the Lord. Theſe outward ſignes were uſed not for any matter therein, but for ſignifications. The Rabbins gather from hence, that Idols in particular defile foure wayes. 1 By themſelves 2 By their miniſteriall Inſtruments. 3 By their oblations. 4 By the Wine poured into them: and they defile men and Veſſels by touching, Deut. 7.26. Eſa. 30.22. Pſ. 108.28. Deut. 32.28. *Maimony in Aboth. Hattumoth. Ch.*6. When Jacob had bidden them to put away their ſtrange gods which were in their hands, that is, in their power, or poſſeſſion, whereby was intimated their vanity, it is ſaid, that they gave them unto him, partly out of obedienee to him, and partly for feare of the danger, wherein they then were. And he hid them under an Oak, The word tranſlated Oake is Elah, which by ſome is tranſlated an Oak, by ſome a Terebinthus, a turpentine tree, but the word Alah, of which it cometh, ſignifieth to execrate, & therefore haply no kinde of tree in particular is ſet forth by it, but generally an execrable tree, ſuch as were wont to be planted in Groves, where they ſacrificed to Idols. An Oake in Hebrew is Alon. But why did they being bidden to put away their Idols, give them to Iacob and their ear-rings alſo? Anſ. Becauſe to give them into his power, that would provide, that Idolatry might no more be committed by them, was in effect to put them away, and it is likely that their ear-rings were enſignes of Idolatry, which they uſed in honour of their Idols, as the Papiſts do Crucifixes and Agnus Dei, &c. Rabanus ſaith, that theſe ear-rings were the Phylacteries of thoſe gods. But the greateſt queſtion is, why he did not burne but hide them? Anſ. The Law indeed afterwards made, commanded the burning and utter deſtroying of Idols, and accordingly the golden Calves were beaten in pieces, and the brazen Serpent: but Jacobs hiding of them was as much as the deſtroying of them otherwiſe. For he digged into the ground and there buried them, as is moſt probable, that they might never come to light any more. Toſtatus thinketh, that he made a great Pit, and having beaten them in pieces buried them therein. But Jacob, not having time now to do that execution upon theſe abominations, which ought to have been done, it is rather likely without ſtanding about their utter defacing, he brake them ſo, as he could do, with moſt expedition, and ſo buried them in the ground, in a place moſt fit for ſuch vanities, neither making uſe of the coſtly metall about them himſelfe, nor ſuffering others to do it for their benefit otherwiſe, becauſe the hatred of Idolatry ſhould be ſuch, as Luther hath it, that the matter where of idols have been made, ought not to be converted by the Saints of God to any other uſe, but to be utterly deſtroyed in deteſtation of that wickedneſſe, to which it hath been formerly uſed, and thus the Lord commandeth, Deut. 7. 25,26. The Author of the Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, that Rachel had before kept the idols ſtolne from her Father hidden under a Tree, and therefore he now likewiſe hideth them, that they might never come to light for idolatry againe, but

*Exod.*3.5,6. Note. Calvin. Queſt. Rabanus. Queſt. Deut.7.5. Toſtatus. Luther. Deut.7.25,26. Scholaſt.hiſtor.

but David found them out, and uſed the Gold and Silver thereof for the building of the Temple: but theſe things are moſt improbable, and vaine fictions. Calvin ſaith, that Jacob ſhewed his weakneſſe in that he did only hide and not deſtroy them, to prevent the evill, that might come by them afterwards, and that God left him to do thus weakly for his former negligence, yet he ſaith, he ſhewed, how he did abominate them by his burying of them in the ground. But for ſo much as God taxeth him not, farre be it from me to taxe ſo great piety. Calvin.

And the terrour of the Lord was upon the Cities round about them, that is, ſaith Chryſoſtome, ſo that they being but few were formidable to the multitudes round about, who before were formidable to them. They feared alſo with the Shechemites, that they ſhould have been all deſtroyed of them, God working thus in their hearts. And ſuch a feare he promiſed to work afterwards before his people in the Canaanites, Deut. 2. 25. and Rahab confeſſeth it to have been in the men of Jericho, and round about in all that Land, and Zarah, the King of the Ethiopians feared likewiſe before Aſa, and the Syrians before the beſieged Samaritans. If we feare God then, we ſhall not need to feare men of what power and number ſoever they be. Rupertus maketh a moſt excellent Allegorical application of al this thus: As Jacob going to Bethel purged his houſe from Idols ſo that all will come into Gods houſe, and be of his Church, muſt firſt renounce their old errours, and hold the true faith of one God. 2. As he bad them be cleane, ſo they muſt be cleanſed by Baptiſme. 3. As he bad them change their Garments, ſo they muſt walk in newneſſe of life. 4. As he hid the ear-rings of the Idols under a Turpentine-Tree, ſo they muſt hide under the Tree of Chriſts croſſe, the ornaments of falſe Doctrine, neat in words, but void of the ſenſe of truth, being content with the ſimplicity of the croſſe: for as the Turpentine-Tree yields moſt precious Roſin, ſo the vertue, which cometh from the croſſe is excellent. And who ſo is thus inſtructed, although before he feared his enemies coming againſt him, as Jacob did Eſau, yet now they ſhall feare him going from them, as theſe Nations did Jacob going away to Bethel. Verſe 5. Chryſoſt. hom. 59. in Gen. Jſ. 2. 2 Chron. 14. 2 Kings 7. An Allegory. Rupert. lib 8. in Gen. c. 12. Significant inaures falſæ doctrinæ phaleras, ſermone nitidas, ſed ſenſu veritatis vacuas, cujus nos fabuloſa dicacitas, cùm eſſemus gentes, ad ſimulachra muta, tanquam Syrenarum cantus pertrahebat.

Then Jacob came to Luz, called Bethel, and built an Altar unto God, &c Of the two names of this place ſee before, Gen. 28. 19. Here Deborah the Nurſe of Rebecca dyed, and was buried under an Oake, and the place was called Allon-Bacuth, the Oak of weeping. Of this Deborah no mention is made before in all Jacobs Traveles, but Gen. 24. 59. the Nurſe of Rebecca is ſaid to have been ſent with her when Abrahams ſervant carryed her away to be Iſaacs Wife: wherefore a queſtion is made here, when or how ſhe came to be in Jacobs retinue? The Hebrews anſwer, that Rebecca ſent her into Padan-Aram to call Jacob home, for ſhe had promiſed ſo to do at his departure thither, Gen. 27. 45. But this is improbable, becauſe no mention is made thereof, and the time ſet to ſend for Jacob was not yet come, viz. when Eſaus wrath was pacified towards him. Others therefore think, that ſhe followed him into that Countrey; and others, that Rebecca being dead, ſhe went thither, chooſing rather to live amongſt the Daughters of that Countrey, then of Canaan. But it is rather to be conjectured, that ſhe having come with Rebecca into Canaan returned againe to Padan-Aram ſoon after, but now through the love of Jacob her Nurſe-childes ſonne, being a ſervant of the true God, ſhe left her Countrey to go with him and his retinue into the holy Land, reſolving to live and to dye there. And therefore ſo honourable a mention is made of her, and ſo great lamentation was made at her death, when as touching the death of Rebecca, there is no mention made at all. The age of Deborah, when ſhe dyed, muſt needs be very great, for admit that ſhe were but 40, as ſhe could not be leſſe, when Rebecca went into Canaan, Iſaac lived with Rebecca after that 20 yeares, before Iacobs birth, and at this time Jacob could not be leſſe then 105, as appeareth by that which was ſaid before, and therefore her age was 165 at the leaſt. Rupertus Verſe 6, 7, Verſe 8. Queſt.

Rupertus lib.8. in Gen.c,13.

obſerving this, that the death of Rebecca is not ſpoken of, but of her Nurſe in this manner, ſaith, that this certainly is myſticall, and Corn is to be ſought under the Chaffe. Deborah ſignifieth a Bee which carryeth ſweet Honey in the mouth, and a ſting behinde, and therefore may well figure out the Law; which in the face thereof carryeth grace, but only that it is veiled to the Jews, and behinde a killing Letter, but Rebecca figureth out grace. And as Deborah, ſo the Law dyeth, when the Goſpel cometh, and is buried in the carnal part thereof under the wood of Chriſts Croſſe, the Jewes being without Altar and ſacrifice, by this meanes making great lamentation to this day.

Verſe 9,10, Verſe 11,12 Verſe 13.

After this God appeared againe to Jacob, and bleſſed him, and confirmed his name Iſrael unto him, and he for a memoriall of his, ſet up a Pillar of Stone, and poured a drink-offering thereon, and Oile, and called the place, where he ſpake unto him, Bethel. As at other times of heavineſſe, or diſtreſſe God had appeared unto Jacob, and ſpecially in this place, ſo now againe, Deborah being dead, in whoſe virtues it ſeemeth, that Jacob and his family took much comfort, but now having loſt her, he was very heavy, the Lord appeared againe to comfort him. Touching his twice impoſing of the ſame name upon him, I have already ſpoken, *Chap.*32. That was done in another place, and not hitherto in this houſe of God, where God thinketh good to propound all conſolations to his ſervants, and therefore he repeateth the ſame bleſſing here the ſecond time, adding the promiſes againe made, *Chap.*28, and to Abraham before, *Ch.*17.6. and *Ch.*22.17. where the expoſition of the words may be ſought. Then God aſcended, that is, vaniſhed out of the ſight of Jacob, for otherwiſe he neither aſcendeth nor deſcendeth, becauſe he continually filleth all places with his preſence. Touching Jacobs erecting of a Pillar, and calling the name of the place Bethel, Vatablus readeth it, he had erected, and had called, as if a commemoration were only made of that which had been done before. But it is more likely, that having ſet up one Pillar before, he now ſet up another, and called another part of that place alſo Bethel, where this was ſet up, or the firſt Pillar in his being abſent ſo long a time might be demoliſhed, wherefore he ſetteth up another, and poureth Wine and Oile upon it in the ſame place, calling it againe Bethel. Touching this ceremony ſee before, *Ch.*28. One, becauſe another, Pillar is here ſaid to be ſet up, and the place is called Bethel, ſaith, that this place, where God appeared now to Iacob, was Jeruſalem, becauſe the former Bethel is not named, but with this addition it was called in times paſt Luz, which is left out here. But this is a weak argument, againſt which this maketh, that Iacob is not ſaid before this to have removed to any other place.

Vatablus.

Toſtatus.

Verſe 16.

And they journeyed from Bethel, and there was but a little way to come to Ephratha, &c. The word tranſlated a little way, in the Hebrew is כברת-הארץ, of Muſculus.

uncertaine ſignification: for either it may be taken, as comming of כבר Cribrare, and ſo ſignifie a Tillage of ground, which may be ſo called, becauſe it falleth ſmall, as if it had gone through a ſieve, or of כ, as it were, and ברת to eate, from whence cometh Berith, Cibus, and then it may be properly rendered, as it were a feeding of ground, that is, ſo much ground as a man might go, before he eateth, or rather I think a paſture of ground, ſo

Septuagint.

much, as they uſed to keep an Herd or Flock upon, is meant. The Septuagint both put in a name, that is not in the Hebrew he faſtened his Tent by the Tower Gader, and tranſlate this word as a proper name, when he came neare Caphratha, as he went to Ephratha but of the Tower of Edar, which haply they meant, it is not ſpoken of til *v.*21. Chryſoſtome, when he came near to enter into Ephratha. The vulgar Latine, He came in the Spring-time to the Land that leadeth to Ephratha, of which Chryſoſt.

Hieron.

Jerome rendreth this reaſon: the words properly ſignifie, in an elect time of the earth, as he entred Ephratha, and this is the ſpring-time, becauſe they that chooſe and gather flowers in the fields, as they go. Eugubinus ſaith, that כברת may be derived of כ Circa, and רבת, Eugubinus.

viriditatem, cùm terra paſtum præbet, Oleaſter ſaith, that כבר is a radix of it ſelfe ſelfe, and ſignifieth multum, and he taketh theſe words as a reaſon, why Rachel was not buried in the Towne, but out of it, becauſe there was much ground to paſſe, before they could come there. But Borcardus contrariwiſe ſaith, that Rachels Sepulcher was out of the City of Bethlehem, as a man goeth to Hebron, one bowe-ſhoot.

Oleaſter. Borcard. deſcript. terr. ſanctæ, pt. 1. c. 7.

And Rachel travailed, and ſhe had hard labour. Ariſtotle rendreth this as a reaſon, why women are ſo ſickly when they are with childe, and have ſuch hard labour, becauſe they are idle and ſit ſtill, whereby excrements are increaſed, of which they are very full, as appeareth by their monethly flowers, which ceaſing then, their bodies do yet more and more abound herewith. For beaſts, becauſe of their continuall motion, bring forth with more facility; and in thoſe Countreys, where women are uſed to more labour, they alſo bring forth with leſſe paine, and when the time cometh, by reaſon of their daily action, they can the better hold their ſpirit, which furthereth much the facility of bringing forth, and if any living an idle life bringeth forth with leſſe paine, it is becauſe there are fewer excrements in their body, which go all to the nouriſhment of the childe. Rachel having brought forth a Son, when ſhe was now ready to dye, called his name Benoni, but Jacob, Benjamin. Benoni ſignifieth the ſonne of my ſorrow, whereby it appeareth, that ſhe was ſo overcome with the ſenſe of her paine, that ſhe had no joy of bearing this ſonne; but Iacob to correct this as a fault, calleth him Benjamin, the ſon of a right hand, that is, moſt deare and eſteemed of, as the right hand is more eſteemed of then the left, and therewith we imbrace our friends. Names are oftentimes ominous, and therefore ſuch as may portend good, are preferred by all men, and evil names are avoided, and for this cauſe Iacob changed his Sonnes name, leſt hereby his griefe for the loſſe of his deare Wife ſhould daily be renewed. When the Mother dieth in bringing forth, the ſonne oftentimes, as the Romans were wont to obſerve, was moſt fortunate; ſo Scipio African: and Ceſar. Rachels dying is deſcribed thus, v. 18. As her Soule was departing from her, to ſhew, that death is nothing elſe but a departing of the ſoule from the body, ſo alſo Ariſtotle lib. de morte, and Cicero de amicit. The ſoules of men are divine, and when they go out of the bodies they returne to Heaven.

Verſe 17, 18

Muſculus.

Rachel being dead was buried in the way to Ephratha, which is Bethlehem, and Jacob ſet up a Pillar upon her Grave, &c.

Verſe 19, 20

Ephrath ſignifieth fruitfull, and Bethlehem the houſe of bread, and is 12 miles from Bethel; but when or upon what occaſion it came to have this name, is queſtioned. Ierome ſaith, it was called Bethlehem prophetically, for the true bread that came downe from Heaven, who was borne there, and 1000 paces from thence was the Tower of Eder, that is, of a flock, ſo called likewiſe prophetically, becauſe there the Shepherds ſhould be watching their flocks, when Chriſt his birth ſhould be revealed unto them. But when it was firſt called Ephrath, and when Bethlehem, he ſaith not; but Lyranus following Rabbi Solomon ſaith, that it had this name from Ephrath, Calebs wife, and afterwards, when Ruth had ſojourned in Moab, and returned home againe, there was ſo great plenty of corne here, that it was called Bethlehem, the houſe of bread. But this is only conjecturall and improbable, becauſe this Caleb was the ſonne of Hezron, who came into Egypt with Iacob, 250 yeares at the leaſt before the comming of the children of Iſrael into the Land of Canaan, and therefore he could not then be living: and Moſes calleth it Ephrath now, when as according to that reaſon, he lived not till this place obteined this name. The other reaſon of the change of the name into Bethlehem haply may be true, becauſe theſe words, this is Bethlehem, might by the wiſe men of the Synagogue be afterwards put in for explication. There was another Bethlehem in the Tribe of Zabulon, Ioſ. 19.15. vvhence ſprang Abeſſan a Judge in Iſrael, Iudg. 12.8.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

The Tower Eder.

Verſe 21. 1 Chron. 2.19. and Verſe 24. Lyranus.

For the Pillar ſet up, it vvas in remembrance of her, vvhom he ſo dearly Borcardus. Vatablus. Luther.

loved, to enternize, if it might be, her memory. Borcardus ſaith, it was a Pyramis built upon 12 great ſtones, according to the number of his ſonnes. Vatablus and Luther expound it, as a monument of his hope touching another life.

Gen.49.30. Muſculus.

When he dyed afterwards, he would be buryed where Abraham and Iſaac were buried, but touching Rachel he provideth not ſo, the reaſon may be, becauſe by the place of his own buriall faith might be ſupported as touching Gods promiſes, but in burying Rachel any where even in the way, he

Gen.49.31.

ſhewed, that it is not materiall in what place dead bodies be buried: yet as Rebecca, ſo Leah was buried in that peculiar appointed place. In that Rachels death is ſpoken of, but not Leahs, Rupertus draweth it to an Allegory, Rachel ſetting forth the Jewes, who are dead, and Leah the Gentiles, who are a Church living unto God by faith to the end of the world. And as

Rupert. lib. 8. in Gen. c. 15.

Rachel dyed in bringing forth, ſo the Jewes dyed by infidelity in the very ſending forth of the Apoſtles from amongſt them: and as ſhe called her ſonne Benoni, but he Benjamin, ſo although the Jewes counted the Apoſtles the Authors of much ſorrow and trouble unto them, yet God will place them at his right hand in 12 Thrones to judge the 12 Tribes of Iſrael. Rabanus ſaith, her calling him Benoni, was Propheticall, becauſe Saul who by perſecuting cauſed ſo much griefe, came of this tribe, and Jeruſalem ſtanding in this tribe ſhed the blood of many Prophets, cauſing much griefe to their Mothers, but afterwards Saul was turned, and ſo ſhall the Jewes, and thus become children of the right hand: ſo Ferus alſo, who ſaith moreover, that Rachels dying where Chriſt was borne, figured out the overthrow of the Synagogue that ſhould be at that time.

Verſe 21.

And Iſrael journeyed, and pitched his Tent beyond the Tower of Edar. This is omitted by the Septuagint, as being put in by anticipation, v. 16. as was ſhewed before. It vvas the Tovver of a flock, as vvas before ſaid, becauſe flocks of ſheep were kept there, and for Jacobs remove thither, haply he vvas inforced by neceſſity, becauſe he could have no place for his flocks elſevvhere, other places being taken up by others before. For although God called him to Bethel, it vvas not to dvvell conſtantly there, but to ſacrifice, Hiſron. in tract. Hebr. in Gen. Mich.4.8.

and to this place he came for the fruitfulneſſe of it. Here Helena, the Mother of Conſtantine built a Church, calling it Sanctorum Angelorum Templum, thus Ierome vvho ſaith, that the Hebrevves hold this Tovver to have been the place, vvhere the Temple vvas afterwards built by Solomon, ſo called Turris gregis, becauſe of the Congregation comming together thither, and therefore it is ſo called by Micha, Thou ô Tower of the flock, the ſtrong hold of the Daughter of Sion, but although the place of the Temple be called there ſo alſo, yet this, he ſaith, could not be that Tower of the flock, becauſe it vvas neare Bethlehem.

Verſe 22.

Then Reuben went, and lay with Bilhah his Fathers wife, and Jacob heard thereof.

Here another great croſſe happened to Jacob, ſo that he was no vvhere unexerciſed: the Septuagint adde, it was evill in his eyes, but Moſes leaveth this to be underſtood, and to be gathered afterwards from *Gen.*49. vvhere he is diſinherited therefore: vvhat a great ſin this is, ſee 1 Cor. 5. In that Moſes

Note.

Ferus.

ſpareth not to ſet dovvne theſe groſſe ſinnes of the Patriarchs, vvhen as he came of them, vve may ſee, that he vvas guided by God in his vvriting. R. Solomon, vvhom ſome fellovv, feigneth here that Reuben did not lye vvith her, but caſt the bed of Bilhah out of Leahs Tent, vvhere Jacob had placed it, diſdeining, that this indignity ſhould be offered to his Mother. Ferus vvill have Reuben in this a type of the Phariſees defiling their Mother, the Jevviſh Synagogue by falſe and corrupt teaching.

Verſe 26.

Now the Sonnes of Iſrael were 12. this is inſerted here, becauſe immediately after he meant to ſet forth the genealogy of Eſau, adding in concluſion, Theſe were the Sons of Jacob, which were borne unto him in Padan-Aram: vvhence a queſtion ariſeth, hovv this could be Chryſoſt. hom. 60. Cyril. Caten. in Gen.

ſaid, ſeeing Benjamin vvas borne in Canaan? Chryſoſt. and Cyril anſvver, that that he was begotten in Padan-Aram, but this cannot be, becauſe Jacob had now been about 10 yeares out of Padan-Aram. Auguſtine ſaith, that the manner of the Scripture is to ſpeak of any thing, as belonging to all, when it not belongeth to all, but a very few. But the ſolution is very eaſie thus, Theſe were the ſonnes of Jacob, which were borne unto him in Padan-Aram, all but Benjamin: for the Reader could not be ignorant that the place of his birth ſo lately ſpoken of was Canaan, and therefore Moſes left theſe words to be underſtood. Ferus noteth, that this numbring of his ſonnes is made here partly for Benjamin, who had not yet been reckoned, and partly to ſhew, that Jacob had many ſonnes, from whom he doubtleſſe expected much joy, but they occaſioned much ſorrow unto him, his griefe being made hereby ſo much the greater, God thus mingling Gall with his Honey at all times. Some, that they are here numbred, that Reuben appearing to be the eldeſt, his fault might be the more aggravated.

Auguſt qu 117. in Gen.

Ferus.

Then Jacob came to his Father Iſaac to Mamre the City of Arba, this is Hebron, &c. When he went into Padan-Aram, he left Iſaac in Beerſhebah; of his remove from whence we read not, neither is any thing ſpoken of him, till now ſince Jacobs going away, which was 30 yeares, and Rebecca is not ſpoken of at all, becauſe, as Joſephus ſaith, ſhe was dead before this. It is likely, that Iſaac being neare the time of his death removed to this place, to lay his bones here with Abraham and Sarah. But why did not Jacob make more haſte to Iſaac, after his comming into this land? Anſw. his Mother being dead, and his Fathers affection not ſtanding ſo towards him, there being many hinderances alſo in the way, it may be ſuppoſed, that he made the leſſe haſte unto him. Mamre is ſaid to be from Bethlehem 20 miles. And although it be paſſed over in ſilence, haply he came in his owne perſon often to him before this, but now with all his company: of Mamre ſee before, Gen. 13.18.

Verſe 27. Gen.28.

Queſt.

And the dayes of Iſaac were 180 yeares, &c. Jacob then was 120, becauſe born Anno 60 of his fathers age. He had ſpent 77 of theſe yeers, before his going to Padan-Aram, 20 there, ſo that ſince his return again, before the death of Iſaac had paſſed 23 yeares. But it is not to be thought, that he came not to him till that he was dead or dying to bury him, for he is afterwards ſaid to have dwelt in Hebron, when Joſeph was ſold into Egypt, which was long before Iſaacs death. See Chap. 36. Iſaacs eyes were dim, before Jacobs going into Padan-Aram; wherefore he lived blinde 43 yeares, which was a great affliction. And in all this time the promiſe of inheriting Canaan is not performed to try their faith.

Verſe 28.

Gen.37.14.

Touching the addition here, he was gathered to his people, being old and full of dayes, ſee before, Gen. 25.8. and likewiſe of the duty of burying, for as here Jacob and Eſau are ſaid to have buried Iſaac, ſo Isaac and Iſhmael are ſaid to have buried Abraham there.

Verſe 29.

CHAP. XXXVI.

IN this Chapter is ſhewed firſt, what Wives Eſau took, and what ſons he had by them, and of what dignity and greatneſs they were, that the prophecie of Iſaac, Gen. 27. might appear to have been accompliſhed, and that it might be ſeen, how Iſaac was bleſſed in both his ſons. For it was for his ſake, as Calvin noteth, that Moſes vouchſafeth to make this honourable mention of Eſau this one time, forbearing to proſecute his hiſtory any more afterwards, becauſe he was but as other men of this world, great and flouriſhing for a time, and then there is an end of them, they ſtand not before the Lord, as Jacob and his do.

Calvin.

Eſau his wives were Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite, Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibean the Hivite, and Baſhemah Iſhmaels daughter: whereas, Chap. 26.34. Baſhemah is ſaid to be the

Verſe 2,3.

the daugter of Elon, and Mahalath is ſaid to be the daughter of Iſhmael, *Chap.*28.9. And inſtead of Aholibamah there is Judith, the daughter of Beeri the Hittite. Some think, that this diverſity is by reaſon of the change of the names uſuall in all languages, or becauſe grand-children are called the children of the grand-father, or adopted, or children by marriage.

Luther. Cajetan.

That, which is ſpoke here, as alſo ſome other things, that follow, are ſpoken by way of capitulation: for Eſau had taken theſe wives long before the death of Iſaac, and went and dwelt in Mount Seir, as we may ſee, *Chap.*32. but Moſes purpoſing here to ſet downe the whole hiſtory of him together, capitulateth theſe things. He, as Saint Auguſtine obſerveth, moſt probably went to dwell in Seir, when he ſaw, that his wives diſpleaſed his father and mother, but hearing of his fathers laſt ſickneſſe, he came as Iacob did into Canaan to his father, and having buried him, goeth again to Seir, to ſettle his aboad there from thence forward, not meaning to come into Canaan any more, but to leave that land to Iacob, becauſe after their fathers death, his goods being divided between them, their ſubſtance was ſo great, that they could not dwell in one Countrey together, *v.*7. and this and not his firſt going into Seir is here meant.

*Auguſt.qu.*119. in Gen.

So likewiſe the ſelling of Joſeph into Egypt, the death of Er and Onan, and Judahs lying vvith Thamar; all that happened unto *Ch.*40. were before Iſaacs death, but only put off to be ſpoken of after, that Iſaacs death and Eſau his genealogie being ſet down, there might be none interruption in proſecuting the hiſtory of Joſeph. For Joſeph, who was born, when Iacob came out of Padan-Aram was but 17 when he was ſold into Egypt, but he was 23 when Iſaac died, as appeareth, becauſe Anno 23, after Iacobs return from Padan-Aram Iſaac died, as was ſhewed before, *Chap.*35. and Judah committed that ſin about that time that Joſeph was ſold, *Ch.*38. wherefore betwixt 17 and 23, there being ſix yeeres of Joſephs time ſpent in Egypt, ſomething related of his uſage there muſt needs come within the compaſſe of that time, *Chap.*39 And yet it is uncertain, whether he were impriſoned then, or not, becauſe the time of his lying in priſon is not ſet down, of which we ſhall ſee afterwards, but the time of his releaſe is expreſly ſet down, at 30 yeers of his age.

Luther.

Verſe 4. The ſons of Eſau by theſe his Wives vvere Eliphaz by Adah, Rehuel by Baſhemah, and by Aholibamah Jehus, Jaalam and Chorah, altogether five, which are ſaid to have been born to him in Canaan, as Jacobs to him in Padan-Aram, and Jacobs muſt inherit Canaan, and Eſaus muſt be excluded therefrom, the divine Providence working this, that his promiſe might ſtand.

Verſe 5,6,7, Verſe 8,9, Verſe 10,11 Verſe 12,13 Verſe 14,15 Verſe 16,17 Verſe 18,19

After this, mention is made of no more children that Eſau had, but of his childrens children, ſo that although he took him wives before Jacob, yet Jacobs number of children born to him in his old age were more then double ſo many as theſe of Eſau. Theſe his wives and children Eſau took with all his ſubſtance, and went into Seir to dwell there. After this Moſes reckoneth up the ſons of Eliphaz, and of Rehuel, and then numbring the Dukes, that came of them and of Aholibamah, he maketh up the ſum 14, all or moſt of which, it is likely with their trains came with Eſau, when he went forth to meet Jacob.

Eliphaz the eldeſt is thought by ſome to have been that Eliphaz ſpoken of in the book of Job. From Teman his ſonne it is thought that Teman had the name, which is ſpoken of, *Ier.*49.7.

Verſe 20,21 Verſe 22,24

Having reckoned up the Dukes, that came of Eſau, Moſes in the next place numbreth the Dukes, that came of Seir the Horite, who dwelt in that Countrey before, and were expelled by the children of Eſau afterwards, in numbering of whom there is nothing memorable, but that Aholibamah is here ſet forth to be the daughter of Ana a Duke, and Timnah the Concubine of Eliphaz Eſaus ſonne, the ſiſter of Lotan a Duke, *v.*22. for the greater glory of Eſaus family. And of Ana it is ſaid in ſpeciall, This is that Ana, who found Mules in the deſert. The vulgar Latine for Mules readeth hot Waters, whereas it is not חמים Waters, but ימם, which the moſt skilful in the Hebrew tranſlate Mules, a beaſt ingendred by the comming together of an horſe

Verſe 25.

and

and an Asse, yet some stand earnestly for Waters, the finding of which in a Desert (they say) was rare, and therefore might well be spoken of. But it is meant that Ana now first put the horse and the asse together to try, what kind of brood would come of them, and the beast so ingendred was called a Mule, being most strong of body, and it is the more probable, that this is the meaning, because he is said to have done it whilest he kept asses, but the Law forbiddeth this, Levit. 19. This word indeed is no where else found for Mules, but Peradim signifying parted or separated, but this last word might be used afterwards to set forth their separate condition from all other beasts. The Septuagint leaveth Jemim untranslated, and the Caldee rendreth it Gibbaraia Mighties, happily alluding to the strength of the Mule.

After the Dukes of the Horites thus reckoned up, Moses returneth again to Esau and his race, saying, that there were some Kings also in Edom, before there were Kings in Israel, as Belah the son of Behor, and Jobab the sonne of Zerah, &c. which Jobab is commonly held to be Job. So saith Aristeus, who wrote the history of the Jews, and Philo saith, that he was a King in Idumea, and married the daughter of Jacob, Dinah. Athanasius saith, that Job came of Esau, being the fifth from Abraham, so likewise Chrysostome; for Abraham, saith he, begat Esau, Esau Rahuel, Rahuel Zarah, Zarah Job; and Augustine, Theodoret, Gregory, Irenæus, Apollinarius, &c. And for confirmation of this, the Septuagint adde at the end of the book of Job, He was of his father Zarah, of the sons of Esau, and he was the fift from Abraham, and reigned over Edom. His friends that came to him, were of the sons of Esau, Eliphaz King of the Temanites, and Bildad the tyrant of the Saucheans, and Sophar King of the Mineans, and his name was also Iobab. Yet Ierome saith, that he came of Nahor and Rabbi Solomon, that he was a Canaanite, dying a little before the overthrow of that people, who were preserved till then for his vertues. And Lyranus saith, that the name here is Iobab, but there איוב, which argueth, that they are two divers men, so likewise Vatablus. But haply for brevities sake, he might be called Job, although at the first Jobab. If any more shall be needful to be spoken of this, it more properly belongeth to the book of Job, and therefore I refer it thither.

Verse 31.

Verse 32,33

Euseb lib 9 de præpar. Evang. cap ult. Athan. Synops. lib. 17. Chrysost hom 2, de patientia Job

Hieron. in R. Solomon. Lyranus.

Vatablus.

Moses having reckoned up seven Kings of Edom, returneth again to the Dukes, *v.*40. who, as Musculus saith, are thought by some to have succeeded those Kings; Duke Timnah, Duke Halvah, Duke Jetheth, &c.

Verse 40,41

CHAP. XXXVII.

IN this Chapter beginneth the history of Joseph, before which in way of Preface Moses saith, These are the generations of Jacob, but then without speaking of his generations, till *Chap.*46. he relateth immediately the things concerning Joseph only. Whereupon a question is moved, what is meant by saying, These are the generations of Jacob? Some will have these words to be a preparative to the generations reckoned up long after: some say that after them Joseph only is spoken of, because he was most like unto his father in conditions, the grace that was in Jacob seeming to rest upon him, so that he alone was the son of Jacob according to the spirit, coming of barren Rachel, as Jacob was of Isaac by Rebecca such another woman, and Isaac of Abraham by Sarah. But then generation should have been spoken of in the singular number, and not generations in the plural, and it is unusuall to say, These are the generations, meaning some to be reckoned up long after; wherefore others considering the word used here is תולדות, of ילד parere, to bring forth, have rather expounded it of events, these are the accidents, or the things, which those times brought forth unto Jacob for his further exercise, and thus it is used also before, Chap. 6.9.

Verse 2.

Cajetan. Rupert lib.8. in Gen. cap.18. Licet duodecem fuerint Jacob filii, in uno tamen Joseph suam Jacob generationem .i. paternæ similitudinis transfudit pulchritudinem, &c.

6.9. and how the day doth parere or bring forth, it is ſpoken, Prov. 27.1. Thus Vatablus ſaith ſome expound it, thus alſo Pagninus, and this I take to be the beſt. But Ferus followeth, that of Rupertus; ſaying that Ioſeph was herein a type of Chriſt, who alone amongſt many Brethren was like unto, and the very image of God the Father. Ioſeph being 17 years old, &c. In the vulgar Latine it is, being 16 yeares old, againſt the current both of Hebrew, Chaldee, and Greek. Whereas this may ſeem to be againſt that which is related, Chap. 35.28. ſaying that Iſaac was 180 yeares old, and then dyed, at what time Jacob muſt needs be 120. becauſe he was borne, Iſaac being 60, and yet at his comming into Egypt he was but 130. Chap. 47.9. at what time, yea nine yeares before Joſeph is ſaid to have been 30, chap. 41.46. ſo that according to this; 22 yeares paſſed betwixt Joſephs being ſould into Egypt, and Jacobs going downe thither, from 17 to 30. 13 and 7 yeares of plenty, and two yeares of the famine, but if after Iſaacs death, there could be but 10 yeares. This ſeeming contradiction is eaſily reconciled by ſaying, that the figure Hyſteron proteron was uſed in telling of Iſaacs death before. See Ch. 36. 2,3. how long Iſaac lived after this ſelling of Joſeph into Egypt. But why is the age of Joſeph ſet downe? Chryſoſtome ſaith, for the commendation of Joſeph, in whom virtue appeared already, not able to indure the vices of his Brethren, and it aggravateth their ſin the more, in that they were not moved by his young and tender age with compaſſion towards him; ſo likewiſe Rupertus. And by this we may gather, how long he was in bondage and miſery, even 13 yeares, and from the beginning of this time the Hiſtory of Jacob broken off, Chap. 35.28, is here againe continued, theſe are the things, that fell out, whileſt Jacob dwelt in Hebron. And Joſeph was with the Sons of Zilpah and Bilhah his Fathers Wives, that is, his Mother being dead, and he being envyed of the Sonnes of Leah, becauſe he was moſt beloved, they being of greater ſpirits, becauſe they came of a free woman, he vviſely to decline their envy conſorted himſelfe with the Sonnes of the Maid-ſervants, thus ſhevving all humility, and herein, ſaith Ferus, he was alſo a figure of Chriſt, who came amongſt ſinners, as his Brethren, humbling himſelfe to be made like unto them. And Joſeph brought unto his Father their evill report.

Vatablus. Pagninus. Ferus. Chryſoſt. hom. 61. in Gen. Rupertus. Ferus. Phil.2.6.

In rendring this there is a manifeſt errour in the Septuagints Tranſlation, wherein it is, They brought againſt Joſeph an evil report unto their Father, and hereby Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Iſidore, and other Greek expoſitours following it have been made to erre alſo: for the Hebrew Copy hath it, as we render it. But vvhat evill report vvas this, vvhich he brought unto his Father? the vvord tranſlated, their evill report, is דבתם, their detraction, or oblocution, that is, their daily ſpeaking ill of and againſt him, vvhereby he vvas ſo vvearied, that he could not any longer beare it, they did ſo load him vvith contumelies. The Interlinearie gloſſe, the contumelies offered by the Sonnes of Leah to the Sonnes of the Maid-ſervants, adding alſo, that he accuſed them of Buggery, and Reuben of inceſt. Rupertus alſo ſaith, that he accuſed them of Buggery, and ſo likewiſe Toſtatus. And there is a difference alſo about thoſe that were accuſed, ſome ſaying, that they were the Sonnes of the Maid-ſervants, and ſome, as the interlinarie gloſſe, the Sonnes of Leah, as hath been already ſaid. He was with the Sonnes of the Maid-ſervants, as preferring to live with them, and therefore it is not ſo probable, that he accuſed them, but the Sonnes, from whom he kept more aloofe. And ſeeing Moſes hath not ſet down any vice in particular, of which he accuſed them, it is not ſafe to pitch upon any, but generally, that they lived ſcandalouſly, whereby they came into infamy, and did expreſſe much envy againſt him. And this ſeemeth to be further ſet forth, v. 3. where it is ſaid, that Jacob loved Joſeph, &c. Expoſitours here generally commend Joſeph, whereas he may ſeeme to be worthy of taxation for accuſing his Brethren, becauſe, when he could not expect that by admoniſhing them of their vices he could reforme them, but ſhould rather have been derided for his labour, labour, he told his Father of them, that he might take order for their reformation, and ſo they underſtand hereby great virtue, that could not endure vice to be implyed in Joſeph in theſe his young yeares. It is a fault indeed to complaine of others with a deſire of hurting, not of correcting them: but this certainly was not in virtuous Joſeph.

Calvin. Muſculus. Vatablus. Gloſ. interlin. Cajetan. Marlorat.

Auguſt. Dolus amando corripe, non odiando caede, ſed ſtudio corrigendi.

Verſe 3.

Now Jacob loved Joſeph more then all his children, becauſe he was the Son of his old age and made him a Coat of divers colours.

There was ſo little a time betwixt the birth of the reſt of Jacobs children, and Joſeph, (for they were all borne in 7 yeares) that this may not ſeem to be the reaſon of his ſingular love towards him, becauſe alſo Benjamin was borne long after, when he was more ſtricken in yeares. Wherefore Rupertus by the Son of his old age underſtandeth a Son excelling in thoſe virtues, that are in the ancient, and Ferus followeth him. And both Philo, and Joſephus, although they ſpeak not of this, as a reaſon of Jacobs great love towards him, becauſe he begat him in his old age, yet they alledge this as a reaſon, for the excellency of his body and the virtue of his minde, Philo adding alſo, that he came after the reſt. The Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, becauſe he was a wiſe Son, Puer cùm eſſet, præ ſe ferens ſenectutem. But it is commonly ſeen, that a childe borne to a man in his old age is moſt beloved, becauſe it is a comfort to him to ſee, that there is life ſtill in his decaying nature. Iacob was 91 when Ioſeph was borne, and although he were old, when the reſt were borne alſo, yet he being after them drew his affection moſt unto him, and as for Benjamine, he was yet an infant, and therefore haply not meant, when Joſeph is ſpoken of, as moſt beloved of all his Sonnes that were grown up. It is not to be doubted but that there was ſingular virtue in Joſeph, but becauſe Iacob would not have it knowne, that he loved him moſt for that, but becauſe he had him in his old Age, therefore Moſes omitting that, ſpeaketh of this only. For the Coat which he made him of divers colours, the vulgar Latine hath it, Tunicam polymitam, made of many and ſundry ſorts of threds; the Septuagint, ποικιλον; Aquila, talarem; Symmachus, manicatam, as Jerome ſaith. The Hebrewes will have it ſilke. It was doubtleſſe a more pretious Garment then he made for the reſt: by the diverſity of the workes therein, the divers graces ſhining in Ioſeph being expreſſed, as Rupertus ſaith: of Garments of divers coulours ſee more, 2 Sam. 13.18.

Philo de Joſeph. Joſeph. lib. 1. Antiqu.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. Rupertus.

And when his Brethren ſaw, that his Father loved him more then all his Brethren, they hated him, &c.

Verſe 4.

It is hence obſerved, that when Parents ſhew more love to one childe then to another, it procureth unto him the hatred of the reſt, and therefore the exhortation of Ambroſe is, Let a like grace joyne thoſe children, whom a like nature hath joyned. And yet he denyeth not a liberty to Parents to love moſt, where they ſee moſt merit, that children may ſtrive to go one before another in dutifulneſſe. But they muſt be wiſe to conceale their love, for feare of hurting the beloved through envy more then benefiting him.

Ambroſ. Jungat liberos æqualis gratia, quos junxit æqualis natura.

And Joſeph dreamed a dream, and he told his Brethren, &c.

Verſe 5.

Ioſeph, as Philo and Joſephus ſay, not thinking that his Brethren did beare him any hatred, like a ſimple youth told unto them, as to his friends, his dreames preſaging his future advancement, for which they hated him yet more. Dreames and viſions were the two wayes, whereby God revealed things to come unto his ſervants. It is not to be doubted, but that Ioſeph, as all other men, had many dreames, but thoſe that were Prophetical, God did make a greater impreſſion of them in the mind, whereby they were known to be ſuch. And at this time, when Ioſeph ſuffered by the envy of his Brethren, God comforted him ſeaſonably by theſe dreames. But a queſtion may be made here, whether there vvas not in him ſome pride, vvhereby he vvas ſtirred upto tell them? To this Bernard anſvvereth, that he doth not think, that he declared them out of vanity, but out of ſimplicity, and if there vvere any pride in telling them, it vvas expiated by thoſe things, vvhich he

Calvin.

Queſt.

Bernard. Tract. de Grad. humil. Quæ tamen si qua fuit, per ea quæ passus est potuit expiari. Tho. Anglicus in Gen.

afterwards suffered. Tho. Anglicus answereth, that God, who sent him these dreames inforced him to declare them, that his future exaltation might be known to be foreseen and fore-ordained of God. He revealed not unto him, what he should suffer, but how he should be advanced, because he was now afflicted and needed all comfort, and when the time of his sufferings should come, his faith should be the more exercised, seeing contrary things and such as threatened destruction to happen to him at the first instead of this expected advancement. Touching the dreame, it was not of things concerning that course of life, which he then led, for he kept sheep, but concerning

Verse 7.

Husbandry, he and his Brethren were binding sheaves, and their sheaves came and did reverence to his sheafe, whereby was shewed, that he should be taken from that course of life, and not at home, but elsewhere come to this preferment: thus Calvin. And more particularly the matter whereabout he should be busied, viz. the gathering of corne against the famine in Egypt, seemeth to be pointed at.

Calvin.

Verse 9.

And Joseph dreamed another dreame, and he told it to his Father and his Brethren, saying, Behold, the Sunne, Moone, and 11 Stars did bow downe unto me.

This dreame was added for further confirmation of the same thing, a similitude in Heaven being represented, as there upon earth, that it might be knowne to come from God, only his principality over his Parents also is hereby signified, as Jacob expounded it, v. 10. reproving him therefore; yet it is said, that he considered the matter. Here two questions offer themselves. 1 How it can be said, that Josephs Father and Mother worshipped him, when as his Mother was dead before this, and his Father is not any where said to have worshipped him, when he came down to him into Egypt, although his Brethren did? 2 Why Jacob reproved Joseph for telling this dreame, but yet pondered it? If he thought it to come from God, why did he reprove him, and if not, why did he ponder it? Touching the first, some labour, but in vaine, to prove that Rachel was yet living, for it is contrary to the course of the History. Augustine and Rupertus think, that no full satisfying resolution can be given, but by flying to a mystery, whereby Joseph is made a figure of Christ, whom the Sun worshippeth, when the old Church now triumphing in Heaven, and the Moone, when the Church militant, and the Stars, when every of the Saints departed doth worship him. But these are curiosities; and no better is that of some Hebrewes, saying, that the Sun and Moone worshipped Ioseph, when they reverenced Ioshua comming of him to stand still at his bidding. For it is to be understood of the person of Joseph. Whereas Rachel may seem to have been alive at that time, because Iacob saith, Shall I and thy Mother worship thee? Lyranus saith, that this was spoken by him in way of derision, as if he had sad, This is a vaine dreame, for thy Mother is dead, and therefore cannot possibly come to worship thee, and who will beleave, that I thy Father shall ever do this? which he spake so, that his Brethren might the lesse envy him for it, as being of things incredible. But in the dreame there must be a verity in respect of all particulars, how then was this? The same Lyranus and Tostatus also answere, Iacob worshipped him, when he sent by his sonnes, putting such humble termes in their mouthes towards him, calling himselfe his servant, and touching his mother, one saith, Leah was meant; another, Bilhah the wife of his Father, and therefore one, that might well be called his Mother. I think it was Bilhah Rachels maid, who was now, as his Mother, she being dead, in that she cherished him up with her Sonnes, for Leah dyed about the time when Iacob went down into Egypt. If it be said, we read nothing of Bilhahs bowing unto him: It may easily be answered, all things that were done, are not set down, and so the wives speeches, and humiliation towards Ioseph being afarre off might be by Moses omitted in the History following. They were certainly sensible of their childrens and their own danger by famine, and therefore it is likely, as their Father, that they were moved with Reverence towards Ioseph, so great Lyranus.

Verse 10, 11

Quest.

August. qu. 126. in Gen. Rupert. lib. 8. in Gen. c. 22.

Tostatus.

a man a man now in Egypt. Touching Jacobs worſhipping of Joſeph, Chryſoſt. Hom. 66. ſaith, that it was fulfilled Chap. 47. v. 31. when he worſhipped upon the end of his ſtaffe; ſo likewiſe Theodoret. Qu. 108. and Procopius, but Muſculus, when he humbled himſelfe unto him, ſaying, If I have found grace in thine eyes, Chap. 47. 29. Touching the other queſtion, Jacob did not ſeriouſly reprove Joſeph, but before his Brethren, that their envy might be the leſſe againſt him, and theſe dreames of his might not ſtick in their mindes, as portending any future advancement, but be neglected by them, as vaine and frivilous, yet by himſelfe alone he thought upon them, expecting the event thereof, yet, as Calvin ſaith, Jacobs act herein is not juſtifiable, for he ought rather to have dehorted his ſonnes from kicking againſt the pricks, by ſtomacking Gods decree touching their Brothers advancement, and to have perſwaded them to be willing with that which God would bring to paſſe. Ferus rendreth another reaſon of Jacobs reproving him, viz. leſt he ſhould by his dreames be puft up with pride.

Quæſt. Calvin.

And his brethren went to feed their fathers flock in Shechem. Philo telling this hiſtory ſaith, that Jacob feared, leſt if his ſonnes were ſtill together at home, for envy againſt Joſeph they would raiſe ſome ſedition, wherefore he ſendeth them far off, thinking that in time this grudge might by their diſcontinuance from Joſeph be taken away. This Shechem is by ſome, as Muſculus ſaith, thought to be the Shechem ſpoken of before, where the people were deſtroyed, but he thinketh it rather to be ſome other place named here only for the fertility of graſſe, not far from Hebron. I ſee no reaſon, but that with Ferus we may underſtand that Shechem, becauſe that although they had removed from that place, being full of feare, yet Jacob having ground which he had bought there, the danger being now paſt, it is moſt likely that he would adventure to make uſe of it again for the feeding of his cattel, being ſo greatly confirmed by God ſince his coming from thence, as he had been when Jacobs ſons had been there a certain time. He ſendeth Joſeph unto them to ſee how they did and the cattel, and to bring him word, who goeth, and not finding them there, but learning gy one that they were gone to Dothan, he followed them thither. Shechem, to which he was ſent, as one ſaith, was 60 miles from Hebron, from thence to the Tower of Edar 20, from Edar to Bethel 12, from Bethel to Shechem 28, who therefore reckoneth this journey of Joſeph 60 miles, not doubting, but that it was the ſame Shechem with that before-mentioned Dothan, as the ſame Authour ſaith, was from hence four miles. Here was a City into which Eliſha led the Aramites. The man, that is ſaid to have found Joſeph, and to have directed him to Dothan, is by the Hebrews held to have been an Angel, and likewiſe by Ferus: but as Muſculus well ſaith, there is no need to hold that he was any other then a man, who by Gods providence came at that time to direct this wandring youth. Whereas Ferus argueth from his knowledge of his brethen, which he being a ſtranger could not have had of them if he had been a man, it is a weak argument; for Jacob having now lived long in that Countrey, and being a great man and of note, both he and his ſonnes might be known to many, even ſtrangers dwelling a far off, eſpecially where they had formerly dwelt, as about Shechem. Here ſee an example of the obedience of a childe to his father, going ſo far off alone to ſee his unkinde brethren at the command of his father, and doing his beſt diligence to finde them out in another place, when they were not in that.

Verſe 12. Philo. Muſculus. Ferus. Verſe 13, 14 Verſe 15, 16 Verſe 17. Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels. 2 Kings 6. Ferus. Muſculus. Note.

When Joſephs brethren ſaw him, they conſpired together to kill him, but Reuben counſelled rather to caſt him into a pit, that he might preſerve him alive. Behold, ſay they, this dreamer cometh: in the Hebrew, this maſter or author of dreams: by which ſaying is implyed, that they would not have his dreams by any means to come of God, but from the pride and vanity of his owne minde: for if they had conceived them to have been of God, they durſt not have impugned them, leſt they ſhould have been found fighters againſt God, as Calvin ſpeaketh. And thus they conſpired, whileſt he was yet a far off, ſo that it came from grounded malice in them, and it is moſt probable, that they had talked before together about ſuch an heinous fact, or elſe each one would have feared to have bewrayed his minde unto his brother. Ambroſe excuſeth this their conſpiracie, ſaying, They did not thus ſtir up one another againſt Joſeph to kill him, but in a figure, repreſenting the wicked Jews, who ſhould afterwards ſtir up one another againſt Chriſt, ſaying, Come, this is the heire, let us kill him, and the inheritance ſhall be ours, as it is in the Parable. But it coming from the height of malice in them could not but be abominable, although figurative, and therefore we may ſee, how candid Moſes was in not ſparing to relate this of his progenitors, and how gracious the Lord was in chooſing theſe men for the ſeminary of his Church, notwithſtanding their horrible vices, and how miſerable the ſtate of the Church then was, being but in one family, and that ſo foulely corrupt, that if the ſtories of the Heathen be peruſed, the like villainous plot is hardly to be found amongſt them, that ſo many brethren ſhould conſent together to murther one, and that a brother of their own.

Verſe 18, 19 Verſe 20, 21 Vatablus. Calvin.

Ambroſ. de Joſepho.

Calvin.

Verſe 21,22

Reuben hearing this, diſſwadeth from it, ſaying, Let us not kill him, but caſt him into a pit, and let not our hands be upon him, that he might deliver him to his father. Reuben was the ſonne of Leah, whoſe ſonnes did moſt envy him, and yet God moved his heart to ſtand for Joſephs deliverance, and Judah who came of the ſame mother, was the next that ſought to ſave him alive, but not one of the ſonnes of the two maid-ſervants, with whom he lived, that ſpake for him. A thing worth the noting, by a divine Providence, when God will, the greateſt enemies to a man are made his greateſt friends. God knoweth, ſaith Muſculus, how to take from amongſt our enemies thoſe, that may ſtand againſt the fury of our enemies. Reuben had been moſt vicious, for he went up to his fathers bed, either therefore he is now converted, or ſeeketh to take this opportunity of doing ſomething to pleaſe his father ſo again, that he might be reſtored to his favour. The thing whereby he moveth them, is by propounding the heinouſneſſe of the ſin of fratricide, as Joſephus declareth in more words; but it is ſtrange to ſee, how they were beſotted, in that they could be perſwaded, that they ſhould not be guilty of his blould, if they did not directly murther him, although they caſt him into a pit to be ſtarved there to death, which indeed was rather a greater cruelty. When Joſeph was come to his brethren, they take him according to Reubens counſel, and caſt him into a pit, which was ſo deep, that he could not get out any more, but void of water, and the report goeth, that there be many ſuch in thoſe parts: but they firſt ſtrip him out of his party-coloured coat, as being one thing, at which they were ſo greatly offended, becauſe Iacob made it him, as an argument of his ſingular love towards him. With what words they ſpake unto him is not ſet forth, nor how he entreated for himſelf, but that he entreated, ſee *Chap.*42.21. The pit is ſaid in the vulgar Latine to be an old pit, and R. Solomon ſaith, it was full of Serpents; but this is improbable, becauſe Reuben counſelled to put him in there for his ſafety. His coat being put off, it is not likely that he was naked, but left with ſome under-garment upon him, this being a looſe one, which he ware uppermoſt, according to the manner of thoſe Countreys.

Note.

Muſculus.

Calvin.

Verſe 23.

Muſculus.

R. Solomon.

Verſe 25.

And they ſate down to eat bread. This doth further aggravate their ſin, that having committed ſo heinous a wickedneſſe they were not touched with any remorſe, but went preſently to their repaſt. Behold, a company of Iſhmaelites came from Gilead, &c. the word tranſlated company is ארחת ſignifying a way, the continent being put for the content, the Chaldee Paraphraſt readeth it, a company of Arabians, and both Philo and Joſephus relating this hiſtory, call them Arabians. *V.*36. and before that *v.*28. they are ſaid to have been Midianites, to whom Ioſeph was ſold, and that ſold him again in Egypt. Hereupon a queſtion ariſeth, how they conſult about ſelling him to the Iſhmaelites, but ſell him to the Midianites, and how the Midianites are ſaid to have ſold him again to Potiphar in this chapter, but *Chap.*39.1. the Iſhmaelites? Saint Au-

Philo. Joſephus.

Queſt.

Augustine saith, that although the Midianites came of Midian the sonne of Ketura, and the Ishmaelites of Hagars sonne Ishmael, yet, Gen. 25. Abraham sent them away into the East, giving them gifts, and so inhabiting together: although they bare divers names, they were but one Nation, sometimes called Ishmaelites, and sometimes Midianites. And therefore Moses speaketh of them accordingly, sometime by one name, sometime by another, they being some Ishmaelites, and some Midianites, that travelled here together. Their dwelling was not in Gilead, for that was part of the land of Canaan; but in Arabia, from Havila to Shur, more Eastward then Canaan. But it is most probable, that they went to Gilead for these wares, which they carried now into Egypt, which are said to grow abundantly there. The wares carried by them upon Camels are said to be Spicery, Balm and Myrrhe. Tostatus saith, that some Hebrews read it Wax, Treacle, & Chesnuts, which he rejecteth. The first word is by Jerom translated Pigmenta, or Unguenta: the second word in the vulgar Latin is Rosin, of the Hebrew word Serar, to binde, because it healeth and bindeth gaping wounds together, the third is Stacte, which being beaten into powder and burnt, yieldeth a most sweet smell, and Dioscorides describeth it to be the fat of new Myrrhe.

August qu. 124. in Gen.

Tostatus.

When they saw this company coming, Judah exhorteth them saying, What profit is it, if we slay him and conceal his bloud? Come, and let us sell him to these Ishmaelites, and let not our hand be upon him, &c. Joseph being put into the pit to be starved to death, this beginneth now to work upon the conscience of Judah, wherefore he speaketh thus, meaning, that if they did so slay him, and conceal it, yet they should not by this means go scot-free from so horrible a sin, God would finde it out, although it were concealed from man; he therefore taketh this opportunity to perswade them to sell him rather to the Ishmaelites.

Verse 26.
Verse 27.

Hereupon Joseph is drawn out, & sold unto them for 20 pieces of silver, that is, as the Chaldee Paraphrast rendreth it, for 20 shekels, the Septuagint render it pro 20 aureis, but they are much more Josephus saith pro 20 minis, Ambrose, and Augustine make mention of some copies, wherein it is 25, or 30 pieces of silver, which was doubtlesse made so, because Joseph was a figure of Christ sold for 30 pieces of silver. The true reading is, as we have it, 20 pieces of silver, that is, shekels, and a shekel is 15^{d}, the shekel of the Sanctuary twice so much of our money: then 20 shekels are one pound five shilling. And 20 shekels are set down, Levit. 27. 5. of one under 20 yeers of age, but every servant killed is valued at 30 shekels, Exod. 21. 32. Whereas, Amos 2. 6. Israel is threatened for selling the just One for silver, and the poore for a pair of shoes: R. Eliezer saith, It is in alluding to this selling of Joseph, with the 20 shekels taken for whom, they bought each of them two pair of shoes.

Verse 28.

Joseph.
Ambros.
August.

Then Reuben returned to the pit, not knowing, what his brethren had done, that he might draw out Joseph when they were away, but not finding him, he rendeth his garments, and complaineth, requiring, as Josephus and Philo say, of them, what was become of him; and when they had told him, that he was sold into Egypt, he spake against it, as a most heinous fact, but by and by, lest their fury should be stirred up against him also, he held his peace.

Verse 29, 30.

And they took Josephs coat, and killed a Kid, and dipped it in the bloud, &c. According to their first device, when they conspired together to kill Joseph, and to say, that an evil beast had devoured him, so they now use means to make their father believe, and the coat thus dipped in bloud being brought unto him, he apprehendeth it accordingly. Whereas they are said to have killed a Kid, Josephus saith they killed a Goat, so likewise Pagninus, and the word Sanghir here used doth indeed signifie a Goat, and Ghedi a Kid, but Sanghir is sometime put for a Goat, sometime for a Kid, and all other Expositors, and Jerome and the Septuagint turn it a Kid, v. 34.

Verse 31.

Verse 33.

Then Jacob mourned for his son, and put on sackcloth, and when his sonnes and daughters came to comfort him, he would not be comforted, but said,

Verse 34.
Verse 35.

I will

Rupertus. I will go down to the grave to my son mourning. Rupertus conjectureth, that Jacob thought that his sons through envy had killed Joseph, whatsoever he said, but would not bewray his thoughts, and that this made him so full of heavinesse: for if he had discovered his thoughts, he could not tell how to prove it, or how to deal with them for it. But, because he never afterwards did charge them with it, to move them to repentance therefore, as he would have done if he had thought them guilty, this opinion is not probable. Jacob rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth, to shew, how his heart was rent with that heavy accident, and in way of humbling himself, as the manner vvas of the people of those parts. For grave, to vvhich Lyranus. Jacob saith, he should go down mourning, Lyranus hath it hell, expounding it of the Limbus Patrum, imagined to be in the upper part of hell, and this is followed by all the Papals generally. But what the word Sheol here used signifieth, and the divers opinions of Writers, see Acts 2.27. whereunto I will Aben Ezra. adde, that because the Caldee hath it Gehenna, Aben Ezra reproveth it, saying, that it is plain by the use of the word Sheol in divers places of Scripture, that it Eugubinus. Cajetan. signifieth the grave. And Cajetan, and Eugubinus themselves are for this exposition, as most aptly agreeing to the thing spoken of, viz. his sorrowing, till that he was dead and buried, so likewise Ferus.

Verse 36. And the Midianites sold him to Potiphar an officer of Pharaoh, and Captain of the guard. For Officer Calvin readeth it Satrapæ, a Prince, and Vatablus and the Caldee Paraphrast, the vulgar Latine an Eunuch, for the word סריס, as Vatablus. Vatablus hath it, signifieth both a Prince and an Eunuch, because Eunuches were in places of principality about divers heathen Kings. Hereupon a question is made by some, how Potiphar could be an Eunuch, and yet had a wife? but this question is at an end by that which hath been already said. The words translated, (Captain of the Guard) are שר-הטבחים, of טבח mactare to Muscul. kill, as Muscul. hath it, whereupon some have expounded it Master of the Butchers, or of the Cooks; but this rendring it, Prince of the Souldiers, or one over the guard is rather to be preferred, as being a greater dignity, and so the house, that Joseph came into by a singular providence, was an house more likely for him to be advanced in, then in another ordinary house. Lyranus is for this translation, because the office of a souldier is to kill their enemies, so likewise Jerome and Augustine, but Philo and Josephus and Ambrose are for the other.

The Allegory. Now as in this history the literal sense is first to be respected, so it is to be understood, that Joseph in all this was a figure of our Saviour Christ. As he came of barren Rachel, so Christ came of a barren Virgin. As he was singularly beloved of his father, because he was born to him in his old age, so was Christ of our heavenly Father, as one that was born in the old and last age of the world. As he had a coat of divers colours, so Christ was indued with divers excellent graces, and divers people saith, Isidore, were gathered to him. As he was envied of his brethren, so was Christ of the Jews. As he was appointed to keep sheep, and lived with the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, the meanest of Jacobs sons, so Christ was the true Shepherd, but his conversation was amongst the poorest and meanest. As he could not endure the ill manners of his brethren, but accused them to his father, so Christ cannot endure the wicked, and vvill Matth.25. accuse them and judge and condemne them at the last day. And as Joseph had dreams portending his exaltation, for which his brethren hated him the more, so Christ speaking of his equality with the Father, of his glory to come, was the more hated of the Jews. As Joseph vvas sent afar off to his brethren, so Christ; and he spared for no pains to finde them, but they conspired to kil him, & sel him for 30 pieces of silver, as Joseph was sold for 20. As Reuben took Josephs part, so did Nicodemus amongst the Pharisees Christs. As they pluckt off Josephs John 9. John 10. coat, so the Jevvs sought to take the coat of divers graces from Christ, saying; that he was a sinner, had a devill and was mad. As Joseph vvas diversly ill handled, sometime being cast into a pit, out of vvhich he came again, and sometime sold ſold for a ſlave, ſo Chriſt vvas ſometime taken to be caſt dovvn off an high hill, ſometime attempted to be ſtoned, but he eſcaped, but laſtly, he vvas ſold. As vvhen they had put Ioſeph into the pit, they ſate dovvn to eat bread; ſo when Chriſt was by the Jews crucified, they ate the Paſſeover. As by the counſel of Judah, Joſeph was ſold, ſo by Judas Chriſt: as he was lifted up out of the pit, ſo was Chriſt from the pit of death. Thus Ferus, Iſidore, Rabanus, &c.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

AT that time Judah went down from his Brethren to a certain Adullamite whoſe name was Hirah, and he ſaw there the daughter of a certain Canaanite, whoſe name was Shuah, and he took her, &c. Verſe 1,2.

The Hebrews, ſaith Ferus, declare this to be the cauſe of Judah his going from his brethren to this Adullamite, viz. becauſe they ſeeing their father ſo heavy for the loſſe of Joſeph, and that he would not be comforted, quarrelled with him for the counſel, which he had given them to ſell away Joſeph, whereas he being their elder, if he had then adviſed them to let him go free, they would, their anger by that time being pacified, have hearkened to his voice. Forſomuch as then he could have no quiet living amongſt them, he went thus away from them, and married, and had children, but they died, whereupon he noteth, how God in juſtice dealt with him, as he had dealt by others, he had counſelled to ſell Joſeph into another place to ſtrangers, now he liveth therefore amongſt ſtrangers; and he by that means made his father ſorrowful, as if his ſonne had been dead indeed, wherefore his ſonnes are taken away by the Lord, and his Wife after them to his great ſorrow. Ferus. Note.

But ſome Hebrews, as Vatablus hath it, ſay, that theſe things fell out before the ſelling of Joſeph, but this is improbable, forſomuch as the hiſtory of Joſeph being by Moſes begun, he would not doubtleſſe have interrupted the courſe thereof, but to bring in theſe things in their proper place. Moreover, if this were granted, and Iudah had married at 16 yeers old, and had three ſonnes at 19, how could any of them be grown up, and die, and he beget a childe of their widow, and that childe grow up and beget another by the time of their going into Egypt, which cannot be above 27 or 28 from the 16 yeare of Judah his age? He that will count it, ſhall finde that Pharez could not then poſſibly be above foure or five yeers old. Odulla, as Jerome ſaith, was a little Village, being afterwards of the Tribe of Judah eight miles from Jeruſalem towards the South-weſt, from Hebron above 20 miles. The great doubt here is, how it can be ſaid, that Iudah now married a wife and begat three children, whereof two married and died, and that he lay with his daughter in law many yeers after, and had by her Pharez and Zarah at one birth, and Pharez had two ſonnes Hezron and Hamul, when Jacob went with his family down into Egypt? For betwixt this and the going into Egypt were but 22 yeers, ſeeing Joſeph was now 17, and then 39. For admit, that Judah married a Wife this very yeer, and had his firſt ſonne within the yeer, yet we muſt ſuppoſe him to be 18 or 19 when he married, then Thamar his daughter in law had another of his ſonnes, and he being dead, remained a widow a long time before that Judah lay with her, ſo that here is more then this whole time runne out when Pharez and Zarah were born, how then could Pharez have ſonnes alſo in this ſpace of time? Saint Auguſtine both moveth and anſwereth it in effect in ſpeaking upon *Gen.*46.15. of the 33 children of Leah, which ſhe and hers are ſaid to have had in Meſopotamia of Syria, when he ſaith, that the children are counted in their parents, becauſe they were borne there: for Leah had but ſix ſonnes and one daughter there, the children which were born unto them Vatablus. Hieron. Gen.46.12. *Auguſt. qu.*151. in Gen.

them coming afterwards in Canaan, and in like manner it may be ſaid, that the ſonnes of Pharez are ſpoken of, as going down with Iacob into Egypt, when they yet were not, but in Pharez their father. Yet upon this Chapter Auguſtine laboureth to clear this doubt, by ſaying, that theſe things are ſpoken by way of capitulation, being done before the ſelling of Joſeph, although related after, and in ſifting this reſolution, he findeth it not firme, becauſe when Joſeph was 17, Judah was but 21, and therefore could not be married long before. The beſt light therefore, which he giveth for the clearing of this doubt is in his laſt Queſtion, where ſpeaking of the ſonnes of Machir, the ſonne of Manaſſeh Joſephs ſonne, who were brought up upon Joſephs knees, he ſaith, that theſe could not have been counted amongſt the number of ſouls belonging unto Jacob at his coming down into Egypt, as they are by the Septuagint, numbring 75, but that all, which were born to the end of Ioſephs life, who was the cauſe of their coming into Egypt, come into the account. But I rather think, that when it is ſaid, All the ſouls that came with Iacob into Egypt were 66, it is meant which came with him, or came of him before his death, which was not till 17 yeers after, and in that time Pharez if he married young, might have children. And it is to be ſuppoſed, that now the Lord beginning to fulfil his promiſe of increaſing Abrahams poſterity extraordinarily, they married very young, and fructified beyond the ordinary courſe, as before Iſaac and Iacob had ſtayed long, before they married or had any children. Or it may be ſaid, that the two grand-children of Iudah by Pharez are mentioned amongſt thoſe, that went down into Egypt, although they were not yet, but in their father for the dignity of this line, in reſpect of Chriſt coming thereof, ſeeing no grand-children elſe of any of Iacobs ſons are ſpoken of, but only of Aſher, *Chap.*46.17. which he might then well actually have.

*Quæſt.*128.

*Quæſt.*173.

Gen.50.22.

Verſe 2.

See 1 Chron. 2. 3. and Verſe 12 Calvin.

The woman married by Iudah was the daugnter of a Canaanite called Shuah, for this was her fathers, not her name, as appeareth by the word שוע, the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendreth it, the daughter of a Merchant, for ſo the word Canaanite is alſo ſometimes taken, but Calvin will rather have it of a Canaanite, holding that Iudah is here branded for marrying with the inhabitants of that Countrey, which he ought not to have done, and therefore God ſendeth his curſe upon that marriage, ſo as that the children that came thereby were none of them of the holy Line of Chriſt. But if ſo, would not God as well have curſed his going in to Thamar, in an inceſtuous manner? Wherefore I think rather that theſe things are ſet down, that the full hiſtory of Iudah his proceedings, before he came to beget Pharez one of the progenitours of Chriſt of Thamar, might be underſtood, that ſeeing his and her foul vices we might admire the grace of God towards ſinners, and not be ſwallowed up of deſpaire for any of our ſins: whereas it may ſeem to be a diſparagement to Chriſt to come of ſuch parentage, it is not, but as filthy places, upon which the ſun ſhineth, do not pollute the ſun, but are purified by the ſun-beams, ſo Chriſt contracted no defilement from them, but they were ſanctified and made glorious by him, the filthineſſe of their ſins being done away.

Verſe 3,4.

Vatablus.

Iudah being married hath three ſonnes; Er, ſignifying vigilancy; Onan, fortitude or grief; and Selah, peace: and touching the third, it is ſaid, that he was in Chezib when ſhe bare him, the vulgar Latine, and ſhe ceaſed bearing, but falſly, for Chezib is a City in Paleſtina, but being Engliſhed, it ſignifieth a lie, whereupon it is likely, that the vulgar Latine goeth, as if ſhe made no doubt, but to have had more children after this, but had none, wherein ſhe was in a lie.

Verſe 6,7, Verſe 8,9, Verſe 10.

Auguſt. contra Fauſt. lib. 22. *cap.*84.

Hebræorum traditio.

Er being grown up, Iudah took him a wife, but he was wicked, and the Lord ſlue him, and likewiſe Onan. Here becauſe it is not particularly ſet down, what the ſin of Er was, there are divers conjectures. S. Auguſtine ſaith, that it was cruelty, and that theſe two figured out two ſorts of wicked men, the one of ſuch as hurt others, the other of ſuch as will not benefit others. But the Hebrews ſay, that the ſin of Er and Onan was all one in ſubſtance: For Tamar being a faire woman, and he being greatly enamoured with her beauty, knowing

ing that by bearing of children it would the ſooner break; he to prevent her impregnation, ſpilt his ſeed, intending in his marriage not the increaſe of poſterity, as he ſhould have done, but only the ſatisfying of his carnall luſt, and this is followed by moſt. This was ſuch a wickedneſſe in him, as that of the Sodomites, *Gen.*19. He is ſaid to have been wicked before the Lord, that is, notoriouſly wicked, not regarding, who knew how ill he did whether God or man. See for this phraſe before, *Gen.*10.9. and by this phraſe it ſhould ſeem, that his ſin was not ſecret betwixt him and his wife alone, but open to the world, which maketh rather for the opinion of Auguſtine, then for that of the Hebrews, and if it had bin the ſame ſin with that of Onan, it would doubtleſſe in like manner have been expreſſed. For this his wickedneſſe God ſlue him, that is, by ſome open judgement, ſo that all men might take notice, that it was Gods hand, wherewith he was ſmitten. It may be noted, that רע ſignifieth wicked, and ער by which word Er is ſet forth by altering the order of the letters is רע wicked, ſo that the Anagram of his name was moſt true. I cannot with Ainſworth ſay that God ſlue him, becauſe he would have no wicked man of the line of Chriſt, for what elſe was Jechoniah and Judah himſelf for his inceſt, but this was done for the terrour of ſuch as are impudent in their wickedneſſe.

Touching Onan, his father Judah would have him to take his brothers wife, being thus left, to raiſe up ſeed unto his brother. A queſtion here offereth it ſelf, ſeeing this law was not made till afterwards in the dayes of Moſes, Deut. 25. how Judah was ſtirred up to appoint his ſon Onan thus to marry? To this it is generally anſwered, that although this law were not now written, yet as divers other laws, about clean and unclean creatures, and of altars and ſacrifices, &c. were obſerved, God ſpecially guiding his ſervants of old, ſo to do by inſpiration, and thus the ſon had them from the father, generation after generation, ſo doubtleſſe this law had been by the like guidance obſerved amongſt the Hebrews from the beginning, and that line of which they come; the writing of theſe laws afterwards being but for durability, leſt in continuance or time, as this Nation increaſed, and they were diſperſed, theſe laws ſhould amongſt ſome of them be obliterated and forgotten. Yet Philo ſaith, that even amongſt the Canaanites the like lavv vvas followved. If it may ſeem to be repugnant to another lavv, vvhereby the brother is forbidden to marry the brothers vvife. This is eaſily anſwered, it is an exception to that generall law, ſuch a thing is not to be done, but in caſe that the brother dieth without iſſue, in which caſe for a good greater then the evil comming by a marriage with one ſo neer a-kin, that law was diſpenſed withall, and the iſſue firſt comming by a mans marrying with his brothers wife thus, was counted to the dead brother, and called by his name. This law of raiſing up ſeed of the relict to the eldeſt brother laſted no longer then the firſt-born amongſt many brethren, Chriſt Jeſus to come was figured out, ſo that he being come, it vvere inceſt now in any caſe for a man to take his brothers wife.

Verſe 8. Queſt.

Philo.

Levit 18.

For the ſin of Onan, it was moſt deteſtable. 1 Becauſe it was unnatural to ſpill the ſeed given him for generation. 2 Becauſe he did great wrong thus unto Tamar, hindering her, that ſhe could not be the mother of children. 3 He did, as much as in him, marre the ſeminary of the generation of man, that he ſhould have no further increaſed. 4 He was envious in the higheſt degree againſt his dead brother, rather then he would raiſe up ſeed unto him, he preferred to go himſelf ſeedleſſe. Laſtly it was alſo aggravated, in that Er being made an example for his wickedneſſe before him, he would not yet take warning thereby, wherefore he was moſt juſtly by ſome remarkable judgement ſoon taken away alſo.

Onan. ſin.

Tamar becoming thus a Widow the ſecond time, Judah biddeth her to ſtay in her fathers houſe, till his other ſonne Shelah vvas grovvn up, being afraid to match her yet unto him, leſt he ſhould be ſlain alſo. He thought the cauſe of his ſons death, ſaith Calvin, not to be in their vvickedneſſe, but in the woman, and therefore he thus defrauded her, ſo blinde are parents to ſee into the faults of their children. It was certainly an unjuſt thing in him thus to delude her. But it ſeemeth, that having another ſon, ſhe being matched once into his family, & having no childe, it was not lawful for her to mary again elſewhere, but was tied to that family, ſo that his ſpeech herein to her was but according to courſe, yet in that he meant not to do as he ſaid, he offered injury unto her.

Verſe 11.

Calvin.

Verſe 12. Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

After this the wife of Judah dieth, and his mourning time for her being over, he goeth with his friend Hirah, who was ſpoken of before, *v.*1. to Timnath to his ſheep-ſhearing: this, as one ſaith, was ſix miles from Odulla. Tamar hearing of this, and finding that he went about to deceive her in the matter of Shelah diſguiſed her ſelf, and ſate in his way in an open place, in Hebrew בפתח עינים in apertione oculorum. Some, as Calvin ſaith, underſtand hereby a place, where two wayes met, others a place where a fountain ran into two rivers, becauſe עינים ſignifieth, as eyes, ſo fontes: ſome tranſlate it, as a proper name, in oſtio Henaim, the plain meaning is in ſome publick place, where mens eyes might look upon her, as they paſſed by, ſhe feigning her ſelf to be a common woman, and being attired accordingly The word put for harlot here is Kadeſhah, ſignifying holy, but it ſetteth forth one moſt unholy and commonly fornicating, as Kadeſh a Sodomite, *Deut.*23.17,18. 1 *King.*14.24. becauſe ſuch uncleanneſſe was committed in the conſecrated places of the Heathen, as we may gather, 2 King. 23.7. Hoſea 4.14. This trap being ſet thus for Judah, he is taken, and goeth in unto her, being veiled, for even Whores in thoſe days were taken with a kinde of baſhfulneſs for their ſhamefull ſin. He agreeth to lie with her for a kid, and ſhe demanding it, giveth her for a pledge, till he ſhould ſend it, his Bracelets, Signet and Staffe: Calvin readeth for Bracelets Pallium, Vatablus, Cidaris tua, and ſo Luther likewiſe expounding it of ſome linnen, turbanto, like that of the Turkes, which he ware about his head and neck, being an enſigne of dignity in that Countrey, as the ſignet alſo was. The Hebrew word is פתילך, which cometh of פתל luctare cum implicatione membrorum, ſo that it ſignifieth properly a folded cloth, wherewith any thing is covered, as Numbers 19.15. wherefore I approve rather of that of Vatablus, then of the vulgar Latine Armilla, followed in our tranſlation Bracelet, of which no ſuch reaſon can be rendered, neither did men but women weare theſe. They were enſigns of his dignity, but he refuſeth not to part with them to have his luſt ſatisfied into the hands of an whore; whereby we may ſee how violently, and without all reſpect men are carried to this wickedneſſe, if they ſuffer fleſhly luſt to ſway with them. Theſe pledges being obteined, he lyeth with her, and ſhe was with childe; But when he was gone, Tamar departed thence, and put on her Widowes raiment again. Judah then ſendeth the Kid by the hand of the Adullamite, but the whore could no where be found. Three moneths after Judah heareth that Tamar was with childe, whereupon he would have her burnt. A queſtion here ariſeth, why Judah would have ſo ſevere a puniſhment inflicted? It is anſwered, that ſtoning to death for an Adultereſſe was appointed afterwards by the Law of God, and before that moſt anciently, as the fathers had other lawes by inſpiration, ſo they had this of putting Adultereſſes to death, and as Muſculus ſaith, the cuſtome was in thoſe parts to burn them, *Levit.*21.9. If a Prieſts daughter had played the harlot in her fathers houſe, ſhe was to be burnt, hereupon ſome think that Tamar was Melchizedecks daughter, and therefore this great puniſhment was appointed her, but this is a fond conceit. We may ſee by this and by other lawes amongſt Heathen men, how hatefull Adultery was, ſo that it was moſt ſeverely puniſhed. Amongſt the Arabians it was puniſhed with death, as Strabo ſaith. Amongſt the Egyptians, the noſe of the woman was cut off, and the man was beaten with a thouſand ſtripes, according to Diodorus Siculus. Zaleucus the Lawgiver of the Locrians would have it puniſhed with putting out both the eyes, and when his ſon was taken

Verſe 14.

Calvin.

Verſe 15.

Verſe 18. Calvin. Vatablus. Luther.

Note.

Verſe 19,20 Verſe 21,22 Verſe 24.

Queſt.

Muſculus.

Levit.21.9.

Adultery. Strabo.

Diodor. Siculus.

in

in the offence, he that the law might not be broken, and yet his ſonne might not be made ſtarke blinde, cauſed one of his eyes to be put out, and one of his own. Amongſt the Germans ſhe was ſtript, her hair was cut, and ſhe vvas beaten through the ſtreet by her husband vvith a club. Amongſt the Perſians a King called Cabades, vvould have adultery go unpuniſhed, but this vvas ſo heinouſly taken by his Subjects, that they put him from his Kingdome, vvherefore it is a foul ſhame that in Chriſtian Common-vvealths this ſin is little or nothing at all puniſhed. But it may ſeem, that Tamar vvas no Adultereſſe, becauſe ſhe vvas ſingle. To this ſome anſvver, that ſhe vvas contracted to Shelah, and for one contracted playing the vvhore, and for one married, there vvas the ſame puniſhment appointed: for Shelahs brethren being dead vvithout iſſue, ſhe vvas his vvife in right, and therefore lying vvith another man, an Adultereſſe. And this ſeemeth to be the truth, although oppoſed by ſome, affirming that ſhe vvas yet free from Shelah, and the rather, becauſe he had novv taken another vvife, but this is onely a groundleſſe conjecture. But it may be demanded vvhat authority Judah being a private man had to command her to be thus puniſhed? To this ſome anſvver, that he appointed not the puniſhment, as having power of himſelf, but required the Judges according to the law thus to proceed againſt her. Some ſay, that he for his wiſdome was made a Judge amongſt the Canaanites, but this is improbable, and ſome, that in every family he that was the chief, had power of life and death in that family, but this is as improbable, and tending to the overthrow of a Common-wealth. Wherefore I ſubſcribe to the firſt. But although he would have her to be burnt, how can it be defended that he would have this done, ſhe being now with childe before ſhe was delivered? This was more then Heatheniſh cruelty, for to ſay nothing of the divine Law, the father ſhall not die for the childe, nor the childe for the father, the Romans appointed if any woman condemned to die were with childe, ſhe ſhould firſt be delivered, and then executed, and not before; ſo ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus, and Ælianus ſaith, amongſt the Athenians, a woman being condemned for Witch-craft, becauſe ſhe was with childe ſhe was preſerved till the time of her delivery. And Plutarch relateth the ſame touching the Egyptians. And in the civill law not onely the executing of a woman with childe, but the judging of her during that time is forbidden. And the ſin of Judah is aggravated the more in that having before wronged her, he was yet thus ſevere towards her; and that he being guilty of the foul ſin of fornication, durſt notwithſtanding without all conſcience of his own, as the Phariſees dealt by the adulterous woman, give ſentence thus againſt her.

Tamar hearing the ſentence of Judah againſt her, ſheweth his pledges, by which he was put to confuſion, ſaying, She is more juſt then I. Hereupon a queſtion ariſeth, whether ſhe may by any means be juſtified in this matter? Chryſoſtome, and after him Theodoret & Ambroſe hold, that Thamar vvas herein without fault, both becauſe ſhe was not moved with a deſire to ſatisfie luſt, but to have iſſue by that ſeed, unto which ſuch gracious promiſes were made, and this ſhe ſaw, that now ſhe could not have by any other meanes, Er and Onan being dead, and Shelah denyed unto her, and alſo becauſe herein ſhe ſerved the divine diſpenſation to bear two children, myſtically ſetting forth two peoples, and two kindes of life, viz. the Judaicall and the Spirituall, and to bear one, of whom Chriſt afterwards came, neither was Judah faulty herein, ſo Chryſoſtome. And Theodoret ſaith, that hereby it appeareth ſhe did thus not out of luſt, but for iſſue, becauſe after this ſhe companied no more, either with Judah, or with any other. Ambroſe ſaith, It was a ſhamefull thing then not to have children, and puniſhable by law, for the grace of Widow-hood and of Virginity flouriſhed not before Chriſts coming, and hereby he the rather juſtifieth her, becauſe ſhe ſought not to have iſſue by Judah, to the wronging of another woman, but his Wife being now dead. Contrariwiſe, Auguſtine ſaith, ſhe ſhould rather have alwayes been without children, then to become

Note.

Calvin.
Lyranus.
Tho. Anglicus.

Toſtatus.
Deut. 22.23.
Paul. Burgenſ.

Queſt.
Calvin.
Tho. Anglicus.
Toſtatus.
P. Burgenſis.
Pererius.

Queſt.

Anſw.

Ezech. 18.
Deut. 24.
Clemens Alex. Strom. lib. 2.
Ælianus lib. 5. variæ hiſtor.
Plutarch. lib. de ſera numinis vindict.

John 8.

Verſe 25, 26

Queſt.
Chryſoſt. hom. 62. in Gen.
Theod. quæſt. 94. in Gen.
Ambroſ. lib. 3. in Luc.

Vides ubique mulieris vitam probam, quòd non alienum præripuit thorum, ſed ſe ornatam Judæ obtulit, poſtquam defunctam ejus cognovit uxorem, &c.

Auguſt.lib.22. contra Fauſt. cap.26. Meliùs ſine filiis remaneret, quàm ſine jure matrimonii mater fieret. Neq; enim cùm Judah cum juſtiorem quàm ſe pronuntiavit, quaſi juſtam laudavit, ſed & minùs culpabilem ſibi præpoſuit, &c. quòd ſi laudata ab illo fuit, quid mirum ſi mulier peccatrix ab homine peccatore laudatur? Cap.83.

Luther.

Chryſoſt. hom. 1. in Matth. & hom.3.

a mother without the right of Matrimony. Whereas Iudah praiſeth her, as more juſt then himſelf, he praiſeth her not, as juſt, but preferreth her, as leſſe faulty, who becauſe ſhe kept not the ordinate ſociety in the procreation of children, is worthily found culpable. And if ſhe be praiſed of him, what marvell is it, if a ſinfull woman be praiſed by a ſinfull man? And whereas Judah may ſeem not to have been faulty, becauſe, notwithſtanding this fact, as the Manichees objected, he was numbred amongſt the 12 Patriarchs, he anſwereth, ſo was Iudas, although he betrayed Chriſt, amongſt the 12 Apoſtles. And vvhereas it is further ſaid, Iudah was ſingularly bleſſed of his father after this, it not being recounted againſt him, but Judas hanged himſelf, he anſvvereth, hereby it appeareth, that what is ſaid belongeth not to Judah, but to Chriſt, that vvas to come of his tribe, vvherefore his fault is laid open, that vvhen he is praiſed, becauſe he is not found to be ſuch another, vvho is meant may be ſought out. And laſtly, vvhereas a great good came of this inceſtuous meeting, for Chriſt deſcended of Pharez, he ſaith, that it is not hereby juſtifiable, becauſe no ſuch thing was intended by them, as the fact of Iudas in betraying Chriſt is not juſtifiable, becauſe great good came hereof, but vvicked and damnable. And as Auguſtine, ſo Ierome, Calvin, Luther, Muſculus, and all others condemn both Judah and Tamar for this. Luther ſaith, that Tamar committed the foul ſin of inceſt, and Judah all manner of ſin in this one ſacrilege, homicide, ſimulation, perfidy, and the offering of all kinde of injury. Yea and Chryſoſtome himſelf in one place ſaith, that Tamar and Bathſhaba vvere vvomen celebrated for ſin, and that the coming together of Judah and Tamar vvas filthy adultery. And indeed, hovvſoever the Lord vvrought ſecretly hereby; yet it can be counted no better, as Joſephs brethrens ſelling him into Egypt, vvas no better then man-ſtealing, and horrible unnaturalneſſe; and the Jevvs crucifying of Chriſt, no better then a moſt crying ſin of ſhedding innocent blood. For if it ſhould hereby be thought juſtifiable, becauſe there vvas ſome other thing myſtically intended by the Lord herein; by the like reaſon, murther, robbery, adultery, or any vvrong might ſometimes be juſtified alſo. The certain rule is, evill may not be done, that good may come of it: vvhereas Judah is aftervvards praiſed by Jacob and not blamed for this, haply he had before that time repented of it, and therefore as in other faithfull ſervants of God, having repented them, their faith is praiſed, and their ſin paſſed over in ſilence, ſo it vvas in Judah, or ſuch praiſe is given by vvay of prophecy, as Auguſtine noted before, Chriſt coming of the tribe of Iudah being meant.

Rom 3.

Verſe 27,28

And it came to paſſe, that in the time of her travaile, behold, twins were in her wombe, &c. Tamar was herein like unto Rebecca going with Jacob and Eſau, and when the time of her delivery came, one put out his hand firſt, about which the Midwife tieth a Scarlet-threed, and then he pulling it in again, the other came forth, being therefore called Pharez, becauſe, as it is ſaid, he brake forth, and then came out his brother, who was called Zarah. The word generally tranſlated a Scarlet-threed here, is by one denied to be rightly tranſlated ſo, affirming, that it ſhould rather be with a double-threed Another, that whereas a Scarlet-threed is commonly taken for a red threed, ſaith, it is rather to be taken for a black one, becauſe Coccus tranſlated Scarlet, is properly the name of a black ſilk ſo died, that the colour cannot be waſhed off again, and unto this he applyeth that, Eſay 1.18. If your ſins were as ſcarlet, I will make white as wool. But both שני ſignifieth Scarlet, as well as double, and therefore this being the common expoſition it is better to follow it, and a Scarlet-threed, as one noteth, was now uſed to ſet forth the dignity of the primogeniture. And Pliny writing of the Coccus, ſaith, It is a red grain of Galatia of greateſt eſtimation: again, he ſaith, that the colour of the Coccus is like to that of the Roſe, then which nothing is more grateful to behold. For the name Pharez, ſignifying diviſion, the Phariſees afterwards took their name from the ſame root, becauſe they counted themſelves holier then others, and vvere

Verſe 29,30

Oleaſter.

Toſtatus.

Muſculus.

Plin.lib.9.c.41. Lib.21.c.8.

were divided from them. For the words uſed by the Midwife: How haſt thou broken forth! this breach be upon thee. In Hebrew מה פרצת, ſo that the name Pharez came from the word uſed by her. The meaning is, Why haſt thou broken that Membrana, or Secundina, wherein thou waſt held in thy mothers wombe? A breach upon thee, Theſe words, ſaith Vatablus, are taken by ſome, as a curſe. The Chaldee Paraphraſt, How great fortitude haſt thou, that thou ſhouldeſt prevail! Some Hebrews, vvhy haſt thou ſtrengthened thy ſtrength! It was a ſpeech of admiration, his brother being betwixt him and the coming forth, how he ſhould get the precedency thus. For the name Zarah, that ſignifieth oriens, becauſe he ſeemed to have come out before the other.

Calvin.
Vatablus.
Chald. Paraphraſt.

Touching the myſtery of this place, all ancient Writers agree, that theſe things were figurative, yea Chryſoſtome himſelf, who is very little in allegorizing, yet will needs have an allegory here. For upon this place he ſaith, We muſt not inconſiderately paſſe over the things delivered in the holy Scriptures, nor ſuperficially ſalute them, but pierce into the profundity of them, that when we know the riches that lie hid there, we may glorifie God, who doth ſo wiſely diſpenſe all things. For if God had not meant ſome more myſtical thing by that which is done here, it could not have been, that Zarah ſhould have pulled back his hand, and have given way to his brother to come out firſt. But when he commeth to ſet down the myſtery, he ſaith, Abel, Enoch, Abraham and Noah were figured out by Zarah, but ſin increaſing, the law was given, and becauſe it could not give life, Chriſt came, who was figured out by Pharez, whereby, as I take it, he meaneth, that as Zarah was interrupted, that he could not come forth by the intervening of Pharez, ſo juſtification could not be but by Chriſt coming into the World. Theodoret to the ſame effect ſaith, As Pharez came forth, Zarah pulling back his hand, ſo the law came between thoſe that at the firſt were ſtudious of vertue & piety, and thoſe under the Goſpel, who by Chriſt were perfected. Irenæus ſaith, that Zarah was a figure of that people, which is uncircumciſed, beginning with Abel, Enoch, Noah, &c. but then giving way, that his brother might be borne, that is, the Jews, who were circumciſed, they come forth again in our Saviour Chriſt, whoſe bloud-ſhed was figured out by the red threed. Thus they, but the moſt common received Allegory by Iſidore, Cyrill, Rupertus, Rabanus, Ierus, &c. is, that Zarah figured out the Jews, and Pharez the Gentiles: for as Thamar ſignifying bitterneſſe bare them both, ſo Chriſts Paſſion vvhich vvas moſt bitter, vvas the originall of the Church both of the believing Jevvs and Gentiles. And as Zarah firſt offered to come forth, &c. ſo the faith of Chriſt vvas firſt preached to the Jevvs, but they going back, to the Gentiles, vvho imbraced it, and vvhen blindneſſe ſhall be taken from the eyes of the Jevvs, they ſhall be born unto Chriſt alſo, and be called Zarah, oriens, becauſe they ſhall look unto Chriſt, vvho is oriens. Thus Rupertus: Cyril not differing in ſubſtance, ſaith, that the Jevvs ſignified by Zarah began to forth, vvhen by ſacrifices and prophecies they foretold the Paſſion of Chriſt, figured out in Zarahs red threed, but the fulneſſe of time coming they vvould not believe, and then the Gentiles by faith got the precedency. Ferus & Rabanus beginning the Allegory higher ſay, that Tamar ſignifying bitterneſſe figured out repentance, Er and Onan thoſe, that either before the lavv or under the lavv vvould not repent, and therefore vvere deſtroyed. Rabanus ſaith, that Er ſignifying pellis, and Onan their ſorrovv, ſet forth tvvo ſorts of Kings, the one of bloud-ſhedders and ſuch as did much vvickedneſſe, the other of thoſe that did no good. Both theſe are deſtroyed, and then although Shelah lived, that is, the tribe of Judah continued, it had no King, till Judah, as both Ferus and Rabanus ſay, that is, Chriſt came to his ſheep, and begetteth of Tamar, that is, by faith and repentance, tvvo ſorts of people, &c. as before. And Rabanus proſecuteth this Allegory yet further. But that vvhich hath been already ſaid ſhall ſuffice, the reſt not being vvorth the naming.

Hom. 62. in Gen.

Theod. quæſt. 95. in Gen.

Iren. lib. 4. de hæreſ. c. 42.

Rupertus.

Cyril.

Ferus.

Rabanus.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Verſe 1.
Verſe 2.
Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.
Verſe 5.
Verſe 6.

HEre Moſes returneth again to the hiſtory of Joſeph, repeating firſt his bringing into Egypt, and ſelling to Potiphar, which vvas ſpoken of, Chap. 37.35, 36. And then he declareth hovv the Lord proſpered him in every thing that he took in hand, inſomuch that his Maſter obſerving it made him over-ſeer of his houſe, and put all that he had into his hands, and it is added, that he knevv not ought which he had, ſaving the bread, which he did eat. Thus when Joſeph was removed far from his fathers houſe, God yet was neer unto him to bleſs him and his labours in, ſuch manner that all might ſee the favour of God to be greatly towards him. And by this means God wrought for his preferm̃et in Potiphars houſe, thus comforting him againſt the miſery, unto which in this his captivity and ſervile eſtate he was expoſed. In like manner Iacob ſerving Laban had been bleſſed before, and Laban for his ſake, and ſo to have a ſervant fearing God is the way to enjoy his bleſſing. But whereas it is ſaid,

Note.

Luther.

He knew nothing that he had but the bread which he ate: Some, ſaith Luther, refer it to Ioſeph, as ſpoken of him, as if it were meant, that for all his fidelity and good ſervice that he did to his Maſter, he had none other food, but as other ſervants dry bread to live upon, being notwithſtanding through Gods bleſſing faire and vvell-liking, as Daniel and his fellovves vvere aftervvards, being fed vvith nothing but pulſe. But it is plainly ſpoken of Potiphar the Maſter, and not of Ioſeph the ſervant, as is further expreſſed, verſe 8. and the meaning is, that he medled not vvith any thing that he had, nor looked after it vvhether cattel or money, layings out or receivings, the taking in or letting go of ſervants, ſelling or letting, but onely vvith his daily diet, appointing vvhat meat he vvould have made ready, vvhether of this kinde or that, or in greater or leſſe quantity, as he meant to have more or leſſe company at his table: for bread is commonly put for all manner of food. Vatablus ſaith, He took no care about any thing but about eating and drinking, or that he reaped none other fruit of all vvhich he had. Some, he ſaith, hold that this is ſpoken, in reſpect of meat, vvhich the Egyptians vvould not eate vvith the Hebrevvs. And Luther ſaith, that ſome Hebrevvs more abſurdly hold, that by bread his vvife is to be vnderſtood, as is further explained, verſe 9. bringing for this purpoſe that of the vviſe man, *Prov.*9.17. Stollen waters are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant. The moſt genuine expoſition, and free from ſtreining is that vvhich I firſt delivered. That Ioſeph ſhould thus have all committed unto him vvas Gods ſingular providence tovvards him; ſeeing, hovv excellent parts ſoever be in ſtrangers, yet men are more inclining to commit their affairs to the truſt of thoſe that are bred and brought up about them, and not unto ſuch.

Vatablus.

*Aben Ezra Chap.*43.32.

Verſe 7,8,
Verſe 9,10,
&c.

But lo now, in the midſt of his proſperity God hath another great croſſe to exerciſe him withall, Potiphars wife by his permiſſion, becometh an Inſtrument of the greateſt miſery unto him, that had yet happened. She beholding the beauty and good proportion of Joſeph, being now in the prime of his age, tempted him to lie with her at ſundry times, and being denyed, grew more urgent upon him, inſomuch, as that when he was alone, ſhe caught hold of his garment, but he leaving it in her hand, fled from her, whereupon ſhe cryeth out, and telleth both the whole family and her husband at his coming home, that this Hebrew ſervant came in to mock her, but ſhe cryed out, and then he ran away; whereupon Potiphar being incenſed, putteth him in priſon. Theſe things were done moſt probably about the 27 year of Joſephs age, becauſe at 30 he ſtood before Pharaoh, and before that he had been ſometime in priſon, before that the Kings chief Butler and Baker vvere committed, and after their releaſe, he abode there ſtill tvvo years. It vvas a moſt ſtrong temptation, vvherevvith he vvas novv aſſaulted, to be deſired by his Miſtris, vvhom if he vvould ſatisfie, he might both have pleaſure, be ſecure as as touching the disclosing of it, and have her great favour for his further benefit, but in case he would not he might certainly expect some great evill by her meanes, yet such was the vertue of this young man, as that he could not by any such consideration be moved to sin against God. A notable example of chastity to be followed by all others, and to follow vvhich there is incouragement enough in the successe, vvhich he had, after that for a short time he had unjustly suffered. Of such chastity also was Susanna. And Valerius Maximus writeth of one Spurina, a most comely young man amongst the Heathen, an Hetrurian, that because he was desired by divers vvomen, he cut and disfigured his face, preferring rather deformity for the assurance of his sanctity, then beauty to insnare the eyes and hearts of any, and hereby he took away that suspicion, vvhich vvas in jealous husbands and parents.

Valerius Maximus, lib. 4.

Rupertus praiseth Joseph, as expressing four vertues in this one thing; temperance, in that he refreined from his Mistris tempting him; justice, in that he vvou'd not do this injury to his Master; fortitude, in that being sollicited from day to day, he could not yet be overcome; and vvisdome, in that he preferred vvith a little temporall losse of his garment to cast farre from him the fire that might have been dangerous to his soul. That which is here related touching Ioseph and his Mistris is excellently dravvn into an Allegory by Gregory and Rupertus thus. As Ioseph vvas comely and beautifull to behold, so vvas Christ to the spirituall eye: but as Josephs Mistris affected him to satisfie her filthy lust, so the Jewish Synagogue was affected to the Christ to come for a worldly benefit, imagining, that he should be a most mighty Prince, ruling after the manner of an earthly Emperour over all, and advancing to great dignity his own Nation. But as Ioseph being desired by his Mistris, resisted her unlawfull desire from time to time, and at last left his garment with her and fled; so Christ would not satisfie the Synagogue in this respect, but leaveth unto her desiring him, that is, their imaginary Christ most earnestly, his exteriour garment, as it were, of the letter of the Scripture not being understood. The Synagogue then complaineth as this woman to her husband, and sheweth this garment, that is, argueth and disputeth out of the Scriptures not understood against Christ before the high Priest, being as it were her husband, and he being incensed, procureth his apprehension and crucifying, and consequently his going into the Sepulchre, as it were into the prison. But as Ioseph, he was not held there, but after a while, delivered both himself and others, for by death he destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the Devill, &c. Rabanus Maurus hath both this and another out of Isidore, which I do not so approve of, and therefore omit it.

Gregor. Rupert. Psal. 45.

Heb. 2. 15.

Rab. Maurus.

Joseph being committed to prison was still blessed of God, so that the Keeper put all his prisoners under him, and he did all that was done there; Or as the Chaldee Paraphrast hath it, all was done according to his word, or as he appointed. It is a marvell, saith Calvin, that the Prison-keeper durst expresse so much favour to a man with whom Potiphar was so greatly offended, but it is likely, that Potiphar soon understood the truth of the matter, and so was somewhat appeased, but would not release him yet for the disgrace, or he was held by God from prosecuting him with wrath. And haply Joseph told the Prison-keeper, how unjustly he was accused and committed, so that finding God to be with him, he passed not for the crime objected against him. Thus, as Ferus noteth, the just lose one friend, but gain another, may be shut up in prison, but cannot be shut from Gods favour, they are even as Rulers in their bonds, as Ioseph was. And this also may well be applyed unto Christ, he was first set over prisoners, that is, sinners bound with sin, and the poor, healing the one, and preaching comfort to the other in his humbled estate, being afterwards more highly exalted in heaven, as Joseph in Egypt: thus also Ferus, who followeth Rupertus, addeth moreover, that all the prisoners were delivered to Christ coming into the prison of hell, that is, all the fathers, and by him were then delivered. But we have no warrant of Scripture for this, but for Verse 21.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Note.

Luc.16. for the contrary, that the faithfull went to heaven in soul at the time of their departing hence, as since, so before the coming of Christ, seeing there be no more places mentioned but heaven and hell, and whoso is cast once into hell, can never come out again.

CHAP. XL.

Verse 1,2,3. Joseph being thus favoured through Gods blessing by the Prison-keeper, after that he had bin there a certain time, but how long it is unknown, the chief Butler and Baker of the King were upon his displeasure against them committed likewise. What offence they had done is not set down, but the Hebrews who are full of fictions, say, that he found a fly in his cup and a stone in his bread, and for this being wroth at their negligence, he sent them to prison.

Hebræi. But it was certainly some greater offence, or else one of them should not after this have been hanged as he was. The vulgar Latine, verse 1. inserteth, which is not in the Hebrew, two Eunuchs.

Verse 4. These being thus committed to ward in the prison of the Captain of the Guard, the Captain of the Guard set Joseph over them: in the vulgar Latine, The Keeper of the prison set Joseph over them, these, saith Pererius, were all one, but Calvin noteth a reconciliation now in the Captain of the Guard unto Joseph, or else that there was a new Captain at this time, which he saith is not so probable. It is not likely that one man supplyed two offices, as Pererius saith, but that Joseph having all the prisoners committed to him before by the Keeper of the prison, so that he did all now there, these men being sent in by the Captain of the Guard, were delivered to Joseph as the Jaylors Deputy, the Captain not taking any particular notice, who this was, and so he might be said to have set Joseph over them, because he sent them to prison, where they came under the Jaylor or his Deputy. For if Potiphar, Josephs Master had been reconciled unto him, he would not doubtlesse have kept him still in prison two years more, but have set him at liberty, though not immediately for some reason before rendered, yet in processe of time, which he never did. For the time of the continuance of these two Officers in prison, it is said to have been for a season, in Hebrew ימים certain dayes, in the translation followed by Marlorate a year, but they were deceived, saith Calvin that so rendered it, because this word setteth forth a long time, but it is uncertain how long.

Pererius. Calvin.

Verse 5. Verse 6,7, Verse 8 The two Officers of Pharaoh being thus in Ward, dream each of them his dream in one night, which made them sad and pensive in the morning, then Joseph demandeth the cause, they told him that they had dreamed, and wanted an Interpreter. But he put them in good comfort, because he said interpretations were of God, and bad them tell him their dreams. Dreams, saith one, either are naturall coming from the humours of the body, or things in the fantasie, or spirituall; and these are either divine or diabolicall. This was a divine dream coming from God, which is always such, as that it leaveth an impression in the minde, so that he which hath such a dream cannot be quiet, but is much troubled, till he understandeth the meaning thereof, as in these men, and in Pharaoh afterwards, and in Nebuchadnezzar. And alwayes as Ferus noteth, when a dream cometh of God, he doth either reveal the meaning by his spirit, or sendeth some other to interpret it, when therefore it is not so, we should passe over dreams as vain, and not be troubled at them. And he noteth in that Joseph being himself a prisoner, yet is chearfull, and cheareth up his fellow-prisoners, what the comfort of a good conscience is to a just man, nothing can daunt or dismay him, when others being in the like case are sad and heavy.

Sebast. Munsterus.

Ferus.

Note.

Verse 9,10, Verse 11. Then the chief Butler telleth his dream, saying, A Vine seemed to be before me having three branches, these I took and pressed them into Pharaohs cup, and gave it it into his hand. And Joſeph expoundeth it, ſaying, The three branches are three dayes, within three dayes ſhall Pharaoh reſtore thee to thy place. But think on me, and make mention of me to Pharaoh to bring me out of this houſe. For I was ſtolne out of the Hebrews land, and here have done nothing, for which they ſhould put me into the dungeon. Verſe 12,13

Joſeph had been upbraided by his dreams, behold, ſaid his brethren, here cometh this dreamer, but now he beginneth by expounding dreams to grow famous. Saint Auguſtine following the Hebrews ſaith, that Joſeph ſinned in ſeeking deliverance, as a reward for this free gift of God beſtowed upon him to expound dreams, and therefore for a chaſtiſement it is certainly to be held, that he kept the Butler from ſpeaking of him to Pharaoh, although he were intreated, and he was held after this two years more in priſon, that he might learn, that his deliverance was to be ſought of God, and not of man, according to that, God doth chaſtiſe every ſon whom he loveth. But by Luther and Calvin, and others Joſeph is herein juſtified, becauſe, as Calvin ſaith, he conceived this to be the meanes of his deliverance, which he ought not to neglect. For as miſery is patiently to be borne, ſo when God ſhevveth any way of help, not to uſe it, is to tempt God. Joſeph might well conceive novv that God had given him this gift of interpreting dreames: that he vvould raiſe him up to a better eſtate, as before by dreams vvas revealed, and therefore he might lavvfully deſire to have it ſpoken of, and I doubt not but God vvho gave him this gift, ſtirred him up thus to move the chief Butler, that his innocency might come in remembrance before Pharaoh, and indeed the event ſheweth no leſſe, in that afterwards by the Butlers making mention of him to Pharaoh, he vvas delivered and advanced, although for his further exerciſe he vvas kept ſtill in priſon tvvo years. And as Chryſoſtome noteth, this made for Joſeph, that he came not out novv, but afterwards vvith the greater honour, although he approveth his requeſt made to the chief Butler for a preſent delivery. He ſaith, that he vvas ſtolne, meaning by his brethren, making a ſervant of him when he was free, and robbing his father of him whoſe he was, for the Amalekites ſtole him not, but bought him of them. Out of the Hebrews land he ſaith, and not out of the land of Canaan, becauſe as Muſculus ſaith, the Hebrews were well knowne to the Egyptians, as being of chief note there.

Auguſt. Serm. 82 de Tempore Sine ulla dubitatione credendum, quòd Deus pro caſtigatione ſancti Joſeph non permiſit magiſtrum pincernarum recordari eorum, quæ exeunti ipſi de carcere ſupplicaverat. Heb. 12. Revel. 3. Luther. Calvin. Muſculus.

When the chief Baker heard this, he told his dream, ſaying, Me thought I had three white baskets upon my head, and in the uppermoſt of them were all manner of bake-meats for Pharaoh, and the birds did eat them out. And Joſeph ſaid, the three baskets are three dayes, at the end of three dayes Pharaoh will take thy head from thee, and hang thee upon a Gallowes, and the birds ſhall eat thy fleſh. Verſe 16,17 Verſe 18, 19

To expound this dream Joſeph knew would be moſt unpleaſing, yet being by God appointed, he readily doth it by a kinde of propheticall licenſe, and ſo muſt all Prophets ſet up by God, they muſt not onely ſpeak pleaſing things, but denounce even the ſentence of death where God would have them, or elſe they ſhall be judged as unfaithfull. Calvin. Note.

And the third day was Pharaohs birth-day, in which he made a feaſt to all his ſervants, and then it was done as Joſeph had foretold, but the chief Butler remembred not Joſeph. Pharaoh and Herod onely, the one a Heathen, the other moſt wicked, are ſaid to have feaſted upon their birth-day. In prophane Writers we read of many. Plato ſaith, when the King had a ſonne, his birth-day was kept with feaſting at the Court, and afterwards yearly in all Aſia, where he was to reign. Xenophon ſaith, that the Meds had the ſame cuſtome before that the Perſians reigned in Aſia. And the Greeks took it up from them, and the Romans likewiſe. They then were moſt licentious and riotous, forgetting God the Author of their life, when they ſhould chiefly have remembred him, ſaith Calvin, and yet diſalloweth not the cuſtome of feaſting upon the birth-day. But becauſe there was never any ſuch cuſtome in the Verſe 20,21 Verſe 22,23 Matt. 6. Plato in 1. Alciade. Xenophon lib. 1 de Cyri pædia. Calvin.

Church of God, but upon the birth-day of Christ, who brought matter of joy to us all, and the birth of man is in sin and misery, and so such as is rather to be mourned for then feasted for, till he be regenerated: I rather hold with them that censure this custome, as superstitious. The servants to whom Pharaoh made a feast, were his Officers and attendants at the Court, of which these in hold were two, wherefore he sendeth for them, but restoreth onely the one, and condemneth the other, who is hanged, and the birds eat his flesh. This is the first hanging upon a tree that we read of, and it was a kinde of death which was counted most heinous, wherefore the suffering of our Lord is hereby aggravated, and this death is indeed pronounced accursed of God. But whereas amongst the Heathen they were suffered to hang till the birds ate their flesh, amongst Gods people this was forbidden, no man that was hanged must be suffered to hang all night, lest the Land should be defiled.

Phil 2.6. Deut.21.23.

Touching the chief Butlers forgetfulnesse of Joseph, he did herein after the manner of Courtiers, who are so affected with their own present felicity, and so set upon ingrossing the Princes favour to themselves, as that they think no longer upon Joseph in prison, neither care they to speak of any thing but what may please the Prince before whom they stand, to obtein the more favour to themselves onely at his hands.

As in all other things hitherto, so in that which is here related, Joseph was also a figure of Christ Jesus. For as he was comfortable to his fellow-prisoners sorrowing, and cheared them up: so Christ did the daughters of Jerusalem weeping for him, as Ferus hath it, but especially his Disciples, by telling them of the comforter. And as Joseph spake comfort to one of the two with whom he suffered, but not to the other: so Christ dealt by the two theeves that were hanged together with him, and to one sort of people he shall speak terrour at the last day, and to the other comfort, saying to them, Go, ye cursed; to these, Come, ye blessed. These, as the Butler, see the Vine Christ with three branches, godhead, soul, and body; and these branches are pressed out in the passion of Christ believed in, and as three dayes were set to him, so there are three markes of the elect. 1 To live inoffensively, and yet to suffer. 2 To love all the good, and to joy in the good of all others. 3 To hate sin in himselfe and in others. Contrariwise, the cursed are pressed with sin, as the Baker with baskets, for sin is like a tallent of lead; and as he had three dayes set to him, so they have three marks. 1 They live in sin, and yet prosper. 2 They hate the good. 3 They are hardened in sinning. Or Joseph giving different interpretations setteth forth Christ diversly foretelling of the Gentiles and of the Jewes; of the Gentiles that they should be received: of the Jews, that they should be blinded and rejected. Thus Ferus. Rupertus saith, that here are figured out the elect received to mercy, and the reprobate condemned to hell out of the same corrupt masse of mankinde. For as here two alike offenders are diversly dealt withall, so we being all sinners by Adams transgression, God yet chooseth some out of his meer mercy, and rejecteth others out of his Justice. And as no man can tax Pharaoh for this, no more can they the Lord, he condemneth not all, because he should then be all severity and justice, neither doth he save all, for then he should be all mercy, but some he saveth, and some he condemneth, that he may appear to be as he is, Mercy and Justice, and be so celebrated throughout all generations. And hereby also doth Ferus approve the Lord his proceedings.

Ferus.

Zach.5.

Rupertus.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLI.

Joseph being neglected by the ungratefull Butler, at the end of two years is delivered by a new occasion offered of God. Pharaoh the King dreameth, and none but he can be found to interpret his dreams, wherefore he is sent for, and having interpreted them is highly promoted Pharaoh, as Ferus noteth was a good King, and although he were an Heathen man, yet he was not without the knowledge of God, as appeareth in that he speaketh of him as the Authour of the wisdome that was in Joseph, v. 38, 39. Pharaoh was the common name of every King of Egypt successively untill the time of Alexander the great, as Cæsar is the name of every Roman Emperour. Pharaoh signifieth a revenger, and so was a fit name to put the King in minde of his duty, to punish the wicked, and to defend the just. Two years passed, before that Pharaoh had these dreams, or Joseph was any more thought upon by his chief Butler, a long time for holy Joseph to endure imprisonment, and to be left without any appearance of that raising up, which was promised. But when things seem to be most desperate, God is neerest at hand to deliver his servants out of all their troubles.

Ferus.

Verse 1.

Note.

Pharaoh saw in his dream seven fat kine feeding in a medow, and after them other seven kine lean and ill-favoured, which ate the first seven up, and after that seven eares upon one stalk rank and good, & after them seven eares blasted with the east-winde, that ate them up. Josephus counteth the two years, at the end of which Pharaoh had these dreams, beginning at Josephs first coming into the prison, But this is contrary to the text, beginning them from the time of the Butlers deliverance. Calvin noteth here, that God sometimes hath revealed his will unto Heathen men, touching temporall things, although the meaning was by them to be sought elsewhere, and therefore it is no marvell, if amongst them there have been Prophets; for the spirituall doctrine of life hath still alwayes been possessed by the Church, as the treasure of her inheritance. And saith, that the dream was doubled for two causes. 1 To stirre Pharaoh up the more to inquire the meaning. 2 That more light might be given to the thing signified: forsomuch as the vision of the eares of corne did more lively set forth the plenty and famine to come. That which is translated coming out of one stalk, Vatablus saith, is rendered by some, growing up into one stalk.

Verse 2.
Verse 3.
Verse 4.
Verse 5.
Verse 6,7.

Joseph lib. 1. antiquit.

Calvin.

Si notemus hoc discrimen, non mirabimur quædam oracula prophanis hominibus esse communia, quamvis spirituale vitæ doctrinam quasi hæreditatis suæ thesaurum possident Ecclesia.

Vatablus.

In the morning after these dreams Pharaoh was troubled much, and sent for all the Magi, telling them his dreams, but none could interpret them. The trouble in Pharaohs minde about these dreams, saith Calvin, was a prick left by God to stirre him up to inquire, and the seal as it were of the Spirit, that they came from God. But in that he sent to Wizards, he put himself into the Devils snare, and so took a course to be left in darkness without the fruit of these Revelations, although he thought these men to be Prophets of God.

Verse 8.

Calvin.

In the East, saith Luther, they had their Magi, in Babylon their Chaldees, in Greece their Sophi, and amongst the Romans their Wise men, every Countrey had his Doctors, who taught their religion and arts good and bad. And some such were maintained at the Kings charge, that having them ready at hand, they might make use of their wisdome and learning, as occasion served; for by counsell and wisdome a Kingdome is established. Nebuchadnezzar did thus afterwards, for he brought up Daniel and his brethren in the learning of the Chaldees. And therefore as Ferus well noteth, by those heathens Christian Princes may be reproved and other great persons, amongst whom wisdome and learning is not in estimation, but the foolish and illiterate are as well preferred about them, as such; it is a certain signe of a Kingdome going to ruine. Whereas all the Magi & wise men of Egypt can say nothing, it is to be imputed to Gods Providence, for the good of Joseph, for whose sake chiefly Pharaoh had these dreams; for it is strange, that the dreams being told, they did not according to the readineſſe of their wit, invent ſome interpretation, which with a credulous King might have gone for currant, but God held their tongues and wits that they were all ſilent, which was for the greater good of the King. And hereby he was doubtleſſe whetted on the more to inquire, as concerning the thing moſt difficult to be underſtood, when all theſe profeſſours of wiſdome were ſtunded at it, v.9. Then ſpake the chief Butler, and told Pharaoh, that there was a young man, an Hebrew, and ſervant to the Captain of the Guard, who had interpreted his and his fellowes dreams truly. This ſaid the chief Butler now, as Muſculus noteth, not in way of gratitude to Joſeph, but it being wreſted from him, leſt, if he being ſilent, the King ſhould have come to know of it by ſome other means, and ſo he ſhould have again incurred his anger. In telling of Ioſeph he beginneth vvith a remembrance of his old offence, for vvhich he vvas put in Ward, that he might magnifie the Kings mercy the more, for his deliverance. They are deceived, that expound this of his fault of ingratitude againſt Ioſeph, as if he had novv confeſſed that, for he meaneth his fault againſt the King. Then Pharaoh ſent and they brought Joſeph out with ſpeed, and he ſhaved himſelf, and changed his garments; and came to Pharaoh. Here vve may ſee, ſaith Calvin, what neceſſity vvill make men do, a proud King and his vain Courtiers, that vvould not othervviſe have heard a Prophet of the Lord, if he had come to ſpeak unto them, fearing that ſome danger might be by theſe dreams portended to the vvhole Kingdome, do novv come running for a ſtranger, and that a ſervant, and an Hebrevv, vvhen as the Egyptians vvere held to be the vviſeſt of all peoples, and vvith all diligence hearken vvhat he vvill ſay. And thus it fareth commonly vvith all prophane men, they earneſtly deſire the Preacher may be brought unto them in their ſickneſſe, vvhen as in their health they have not regarded him. He lay ſqualidous and neglected it ſeemeth in the priſon, vvherefore being novv to come before the King, he is by barbing and putting on better apparell prepared. It vvas an uſuall thing of old not to cut the hair in time of ſorrowing, as vve may ſee in Mephiboſheth, 2 Sam. 19.24. and T. Livius lib.6. and Plutarch. in Caton. Uticen. ſpeak of the like, but by ſhaving underſtand cutting in a ſeemly manner. Joſeph little thought of this, till they came to the priſon for him, but behold, now a great ſudden change, he that was before neglected, is ſought unto and attended by the Kings own Miniſters, and brought to the Court to give counſell to the King, his affliction had been long, but now his advancement is greater then he expected or deſired. It would have contented him well to have been ſet at liberty onely; but thus they that patiently ſuffer much and long, may comfort themſelves with an expectation of the greater glory in heaven.

Luther.

Ferus.

Note.

Calvin.

Verſe 9,
Verſe 10,11
Verſe 12,13
Muſculus.

Verſe 14.
Calvin.
Note.

Ferus.

Note.

Then Pharaoh told Joſeph of his dreams, and how none could interpret them: but Joſeph telleth him, that there is a God, which ſhall give Pharaoh an anſwer of peace: in the Hebrew it is, ſhall anſwer peace to Pharaoh, which Vatablus ſaith, is ſpoken by way of wiſhing, as if Ioſeph had expreſſed a deſire that it might be good, which the Lord ſhewed to Pharaoh in his dreams. Joſephus ſaith that Pharaoh both dreamed, and had his dreams expounded to him in his ſleep, but had forgotten the interpretation; but this is his own fiction. Pererius ſaith, that Ioſeph certainly had Pharaohs dreams, and the interpretation revealed unto him, before he came to Pharaoh, or elſe he could not have told him, that God would ſpeak peace to Pharaoh. But others hold that Ioſeph knew not his dreams till he had told them, and ſpake thus by an Hebraiſm, as wiſhing that they might portend all happineſſe to Pharaoh; to whom I rather aſſent: becauſe it was not neceſſary, Pharaoh remembring his own dreams, that they ſhould be revealed to Ioſeph. He had had former experience of Gods mercy this way towards him, enlightening him to ſee into the meaning of dreams, and therefore he hoped of the like at this time, which maketh him ſo confidently to anſwer, that God ſhould ſpeak peace to Pharaoh, by enlightening him, through him a poor Organ, in the underſtanding of thoſe dreams,

Verſe 15,16
Vatablus.
Joſeph.
Vatablus.
Calvin.

dreams, whereupon his minde now troubled ſhould be quieted. The word tranſlated, It is not in me; is בלעדי beſides me, as if he had ſaid, I ſhall interpret them, but not through mine own wiſdome, but by Revelation from God. The Chaldee paraphraſt therefore hath it, not by my wiſdome, but from the face of the Lord, peace ſhall be anſwered to Pharaoh. And fit it was, that Joſeph ſhould thus anſwer him, becauſe he had ſaid, I have heard ſay of thee, that thou canſt underſtand a Dream, and interpret it, as if by his own ſagacity he had been able thus to do. And Trogus Pompeius writing of Joſeph, that being ſold into Egypt by his brethren, in a ſhort time he ſtudying the art Mgick atteined to ſuch skill, that he could interpret all Dreams, and wrote a Book of the underſtanding of Dreams, and told of the barrenneſſe to come in Egypt, which made him moſt dear to the King, and his anſwers were counted ſuch, as if they had come from God. But Ioſeph removeth the minde of Pharaoh from thinking upon him, to think upon God, thus taking this opportunity to inſtil ſome knowledge of the true God into an heathen man.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Trogus Pompeius lib.36.

Then Pharaoh telleth his Dreams to Ioſeph, and how that he had told them to the Magicians, but none could interpret them. In theſe Dreams, although the plenty and famine to come were ſet forth, yet becauſe Pharaoh underſtood them not, he had not this revealed to him after the manner of Prophets, but Ioſeph, who expounded them, was the Prophet, as both Auguſtine and Gregory do teach. And this plenty and ſcarcity did not ariſe from naturall cauſes, as is moſt probable, for then the Aſtrologers would have conjectured ſomewhat of it, but God ſent both miraculouſly, as he now revealed both to come for the good of his ſervant Ioſeph ſpecially. For Nilus the River was the naturall cauſe of plenty and ſcarcity there, if it overflowed 16 cubits or more, this betokened plenty, if but 15 or 14 or under, ſcarcity, and it was never known at other times to keep one conſtant courſe ſeven yeeres together.

Verſe 17, 18
Verſe 19, 20,
Verſe 21, 22
Verſe 23, 24.

Auguſt. lib. 12. de Gen.
Gregor. lib 11. Moral. in Job.

Then Joſeph ſaid to Pharaoh, The dream is one, God hath ſhewed to Pharaoh, what he is about to do, &c. The dreames were two both in the times and the things ſeen, but to one and the ſame effect, and why the dream was doubled, Joſeph having expounded it firſt, ſheweth, v.32. Becauſe the thing is eſtabliſhed by God, and God will ſhortly bring it to paſſe. 1 Becauſe God would have Pharaoh aſſured that it ſhould be ſo. 2 That he would begin it preſently, as a man, that in calling one doubleth his name, would have him come to him preſently without any delay. Unto theſe Lyranus addeth another reaſon, becauſe as the kine uſed for plowing being luſty or poore, did aptly figure out a good or a bad husbanding of the ground, whereupon enſueth plenty or ſcarcity, ſo eares of corn full or withered do aptly figure out a plentiful or ſcarce harveſt. And Toſtatus addeth a forth, viz. becauſe plenty ſtandeth not only in corn, but in fleſh and milk alſo, and therefore I think, that by the kine the plenty or want of paſture is ſet fourth, by the eares of corn plenty or want of corn.

Verſe 25.

Verſe 32.

Lyranus.
Ferus.

Toſtatus.

There come ſeven yeers of plenty throughout all the land of Egypt, &c. The ſeven fat kine ſhewed ſeven fat yeers, their comming up out of the River, that the ver Nilus ſhould be the means, their feeding in the Medow, the ſuperabundant overflowing of that River upon all the low grounds lying about it, making them to grow as a moſt fruitfull Medow. For Egypt is not watered as other Countreys, by the clouds, but by that River. The ſeven lean & ill favoured kine, the like unto which had not been ſeen in Egypt, ſhewed the famine to come to be greater, then ever hitherto had been, for Egypt was moſt fruitfull, being for the fertility called korreus mundi, and when in times paſt a famine had been in Canaan, there was plenty in Egypt, as in the dayes of Abraham and Iſaac. Again, the coming up of theſe alſo out of the River, ſhewed, that the River overflowing leſſe ſhould be the cauſe of this famine. Laſtly, their being as lean, when they had devoured the fat ſhewed, that the proviſion ſaved in the ſeven plentiful yeers ſhould not be ſufficient to feed men to ſatiety in the time of famine, but only in a poor ſparing manner to ſuſtain life.

Verſe 29.

Ferus

Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man diſcreet and wiſe, and ſet him over the whole

Verſe 33, 34

whole land of Egypt, and let him appoint Officers to gather up the fift part in the ſeven plentifull yeeres, &c. It is the manner of the Lords Prophets, ſaith Calvin, not only to declare things to come, but alſo to give counſel, and to exhort to that which is to be done for the beſt good: ſo likewiſe did Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar, whereas the anſwers of Apollo, and of Magicians were naked alwayes and void of any ſuch direction. Wherefore he that preacheth to explain the word, but addeth none exhortation, commeth far ſhort of his duty. It was very materiall, that now a man wiſe and faithfull ſhould be ſet over the land to prevent trouble: which might come by indiſcretion in the time of the famine, which is of ſuch force, as that if the common ſort be not provided for, they cannot be kept in quiet, but they will be ready to riſe in rebellion, and commit many outrages. Famine is ſo hard to be indured, that upon a time when a great famine was in Rome, L. Minucius having the care of providing for the people committed unto him, many of them covering their heads caſt themſelves into the River Tybur to avoid the tedioufneſſe of the famine. But why doth Ioſeph counſel, that onely the fift part ſhould be kept in the plentifull years, and not the one half which might ſeem more needfull? Anſw. Although a famine of ſeven years was to come, yet even in thoſe years the earth brought forth ſome fruits, and rich men would doubtleſſe ſtore up ſome corne for a year or two; and laſtly, in the time of famine it was not fit, that men ſhould be fully, but ſparingly fed, all which conſidered, a fift part taken up by the King might ſuffice.

Calvin. Note. Livius. Queſt.

Verſe 37,38

This counſell and wiſdome appearing in Ioſeph, pleaſed Pharaoh and his Courtiers ſo well, that he is appointed to be the man: for can we finde ſaith Pharaoh ſuch a man as this, in whom is the Spirit of God? upon which ſpeech Saint Auguſtine noteth, that this is the third time, that the Spirit of God is ſpoken of. 1 Gen. 1. The Spirit of God moved upon the waters. 2 Gen. 6. My Spirit ſhall not alwayes ſtrive with man. And the the third in this place.

Auguſt. qu. 143. in Gen.

Verſe 40.

Muſculus.

Vatablus.

Thou ſhalt be over mine houſe, and according to thy word ſhall all my people be ruled. In the Hebrew it is, At thy mouth ſhall the people all kiſſe, that is, when thou commandeſt they ſhall obey, the word kiſſing being put for ſubmitting, according to the cuſtome in the Eaſt, as Pſ. 2. Vatablus ſaith, that ſome render it, At thy word ſhall all my people be armed, and ſome ſhall be fed at thy beck.

Verſe 41,42

Pharaoh alſo ſet Ioſeph over all the land of Egypt, and taking the ring off his hand, he put it upon Ioſephs hand, arrayed him with fine linnen, and put a gold chain about his neck: Somewhat like to this was that which Belſhazzar did to Daniel, and Eſter 3.10. and ch. 8.2. Hereby ſaith Muſculus, Pharaoh did inaugurate Ioſeph into the principality ſpoken of, for by giving him his ring he gave him authority to ſeal what he pleaſed, by the fine linnen which was moſt pure and white, brought thither from India, and uſed onely by Princes, Nobles and Prieſts, he ſet forth his nobility, with which he was now indued, and by the gold chain uſed to be put about the neck of one that had done ſome famous exploit, as a token of his excellent vertue, he ſhewed, that Ioſeph was a man highly to be eſteemed of for this. Pliny ſaith, that unto the time of the Trojan warre rings were not uſed, becauſe Homer maketh no mention hereof, and that the Eaſt and all Egypt ſealed not with a ring, but wrote letters onely. But this is contrary to Moſes, who ſaith that Pharaoh put his ring upon Ioſephs hand, which was 600 years before that war of Troy. The giving of the Kings ring off his own hand to another, was conſtrued to be a ſign of principality given by Alexanders act, who lying ſpeechleſs, gave the ring off his hand to Perdiccas, whereby it was judged, that he meant he ſhould reign after him, although whileſt he could ſpeak he would nominate no ſucceſſour, but ſaid, his Empire ſhould be to the beſt. Amongſt the Romanes a gold ring was a ſigne of one that had the order of Knighthood, and by Lotharius the ſecond, it was afterwards for the advancement of learning allowed unto Doctours together with a ſcarlet veſture. For the fine white linnen here ſpoken of,

Dan.5.29. Muſculus.

Plin. lib. 1. c. 33.

of, and with which Princes were went to be clad, purple came since in use. Pliny saith, that there was certain fruit growing in Egypt, called Xilinon, of which this linnen was made, it being therefore called linum Xilinum. Plin. lib. 18.

Verse 43.

And he made him to ride in the second chariot that he had, and they cryed before him, Abrech, bow the knee, &c.

By his second chariot understand that, wherein the King used to let him ride, that was the second man in the Kingdome, a chariot doubtlesse most sumptuous of all others, next to that wherein the King rode alone. If any shall doubt, whether a servant of God might weare such rich and costly things, and ride in this state; it is not to be doubted but that being a Prince he may, not to make ostentation of his bravery, but to set forth the dignity of his place, keeping still in him an humble and modest minde. For Joseph must now necessarily accommodate himself to his place: where such necessity is not, a vertuous minde will rather prefer the cutting off of these superfluities. Calvin. Quest.

And they cryed before him; here, saith Luther, is the acclamation of people set forth, that nothing might be wanting to his honour. The Septuagint followed by the vulgar Latine have it, An Herald proclaimed or cryed before him; but in Hebrew it is in the plurall number, they cryed. The word translated bow the knee, is אברך Abrec, which is altogether omitted by the Septuagint. This word, if it be Hebrew, may be translated the father of the King, as some have it, of אב Father, and ךָ the King, or a tender father, because ךָ signifieth also tender, so Jerome, and the Thargum Hierosolymitanum renders the words thus, They cryed before him and said, Let the father of the King live, who is a Prince in wisdome, and tender in years. Aquila turneth it, Bow the knee, and so it is in the vulgar Latine, and then it must come of Barac, to blesse, or the knee, and this doth Calvin rather approve, and Vatablus, saying, that א is put for ה. But Calvin finally disliketh a curious seeking after the signification frō any Hebrew word, seeing it was spoken by the Egyptians: I preferre the common reading, bow the knee, because the most fit thing to be spoken in this case to stirre up all, as he passed, to honour him, as Ahasuerosh would sometime have Haman honoured, Ester 3.2. Luther. Chald. Paraphrast. Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen. Thargum Hierosolym. Calvin. Vatablus.

Verse 44.

Then Pharaoh said, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt. This seemeth to be a kinde of Oath, as if he had said, As true as I am Pharaoh the King, it shall be thus; none shall execute any office in the Common-wealth but by thy permission or admission, because he had spoken before of Pharaoh his appointing officers in all the land, v.34. unto which this is an answer, as if he had said, I will not, but thou shalt appoint them. Musculus.

Verse 45.

And Pharaoh called Josephs name Saphenath Paneah, and gave him Asinath the daughter of Potipherah Prince of On to wife. The name here given by Pharaoh to Joseph is held by most to be Hebrew, the first word coming of Saphan occultum, and Paneah being thought by all the Rabbins to signifie Revelator, for it is no where found again, but onely in this place. And therefore both R. Abraham and R. Solomon, and other Rabbins, Philo also, and Josephus, Theodoret, Chrysostome, Augustine, and the Chaldee Paraphrase render it occultorum interpres, aut revelator, or is cui occulta revelata sunt. The Septuagint read it Psomthophanech. But Jerome holdeth the name to be Egyptian, saying that the words do not sound as Hebrew, but as forreign words, and howsoever if they be taken as Hebrews, they signifie the revealer of secrets, yet in the Egyptian tongue they signifie Servator mundi, and therefore in his translation which is the vulgar Latine, he rendereth it so, and to make it more plain, it is there added, He called him in the Egyptian tongne Servator mundi. And although most be for the other, this seemeth most probable to me, because the King of Egypt gave him this name, who, it is most likely, would speak in his own language. Whereas Calvin preferreth rather the passing of these words over without translating them, because the Septuagint not knowing what exposition to give them expounded them not, this is as if by diligent inquiry Rab. Abraham. Rab. Solomon. Philo. Joseph. Theodoret. Chrysost. &c. Hieron. detrad. Hebr. in Gen. Calvin.

one one might not learn out the meaning of the forreign words, which others having better means to know them before, have not expounded. The Septuagint translated for the King of Egypt; and therefore no marvell, though wittingly they passed over Egyptian words uninterpreted, but Jerome writing for us that knew not that language, hath done well to search into the meaning for the common good of the Church. For the wife given to Joseph, she is thought by some to have been his Master Potiphars daughter, so say the Hebrews, and Jerome following them, who, he saith, relate the story of Potiphar thus: He bought Joseph for his beauty in turpe ministerium, but God in judgement caused his member hereupon to wither, & being now an Eunuch, he was chosen after the manner of the Hierophants to be chief Priest of Heliopolis. And to Jerome subscribeth Rupertus, Historia Scholast. and Iosta tus. But Chrysostome saith, that he was not the same Potiphar, but another man; and therefore to distinguish him, it is added, Priest of Heliopolis. So likewise Augustine, who argueth against the other, because Heliopolis, whereof he is not onely said to be Priest, but wherein, and so he must needs be resident there, was 20 miles distant from Memphis, where the Court was, and the office of the other Potiphar, Captain of the Guard required his attendance: and because the Priests of Egypt were not wont to serve elsewhere, or to bear any other office but onely in the Temples of their Gods; and lastly, if this had been the same Potiphar, Moses would not have passed it over in silence, as being a circumstance setting forth yet more his honour, that he to whom he had been servant was now glad to marry his daughter unto him. Philo also and Josephus speak of him as another man, and Lyranus noteth, that it is not the same name, for the first is Potiphar, this Potiphera; so likewise Musculus, who addeth, It is improbable, that Joseph would marry the daughter of so wicked a woman as that Potiphars wife. And hereunto do I assent, and I cannot but think Ierome worthy of blame for leaning so much to the fabulous traditions of the Jews herein, as therefore to go against all other Expositors and the plain text. For Priest which is in our translation, Calvin hath it, Prince of On, not doubting but that he was a principall man in that Kingdom, and Governour of that City; wherefore the Chaldee Paraphrast rendereth it Prince of On, and so Pagninus and Vatablus turn it, but in the vulgar Latine and in the Greek it is Priest, and both Philo and Iosephus affirm him to have been Priest. The word כוהן here used signifieth both, and because the chief man in that City, being otherwise called Heliopolis, the City of the Sun, wherein the Sun had a Temple, and an Idol was worshipped, was a Priest; it is most probable, that the chief Priest of that place is here meant, but he was doubtlesse a man of great and high place, that Ioseph might count it a preferment to have his daughter bestowed upon him: and hereby it is likely, the King sought to draw his minde from his own Countrey to Egypt, that he might fixedly abide there, and not think upon departing at any time to his fathers house. On, of which he is said to be Priest, that was now father in law to Ioseph, was otherwise called Heliopolis, as Ierome saith, and as Strabo saith, here was a Temple of the Sun, and Mneus an oxe was worshipped, as Apis was at Memphis, and that anciently it was a City of Priests, and of such as studied Philosophy and Astronomy. If it be demanded, how Ioseph could lawfully marry with such a woman? Luther answereth, that it is not to be doubted, but he instructed her in the knowledge of the true God, and he must now yield to necessity, marrying in that Countrey, where God had placed and so highly promoted him.

Hieron de tradit. Hebr. Traxit Hebræi, emptum fuisse Joseph à Phutiphare ob pulchritudinem in turpe ministerium, & à Domino virtutibus ejus accessit, posse electum esse in majorem Hieophantum in Pontificatum Heliopolitanos. Chrysost. hom. 63. in Gen. August. qu. 136. in Gen.

Philo. Joseph. Lyranus. Musculus.

Calvin.

Hieron. de locis Hebr. Strabo lib. 17.

Quest. Luther.

Verse 46,47 Calvin.

And Joseph was 30 years old, when he stood before Pharaoh, and he went out, and the land brought forth corne by handfuls, &c. The age of Ioseph, saith Calvin is here spoken of. 1 That it might appear how long he had suffered, even 13 years. 2 That Gods wonderfull mercy towards him might be acknowledged, in that he being so young, so large a dominion was committed unto him, which is not a thing usuall, but unto age and experience, and yet this was was without the envy, and with the good liking of all men, unto which may be added, that we might know how long he enjoyed a prosperous estate, even 80 years, for he lived in great honour till the year 110 of his age, so that the time of his misery was nothing to that; & in like manner may every godly man comfort himself, for after misery for a time he shal come to joy for ever. Again, because Joseph being yong, excelled in wisdome and all manner of vertue, youth, as Chrysostome saith, appeareth hereby to be no excuse for those that would excuse themselves thereby: for he was taken from his parents at 17 years old, in the heat of his his youth was tempted by his Mistresse, pressed with servitude and imprisonment, & yet he continued unmoveable as an adamant increasing in vertue, as in yeers. Fiftly, some light is hereby given into the Chronology, touching Jacobs age, when he begat Joseph, and consequently of the time of his dwelling in Canaan. Lastly, hereby is a pattern set forth of a fit age for a man to have authority and office committed unto him; of this age was David when he was made King, and Ezechiel when he was call d to prophesie, and John the Baptist, and Christ, and the age of 30 was a time set by the Lod, as a mature age to enter into a ministeriall office. There is indeed another age set, *Numb.*8.24. viz. the 25 year of a mans age, but that was to be taken into that ministery to be instructed, five years after which he might fully execute that office. Before that a man cometh to maturity of years, there is danger in admitting him to an office. For Wo, saith Solomon, to thee, O Land, when thy King is a childe, and it is spoken of as a judgement to a Land, when children are made their princes. Gregory upon the age of Ezechiel, when he was called to prophesie, viz. at the age of 30, saith, This sheweth that the word of doctrine according to the use of reason is onely in a perfect age. For Christ himself, although he asked questions at 12, yet he taught not till 30, though he alwayes teacheth the Angels in heaven. And Moses saith, Thou shalt not plow with the first-borne of thy Kine, hereby meaning our tender age, wherein we may not plough by teaching, for in our youth the coulter of our tongue should not dare to cut the earth of another mans heart. For as young plants before they be rooted, if they be handled, wither, but when they are rooted, they are not hurt by handling, or by the shaking of the winde: so he that is shaken by teaching in his youth, this being more then he can bear, withereth; and as a wall must have the humidity first dryed up, before that any thing toucheth it, or else it is beaten down again, &c. Whereas the example of Daniel, and Jeremiah, and Timothy may be objected, seeing they prophesied very young; he answereth, God by his power can make the tongues of infants eloquent, when it pleaseth him, but it is one thing when we speak of that which is ordinary, and another, when of that which is done by miracle.

Chrysost. hom. 63. in Gen.

2 Sam.5. Luc.3.23. Numb 6 3,4

Eccl.10. Esay.3.

Gregor. in Ezech. Cum primùm fauc juventutis nostræ tempora, à prædicatione cessandum est, & vomer linguæ nostræ proscindere non audeat terram alieni cordis. Nam ut arbusta plantata, si prius in terra radicata non fuerint manu tacta citiùs arescunt, & si semel rad cem fixerint, manus ea tangit & nihil officit; venti impellunt, nec tamen impellentes lædunt, &c.

In that Ioseph is said here to have gone over all the land of Egypt, it sheweth his great diligence in his office. The land brought forth by handfuls: In the Hebrew, saith Vatablus, it is, ad collectiones, or in acervos, so that great heaps of corne were made of the corne brought forth in these years.

Verse 47. Vatablus.

And he gatherd all the meat of the seven years into the Cities. This was great wisdome in each City to lay up the increase of the circumjacent field, and a great work to make provision of room for this purpose to keep it; whereas he saith, all the food, it is meant, all that was to spare in every of these years. Then he telleth of the innumerable quantity gathered by him, till that it could be no more numbered that is, by any usuall number, Aug. Qu. 137. and how that in this time he had by Asenath his wife two sonnes, the first called Manasseh, because saith he, God hath made me to forget all my labour, and my fathers house, and the other Ephraim, of פרה to increase. If it be demanded, whether this were not a sin in Ioseph to forget his fathers house? Calvin answereth, Some resolve it, that he meant onely to forget the injuries offered at home by his brethren unto him, but he rejecteth this as coact, and saith, that Ioseph did hereby shew himself to be drawn by the pleasures and honours of Egypt, that he determined now in effect to exclude himself from the Church of God

Verse 48.
Verse 49.
Verse 50.
Verse 51.
Verse 52.
Quest.

Calvin.

for them, and he praiseth him onely for his thankfulnesse to God for delivering him from his troubles, the name Manasseh given to his sonne, being a monument of his gratitude, and in that hereby he would be put in minde of his former baseneſſe, which is a thing, that proud men being raised up to honour, cannot indure should be remembred. I cannot think with Calvin, that Ioseph made any fault against God by thus saying, but rather subscribe to the exposition by him rejected. For having spoken of all his labour, that God had made him to forget, what can more aptly be conceived he should mean by adding, and my fathers house, then the troubles which he had also indured being at home with his father, by his churlish brethren? He did not mean certainly to forget his loving father, or the inheritance promised in Canaan to his posterity, for afterwards when he was ready to dye, he would have his bones carried into the land of Canaan, being assured by faith, that the time should come, when God would bring the children of Israel thither again to inherit it. But his present comfort was so great, that all former labours and sorrowes in that land or at home, which he had suffered, were now nothing unto him. Thus also Chrysostome. What meaneth he by his labours and his fathers house? Verily both his first and his second servitude, when he was plucked out of his fathers armes as it were, and contrary to his liberall education, he is made a servant, and his servitude in Egypt. And Ferus saith, He did not so forget his fathers house, as that he did quite put him out of his minde, for we see afterwards, how mindefull he was of him, but he rested in the providence of God, who had brought him into a strange land, and made him fruitfull there and honourable, as he had promised; and therefore taking this to be the land, where God would have him now to live, he desired not to return again to his fathers house.

Chrysost. Hom. 64. in Gen.

Ferus.

Verse 53,54 When the seven plentifull years were ended, the seven years of famine began, when there was want in all Countreys, but bread in Egypt, and at length there was famine in Egypt also; then the Verse 55. people cryed to Pharaoh, but he sent them to Ioseph. Here it appeared, how true the Lord was in that, which he foretold by his servant Ioseph. The famine extended to other Countreys round about as well as to Egypt, especially that Josephs brethren might hereby be forced to come into Egypt and submit themselves to him, and so the prediction of the Lord might be verified. But when other Countreys were pressed with famine, in Egypt there was still food, they having some knowledge before of the famine to come, layed up corne every one in store who was able to do it, and this served to relieve them for a time when they wanted in other Countreys. Here is a manifest fault in the Septuagints translation, in which it is, There was no bread, and in the vulgar Latine which hath it, And in all the land of Egypt there was a famine. But their store in Egypt being soon spent, there was a famine amongst the Egyptians also; whereby we may see the need that was of laying up in store by a publick Officer, as Ioseph had counselled.

Vatablus.

Verse 56,57 The famine being grown great in all places, Ioseph openeth his store-houses, and all the inhabitants of the earth came into Egypt to buy corne, that is, of the earth in all the Countreys neer-about, for this is an Hyperbole. As in all other things before related, so in these of this chapter Ioseph is a type of Christ. For as he was taken suddenly from the dungeon, and advanced to the highest honour in Egypt, a ring, a robe, a chain, and a chariot being bestowed upon him, a name given him, which was a great name, and they cryed before him, Bow the knee, and he had a Princes daughter to wife: in every thing there being a compensation made for that, which he had formerly suffered; for the hatred of his brethren, he was rewarded with the favour of the King and his Princes; for his servile estate, with exaltation; for the labour to which he was put with his hands in this estate, with a gold ring; for the coat pluckt from him by his adulterous mistresse, with a fine linnen robe; for fetters, with a gold chaine; for serving the prisoners, he serveth the King; for lying in a dungeon, he sitteth in a charriot; for a servile name, he hath a magnimagnificent name; for contempt, he hath reverence with bowing the knee; and for unlawfull pleasure contemned, he hath a wife of a princely stock; so God letteth nothing which his servants have suffered, to go unrewarded. And thus Christ Jesus had the white robe of innocency, the gold ring of his fathers sealing, the gold chain of all vertues, & the chariot of dominion over all, he had a name above all names & at his name every knee boweth, all judgement is committed to him, and he hath to wife the Church of God. For although some do not yet submit unto him, yet all the Heathen are given him for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession Hitherto the allegory from Ioseph to Christ is excellent, but that which goeth before is worth the reciting indeed, but more streined, viz of his expounding Pharaohs Dreames, before this his exaltation: for in like manner Christ first expounded and taught the will of the Father here upon earth, and then was exalted in heaven, this may well hold. But then it followeth. As Ioseph first spake of seven plentifull yeares, and then of seven years of famine; so Christ first preached repentance and faith unto salvation, and then to unbelievers denounced judgement and condemnation. Again, as seven fat oxen appeared, so seven graces were by Christ bestowed. 1 Remission of sin. 2 Satisfaction for sin. 3 Reconciliation with God. 4 Victory over the enemy. 5 Delivering prisoners. 6 Opening of Heaven. 7 The giving of the Holy Ghost: and as those seven were eaten up by seven lean oxen, so men are deprived of these by seven mortall sinnes. And as seven full eares appeared, so there were seven particular gifts given to us by Christ. 1 Gods receiving us to repentance. 2 Grace to grow. 3 Restitution of the good lost. 4 The communication of his merits. 5 Participation with his Church. 6 If we deserve ill, to be punished and purged here, and then to be spared. 7 Life eternall. But there be seven ill cogitatitons that will deprive us of these benefits, as the seven lean and thin eares ate up the full. 1 To think our sins are not so great. 2 That God is all mercy. 3 That others have sinned more. 4 That none though impenitent ought to despair. 5 If God will, I shall be saved, otherwise I shall labour in vain. 6 It is in my power, as to sin, so to repent. 7 I am yet young, and have time enough. The wise Reader may make a good use of these things, though over-curiously streined here. Moreover, as Ioseph at 30 years old went all over Egypt, so Christ at 30 went over Judea, and great increase of souls gained unto God, followed his preaching, but a famine succeeded when Christ suffered, all forsaking him. In the famine Pharaoh biddeth them go to Ioseph, and God biddeth go to Christ, but with this condition also, to do whatsoever he commandeth, then he openeth his store-houses, when by sending the Holy Ghost, he giveth such power to his Disciples, and not onely Judea, but all the earth is relieved by his grace, the bread of life being communicated to every Nation under heaven, Act.2. Isidore saith, that Christ rode in the chariot, when he was taken up into heaven, and that Ioseph called the Saviour of the World, was a most manifest figure of him If Josephs brethren had not sold him, the World had perished by famine, and so if Judas had not sold Christ to be crucified, it had perished for want of the Bread of life.

Musculus. Ferus.

Phil.2.6.

Psal 2.6.

Isidore.

CHAP. XLII.

Jacob hearing, that there was corne in Egypt, biddeth, his sonnes to go down thither to buy. A great question is here moved in generall amongst Expositours, how it happened, that Ioseph made not his prosperity known unto his father in all this time, there being eight or nine years past since his advancement, and so much passing to and fro between Egypt and the land of Canaan, that he might opportunely have sent unto him, especially, knowing, that he was wonderfully grieved for him, and it may seem strange, that he did not finde ſome means to ſend unto him before, that he might have been ranſomed out of that thraldome. This queſtion is moved and anſwered at large by Saint Auguſtine, who alſo addeth, that Ioſeph did not onely neglect to ſend to his father before, but when his brethren came down into Egypt, he would not be known unto them, but held Simeon in priſon, & required Benjamin to increaſe his ſorrow, but all this, he ſaith, was done by the diſpenſation of the Spirit of God, that Iacob being held thus in the fire of tribulation might be purged from his ſins, which all even the moſt holy have, 1 Iohn 1. Iames 4.1. &c. and ſo in the future judgement he might appear, as purified gold, that fire finding nothing more in him to be burnt up.

Verse 1,2. Quest.

Auguſt. Serm 82 de Tempore. Vaſa figuli probat furnax, & homines iuſtos tentatio tribulationis. Ut ergo ſanctum Iacob Deus velut aurum purgatum in ſu'uro iudicio præſentaret, priùs ab illo omnes maculas peccatorum abſterſit, ut in eo ille ignis quod exureret, invenire non poſſit. Theodoret.

Theodoret anſwereth it otherwiſe, ſaying, God both kept Ioſeph from ſending to his father, and although he uſed to reveal ſome things unto him, he revealed not this, that it might be fulfilled, which he had foretold unto Abraham, that his poſterity ſhould ſerve in a ſtrange land, and be evil intreated, for if Ioſeph had ſent to his father or he had otherwiſe known of his ſervitude, he would doubtleſſe have redeemed him from thence, and ſo that prophecie ſhould not have had the effect, Iacob and his family ſhould not have beene brought into Egypt, and ſo they could not have ſerved there, as was foretold. Thomas Anglicus ſaith, that Ioſeph made not his caſe known to his father, but expected, till that God, upon whom he altogether depended, ſhould reveal it. The reaſon of Theodoret is of little force, becauſe, if Ioſeph being in honour in Egypt had ſent for his father, they might as well have undergone the ſervitude before ſpoken of, as if comming by that means thither, that they did I think with Auguſtine, that God held Ioſeph from giving notice, and directed him, when his brethren came to uſe them ſo hardly at the firſt, that Iacobs affliction being increaſed to the uttermoſt, it might appear in his example, that God chaſtiſeth thoſe moſt, whom he loveth moſt; as he did alſo Iob, and that his comfort might be the greater, when he ſhould unexpectedly be delivered: the lower the ebbe of the miſery had been, into which he was brought, before that he came to be lifted up again. Gods wayes are not like mans wayes; although we may think it ſtrange, that Ioſeph could ſo long conceal himſelf, yet this was a thing by God appointed, who ruleth in the hearts of all, for his own greater glory, the greater comfort of Iacob in the end, and the puniſhment of his wicked ſonnes by the way. For, as one well noteth, now that Ioſephs miſery was at an end, and it was the time of his greateſt proſperity, they began to ſuffer for their former unnaturall dealing with their brother: and ſo at the end of this world, when the calamities of the godly ſhall be at an end, and they ſhall reign in felicity; the wicked ſhall be plunged into everlaſting miſeries. It was long agoe, ſince Ioſephs brethren had ſinned againſt him, even 20 yeeres, and in all this time they were not puniſhed for it; but now they are ſuffered to eſcape no longer: Quod differtur, non aufertur. Why ſtand ye looking one upon another? ſaith Iacob; whereby it appeareth, that they were in ſuch a caſe, that they knew not what to do in this ſore oppreſſion of the famine. They had made merry with the price taken for Ioſeph; but now they ſmart for it, by want of bread. But by Iacobs reproofe it ſeemeth, that they ſtood idle, as unwilling to take ſuch a journey; when others, round about, went into Egypt for food.

Tho. Anglicus. Expectabat ille tempus à Deo ordinatum: Quin & conſuluit modeſtiæ & reverentiæ fratrum, nolens eorum invidiam & malitiam prodire in publicum. Deinde placavit eorum invidiam, quâ fortaſſe potuiſſent inſtigari ad aliquid machinandum contra vitam ejus, ſi priùs ſciviſſent, cum in magna proſperitate viveret: & præter hæc in his latebant multa futurorum myſteria. Ferus.

Note. Vatablus.

Muſculus.

Verſe 3.

The ten brethren of Ioſeph then went into Egypt, but Benjamin was kept at home by his father, leſt, ſaid he, miſchiefe befall him. The word tranſlated miſchiefe, is אָסוֹן, which is put twice for death, ſaith Muſculus, Exod. 21. 22,23. and ſo it is expounded by the Chaldee Paraphraſt; but the Septuagint render Languor, or Laſſitudo. So they came into Egypt amongſt others, that going many in a company together, they might paſſe the more ſafely through the Land of the Canaanites and Madianites: this journey was about 300 miles. When Ioſephs brethren were come before him, they bowed themſelves to the ground. Here was fulfilled that which was foretold, which they in times paſt ſo much ſcorned.

Verſe 4.

Verſe 5.

Luther.

Verſe 6.

Verſe 7,8,9.

Ioſeph ſeeing his brethren knew them, but ſeemed ſtrange, and ſpake harſhly to them, and he remembered his dreams. He remembered his dreams, without doubt, long before this, but now he remembered them and thought, how they hated him for them Ye are ſpies, ſaith he, the word tranſlated ſpies cometh of רגל, ſignifying a footman, but it is uſed alſo for a ſpie. Thieves and robbers were amongſt the Egyptians commonly call'd Philiſtines, becauſe they applyed themſelves ſo much to wars, and to take preys; wherefore Joſeph calleth them thus, becauſe they came out of the ſame countrey, to hide the more his knowledge of them. To ſee the nakedneſſe of the land are ye come: In the Hebrew it is, to ſee the filthineſſe of the land; ſome tranſlate it, the weakneſſe; ſome, the ſecrets, becauſe pudenda ſignifie a mans ſecrets. The Septuagint; read it, the ſteps, veſtigia terræ; that is, which way they might come in; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, rupturam terræ. There are two things written of Egypt, firſt, that the entrance, and comming to it any way was very difficult. For on the Weſt, ſaith Joſephus in deſcribing this Countrey, lie the ſands of Lybia; on the South, Siene, and the cataracts of Nilus; on the Eaſt, the red Sea; and on the North, Syria; and here is the Egyptian Sea, which is all without Havens, and therefore Egypt is on all parts moſt ſtrongly fortified. 2 Becauſe Nilus overflowed it yeerly, the people lived there a long time in idleneſſe, giving themſelves to feaſting and pleaſures, as Diodorus Siculus writeth, and ſo grew a weak and ſlothfull kinde of Nation. And at this it is moſt likely that Ioſeph aimed: Yeare come to ſee how weak and unfit for war Egypt is, with a minde to bring men hither to invade it, and therefore eſpy which way an entrance may beſt be made. Saint Auguſtine moveth a Queſtion here, why Ioſeph uſed his brethren ſo hardly? and anſwereth, that he did it to make their joy, when he ſhould be known unto them, the greater. But a better reaſon is in another place yielded by him, viz. that he did it not in way of revenge, for that which they had formerly done againſt him; but that being afflicted, they might remember and repent of their ſinne. And becauſe it was great, he did not once or twice deal thus hardly with them, but divers times, to make them greatly to repent; thus boyling them, as it were, in a ſpirituall fire, by a medicable tribulation: and when he ſaw them throughly humbled, he that would not vouchſafe them the kiſſe of peace before; now kiſſed every one of them, and wetting with the pious dew of his eyes, the necks of them trembling, he waſhed away the hatred of his brethren with the tears of charity. And thus ought every one of us to do towards our brethren ſinning againſt us, hate not them, but their ſins; and when we chaſtiſe them therefore, yet truly love them; and ſo we ſhall bear one anothers burthens, as is commanded, Gal. 6. 2.

Iſephus yieldeth another reaſon, viz. that by ſeeming ſtrange unto them, he might have the opportumity of queſtioning about their father, and Benjamin his brother, whom he ſaw not with them; ſuſpecting, that they might have dealt with Benjamin, as they had dealt with him, and therefore he would needs have them bring Benjamin, and finding that he ſtill remained, he entertained them with all courteſie: thus alſo, Theodoret and Chryſoſtome, and Lyranus, and Teſtatus. And Thomas Anglicus, having yielded the reaſons of Auguſtine, addeth, that Ioſeph hereby gave occaſion to the fulfilling of his dreams in a more remarkable manner; the more hardly he dealt with them, the more they being made to humble themſelves before him, and the more often, and with the more trembling, when he alſo impriſoned them at his pleaſure. Whereas Ioſeph is ſaid to have known them, but that they knew not him, this might well be ſo, becauſe they were men grown when he left them, ſpake that language, went in ſuch apparell, and came in ſuch a number; but he being then but a youth was now a grave man in another kinde of habit, in great dignity, and ſpake the Egyptian tongue, and to them by an interpreter. And Ferus ſaith, that God held their eyes, that they could not know him, till that they had been throughly humbled.

As Ioſeph did not ſlay his brethren, but by a godly torture brought them to Luther.

Muſculus.

Vatablus.

Ioſeph. lib. 4. de bello Judaic.

Diodor. Siculus.

Queſt. Auguſt. qu. 146. in Gen.
Auguſt. de Tempore. Serm 82.
Quia ſciebat, quòd fratribus ſuis parricidii crimen ſine gravi pœnitentia indulgeri non poſſet, ſemel, ſecundò, & tertiò medicabili tribulatione tanquam ſpirituali quodam igne decoxit, non ut ſe vindicaret, ſed ut illos corrigeret, & de tam gravi crimine liberaret, &c.
Parentium collapſorum voce perſundens odium fratrum charitatis lacrymis abluebat.
Ioſeph. lib. 1. Antiq. Judaic.
Theod. quæſt. 50. in Gen.
Chryſoſt. hom. 64.
Tho. Anglicus.
Ferus.

Note. Rupert. lib.9 in Gen.c 4. Psal.18.

to repentance, so saith Rupertus, ought christian Magistrates ruling in Christs stead to deal with the Jews his brethren; for so it is said, Slay them not, lest my people forget it, but scatter them by thy power: they should punish them in their goods, making them pay a yearly pension, that thus they may be compelled to hasten to the faith of Christ. He also sheweth Ioseph to have been a figure of Christ in this, that as his brethren bowed unto him, not knowing that it was Ioseph: so the Jews are subject to Christ, in that they are under Kings and Princes his Ministers, although they know it not; for to be in subjection to his Deputy is to be in subjection to him, which is a thing that they are most averse from, as were Iosephs brethren before from bowing to him. But to return again to that, wherewith Ioseph charged his brethren, Ye are spies. It may be demãded here, how he could say thus, seeing he knew that they were not spies? This question is also moved by Augustine, and amplified in that Ioseph seemeth not onely to have lyed, but by that which followeth, v.16. By the life of Pharaoh ye are but spies, to have been perjured. But he answereth, that he meaneth nothing else, but ye are worthy of the punishment of spies, and ye shall be accounted spies, unlesse ye prove your tale true, by bringing hither your younger brother; for the like phrase is used in the like sense, 1 King. 18.24. He that shall answer by fire shall be God: he was God alwayes, but he meant that by this he should be proved God. But this answer doth not fully satisfie, because haply they could not bring their younger brother for that love which their father bare unto him, he denying to let him go, and if it had so faln out, yet this would not have proved them spies. R. Solomon to clear this doubt flyeth to the signification of the word translated spies, saying, that he meant thereby, that they came to finde out the neerest and safest way into Egypt for their most commodious travelling, although they understood him otherwise; but this is a weak shift, for he further expresseth himself, To espy the weakenesse of the land are ye come. Gratianus saith, that he spake thus jestingly and not seriously. But the best answer is that of Thomas Anglicus, who saith, that Ioseph spake not thus assertivè, but tentativè & probativè, that by trying them, thus he might come into their secrets, and take them, if they had dealt ill with Benjamin also, and that he might covertly learne something touching his father, and his family, and heare, what excuse they would make touching himselfe being so inhumanely made away by them, to this effect he, but that I have made the solution more full.

Quest. August.quæst. 139. in Gen.

R. Solomon.

Gratian.cap 22 quæst.21. Tho. Anglicus.

Rupert. Lib 3.c.9

Rupertus expoundeth this as spoken by way of allusion to that which they had formerly done, ye are spies, that is, thieves & robbers, for ye robbed your father of his sonne Ioseph, seeing the nakednesse of the land, that is, he being absent, and so his sonne being naked and destitute of his protection: for he could not mean, saith he, the nakednesse of Egypt, because at that time it was the best furnished of all the Nations round about, others being glad to submit to her to get relief. This is acute, but forced, as the understanding Reader may easily conceive. I subscribe to that of Thomas Anglicus, and Rupertus briefly saith the same, he intended not to deceive, but to wrest out the truth. Lyranus and Tostatus against all others say, that Joseph sinned a little here by making a jesting lye.

Ferus. Non intendebat fallere, sed veritatem extorquere. Lyranus. Tostatus.

The brethren of Joseph being thus hardly intreated, humble themselves the more before him, saying that they were true men, and no spies calling him their Lord, and themselves his servants, and being urged the second time, they tell more particularly, that they were twelve brethren, &c. Then Joseph sweareth by the life of Pharaoh, that except their youngest brother were brought thither, they should not go thence, and requireth, that one of them be sent to fetch him; and except this were done, he sweareth by the life of Pharaoh, that they were spies. Here two questions offer themselves. First, Whether Joseph was not perjured, forsomuch as he sware that they should not go thence, except their younger brother were brought thither first, and yet after three dayes he dimisseth all of them but

Verse 10, 11
Verse 12, 13
Verse 14, 15
Verse 16.

Quest. 1.

one,

one, and in that he ſweareth again, that if their brother were not brought thither, they were ſpies, which notwithſtanding might haply not have been done, and yet they could not hereby be convinced for ſpies? Secondly, Whether it were juſtifiable in Joſeph to ſweare by the life of Pharaoh? To the firſt Auguſtine anſwereth rightly, that he was not perjured, becauſe he did not ſuffer them all to depart, but deteined one, till Benjamin was brought thither, for ſome of them muſt needs return to bring him, or elſe he could not have been brought: his meaning therefore was, that he would ſtay ſome of them till Benjamin came, which he alſo expreſſeth, *v.*16. ſaying, ſend one of you, &c. and then as it may ſeem, there being not any one found that would go alone, he putteth them in ward for three dayes, and after this dealeth upon further conſideration in more clemency with them, diſmiſſing all but one for a ſupply of the preſent neceſſity of their families. And to the other part of the firſt queſtion he ſaith, By the merit of their lye, they ſhould be counted ſpies, if Benjamin were not brought, that is, hereby it would appear, that they were lyars in that which they had ſaid, touching their younger brother at home, and if they were proved lyars in one thing, it would be preſumed, that they lyed in the other alſo, when they ſaid they were no ſpies but true men. And the words not being ye are ſpies, but ſpies ye, without a verb, may well bear this ſenſe, ye ſhall be counted ſpies, as one well noteth hereupon.

Auguſt. qu 139. in Gen.

Quaſi dixiſſet, exploratorum pœnâ digni eritis, hoc eſt, exploratores deputabimini merito mendacii veſtri.

But ſome excuſe Joſeph from perjury here otherwiſe, viz. becauſe he made no mention of God, without the mentioning of whom there is no oath, and becauſe he ſware by the life of Pharaoh, as a moſt frail thing in deriſion, as Socrates ſometime ſware by a dog, a gooſe, and a platan-tree, and Zeno per Capparim, in deriſion of the Heathen gods, as who would hereby ſhew, that there was no more divinity in their gods, then in theſe ſilly creatures. But that it is an oath, when any thing is ſworne by, our Saviour Chriſt teacheth, Math. 5. 34. and there is no likelihood, that Ioſeph would give ſo little reſpect unto his King, as to propound him in ſwearing, if he meant it in deriſion. Could ſaith St. Auguſtine, the life of Pharaoh be vile to a good and faithfull ſervant, to whom he kept fidelity, as at the firſt to his Lord, in all things? Moreover, it is well known, that the Egyptians uſed to ſweare by the head of their King, and if any having ſworn thus performed it not, his puniſhment was death, neither could he by any gold or ſilver be ranſomed herefrom. This, Vatablus ſaith, he hath from the writings of the Hebrews, who ſay, as they were wont to ſwear, Vivit Dominus, ſo the Egyptians, Vivit Pharaoh; and theſe indeed be the words here חי־פרעה the life of Pharaoh, or Pharaoh liveth.

Hammerus in Gen. 42.

Auguſt.

Vatab.

Touching the ſecond queſtion, Thomas Anglicus excuſeth Joſeph from fault, ſaying, Joſeph ſware by Pharaoh, as reverencing the regall power given him of God, and as it were by a certain notable effect of God, Pharaohs life and health, which according to God was dear unto him, and amiable, and venerable: and he uſed this kinde of ſwearing, that he might be the more terrible to his brethren, by the authority and familiarity which he had with Pharaoh, hereby intimated, and the more to hide himſelf from them. Thus alſo Thomas Aquinas juſtifieth him. But Calvin howſoever he alſo excuſeth Joſeph, ſaying, that as there is an oath which muſt be taken by God onely, *Deut.*6.13. he being thus made by men the chief Judge of faith and verity, and the revenger of perfidy; ſo there is a ſwearing by ſomething elſe, which is not properly an oath, but an obteſtation: when a man ſweareth by God, he calleth him to witneſſe, and to take revenge upon perjury; but when by any thing elſe which is moſt dear unto him, he bringeth that forth as it were as a pledge of his truth; and thus the majeſty of God is not transferred to a mortall man, when his life is ſworne by, but onely it is avouched by a thing moſt dear to be true, which is ſaid. Thus Calvin excuſeth Joſeph, bringing in alſo the example of Moſes, ſaying, I call heaven and earth to record; whereby he doth not aſcribe deity to them, but propoundeth them as being ſuch as would Quæſt. 2.

Tho. Anglicus.

Tho. Aquin. 2. 2. qu. 89. artic. 6. Calvin.

*Deut.*30.19.

would cry out againſt the Jews, if they obeyed not the Law. Yet he ſaith, that this ſwearing of his abhorred from ſincere piety, it being a prophane kinde of flattery amongſt the Egyptians, to ſwear by the life of their King, as amongſt the Romans to ſwear per genium Cæſaris after they that had equalized them unto the gods. Tremelius ſaith, that it is but an affirmation, as if he had ſaid, As true as Pharaoh liveth, which kinde of affirmation was common amongſt all both godly and prophane, ſo Hannah ſaith to Hely, as thy ſoul liveth, and Ioab to David. And if it be onely an affirmation or obteſtation, as Calvin hath it, I can ſee no reaſon, why holy Joſeph ſhould be taxed for it, eſpecially he ſpeaking thus, and not ſwearing by the Lord, to conceal himſelf the more from his brethren, as Thomas Anglicus and Ferus have noted, and not to flatter with Pharaoh. It is the ſafeſt and beſt wiſdome not to be overwiſe in prying into the faults of Gods holy ſervants, which are not manifeſt, but to juſtifie them rather.

Tremel.

1 Sam.1.26. 1 Sam.17.55.

Ferus.

Verſe 17.

Therefore he put them in ward three dayes. The words ſignifie, he gathered them into priſon, that is, he put them not in ſeverall priſons, but altogether, permitting them thus to conſult about the ſending of one for Benjamin. Of this Calvin ſpeaketh alſo, as uncertain whether it be juſtifiable or not: but ſeeing he did it not out of hatred, but to chaſtiſe them, and to bring them to repentance, I think no man can condemn it. But why doth he commit them all, when as Reuben had deſerved better, for he had ſought in times paſt to deliver him? Anſw. He could not have exempted him alone without diſcovering himſelf. But why are they committed for three dayes? Anſw. Becauſe as Lyranus ſaith, they had committed ſin againſt Ioſeph, and dealt hardly with him three times. 1 By conſpiring to kill him. 2 By caſting him into a pit. 3 By ſelling him for a ſervant. They had cauſed him to lie in miſery many more years, then they lay in priſon dayes, but he had doubtleſſe reſpect unto his dear father, not to delay them longer.

Muſculus.

Calvin.

Queſt.

Queſt.

Lyranus.
Ferus.

Verſe 18, 19

The third day Ioſeph telleth them, that he feared God, that they might be ſure to have juſt dealing at his hands, and then ſaith, that one ſhall continue bound in priſon, but the reſt ſhall go and carry proviſion for their families; Carry corne for the famine of your houſe; In Hebrew, carry corn of the famine of your houſe: the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth it, ſuch corn as your houſes have need of, and this is the meaning.

Vatablus.
Chald Paraphraſt.

Verſe 20.

And they did ſo, that is, they accepted of this offer, as being more equall, and better pleaſing to them then the firſt, to ſend one from amongſt them.

Verſe 21.

And they ſaid one to another, We are verily guilty, &c. The word in Hebrew is אֲשֵׁמִים, ſignifying either guilty or ſinners. The ſin by them committed againſt Ioſeph 22 years before, is now brought to their minde in their adverſity, being hitherto not thought upon. Whereby we may ſee, of what force affliction is to move to repentance; but God wrought as Calvin noteth, as outwardly by affliction, ſo inwardly by his Spirit, becauſe otherwiſe, as we may ſee in ſome that are afflicted, there would have bin only murmuring and complaining, as if they had been hardly and unjuſtly dealt withall. Afflictions open the eyes which were before ſwolne up with fat, and dimme by proſperity, and now the eyes come to the ſight, which before were dazeled with too great brightneſſe of the light. Like the ſteel ſtricken againſt the flint of mans heart, they cauſe fire of the Spirit to be kindled; as the bough caſt into the water by Eliſhah, they make the iron of ſinnes formerly done, that lay deep in oblivion, to come up; and as the clay laid upon the eyes of the blinde by Chriſt, they open them. The eyes which ſinne ſhutteth, puniſhment openeth, ſaith Gregory. Pœna excitat torpentem, humiliat ſuperbientem, purgat pœnitentem, illuminat cæcutientem, & coronat innocentem.

Note.
Calvin.

The benefit of affliction.

Gregor. Oculos quos culpa claudit, pœna aperit. Auguſt.

Verſe 22,23

Then Reuben ſpeaketh of his moving them to more clemency towards Joſeph, But, ſaith he, ye would not hear me; all which Ioſeph heard them ſay, but they thought that he underſtood them not, becauſe he ſpake to them by an Interpreter. Reuben and Iudah were moved more with compaſſion, then the reſt rest of his elder brethren, but Simeon and Levi, of whom Jacob said before that they were brethren in wickednesse, it seemeth were more hard-hearted, and chief authours of the mischief. And therefore, as Philo saith, Joseph bound and held Simeon in prison, because he being eldest but one, when Reuben dissuaded from that cruelty, dealt most hardly with Ioseph, being the chief authour thereof. And Theodoret saith, that Joseph singled him out, because he being next to Reuben joyned not with him to deliver Joseph, which if he had done, the rest being younger, would not certainly have opposed them. P. 1b. Verse 24. Theodoret. qu. 102. in Gen.

This being done, the rest are dismissed, and their money is appointed by Joseph to be put in their sacks mouths, which when they had seen, they were yet more perplexed. In all things the brethren of Ioseph were dealt withall in their kinde. 1 They had spoken roughly to Ioseph, therefore he likewise speaketh roughly to them, when they were farre from home. 2 When he intreated them, they would not be moved, no more was he by all their submissive speeches. 3 They cast him into a pit, he casteth them into prison. 4 When he was drawn out, he was sold for a bond-man, so they being taken out, one, viz. Simeon was bound and committed again. 5 He had an imputation laid upon him in that, wherein he was guiltlesse, whereby a new trouble befell him, so they by having the money put in their sacks mouths are indangered in respect of theft, and afterwards plainly challenged for it, when Iosephs cup was put into the sack of Benjamin Thus wicked men are punished in their kinde, so that they which offer wrong to others, do but lay a foundation of an house to fall upon their own heads. I do not think with Calvin, that Ioseph caused their money to be restored, lest his father should want against the next time, for he knew his substance to be great, but to perplex them the more, and yet to humble them the more for their sin, as it also fell out. Yet the allegory of Ferus here is not to be misliked, viz. that God even when he afflicteth in like manner bestoweth secretly good things upon his, and giveth, as Joseph, food for the vvay, our money still remaining to us, that is, he giveth grace freely. He applyeth also most excellently to the vvicked their trouble, vvhen they saw this, for they knevv not vvhat to do; to go forvvard they durst not, lest the Egyptians should pursue them; return to Joseph they durst not, because they had not had Benjamin vvith them; and stay still they could not, because their families at home vvere oppressed vvith famine: So the vvicked in the day of their death, dare not go forvvard to God, or to come in his sight, because they have not their younger brother Christ vvith them, and moreover, they have vvith them another mans money, that is, they are pressed vvith the guilt of many sinnes: neither can they return by repentance, nor stay still, because death approacheth. And thus is the case of the vvicked set forth, Amos 5. 19. they are perplexed vvhithersoever they turn them. Verse 25, 26 Note. Calvin. Ferus. Rabanus. Note.

What is this that God hath done to us? Why do they turn their thoughts here to God, and not to Joseph, as by vvhose fraud they might suspect this to have been done to intrap them? To this Calvin answereth vvell, that their conscience being opened to see into their sin, they refer all, hovvsoever done unjustly by man against them, to the just judgement of God; vvherein they may be exemplary to us, that vve may likevvise acknovvledge Gods hand, when we are ill intreated to be moved with repentance for our sins, as David, 2 Sam. 16. Verse 28. Calvin.

Here they come to Jacob their father, and tell him all things that had happened, at which he is greatly troubled, and denyeth to send Benjamin with them, because, saith he, if he should die by the way, Ye shall make my gray head to go with sorrow to the grave. For grave in Hebrew is שאול, see before, Ch. 37. 35. Here and in the words going before, v. 36. Ye have deprived me of two sonnes: Jacob by saying thus intimateth, that he thought them to be the authours of his losse of Joseph, of whose hatred towards whom he was not ignorant. I finde none that have drawn these things into a figure of Christ: But the Verse 29. Verse 38.

troubles, to which Joſeph put his brethren, do ſeem to me moſt aptly to figure out the miſeries by Chriſt inflicted upon his brethren the Jews, ſome years after that they had conſpired againſt him, as theſe things befell Joſephs brethren 22 years after their conſpiracy againſt him. For as they were more hardly uſed then any other ſtrangers cõing for food into Egypt, ſo are the Jews in all countreys: & as they ſpake ſubmiſſly, but could not prevail, ſo the Jews humble themſelves before God for their long captivity, but are not delivered: and as they muſt all firſt come together to Joſeph, and then there is joy, ſo the Jewes muſt not ſome of them, but all be converted to Chriſt, and then there ſhall be an end of all their troubles, unſpeakable joy ſucceeding inſtead thereof.

CHAP. XLIII.

Verſe 1,2. Queſt. THe corne, which Iacobs ſonnes had brought out of Egypt being ſpent, he calleth upon them to go and fetch more. If it were all ſpent, which they brought, how could he and his family, wherein were ſo many, live, till they ſhould return again? yea, how could that which they had brought, being but nine of them ſuffice for that numerous family ſo long: for two years of the famine were now ended, and if we ſhall meaſure Jacobs company by Abrahams, who had 318 men, a great quantity more would not have ſufficed? Calvin. Calvin anſwereth, that they lived for the moſt part upon other things, of which they were not deſtitute, as appeareth by the preſent hereafter ſent unto Joſeph, verſ. 11. They uſed wheat then, but as a dainty, moſt ſparingly at ſome times, and the ſervants ate little thereof. Some think, that Jacob had now put away his ſervants and ſold them, as not being able to keep them in the famine, but there is no ground for this in the Hiſtory.

Verſe 3,4,5. Verſe 6,7,8. Verſe 9,10. Verſe 11,12 Verſe 13,14. Joſephs brethren being urged by their father to return into Egypt, Judah ſaith, That unleſſe he would ſend Benjamin with them, they would not go, and when he had preſſed him to it; and undertaken to bring Benjamin back again unto him, he at length conſenteth, counſelling them to take a preſent with them for Joſeph, and double money; and ſo he prayeth God, that they might finde favour before him, and bring back both their brethren. Here Iacob was come into the loweſt ebbe of miſery, either he muſt want food and die, or want his ſonnes who were as dear as his life unto him, this was certainly a grievous temptation, and with ſo great temptations God doth often exerciſe his, that we may not think ſtrange of them, if they befall us.

Note.

Chap. 42.37. Reuben had before offered his two ſonnes to be killed, if he brought not Benjamin back again, if ſo be his father would commit him to his fidelity: but he hearkeneth not to him, but to Iudah making an offer of ſecurity he yieldeth. Reuben, as Expoſitours commonly note, had made a fooliſh offer, but Iudah more diſcreetly offereth to be counted guilty, and to bear the anger of his father, if he brought him not back again. But it was the preſent neceſſity that made Iudah his undertaking more prevalent, they being now pinched with want, and ſo it being come to that paſſe, that either Benjamin and they all muſt die with famine, or elſe his father muſt adventure to ſend him away. Thus Ferus, and thus alſo Philo ſaith, that Iacob reaſoned with himſelfe. But Theodoret yieldeth this as a reaſon, becauſe Reuben was not ſo acceptable to his father, as Iudah, ſince his going up into his fathers bed mentioned before, Ch. 35.22. And touching his good deſerts in labouring to ſave Ioſeph he new not that. For the preſent which he willeth them to take, A little balme, honey, ſpices and myrrh, nuts and almonds: the words, Take of the beſt fruits of the land, are, de laude terræ. Touching the perticulars for balme, ſome read reſina, theriaca, or terebinthina, for honey, ſtorax, or wax, for ſpices, maſtice, caſtanea, castanea, aut gutta myrrhæ, and for myrrh-pinea see somewhat of some of these, c.37.25. Touching the double money which he willed them to take, the words are: Take double money in your hand, and the money brought back in your sacks mouth, &c. He would have them to take twice so much money as before to buy corn, because the famine being now greater, he supposed the price to be risen, and the money of restitution besides, so Musculus. Touching the clause added by Iacob in concluding his speech, If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved: It may seem strange, that having prayed immediately before, he should conclude thus despairingly; the words are sicut orbatus fui, orbatus sum, that is, as Vatablus hath it, as I have been deprived of Ioseph and Simeon, so my minde giveth me that I shall be deprived of Benjamin, where was his faith with which he prayed now? To this Calvin answereth, that he added these words to stimulate his sonnes, that they might have the more care of Benjamin, and not as distrusting Gods mercy. Iacobs sonnes being thus dismissed by their father, come again into Egypt, and Ioseph seeing Benjamin with them, biddeth his servant to bring them into the house, saying, that they should dine with him. His affection was moved so soon as he saw his brother Benjamin, and therefore he beginneth now to be more kinde, but yet in such a manner without questioning with them at this time, as that they were filled still with more fear, as appeareth, *v.*18. He was this morning, doubtlesse, about some affairs concerning the Common-wealth, and not at his own house, when his brethren came before him; and therefore as having yet no leasure, he committeth them to his servant to be brought to his house, and to be stayed there till dinner-time, which was about noon, for the former part of the day is by all sober men spent about their affaires, and then they go to eating and drinking, and in some places not till the evening, that they may do what they have to do in sobriety all the day long.

Ferus. Philo. Theodoret.

Verſe 11. Muſculus.

Verse 12.

Verse 14.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Verse 15,16

Musculus.

Ioseph servant therefore brought them to his house, and when they were come thither, they feared, imagining, that evill was intended towards them, because they carried back their money. Wherefore they offer him that money again, discovering what had happened. But he telleth them that he had their money, and that God had given them that money. So he gave them water to wash their feet, and their asses provender, and they made ready their present against the coming home of Ioseph. In speaking of their fear, *v.*18. Moses saith, that they spake amongst themselves, We are brought in, that he may finde occasion against us, and take us for bond-men, and our asses: In the Hebrew it is להתגלל to roll himself upon us: that is, after the manner of a Tyrant by right or wrong to invent something against us, as the word signifieth. They speak not of any danger of being hanged for the pretended theft, for men were not put to death therefore in those dayes, but taken for servants, unlesse they could make good restitution.

Verse 17,18
Verse 19,20.
Verse 21,22
Verse 23,24
Verse 25.

Mosculus.

The words wherein Iosephs Steward answered them, are, Peace be unto you, fear not, your God, and the God of your father hath given you treasure into your sacks. Peace be unto you, is as much as if he had said, there is no cause why ye should fear, wherefore be of a secure and pacified minde. He knew his Masters minde, and therefore comforteth them in this manner; and although he were an Heathen, he speaketh godlily of their God and the God of their father, which is a marvell in that Countrey, where they had so many gods, and were so full of superstition, but it is to be supposed, that his Master Ioseph had instructed him in some knowledge of the true God, although he could not work any publick reformation of religion, yet doing his endeavour to reforme his own family. Note here, that when they feared, all cause of fear is taken away, but when before they came without all fear, they were greatly afflicted, and so it shall be with us, in fearing standeth our greatest safety. If it shall seem, saith Saint Augustine, that the Steward lyed in saying thus, he answereth, another thing was hereby signified, the silver of Gods Word, *Psal.*12. which is given, and yet not diminished. But it may better

Verse 26.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Note.

Verſe 24.

be anſwered, he received it, although it were againe reſtored, God moving Ioſephs heart ſo to do. Whereas he giveth them water to waſh their feet, it was done accordiug to the cuſtome in thoſe hot parts to coole them, to purge away the ſweat, and to eaſe their wearineſſe. For their hearing, that they ſhould dine with Ioſeph, it is moſt likely, that his Steward told them of it.

Verſe 26,27
Verſe 28,29
Verſe 30,31.

Then Ioſeph came home, and they give him their preſent with all reverence, and he asking of the health of their Father, they make a lowly anſwere? then ſeeing Benjamin, he asketh, whether that were he? and bleſſeth him, and not being able to conteine any longer, he goeth into a private room and weepeth, and waſhing his face, cometh forth againe, and cauſeth them to be ſet to dinner. When Ioſephs Brethren gave him their preſent, he accepted it, although but ſmall, becauſe he ſaw, that it came from a good heart deſirous to pleaſe him; ſo are our offerings made to God, although we can give but little, acceptable to him, if it be but a cup of cold water. But as they being before terrefied by Ioſeph, are moved hereby to ſeek, if by any meanes they might pleaſe him: ſo in whom the feare of God is, it will appeare by the like carefull ſtudy alwayes. In every thing we ſee examples of vertue in Ioſeph, he was innocent in his Fathers houſe, patient in adverſity, faithfull in ſervice, chaſte in temptation, wiſe in the opening of ſecrets, prudent in providing for future times, juſt in the chaſtiſing of his Brethren, and now pious in accepting of them. Then he asketh of their Father, whereat they againe humble themſelves, terming him his ſervant, ſo that what was foretold by dream to Joſeph is abundantly verified. In his bleſſing of Benjamin it was intimated, to which of them his affection was moſt, but he reſtraineth to bewray it, becauſe the full time was not yet come, and in like manner, the Lord thinketh thoughts of peace towards his people, as the Prophet ſaith, but the expected time muſt come, before that they ſhall break forth.

Ferus.

Note.

Innocens in domo patris, patiens in adverſis, fidelis in ſervitio, caſtus in tentatione, ſapiens in occultorum reſeratione, prudens in futurorum prævisione, juſtus in fratrum caſtigatione, & nunc pius in eorum ſuſceptione.

Note.

Jer.29.11.

Verſe 32.

And they ſet before Joſeph by himſelfe, and befor them by themſelves, and before the Egyptians by themſelves; for the Egyptians may not eat with the Hebrews; for that were an abomination to them.

Queſt.

If it be demanded here, why Joſeph feaſteth his Brethren? I anſwere, that it might appeare, that he had not hitherto intreated them ſo hardly out of hatred: for he could not ſhew a greater ſigne thereof, then by thus entertaining them. Amongſt the Romans, ſaith Valerius Maximus, a feaſt was uſed called Cariſtia, at which none might be preſent, but Kinſmen, and if any difference had before been between any, it was at that time taken away. But it may be further demanded, why it was abomination to the Egpytians to eat with the Hebrews? To this Muſculus and Calvin anſwer, that this came from their pride, ſeeing the Hebrews were Shepherds, and in the Egyptians account but a baſe kinde of people. They held it derogatory for ſo worthy and pure perſons, as they were, to eat with every common perſon. Whereas the ſervants of God indeed are commanded to ſeparate from inordinate livers, as impure, they for their vaine ſuperſtition arrogated this unto themſelves. But Tremelius and ſome others better, Becauſe the Hebrews fed upon ſheep and Oxen, which the Egyptians worſhipped: for Shepherds were not an abomination to the Egyptians, but the killing of theſe beaſts, to which they aſcribed ſome deity, as is plaine, Exod. 8.26. where Moſes refuſeth to ſacrifice in Egypt, for ſaith he, Shall we ſacrifice that which is an abomination to the Egyptians, and they not ſtone us? and whereas Shepherds are ſaid to have been an abomination unto them, it is in reſpect of this their killing and eating of ſheep: yet Rupertus is alſo of the former opinion, for he ſaith, that the Egyptians being proud of their Horſes and Chariots, wherein they rode, deſpiſed all ſhepherds, as a baſe kinde of people. But it is one thing to deſpiſe, and another to abominate, for this never cometh but from Religion. But why did they not eate with Joſeph, was he alſo an abomination to them? Anſ. He ſat by himſelfe, as the dignity of his place required, but this is noted

Valer. Maximus lib. 2. cap. 1

Queſt.

Muſculus. Calvin.

Tremelius.

Gen.46.34.

Rupert. lib 9. in Gen. c. 19.

Queſt.

ted for his Brethren only, with whom they abhorred to eat, and he was alſo now naturalized, and as one of themſelves. In that beſides his Brethren he fed others, we may ſee in what ſtate Joſeph lived now in Egypt, and of what hoſpitality he was, entertaining daily many ſtrangers.

Verſe 33. And they ſate before him according to their age, at which they admired, that is, becauſe, as if Joſeph had knowne their ſeniority, ſo he cauſed them to be placed, Reuben firſt, and Benjamin laſt, when as they were ſtrangers there, and their ſeniority and juniority, as they thought, muſt needs be unknowne to the Egyptians.

Verſe 34. And he took, and ſent meſſes from before him, and Benjamins meſſe was five times as great as any of theirs, and they drank, and were merry with him. Some joyne theſe words with the former, They admired, parts being taken from before him, and the moſt ſet before Benjamin, as if this were the thing, which they wondred at. But there is a diſtinction, which maketh it plaine, that they admired at the order, wherein they were placed, as was ſaid before, thus alſo Chryſoſtome, Lyranus and Calvin, and then this followeth, as a nevv ſentence. But hovv could Benjamins meſſe be five times greater? for if he had 5 diſhes toone, or one diſh vvere five times as great, the reſt muſt needs be entertained over-ſparingly. But I think, that having a table by himſelfe full of diſhes like a King, and his Brethren having a Table vvell furniſhed for them, he for good vvills ſake notvvithſtandihg ſent portions of meat to them all, but for one portion ſent to any one of them, he ſent five to Benjamin. Joſephus ſaith, that Benjamins meſſe vvas tvvice ſo great, as one of theirs, vvherein he cometh ſhort; thus Joſeph expreſſeth his love to his Brother Benjamin, although his purpoſe vvas not yet to reveale himſelf. Euſeb. lib. 9. c. ult. Leah bare 7 children, Rachel but 2. to make himſelfe therefore, and Benjamin equal to all them he keepeth 2 parts to himſelfe, and ſendeth 5 to Benjamin: Lyranus ſaith, that he did it to try, vvhether they vvould envy him therefore. Touching the laſt vvords, they are commonly tranſlated, and the Hebrevv vvill beare it, They drank, and vvere inebriated vvith him But as Saint Auguſtine noteth, the Hebrevv vvord is of large extent, ſignifying, as to be drunken, ſo to drink to be merry only, vvithout that exceſſe, to drink to ſatiety. And therefore the ſame vvord is transferred to the earth, Pſal. 65. 9. Thou haſt viſited the earth, and inebriated it. Here it is ſpoken of, as a bleſſing, and therefore ſignifieth not inebriating after the manner of a drunkard, for vvith more humour, then to ſaciety, the Earth is corrupted. So likevviſe Jerome, Calvin and others. Here is then no colour to juſtifie drunkenneſſe, for it vvas farre from ſo holy and vviſe a man, as Joſeph vvas See alſo this vvord uſed in the ſenſe before ſpoken. Pſ. 64 and Pſ. 36.8. They ſhall be inebriated from the plenty of thy houſe, and againe, Ye have eaten, but not been ſatisfied, ye have drunk, but not been inebriated, that is, plainly not ſatisfied vvith drink.

Cajetan.

Chryſoſt. Lyranus. Calvin.

Quæſt.

Joſeph.

Auguſt. quæſt. 144. in Gen. Sic inebriari & ebrietas, non ipſi terræ utile eſt, quia majore, quàm ſatietati fuſſit, humore corrumpitur, ſic ut vita ebrioſorum, qui non ſatietate ſe repleat, ſed merguat diluvio.

Touching the Allegory of theſe things; Joſephs ſitting apart by himſelfe, figureth out Chriſts ſitting in Heaven, from vvhence he ſendeth gifts to the faithfull, his Brethren upon earth. All are in one houſe the Church, Chriſt by himſelfe having before him the food of immortality and glory, the faithfull in the Church by themſelves in the vvay of travellers, having the food of grace and the vvord, the vvicked, hovvſoever in the Church, having nothing but temporal things. And as Joſeph made Benjamin the leaſt, to exceed moſt; ſo the humble have moſt grace given them. Ambroſe, Proſper, and Iſidore make Benjamin the figure of Saul, vvho vvas of the tribe of Benjamin, vvho vvas young, vvhen he vvas converted, but aftervvards had ſuch grace that he laboured more then all the reſt. The Egyptians vvere ſet by themſelves, becauſe they had the Hebrews in abomination, vvch figureth out the ſupercilious Jews, vvho contemned the heathen, as uncleane, and as Joſeph condeſcended unto them for a time, untill that it more plainly appeared, that theſe vvere his Brethren: ſo Chriſt by his Apoſtles condeſcended to the vveakneſſe of the Jevves, till his being more clearly manifeſted. For it is a property of the vvicked to deſpiſe others, the godly contemne none.

An Allegory. Fetus.

Ambroſ. Proſper.

Fetus.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLIV.

Verſe 1,2,3.
Verſe 4,5,6.
Verſe 7,8,9.
Verſe 10,11.
Verſe 12,13.

THe time being now come, that Joſephs Brethren ſhould depart, he commandeth their money againe to be put in their ſacks mouthes, as before, and his ſilver Cup in the mouth of Benjamins ſack. Then he ſendeth his Steward after them to challenge them for ſtealing his cup, wherein he divined, but they being innocent offer him to be put to death, with whom the cup ſhould be found, and all the reſt to be Joſephs bondmen. The Steward denieth to inflict ſo ſore a puniſhment upon them, and concludeth, that he only, with whom the cup ſhould be found, ſhould be his ſervant, and ſearching findeth it in Benjamins ſack, whereupon they rend their cloathes, and go all back again. Here is a new device yet further to afflict and perplex the mindes of Joſephs Brethren: and touching the crime here brought upon them a queſtion is moved, whether Joſeph ſinned not, ſeeing he put words into his Stewards mouth, which he knew were not true? Philo writing upon this, ſaith, that he did ſo only to try his Brethren, and to finde out, how they ſtood affected to Benjamin. For when he had preferred Benjamin at his feaſt before them all, making his meſſe much greater then any of theirs, he had his eyes upon them, to ſee whether they envied him or not therefore, and finding that they rather joyed in his honor, he thought good to make yet one triall more, hereby to finde out, what their care and ſolicitude would be for him. And then being aſſured, that no diſcord now reigned in his Fathers family, he reaſoned within himſelfe, that the thing done by them againſt himſelfe happened not ſo much by their perfidy, as by the providence of God foreſeeing that, which was to come, as well as ſeeing that which is preſent. Thus alſo Theodoret. Ioſeph did this to try, whether his Brethren would from their heart and earneſtly defend Benjamin or no. For when he perceived that they ſtood for him, and offered to ſuffer in his ſtead, the perſon of a Prince being laid aſide, he put a brotherly countenance upon him, and ſpake comfortably to them. It was no lye therefore in Joſeph, or which was ſpoken further of his Cup, wherein he uſed to divine, and knew ye not, that ſuch a man, as I, can divine? verſe 15. ſeeing theſe things were not ſpoken ſeriouſly, as lyes be, but partly in jeaſt, and partly for exploration, according to that liberty, which a Magiſtrate hath to finde out the truth. Calvin juſtifieth Joſeph alſo herein, but adviſeth not to make this a ground to turne to crooked and deceitfull crafts, or to uſe over-much auſterity, except we be altogether free from hatred and malice, and if ſo, charity will dictate unto us, how farre we may proceed. That, whereby he juſtifieth Joſeph, is, that he was haply guided by the peculiar motion of the Spirit. And although it may be ſaid, charity is not ſuſpicious, yet forſomuch as they had ſo cruelly handled him before, it is excuſable in him that he handled them ſo hardly, not ceaſing to deale in ſuch a rigid manner with them, till that he had throughly proved the alteration of their mindes, as Saint Auguſtine thinketh, that there is ſome great myſtery in this Hiſtory about the Cup, but determineth not what. And he ſaith, that Ioſeph in putting them to all this trouble aimed at the increaſe of their joy afterwards, when he ſhould reveale himſelfe unto them, unto vvhich that vvhich they ſuffered vvas not comparable, when they knevv their Brother, vvhom they thought to have been deſtroyed. But vvhat if Joſephs Brethren being thus tryed had left Benjamin to be a bond-man unto him, according to the condition? In this caſe, vve may eaſily gueſſe, ſaith Calvin, that he vvould have rejected them, and reteined Benjamin, uſing yet more ſeverity againſt them, as moſt perfidious, but then Jacob and the Church of God ſhould all have been hazzarded, as being in that family, ſo that this courſe vvas full of danger, but that God guided it to the beſt. There vvere tvvo good iſſues of it. 1 The pacification of Joſephs minde, vvhen he had by triall found out the integrity of his Brethren.

Queſt.

Philo.

His argumentis certò perſuaſus paternam familiam ſeditione domeſticâ nequaquam impugnari, ratiocinatus eſt, quod in ſe fratres admiſerant non tam eorum perfidiâ actid eſſe, quàm providentiâ Dei ventura non minùs cernentis, quàm præſentia. Theod. queſt. 105. in Gen.

Calvin.

Auguſt. qu. 145. in Gen. qu. 146. Tantæ futuræ ipſorum lætitiæ exitum cogitabat, cùm toties calamitoſos fecit. Totum quod agebat, ad hoc agebat, ut gaudium eorum differretur, & delatione cumularetur, &c.

Queſt.

Calvin.

2 An

2 An extenuation of their former infamy amongſt poſterity for their moſt hard uſage of Joſeph: So Calvin; and as Joſeph vvas tovvards his Brethren, ſaith Ferus, ſo God afflicteth his, not to deſtroy them, but to try them, vvhether they truly feare him or no. He doth all for our good. Jer. 29. 1 think not, ſaith he, the thoughts of affliction, but of peace. Ferus.

Touching the ſilver Cup here ſpoken of, for Cup the Septuagint have Condy, whereupon Jerome ſaith, that for Sack in Hebrew is a word ſignifying peronem, vel follem, and for Condy, which word alſo the Septuagint uſe, Eſa. 51. Aquila hath Scyphus, and Symmachus Phiala. The Hebrew word, as Oleaſter noteth, is גבא Geba, of Gaba, elevare, ſo that the word properly ſignifieth a Cup elevated after the manner of an hill. It may ſeem ſtrange, that Ioſeph being ſo great a man ſhould not have a golden Cup for his chiefe Cup rather then one of ſilver. But it is anſwered by Calvin, either that thoſe times were not ſo much addicted to ſumptuous ſplendour, or that it might be a Cup for the graving & work about it more ſumptuous then Gold; or laſtly, that Ioſeph moderates himſelfe to avoid envy. Now there could not be a greater diſgrace put upon a man, then to have the ſtealing of a Princes Cup laid to his charge. One Droxippus of Athens being charged, though falſly for ſtealing Alexanders Cup, whereupon all mens eyes were drawne towards him, as a Thiefe; not being able to beare the calumny, goeth from the Feaſt, and Letters being firſt written, which ſhould be given to the King, he cut his owne throat.

Verſe 2.
Septuagint.
Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen.
Oleaſter.
Calvin.
Quintus Curtius lib. 9.
Theft hateſull.

Touching Joſephs divining in his Cup, the word uſed is augurari, ſignifying properly to divine by beholding the flying of Birds, and thus they which uſed to divine amongſt the Romans, were called Augures, ab avibus, and were had in great honour amongſt them, as long as they lived. But it is alſo uſed for divining or prying into ſecret things any way, or gueſſing at that which is to come, ſo Pliny of the Hiſtories of Tacitus ſaith, Auguror, (nec me fallit augurium,) Hiſtorias tuas immortales futuras. But the words, wherein he uſeth to divine) are diverſly rendred; ſome, as Vatablus hath it, underſtand them, as if he had ſaid, Is not this the Cup about which he hath conſulted with the Diviners, to know who hath ſtolne it avvay? Aben-Ezra, By this Cup he hath tryed you, vvhether ye be thieves or no. Others, He thinketh the loſſe of his Cup to be unto him malum omen & augurium. The Caldee Paraphraſt, He inquireth moſt diligently of the South-ſayers for it. But the moſt genuine ſenſe of the vvords, as Calvin hath it, is, that he uſed this Cup in his augurations, for he feigned to them, that he as other chiefe men in Egypt, was an Augur. But hovv the Augures there uſed to divine in Cups, neither Herodotus, nor Diodorus, nor any other hath ſhevved. Only Pliny ſaith, that there vvere divers kindes of magicke, divining by Water, the Spheres, the Aire, the Starres, Lights, Baſens, Hatchets, &c. and by conference vvith the inferi and vvith ſhadovves appearing, but theſe, he ſaith, belong rather to vvitchcraft, then to Magick. And Julius Sirenius ſaith, that the Chaldees, and Egyptians vvere vvont to fill a Baſen vvith vvater, and thereinto to put barres of ſilver and precious ſtones marked vvith certaine Characters, and then certaine vvords being pronounced, vvhereby the Devill vvas called forth, he vvith an hiſſing made anſvver out of the vvater to thoſe things that vvere inquired about. And as they did vvith a Baſen, ſo they did vvith other bright and poliſht things, vvherein the Image of that vvhich vvas ſought, vvas framed by the Devill, appearing to the inquirer, and this kinde of divination vvas uſed by Julian the Apoſtata. And it is to be thought, that the Egyptians uſed Cups alſo, by them to divine in like manner, vvhereunto Ioſeph in ſaying thus alluded, not that he uſed ſuch deviliſh arts alſo indeed, but to make it the more probable, that no fraud vvas uſed, but that by his divining skill he found out their theft to their greater terrour. But hovv could Ioſeph pretend skill in ſuch divining vvithout ſinne? To this Calvin anſwereth, that he did greatly ſin in feigning this. At the firſt being

Verſe 5.
Plin lib 7. Epiſt.
Vatablus.
Aben Ezra
Chald. Paraphraſt.
Calvin.
Plin. lib. 30. c. 2.
Jul. Siren. lib. 9 de fato cap 2.
Queſt.
Calvin.

being called to interpret Pharaohs dreams, he aſcribed all to God, but the people of Egypt ſeeing him to be ſo skilfull in revealing ſecrets, held that he did it by art Magick, as others that were skilfull in this kinde did: and what they erroneouſly conceived of him, he is now content to confirme, making a boaſt of this to his brethren that he was an Augur, and thus impiouſly prophaning the gift of Gods Spirit. And all this followed upon his feigning himſelfe to be one of the Egyptians, many lyes being by this meanes involved together. Whereupon he noteth, that when a man is gone once from the right way, he ſhall be ſubject ſtill to wander more and more, that we may not in any thing take liberty contrary to Gods allowance. Amongſt other Writers, I finde none that charge Joſeph with ſin for this, and for ſaying afterwards to his brethren, Knew ye not, that ſuch a man as I, could divine? But onely Toſtatus, who ſaith that this was a lye, but officious, and ſo veniall, and not pernicious, becauſe it was ſpoken by him as a Magiſtrate in way of examination to try out the truth: and Cajetan, who ſaith that it was a lye only materialiter, not formaliter, with an intention finally to deceive, for he meant by and by to diſcloſe himſelf unto them, and therefore was not pernicious but veniall. Thus he, in ſpeaking upon theſe words uſed by the Steward: but ſpeaking upon thoſe, *v.*15. he defendeth him altogether as free from lying, both becauſe he doth not affirm himſelf particularly to be an Augur, but that amongſt ſuch, as he was there was auguration, and alſo becauſe divining may be taken in a good ſenſe, as coming by the gift of God, which gift all knew, was beſtowed upon him. Saint Auguſtine defendeth him as ſpeaking not ſeriouſly, but in jeſt, and ſo doth the Authour of the Scholaſticall hiſtory, and Thomas Aquinas. Theodoret defendeth him, as Cajetan, going from the vulgar Latine, which is, Know ye not that there is not any like to me in the skill of auguration? becauſe in the Hebrew it is not ſo ſaid, but, that ſuch a man as I can divine: So that he affirmeth not this particularly of himſelf. Rupertus ſaith, that Joſeph took upon him the skill of propheſying or divining truly, not by Magick art, for that was abominable, but by the gift of God, for he did all things here after the manner of a Prophet. He ſhut up his brethren three dayes in priſon to prefigure their ſervitude in Egypt three generations, after which, viz. in the fourth they ſhould come out: then he ſent them away laden with the goods of Egypt, and with money, and here with a cup of ſilver, prefiguring their going out of Egypt with the treaſures of the Egyptians. Laſtly, he roughly ſendeth after them to bring them back to ſervitude, but it was to their exceeding great joy, when he revealed himſelf unto them, prefiguring Pharaohs going out after them to fetch them back, but this his violent going out turned unto them into matter of rejoycing, when they were freed from all further danger by him, and brake out into, Cantemus Domino, glorioſè enim magnificatus eſt. Joannes Galenſis defendeth Joſeph, becauſe he ſpake not affirmatively, but interrogatively. Ferus ſaith, that he lyed not, becauſe he did not intend to deceive, but ſaith he, we ſhall not labour much in excuſing him, becauſe he was a man. For mine own part, although I think there is little force for defending Joſeph, either in that he ſpake onely in generall of ſuch men, as himſelf was, or interrogatively; for this being admitted, yet what ſhall be ſaid to the words put into his Stewards mouth, whereby he is affirmed to be a diviner by a cup? Yet I dare not tax ſo holy a man, as ſinning in this paſſage, becauſe all was done, as was ſaid before, by way of exploration, he feigning himſelf ſuch but for a moment, not meaning to have done with his brethren, untill ſuch time, as he had diſcloſed the truth unto them, viz. that he was no Egyptian, wicked diviner, but the true ſervant of God, Ioſeph; and had deviſed theſe things onely for the augmenting of their preſent trouble, and to make them the more throughly penitent, that their joy which was now to ſucceed upon his revealing of himſelfe, might be the greater and more perfect. And as Auguſtine and Rupertus have it, I cannot but think, that ſome myſtery lay hid in theſe paſſages, which

Rupertus

Note.

Verſe 15. Toſtatus.

Cajetan.

Auguſt. quæſt. 145. in Gen. Author Scholaſt. hiſt. in Gen. Tho. Aquin. 2 2. qu 95. artic 7. Theodoret.

Rupert. lib. 9 in Gen. c. 10.

Exod. 14. Joan. Galenſis.

Rupertus hath alſo opened. Iſidore proſecuting his allegory to Saul, from that which was done to Benjamin, ſaith, that the ſilver cup being found in his ſack figured out the treaſure of divine learning that was in Saul, as touching the Law, but he being not yet converted, it was as a light hidden under a buſhel, a rich cup in a ſack ſhut up, this Ananias being ſent unto him opened, and ſo the treaſure ſhined, the Goſpel being openly preached by him. Iſidore.

Joſephs brethren being charged with theft deny it not, but Judah for them all ſaith, God hath found out the iniquity of thy ſervants. Ferus from the example of Joſephs brethren obſerveth, by what degrees we ſhould proceed when we have ſinned. 1 Rent our hearts, as they did their garments. 2 Return by repentance. 3 Come to Chriſt and fall down before him, as they did before Joſeph. 4 Not excuſe or deny, but confeſſe our ſelves to be ſinners. But why did they confeſſe thus, when they were innocent? Some think, that they meant that iniquity againſt Joſeph: but this is rejected by Calvin, of which yet I ſee no reaſon. They do not indeed ſeek to cleer themſelves from the imputation about the cup: for they thought it vain ſo to do, conſidering the evidence of the thing in appearance, but they knew, as they had ſaid before, that there was another great iniquity latent in them, viz. their unnaturall dealing againſt Joſeph, for which God in his juſt judgement had brought this upon them, that they muſt now ſuffer for a crime, of which they were not guilty. They had put Joſeph in fear of death, and ſold him for a bond-man, and now they are in danger of the one or the other. Whereas Judah and not any other ſpeaketh, it was becauſe he had undertaken for Benjamin, yet Calvin ſaith, that it was becauſe he was of moſt authority, as being appointed to the primogeniture, but that appointing was not, till many years after, Iacob being at the point of death. Joſeph having heard Judah, ſaith, that he would have Benjamin onely to be his ſervant; then Judah maketh a long oration unto him to incline him to mercy, in reſpect of his ſorrowfull aged father, offering to be his bond-man inſtead of Benjamin. In which oration he repeateth all the former paſſages, but in a little different manner, as he could in that diſturbance of his minde utter them, having doubtleſſe none intention to vary therefrom, eſpecially before a Prince, that knew all that was paſt, as well as himſelfe.

Verſe 16. Ferus. Queſt Calvin. Ferus. Calvin. Verſe 17, 18 Verſe 19, 20 Verſe 21. Auguſt.

CHAP. XLV.

WHen Joſeph ſaw the piety of his brethren towards their father, and had heard him ſo often mentioned with his love to Benjamin, and ſaw him his dear brother ſtand ſo penſive and ſad before him, he could no longer refreine, but he muſt even now, all ſtrangeneſſe being laid aſide, manifeſt himſelf and his affections to them. Wherefore he commandeth all men to depart the room, which they did, and none being now left there, he told them that he was Joſeph. If it be demanded, why he would not declare himſelf, the Egyptians being preſent? Philo anſwereth, that leſt ſome ſhame ſhould happen to his brethren for the old injury, he would have none of the Egyptians preſent at his firſt manifeſtation. So likewiſe Calvin, who ſaith, He did not thus put all men forth, becauſe he was aſhamed of his brethren, for he let Pharoah immediately to know of them, but becauſe he would not put them to open ſhame for the deteſtable fact which they had done againſt him; and herein his great clemencie appeared, that he would have this buried in oblivion. And hereby it appeareth, that in all the former paſſages, there was no malice or cruelty in his minde, but that he forced himſelfe contrary to his naturall affection, to make ſhew of that ſtrangeneſſe. Ferus addeth, that he put all men forth, that they might have the more liberty of rejoycing together.

Verſe 1, 2. Philo. Ne fratribus propter veterem injuriam aliquod dedecus obveniret, noluit prima agnitioni quenquam Aegyptiorum intereſſe. Calvin. Ut liberior exultatione mutua geſtiendi licentia eſſet. Ferus.

When Joſeph had told them that he was Joſeph, they were ſo afraid, that they Verſe 3.

Tho. Aquin. 1. 2. qu. 44. artic. 5.

Ariſto. Problem. ſectio. 27. Problem 9.

Queſt.

Calvin.

Note.

Verſe 4.

Ferus.

Luther.

Verſe 5.

Calvin.

Note.

Verſe 6.

Quum eſſet anatio infœlix, futura & meſſis tenuis.

Verſe 7.

Auguſt. quæſt. 148. in Gen.

Rom. 10.

Rom. 11. 26.

Tremel. Vatablus.

Vt conſervem vos ſuperſtites.

Verſe 8.

Muſculus.

they could not anſwer him. It is a property of great fear, as Thomas Aquinas noteth, out of an apprehenſion of deadly imminent danger, againſt which a man is too weak to make reſiſtance, to contract the heat and the ſpirits, whereupon followeth inabiiity to ſpeak. It is not ſo, ſaith Ariſtotle, with thoſe that grieve, for they hold their ſpirits, which by and by breaking out, are ſent forth with a loud cry; but in thoſe that fear, the heat goeth down low, which ſhould move the ſpirits, from whence the voice cometh, which is the cauſe that they cannot ſpeak. But why did Joſephs brethren fear ſo much? Anſw. They had a guilty conſcience, telling them that they were worthy of death, and they ſaw his power to be ſuch, as that he could put them to death, wherefore they feared now, that they ſhould ſuffer for all their wickedneſſe againſt Joſeph. So that we may ſee what a terrible thing it is to ſtand guilty of ſin, although moſt ſecretly committed, when the Lord commeth to judgement. If they had had a pure conſcience, nothing could have been more joyfull to them then to have ſeen Joſeph; and in like manner, if we keep a pure conſcience, to ſee Chriſt coming in glory at the laſt day, will be moſt joyous; but otherwiſe dreadfull, even to the taking away of all ſpeech, to plead for our ſelves, as Matth. 22. Joſeph ſeeing his brethren ſo ſtricken, biddeth them to come to him, remembring their ſelling of him into Egypt, whereby they might be the more aſſured, that it was he, ſeeing this was a ſecret to all others. Fraternall affection tranſporteth him; ſo, that neglecting his preſent dignity, he inviteth them poor ſhepherds to his imbraces, not regarding what the Princes of Egypt would ſay thereof.

Then he telleth them, that not they, but God ſent him thither to preſerve their lives, becauſe he ſaw them ready to be over-whelmed with deſpaire. And in like manner, when we ſee any man truly & ſeriouſly humbled and confounded in himſelfe for his ſins, we ſhould provide by ſpeaking comfort to him, that he be not altogether driven to deſpair. Whileſt he is unaffected, greater ſeverity is to be uſed; but when he is caſt down and trembleth, rigour muſt have an end, and comfort muſt be ſpoken, as, 2 Cor. 2 8. Five yeares yet remaine wherein there ſhall neither be earing-time nor harveſt, that, is as Calvin hath it, the earing ſhould be unhappy, & the harveſt very ſlender, ſo that the ſpeech is hyperbolicall. But by that which followeth, it ſhould ſeeme rather to be properly ſpoken, forſomuch as their ſeed ſhould be but caſt away in thoſe yeares, they ſpared committing any to the ground. But now the time of famine being at an end, Joſeph giveth ſeed unto them, Chap. 47. 23.

God hath ſent me before you, to preſerve you a poſterity in the earth.

This Calvin readeth, Et ponerem vobis reliquias in terra, and this reading being word for word according to the Hebrew, is mentioned by Auguſtine, who ſcanning upon it, ſaith, that a myſtical ſignificatiõ is here to be looked into, for neither any of them, nor of their poſterity had periſhed by the famin, that the remnant ſhould now be ſpoken of, but this was verified, when Chriſt was delivered by the Iews into the hands of the Gentiles, as Joſeph by his brethren, and ſo a remnant only of them was ſaved, according to the election of grace. And when the fulneſſe of the Gentiles ſhall come in, all Iſrael which are but reliquiæ Iſraelis, many generations having before been hardened to perdition, ſhall be ſaved alſo. But Tremelius obſerveth better, that this is ſpoken per Hypallagen, as if he had ſaid, that I might preſerve your poſterity; and Vatablus that it is an Hebraiſme, meaning that by me your children might be preſerved to be a remaining poſterity unto you, but Calvin ſaith, rather, that I might preſerve you alive.

Now therefore ye ſent me not hither, but God, that I might be a father to Pharaoh, &c.

What he had ſaid twice before, he repeateth here againe, God ſent me hither: Hence Calvin and Muſculus obſerve, that God doth not only permit evil to be done by wicked men, but is an agent therein, although for a divers end, viz. for ſome great good, whereas they do it out of malice. He doth not, ſaith Muſculus, teach rightly, who teacheth only, that God foreknew and permitted that fact of Ioſephs brethren, directing it to a good end, for he hath foreordained it, and by a ſecret iuſtinct directed their mindes to do ſo, providing, that they could do no otherwiſe. And Calvin ſaith, that God is over all the motions of mens mindes, guiding them by a ſecret bridle, whither he willeth, and yet he doth this ſo diſtinctly, that no vice cleaveth to his providence, and his decrees have no affinity with mens vices. All the fault is in them only, & none in God, which is indeed a ſecret reaſon of doing, and above all humane ſenſe. What is to be held touching this, I have ſhewed upon Rom.9. and therefore will ſay no more here, but referre my Reader thither. Calvin.

that

That I might be a father to Pharaoh, this he ſpake not for oſtentation, but to ſhew, in what reckoning he was with Pharaoh, who reverenced him for providence and wiſdome as a father, a plain argument, that this was brought about by the ſpeciall hand of God. It cannot hence be juſtly gathered, as it is by ſome, that Pharaoh was very young, and therefore had Ioſeph thus in the place of a father to do all things by his counſell, but ſeeing with how extraordinary great wiſdome God had indued him, whether he were young or old, he thought he ſhould by advancing him thus, provide for the beſt good and ſafety of his Kingdome. In Homer we read in like manner of Ulyſſes, taken by Agamemnon, Phœnix by Achilles, and Zopyrus was ſuch to Darius, Lyſias to Epaminondas, and Plato to Dion, Ariſtotle to Alexander, and Zeno to Antigonus, and Seneca to Nero.

Then Ioſeph bade them without delay, to bring his father down into Egypt, ſaying, that he and they and all that they had ſhould dwell neer him in the land of Goſhen, and be ſuſteined there. Verſe 9,10.

The Septuagint have it in Goſhen of Arabia, but Goſhen is not in Arabia, but in Egypt, between Tanais and Heliopolis neer to Nilus, having on the other ſide, though ſomewhat more remote, the red Sea; in the time of Ierome it was called Thebais. Thus Muſculus, and Ierome upon Gen. 46.29. ſaith, that the Septuagint read it, the city of nobles, in urbe Heroum in terra Rameſſe, differing from the Hebrew, wherein there is nothing, but Geſſen, and he ſaith, that ſome Jews hold Goſhen to have been that, which was then called Thebais. Muſculus. Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

And Joſeph fell upon Benjamins neck, and wept. Having comforted them hitherto with words, now he proceedeth to imbraces and kiſſes, ſhewing the great love and affection which he bare towards them, all remembrance of former unkindeneſſe in anger being done away: but firſt he imbraceth Benjamin, as being his mothers ſon, moſt innocent of them all, and yet in greateſt danger. Verſe 14,15

Then the news of Ioſephs brethren came to the Court, where Pharaoh and his ſervants were well pleaſed with it. Verſe 16.

This is ſet down, ſaith Calvin, out of order, for Pharaoh doubtleſſe heard of it, before that Ioſeph had appointed Goſhen for the place of their habitation, for otherwiſe he would not have preſumed ſo farre. But forſomuch as Pharaoh had made him Lord over all Egypt, I cannot ſee, why he ſhould forbear appointing them a place, till he had particular order from Pharaoh: and if by Pharaohs direction he had appointed them this place, there would have been no need to have put ſuch words into their mouths, to ſay unto Pharaoh, that he might grant them Goſhen to dwell in, as are recorded, *Ch.*46.34. whereupon alſo Calvin noteth, that upon Pharaohs generall grant, that they ſhould enjoy the beſt of the land, *v.*18. he wiſely directed them to ſpeak ſo, as that Pharaoh might be induced to appoint Goſhen in particular unto them. I think therefore rather that this happened in that order, wherein it is placed. Firſt, Ioſeph proffered this kindeneſſe to his father and brethren, and then to approve that what he did was well pleaſing to Pharaoh; it is ſhewed, that the news of it coming to him, he ſeconded and amplified the offer, thus confirming what he had ſaid, that God had made him a father to Pharaoh. In that all Pharaohs ſervants alſo were well pleaſed, it appeareth, that Ioſeph, ſince his advancement had carried himſelf well, not giving offence to any, but being beneficiall to all in Calvin. Ferus.

this term of nine years. And the cause of their joy, as we may suppose, was for that so much good had come to that whole kingdom by Joseph alone; they thought that if more such wise and holy men so greatly favoured of God should come to dwell amongst them, it would still be the better for their state, and Joseph would be the more setled, and not once think of removing, and because they entirely loved Ioseph, as their Saviour, his joy at his meeting with his Brethren could not but be a joy to them all.

Verse 17,18 Then Pharaoh bade Ioseph to invite his father and brethren to come and dwell there, promising them the good of the land. In the vulgar Latine it is, Dabo vobis omnia bona Egypti, whereupon some have held this to be prophetically spoken of the goods of Egypt, which they should afterwards carry away at their going out of Egypt under Moses, although Pharaoh understood not thus much, but spake prophetically, as Caiaphas did afterwards *Joh.*11.50. But this is farre fetcht by the good of the land, he meaneth food of the best, and not any other wealth, and by the fat of the land, which he addeth, a fruitfull place to dwell in, and so farre forth as might suffice to furnish their houses, he offereth also other goods, so that they should not need to regard the bringing of their household-stuffe. And he biddeth Joseph that they should take Waggons out of Egypt to bring their little ones, which are allowed for the more expedition in their journey, that they might have no let in the way.

Verse 19.

Verse 20.

Verse 21. According to Pharaohs allowance Ioseph furnisheth his brethren with Waggons, and with food for the way. The word translated food is צדה, and as Ierome saith, is used, Psal. 131. and translated by some χήρα, signifying a widow, but by some θήρα, which though it signifieth more properly venationem, then fruges terræ, yet by the Egyptians it is used for far, and now is corruptly called by them Athera. It is commonly rendered Cibaria, but this food most probably was corne, which Egypt onely then yielded, but for other food it was not so altogether wanting in other Countreys about.

Hieron. tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

Verse 22. Then Ioseph gave to every one of them change of garments, and to Benjamin 300 pieces of silver, and 5 changes of garments, In the vulgar Latine it is for change of garments binas stolas, but the plain meaning is, that he gave to each of them a suit of finer and costlyer apparrell to be worne at festivall times, which is implyed in the word change being opposed unto garments for their daily wearing. He fulfilled indeed, as Ferus noteth, that which is commanded, *Rom.*12 Be not overcome of evill, but overcome evill with good. For they had sitten down to eate, leaving him without food in a pit, but he feasted them with himself, they spake harshly to him, but he most kindely to them, and they took his party-coloured garment from him, but he gave change of garments to them. For the gift given to Benjamin beyond all the rest, it was so done, because he was deerest to him, as comming of the same mother, and most innocent. But it may seeme strange that he should now give them gifts, when as they should not stay, but immediately return into Egypt again. This was done, that hereby it might appeare to be true, which they should relate touching his glory in Egypt, and by the sight hereof his father and the wives of his brethren be the rather allured to come downe.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Calvin.

Verse 23,24 So he dismissed them, giving them warning not to fal out in the way; & sending moreover ten asses laden with the best things of Egypt, and ten she-asses laden with corne, &c. to his father. That his respect to his father might the more appeare, as he had beene bountifull to Benjamin, so he sent liberall gifts unto him. But why doth he thus charge them not to fall out by the way? Vatablus saith, that some render it, ne expaveſcatis, as if he had said, Vex not your selves any more with needlesse feare, seeing I am pacified towards you. And the word used רגז indeed signifieth either to fear or to tumultuate, and to be contentious, but he preferreth this last, expounding it, as ment that he would not have them to lay the fault of his selling into Egypt one upon another, where-whereby quarrels might ariſe amongſt them. Thus alſo Calvin & Muſculus & others. And Chryſoſtome more particularly ſaith, that he gave them this charge, becauſe he had heard them reaſoning about it in his preſence, when Reuben ſaid, Did not I ſay that ye ſhould not ſin againſt the childe, and yet ye would not hearken unto me? and therefore fearing much more, that they would contend about it upon the way, he ſaid (Fall not out) that is, conſider, that I have taken revenge upon none of you, but freely forgiven you, and lovingly imbraced you, and therefore make no vvords amongſt yourſelves about me, but by mutual love and good will imbrace one another. Thus alſo Rupertus; Strive not by laying the fault one upon another to ſeem more juſt and innocent one then another. But Tho. Anglicus ſaith, that Joſeph knevv, that the heating of their bodies, & the trouble of their journey might diſtemper them, and becauſe they travel'ed many together, vvhen they ſhould have much liberty of talke, it vvas probable that vvords of ſtrife vvould ariſe, and therefore he gave them this charge: but I reſt in the former expoſition.

Quest. Vatablus.

Calvin. Muſculus. Chryſoſt hom. 64. in Gen.

Tho. Anglicus.

Then they aroſe and came to their Father, telling him, that Joſeph yet lived, and was Lord of all the Land of Egypt, but his heart fainted, when he heard this, and he believed them not. Munſter ſaith, that the Hebrewes have a fable, that Sera the Daughter of Aſher firſt told her Grand-Father Jacob, that Joſeph was yet alive, for which cauſe ſhe never dyed, but was tranſlated alive into Paradiſe. But to let ſuch fables paſſe, Jacob hearing this newes was at the firſt between hope and feare, as it were in an ecſtacy. He had been ſo long perſwaded, that Joſeph was dead, that he could not ſuddenly believe the contrary, eſpecially from them, who had lyed to him before, ſaying that he was torne in pieces by a wilde beaſt. Lyars are not believed even when they ſay true. Then they told Joſephs words, and he ſaw the Waggons brought to carry him; and his ſpirit revived. The Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, The holy Spirit reſted upon Jacob: whereupon the Jewes have a fable agreeable, that the holy Spirit was not in Jacob after the ſelling of Ioſeph, till this time, but that he was all this while deſtitute of it, and they yield this as a reaſon, becauſe the ſpirit departeth from thoſe, that be ſad and heavy, as Jacob was all this time, and dwelleth only in the chearfull. But here is nothing elſe ſaid, but that his naturall ſpirit and heart, which failed him at the firſt hearing of Ioſeph, revived, vvhen he ſavv evident ſignes of that, vvhich he had heard. Chryſoſtome rendereth theſe vvords, The decrepit old man, and looking upon the ground was re-excitated: and he compareth it unto a Lamp ready to go out, but by the pouring in of Oile revived. Rupertus, Quaſi de gravi ſomno evigilans non credidit, as a man at his firſt vvaking out of a deep ſleep underſtandeth not vvhat is told him, but after a vvhile, it being more fully and orderly declared, he underſtandeth every thing, ſo vvas it vvith Jacob, and this is called the reviving of his ſpirit. Such ſudden and unexpected nevves, have overcome the ſpirits of ſome ſo vvith joy, that they have been quite extinct. Gellius telleth, that vvhen the nevves vvas brought of the ſlaughter of the Roman Army by Hannibal, a certaine aged Mother hearing that her Sonne vvas ſlaine, mourned greatly for him, but vvhen vvithin a vvhile after her Sonne came ſafe home into the City, ſhe ſeeing him in the company vvas oppreſſed ſo vvith unexpected joy that ſhe preſently dyed. V. 28. Then Jacob ſaid, It is enough, my Son Joſeph liveth, I will go downe, and ſee him, before I dye. He thought this recompence enough for all his ſorrovv, to heare novv, that Joſeph lived, if he might but come to ſee him, although he lived not long vvith him, ſo great vvas his affection tovvards him. The longer he had been afflicted with griefe for the loſſe of him, the greater was his joy, when he heard of his ſafety and honour; thus God holdeth his deare ſervants under a long time, but they ſhall be recompenced vvith more abundance of joy in the end.

Verſe 25, 26

Munſter.

Note.

Verſe 27.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Chryſoſt. Ham. 64. in Gen. Rupert. lib. 9. in Gen. c. 14.

A. Gellius lib. 3. cap. 15.

Verſe 28.

For the Allegory of all this, As Joſeph, after that he had long diſſembled him-

Note.

The Allegory. Ferus.

himſelfe to be a ſtranger, vvas at length moved by the diſtreſſe of his Brethren, and then revealed himſelfe to their exceeding great joy; ſo Chriſt, vvhen the ſtate of man began to grovv even deſperate, he not being able to helpe himſelfe, neither could any other helpe him, after that he had long diſſembled his love, became man, and of a great Prince ſhevved himſelfe as a Brother to the exceeding great joy of all the faithfull. And as Joſeph vvould not declare himſelfe, but the Egyptians being firſt put out; ſo Chriſt revealed his Incarnation not to all, but to ſome ſelected ones, the Shepherds and the Magi. And as Joſeph vvept, ſo Chriſt vvept over Jeruſalem. And as the nevvs of Joſeph and his Brethren vvent abroad to Pharaohs Court, ſo the nevvs of Chriſts birth came to Herod and to all Jeruſalem. But becauſe they rejoiced at it, as Herod did not, I think rather vvith Iſidore, that the joy, vvhich the Gentiles ſhall have at the converſion of the Jevvs is hereby ſet forth, or as Ferus himſelfe aftervvards ſaith, the joy of the Angels at our converſion, as Luc. 15. And as Joſeph ſpake before by an interpreter, but now without; ſo Chriſt ſpake by his Prophets of old, but now becomming man, with his own mouth. And as Joſeph ſpake of his Father, ſo Chriſt of Abraham. And as Joſeph comforted his Brethren, bidding them to come unto him, being otherwiſe ſtricken with great feare in apprehenſion of his dignity and their owne offence; ſo Chriſt conſidered as a Judge cannot but be dreadfull to us miſerable ſinners, but he biddeth us to come unto him, ſhewing himſelfe, as one of us, that we might have confidence. And as Joſeph ſpake nothing of their inhumane dealing with him, ſo Chriſt upbraideth not us with our ſinnes, the bruiſed Reed he doth break, nor quench the ſmoaking Flax. And as his comming into Egypt is referred unto God, ſo not by wicked men, but by the will of God, Chriſt ſuffered death for our ſinnes. For as his Brethren ſold him away, that he might not be any more, ſo the wicked Jews crucified Chriſt, that he might not be to draw men after him, but God would thus have Chriſt more magnified. And as Joſeph was ſent to ſave life, ſo was Chriſt, being made a Father of Gods houſe, and Lord of all the world. And as Ioſeph invited his Father and Brethren into Egypt, ſo Chriſt will one day bring the Jews to the Gentiles to become one people, the partition Wall being taken away. And as Joſeph threateneth death, unleſſe they came downe, and if they would come promiſed the beſt of the Land; ſo Chriſt threateneth death to unbelievers, but promiſeth ſuch as believe, that they ſhall be neare unto him, and eat and drink at his Table, and he commandeth that all his glory be told unto us, and that we make haſte to come unto him. And as Joſeph gave to each of them binas ſtolas, ſo Chriſt giveth to his the robe of innocency here, and of glory hereafter, or glory both of ſoule and body; but to ſuch as are moſt innocent, as Benjamin, and yet have ſuffered much, the higheſt degree of glory. Laſtly, as Joſeph gave them warning not to fall out in the way, ſo Chriſt doth not only himſelfe forgive us, but would not have us to recount the offences of others, but forgive and forget them. For the comfort of Jacob upon the hearing of Joſeph, ſuch is the comfort of the faithfull ſoule upon the hearing of Chriſt; and as he believed not at the firſt, no more did they, to whom it was preached, but ſeeing his miracles, and when he was riſen, they believed not this Joſeph to be alive againe, till they ſaw the teſtimonies of the Prophets. And as Jacob ſaid, it ſufficeth, &c. So muſt we reſt ſatisfied in this, that our Joſeph Chriſt Jeſus ſtill liveth, and therefore diſpoſe our ſelves to go and ſee him, before we dye, not being content to heare of him only, but aſpiring after a more cleare knowledge of him; for wo is to him, that goeth not thus unto him to ſee him before his death. Thus and more amply Ferus.

Iſidore.

Matth. 11.28.

Eſay 42. Acts 2.23.

Luke 22.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLVI.

THen Jacob came with all that he had to Beersheba, and sacrificed to the God of his Father Isaac. Verse 1.

Beersheba was the place, where Isaac had sometime dwelt, being from Hebron, from whence he now removed, 16 miles, in which place Isaac had built an Altar before, and been comforted by the Lord appearing unto him, *Gen.*26.24, 25. and it was the furthest City Southward of all the Land of Canaan. Jacob therefore being now to depart out of Canaan commeth to this place, as being in his way to Egypt, as Tostatus saith, and partly to praise God; for Joseph, as Musculus noteth, and partly to crave Gods presence with him in his journey, and as Calvin noteth, to declare the constancy of his faith and purpose, whithersoever he went, to cleave to that God, from whom he hoped afterwards to receive Canaan for an inheritance, though now he were constreined by the famine to remove from thence, he offered sacrifices there. And it is most likely, that by this meanes he sought to consult with God about his remove, that hearing something from him for his warrant, he might proceed with the more comfort and assurance. Ferus therefore joyneth together these three reasons of his sacrificing, when he came to a place, the name whereof might put him in minde of this duty of piety, viz. Beersheba. 1 To praise God for Joseph. 2 To crave his presence in his journey. 3 To inquire the will of the Lord. And this is a necessary consideration for us all, when we are about to do any thing, to consider, whether it be agreeable to Gods will, and this Josephus in his History toucheth upon, that Jacob would thus inquire the will of the Lord, because otherwise he thought haply either some mischiefe might befall him and his in the way, he might die, before he came at Joseph, or his children being taken vvith the love of Egypt for the fruitfulnesse thereof, might, after the famine was past, settle there still, as being unwilling to returne againe to the promised inheritance of Canaan. He is said to offer to the God of his Father Isaac, because God had appeared to Isaac in that place, from whose piety and Religion he meant not to depart, but to persist therein to the end, although he were constreined at this time to go out of the Countrey, wherein Isaac alwayes lived and died.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

Musculus. Calvin.

Ferus.

Note. Joseph lib.1. antiquit.

And God spake to Jacob in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob, &c. Verse 2.

The Lord being sought unto by Jacob with sacrifices and prayers, to animate unto this duty, appeareth unto him to his exceeding great comfort, neither shall any that seek to him, lose their labour. And he appeareth in the night, because then he revealed himselfe but darkly to his servants, in comparison of the revelation now made under the Gospell, and yet we see now but darkly in respect of that cleare light of knowledge, vvhich shall be in another world: what vvere the causes of Iacobs solicitude and sacrificing, vvhereupon this vision followed, I have already shevved out of Iosephus, Ferus, Calvin and others, but Rupertus hath yet another reason, viz. that Jacob vvas not ignorant of the state of his posterity in Egypt by reason of the Revelation, which Abraham had, *Gen.*15. that they should serve in a strange Land, and be ill intreated 400 yeares, and therefore he was greatly afraid to go thither. And haply, because he knew the wickednesse of the Egyptians, and superstitions to be great, he feared, that they would thereby, living so long a time amongst them, be much corrupted. The Lord in calling to Jacob doubleth his name, to make him the more attentive to that which he vvas to say, as being most joyfull matter, for his greater comfort, and he nameth him twice, to shew hovv greatly he loved him, and that he familiarly knovveth his by name, and that although he had left him novv many yeares uncomforted vvith any vision, yet he had not forgotten him, as he promiseth never to forget his, *Esa.*49.

Verse 2.

Ferus. Note.

Rupertus.

I am God, the God of thy Father, feare not to go downe to Egypt, for I will make the- Verse 3.

Calvin. Ferus.

Verſe 4.

Muſculus.

thee a great Nation there. v. 4. I will go down with thee, and make thee ſurely to come up again, and Joſeph ſhall put his hands upon thine eyes.

First, the Lord comforteth Jacob by telling him that he was the God of his father, which was ſo ſpoken, becauſe Jacob ſacrificed to the God of his father Iſaac, and hereby his love of old to that family was remembred for his greater aſſurance. Fear not to go down, this ſheweth that Jacob feared to go into Egypt, as was ſaid before, eſpecially according to Rupertus, with whom alſo Ferus agreeth upon theſe words. And the reaſon why he ſhould not fear, is, that although he ſhould be afflicted in his poſterity there, yet he ſhould grovv there into a great Nation. That he ſhould become a great Nation vvas before promiſed, Chap. 28. 14. but there his increaſe in the land of Canaan vvas ſpoken of, this being concealed till novv, of his increaſing ſo greatly in Egypt.

Muſculus.
Calvin.
Ferus.
Vatablus.
Calvin.
Muſculus.
Ferus.

I will go down with thee. He doth not ſpeak of Ioſeph, that he might rely upon him, for we muſt not truſt in man, how mighty ſoever he be, but onely in the Lord who goeth and is with his ſervants in all places, and make thee certainly to come up again, that is, in thy poſterity, as Calvin, and in ſome ſenſe in his perſon, for he was brought being dead thither to be buried, ſo Ferus. Joſeph ſhall put his hands upon thine eyes, that is, as is generally expounded, he ſhall cloſe up thine eyes when thou dyeſt. He might fear, ſaith Ferus, leſt Ioſeph ſhould die before him, and ſo he might be left in a ſtrange land to many dangers; againſt this he is by theſe words comforted. It was a cuſtome of old, that becauſe a man dying, his eyes are open towards heaven, as ſhewing his hope to be there, one neereſt a kin to the man dying ſhould cloſe them up; and according to this it is here ſpoken, ſo Muſculus: of this cuſtome Euripides writeth, ſaying, that Hecuba the Queen of Troy, being about to die, deſired, that her ſonne Polixenus might cloſe up her eyes. And the mother of Euryalus complaineth in Virgil, that ſhe could not come to cloſe up the eyes of her ſonne dying, &c.

Verſe 5,6.

Calvin.

Then Jacob departed from Beerſheba, and his ſonnes carried him and their wives and little ones in the Waggons, &c. Here no ſervants are ſpoken of, whereupon ſome have thought, that Jacob being oppreſſed with the famine, had put his ſervants away: for when all the ſouls are reckoned, which came with him into Egypt, not one ſervant is reckoned. But the ſervants may not amiſſe be thought to have been meant by their goods, as well as other things which they poſſeſſed, and for the number of ſouls which came with him, it was no part of the purpoſe of Moſes to ſet down any other but ſuch as came out of his loines, his ſeed, as is expreſly ſaid, v. 6. that the wonderfull increaſe of them might appear, when they that came into Egypt are compared with thoſe that went out, and therefore it is no marvell, though no ſervant be ſpoken of. Touching all their goods, which they are ſaid here to have carried, Muſculus. although Pharaoh had bidden, that they ſhould not regard their ſtuffe, yet they had rather with paines taking be furniſhed with their own, then needleſly to be chargeable to others, teaching us by their example to do likewiſe, to live rather upon our own then upon another mans.

Verſe 8.
Verſe 10,11

And theſe are the names of the children of Iſrael which came into Egypt, Reuben, &c. And the ſonnes of Simeon, Jamuel and Jamin, Ohad, Jachin, and Sohar, and Saul the ſonne of a Canaanitiſh woman, The ſonnes of Simeon reckoned up again, 1 Chron. 4. 24. are ſet forth by other names, and there are onely five, but here are ſix, ſo likewiſe, Numb. 26. 12. in the firſt place, their names are theſe, Nemuel, Iamin, Iarib, Zerah and Saul: in the other, Nemuel, Iamin, Iachin, Zerah, and Saul. So that in the firſt are onely two of the names mentioned by Moſes, Jamin and Saul; in this three, Jamin, Jachin and Saul, but the other names are divers; what may be the reaſon of this? of five onely reckoned up for ſix, a reaſon may eaſily be rendered, Ohad one of the ſix died without iſſue, ſo Muſculus: but why the names are changed I finde none that yield a reaſon, onely one ſaith, that there were reaſons

Queſt.
Muſculus.

ſons of theſe changes, Namuel ſignifieth ſpeaking with God, Jacob contention, becauſe Zimri who was ſlain by Phinees, came of him, Zerah ſignifieth ort us, riſing. It ſeemeth by that in Numbers, that they were changed by degrees, becauſe two onely were changed then, but afterwards three, and I doubt not but they were the ſame men, onely as occaſion was offered, their names were changed as the name of Abram and Jacob, but of the reaſon in particular, ſeeing it is not declared, to divine were moſt vain. The laſt Saul is named with his mother a Canaanite, to the diſgrace of Simeon, who would take a wife out of that people, from whom Iſrael ſhould by Gods Ordinance be divided.

De tradit. Hebr. in 1 Paral. Hieron. faſsè aſcript.

Verſe 12.

And the ſonnes of Judah, Er, and Onan, Shelah, Pharez, and Zerah, and the ſonnes of Pharez, Hezron and Hamul. Here divers queſtions offer themſelves: as firſt, why Er and Onan are named, ſeeing they died, as is alſo here ſaid, in Canaan? Anſw. They are not named, as being of the number of thoſe that came into Egypt, but that in ſpeaking of the children of Judah, none of all his poſterity might be omitted, whether dead or alive, becauſe the full number of the children of all the other ſonnes of Jacob is ſet down. Secondly, why are Hezron and Hamul, the ſonnes of Pharez numbred, ſeeing if the time be computed, it will appear that they could not now be born. For between the term of Judah his marrying and this had paſſed but 12 years, wherefore if his ſonne Er were but 18 when he married Thamar, and he and Onan being dead, if onely two years paſſed between Er his firſt taking of her and Judah his lying with her; it will appear that Pharez was but newly born about this time, or but a year old. But this hath been anſwered before, chap. 38.1.

Queſt.

Queſt.

Thirdly, becauſe Zarah had children as vvell as Pharez, vvhy are not they alſo numbred here? Anſw. This is done for the dignity of the line of Pharez, becauſe Chriſt and divers famous Kings came thereof. Verſe 15. All the ſoules of his ſonnes and his daughters were 33. If Er and Onan, vvho are mentioned amongſt the ſonnes of Jacob by Leah, be counted, the vvhole number is 34; if they be left out, but 32: hovv then are they 33, according to the ſumme here given up? Anſw. Moſes had no intent to number the dead, and therefore he ſaith expreſly, they died in the land of Canaan, *v.*12. wherefore the whole ſum is onely 32, unto which if the father be added, as he muſt (for *v.*8, going about to number them, he telleth whom he will number, viz. Jacob and his ſonnes) the ſumme will be 33. Thus alſo Muſculus and Calvin, who addeth that the Hebrews underſtand Jochebed, the mother of Moſes, as being amongſt them to make up the number: but this is falſe, becauſe ſhe was born afterwards in Egypt.

Queſt. Numb. 26.30. Verſe 15.

Queſt.

Muſculus. Calvin. Numb. 26.59.

The ſonnes of Gad, Siphion, Haggi, Suni, Esbon, Heri, Arodi, Areli. For Eſbon, Numb. 26. 16. is read Oſni, ſo that his name was then changed.

Verſe 16.

The ſonnes of Aſher, Imnah, Iſuah, Iſui, &c. Amongſt theſe Iſuah is omitted, Numb. 26.44. which is ſo done, becauſe he dyed without iſſue.

Verſe 17.

The ſonnes of Rachel, the wife of Jacob, &c. In ſpeaking of Leah, he calleth not her his wife, but Rachel, becauſe ſhe was the onely wife whom Iacob choſe. Leah being put upon him in her ſtead.

Verſe 19.

Verſe 21.

The ſons of Benjamin, Bela, Becher, Asbel, Gera, Nahaman, Ehi, Ros, Muppim, Huppim, Ard. Numb. 26. 38. the ſonnes of Benjamin are reckoned onely five, and Naaman and Ard are ſaid to be his ſonne Bela his ſonnes, and in the Septuagints tranſlation Benjamin hath three ſonnes onely, the reſt being called his Grand-children, and the children of his Grand-childe. His ſonnes are, Bala, Chobor, Aſphel, the ſonnes of Bela, Gera, Noeman, Egcheim, Ros, Mumphein, Oſimeim, but Gera begat Arad. And 1 Chron 7.6. the ſonnes of Benjamin are alſo reckoned but three, and the ſame names are put for ſome of their children, which are here reckoned up, as Benjamins children: and the names of the three differ from thoſe of the Septuagint. So that here divers queſtions may be moved. 1 How Benjamin being ſo young, that he Septuagints tranſlation.

Queſt.

was called a childe, could be father to ſo many children at this time? Anſw. To this it is to be ſaid, either that he had more wives, or his children are ſpoken of by anticipation, as thoſe of Pharez, becauſe he had them before the death of Jacob his father, and ſo they may be ſaid to have come into Egypt in his loines: ſee the like of Pharez before, v. 12. For his being called a childe, this was in reſpect of his other brethren, and he might notwithſtanding be a married man at this time, and have children. 2 Why is there ſuch difference in repeating Benjamins children again, Numb. 26. and 1 Chron. 7? Anſw. Of this no reaſon can be given, as touching the diverſity of the names, but that one and the ſame man upon divers occaſions might be called by more names, and whereas his childrens children are ſpoken of, ſome of them having the names, which his ſonnes are here ſaid to have been called by, whereupon it may be thought, that all theſe mentioned in this place were not the ſonnes of Benjamin properly ſo called, but moſt of them his Grand-children. It cannot poſſibly be, that he ſhould at this time being ſo young have been a Grand-father, yet haply before Jacobs death, which was not till 17 years after, he might as well as Pharez. Otherwiſe it may be ſaid, that ſome of Benjamins children onely were fruitfull, and therefore being reckoned up again, Numb. 26. five of them are left unmentioned, and 1 Chron. 7. two more, as whoſe iſſue failed then, there being three families onely of the Benjamites at that time: and for their names, it is no marvell if ſome of his childrens children have the ſame names with ſome of his children, conſidering, that it is no rare thing for one to be called by his Uncles name.

Queſt.

Queſt. Laſtly, why did the Septuagint neglect to follow the narration of Moſes, for 10 ſonnes mentioning but 3, and for the reſt ſonnes ſonnes, and ſonnes ſonnes ſonnes? Anſ. It may be that they followed the relation 1 Chron. 7 herein, or elſe they had it out of ſome ancient record amongſt the Jews: but it is ſafeſt for us to follow the Hebrew, which is moſt uncorrupt; whereas that tranſlation hath beene by ſome Scribes in ſundry things apparently altered, ſince the firſt comming forth thereof.

Verſe 22. All the ſoules comming of Rachel are ſummed up 14, the Septuagint, beſides the two Sons of Joſeph Ephraim and Manaſſeh, number five more, that came of theſe two, of Manaſſeh Machir, of Machir Galaad, of Ephraim Sutalaam, and Taan, and the Son of Sutalaan Edem, and yet giving up the ſum of all Rachels children together, they ſay they were 18, whereas five being added to the 14 before mentioned, make 19. At this Saint Auguſtine, is much troubled to finde out the reaſon, and reſolveth, that ſome myſtery lyeth hid herein, but he ſaith not what. I do not think it neceſſary to juſtify all things in the Septuagints tranſlation, for although they were excellent interpreters and much is attributed unto them, for that in the New Teſtament their expoſition is commonly followed in the places alledged, yet they were men, & ſo in giving up their ſum might be miſtaken; and whereas they adventured to put in the Poſterity of Manaſſeh and Ephraim, which Moſes doth not, they did it doubtleſſe for illuſtration of that which is ſaid, Chap. 50. 23, that Joſeph ſaw the poſterity of Ephraim to the third generation, and the children of Machir the Son of Manaſſeh were brought up upon his knees, taking their light for the names from 1 Chron. 7. not that Ephraim or Manaſſeh had any ſons now, for the eldeſt of them was but of 8 or 9 yeares, but by that liberty, which is taken before in ſetting down the children of Pharez, becauſe they were borne in Iacobs or Iſephs time.

Auguſt. quæſt. 152. in Gen.

Verſe 26. All the ſouls, that came with Jacob are 66. How doth he after 33 that came of Leah, 16 of her maid; 14 of Rachel, and 7 of her maid, which together make 70, now give up the ſum 66? Anſ. So many of them came with him into Egypt, whereas 70 are the whole number of his family, beſides wives, into which he as head is reckoned alſo, and Ioſeph with his ſonnes, who were in Egypt before, as appeareth, Verſe 27.

Queſt.

Queſt. Touching the difference here betwixt Moſes and Stephen telling this Hiſtory, he he making 75, but Moses only 70, and betwixt Moses and the Septuagint who have also 75. I have already said something in my Expositions upon the Acts of the Apostles, where I have finally followed Junius, but not with that full satisfaction, as to rest thereupon, if a better way might be found out. And now having more fully considered of other passages in counting Jacobs genealogy, especially touching the sons of Pharez, that it cannot be denied, but they are numbred by anticipation, as being yet unborne, I cannot but incline rather to that opinion, that the Septuagint numbered so many children coming of Joseph by anticipation also, being herein followed by Luke, and this is the cause of the difference, and yet neither Moses in his Hebrew, nor the Septuagint, nor Luke following them speak untruly, but truly, and as it was, Moses counting onely such, as he nameth in particular, and the Septuagint five more born in Egypt afterwards, as Moses had reckoned the sonnes of Pharez, yet unborne, for the dignity of the tribe of Judah, so they reckoning the sonnes of Josephs sonnes for his great dignity above his brethren, and because two tribes came of him, whereas one onely came of any one of his brethren besides. For as the creation of man is twice set forth, Chap. 1. and Chap. 2. for his dignity above the rest of the creatures, so are those that came of Pharez, and again of Manasseh and Ephraim for the dignity of the line of Judah and Joseph set forth here and again, Numb. 26. and in other places, where the lines of the rest are set forth also, that the Reader might hereby be put in minde, that in them there is something more notable to be considered then in any of the rest. And this resolution, is followed by Augustine, Jerome, Ferus, Rabanus, &c. And the common following of the Septuagints translation in the New Testament justifieth it. For the reason whereupon it is disliked by Calvin, viz because if such as were yet unborn coming of one of Jacobs sonnes shall be numbered here, by the like reason the Grand-children of others may be numbered also, and thus they will not be onely 75, but many more; this is taken away by that which hath been already said of the super-excellency of these two lines above the rest. This small number of 70, saith Calvin, is here further spoken of, to shew, from what beginnings God increased his Church in Egypt so wonderfully. And Musculus saith, that to remember them of their 12 fathers, and that they were but 70, they were made to camp, where there were 12 Fountains and 70 Palm-trees, viz in Elim, and 70 elders were ordained, Numb. 11.16. And the Lord sent out, besides the 12 Apostles 72 Disciples. The Rabbins will have the 70 here named to figure out the 70 Angels about Gods glorious Throne, who are Presidents over the 70 Nations of the world. R. Menahem. Touching that of Junius, who bringeth in Iacobs wives to make up the number of 75, and the two dead sonnes of Iudah; forsomuch as Rachel was dead, and it is uncertain, whether his other wives were dead or alive, and the dead and buried in Canaan cannot be said to have come into Egypt, and onely they that came out of Iacobs loines are numbered, and which came into Egypt, v. 26. I can now no longer follow that, but preferre the former as the best.

Acts 7.

August.
Hier n.
Ferus.
R. Maur.
Calvin.

Musculus.
Exod. 15 27.

Luke 10.1.

Then Jacob sent Judah to Joseph, to direct his face to Goshen, and they came into the land of Goshen, &c. From Beersheba to Goshen was 168 miles, to a City whereof called Ony Iacob came, and from thence to Zoan, or Tanis the Metropolitan City of Egypt, where Pharaoh kept his Court and Ioseph lived, 28 miles. This place was by Joseph desired for his father and brethren to live in, because it was next to the land of Canaan, and most fruitfull, a respect being doubtlesse had herein to their return into Canaan again. For if they should have been placed in some other part of the Countrey further off, they must necessarily at their departing thence have gone through a great part of Egypt, which would have been both more tedious and dangerous by the opposition of the Egyptians.

Verse 28.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

But why doth Jacob send Judah to Joseph rather then any other of his brethren, especially seeing some were elder then he? Ans. He had been forward-

Quest.

est in labouring to bring Benjamin home againe in safety, and by his oration had prevailed with Joseph so far that he discovered himselfe unto them, and for this cause, and for some dislike taken at Reuben, and Simeon, and Levi, as is afterwards expressed in making his last testament, and for that by the spirit of prophecy he fore-saw, that holy Kings and Christ should come of Judah, he rather doth this honour to him, then to any of them. But what was the end of his sending? Ans. the words are, to prepare Goshen before him; others, as Vatablus saith, read it, to shew before his face into Goshen, that is, to shew Joseph of his comming, that Goshen might be prepared; others, being removed ready and their cattel also, that Jacob with his company might quietly and without disturbance to any pitch their tents and keepe their cattell there.

Quest.

Vatablus.
Calvin.

Verse 29. Joseph being sent unto, cometh into Goshen to his father, thus shewing a filiall reverence, although it had beene revealed, that his Father and Mother and Brethren should do reverence to him. This had beene performed on his Fathers part by his messengers, before he was known to be Joseph, and now he doth, as the duty of a son required. The greeting betwixt Joseph and his Father being ended, he telleth Jacob, and his brethren, that he will certify Pharaoh of their comming, and of their trade of life, and biddeth them, when they should appeare before Pharaoh, to say that they were shepherds, and so were their fathers before them, that they might dwell in Goshen, because a shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians.

Verse 30.
Verse 31, 32
Verse 33, 34

Quest. It may be questioned here, why Ioseph was so desirous that his brethren should dwell in Goshen aloof from the Court, and not rather neerer to him; and why he was so carefull, that Pharaoh should be informed that they were shepherds? Iosephus saith, that this was done partly to keep his brethren together about their father, to look to his businesse, and partly that dwelling apart from the Egyptians, they might not incurre the danger of any dissension with them, sith the businesses that they imployed themselves about, were different from those of the Egyptians. For if Pharaoh had not been fully informed of their trade, wherein onely they had ever been conversant, he might haply have preferred them to some offices about the Court, or have made souldiers of some of them, and so their aged father might have been troubled at their absence from him, and they might have been in danger of being corrupted by the Egyptians superstitions; or which is more probable, the Egyptians being a proud kinde of people, and they plain shepherds, by living amongst them, they should have been exposed to their contempt and derision; which Joseph would by all meanes prevent. And he biddeth them say that they were shepherds; thus plainly acknowledging their mean condition, and not hiding it, as thinking that it would be dishonourable to Joseph, being set in so great dignity, so Ferus. Touching that clause, For every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians: Enough hath been spoken already, Chap. 43.32. Thus God turned it into good to the children of Israel, that they were an abomination to the Egyptians, for by this means they were kept from being mingled with them, and might together the more freely serve the true God, and be more out of danger of corruption by the manners of the Egyptians. S. Augustine draweth this of the Hebrews being all shepherds into an allegory thus. As they ruled over Cattel, which are unreasonable, which kinde of ruling is naturall; so in us the reasonable part ought to rule over the unreasonable, and in whom it is thus, as they were an abomination to the Egyptians; so such, that is, just men are an abomination to the wicked. For that the rule of cattel is naturall, appeareth, Gen. 1.27. but the rule of man over man sprung either from iniquity, or from tyranny; from iniquity, as in Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be. from tyranny, as in Joseph who was sold for a servant. A servant hath his name à servando, because being taken in the war, he was saved by the Victor, and Mancipium, quia manu captum, the wife and childe still being excepted, who in justice ought to serve, as being either weaker, or in the order of nature under subjection.

Ioseph. lib. 1. Antiq. Iudaic.

Luther.

Calvin.

Note.

Musculus.

August. qu. 153. in Gen. Non mirum, pastores fuisse abominationem Ægyptiis, in quibus utique est figura præsentis sæculi in quo abundat iniquitas, quia iniquo abominatione est vir justus.

CHAP

CHAP. XLVII.

Joſeph here telleth Pharaoh of the coming of his father and brethren with all that they had into Goſhen. And he took ſome of his brethren, even five men, and preſented them unto Pharaoh: In the Hebrew it is מִקְצֵה, out of the end or the ſumme of his brethren he took five. The Septuagint read it, He took ſome, even five men. Vatablus noteth, that the word is taken in two contrary ſenſes, becauſe the end may either be counting from the loweſt to the higheſt, or from the higheſt to the loweſt, and ſo either five of the chief, may be meant, or five of the meaneſt, that Pharaoh might not take liking of them to prefer them to his Court, which Joſeph, for the cauſes before alledged by all means declined. And he ſaith, that amongſt the Hebrews the word is uſed either way, as we may ſee, Judges 18.2. Calvin thinketh, becauſe it may be taken both wayes, that ſome of the eldeſt, and ſome of the youngeſt were taken, that Pharaoh might ſee them of all ages. To me it ſeemeth, that he took out five of the moſt excellent that could beſt ſpeak and behave themſelves before the King, that he might not be diſgraced by their ruſticity, and the rather, becauſe Pharaoh having ſeen and talked with them, would have Joſeph to make them Rulers over his cattel, Verſe 6.

Verſe 1,2.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

The brethren of Joſeph comming before Pharaoh tel him, as they were bidden, that they were ſhepherds, and deſire that they might dwell in Gothen, to vvhich he readily conſenteth. If any man ſhall vvonder, vvhy Ioſeph taught them not rather to ſay, that they vvere indeed ſhepherds, but vvould be ready to do Pharaoh ſervice in any other kinde, leaving this courſe of life, as being abominable to the Egyptians, that ſo they might have been exempt from ſuch a condition, and better preferred? Calvin anſwereth, that Joſeph deſired rather that they ſhould continue being had in abomination by the Egyptians, then be to any offices of greater dignity preferred amongſt them, that thus they might be kept, as an entire body amongſt themſelves, and uncorrupted by the Egyptian ſuperſtitions: and unallured by honours there, the more free to depart to the promiſed Land again, when God ſhould give them an opportunity. And to the ſame effect alſo Ferus.

Verſe 3,4, Verſe 5,6. Queſt.

Ferus.

And Joſeph brought his Father Jacob, and ſet him before Pharaoh, and Jacob bleſſed Pharaoh, &c. That is, ſometime coming between, ſo that Jacob had left his buſineſſe ſomewhat ſettled, the word, bleſſed, is rendred by Vatablus and Calvin, &c. ſaluted, he prayed for his health and for Gods bleſſing upon him, as Ier. 29.9. 1 Tim 2.1.

Verſe 7.

Calvin.

Then Pharaoh asked Jacob of his age, and he ſaid, The dayes of the yeares of my Pilgrimage are 130 yeares, few and evil have been the dayes of my life, neither have I atteined to the yeares of my Fathers in their Pilgrimage. For dayes of the yeares of his Pilgrimage, the Septuagint render, dies annorum vitæ meæ quos incolo, and ſo likewiſe in ſpeaking of the yeares of the Pilgrimage of his Fathers. But they come both to one, as Auguſtine ſheweth, who followeth the Septuagint, his meaning being, that he had no ſettled aboad, but lived here and there, as a ſtranger, the Land promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, not being yet given him in poſſeſſion, and thus his Fathers Abraham and Iſaac had lived before him: and as he lived after the manner of a Pilgrim in this reſpect, ſo becauſe this life is but incolatus, or peregrinatio, to have a ſetled habitation, muſt be by the Saints of God ſtill alwayes expected, till they be in Heaven. And Jerome hereupon noteth, that to be an inhabitant of the earth by the Scripture-phraſe is to be wicked, and therefore it is ſaid, Wo to the Inhabitants of the earth: for all the Godly and not Jacob alone are ſet forth, as acknowledging themſelves Pilgrims and Sojourners only here, the City, where they looked to have their habitation being in Heaven. It is true, as Calvin noteth, Jacob only is ſaid to have ſpoken thus, but becauſe it is not to be doubted, but his pious forefathers were all

Verſe 8,9.

Septuagint.

Auguſt. qu. 156. in Gen.
2 Cor. 5.
Pſal. 39.
Hieron. Epiſt. 129. ad Dardanum.
Revel 8.
Heb. 11 13.

Calvin.

all of the ſame minde, the Apoſtle aſcribeth this ſpeech unto them all. For few the vulgar Latine hath parvi, little, he calleth his dayes few in compariſon of the time, that Abraham, and Iſaac, and others before them had lived: and evil, in reſpect of the miſeries and ſorrowes, which he had ſuffered from time to time, wherein he is not to be underſtood, as complaining, but as aſcribing praiſe to God, that being broken with ſo many miſeries, his life was yet prolonged: and whereas he addeth that he had not attained to the yeares of his Fathers; this he ſpeaketh not, as envying to them a longer life, but as declaring Gods goodneſſe to his pedigree, filling his Fathers with many more dayes, then he had done him. Thus Calvin. If it ſhall be ſaid, He might further have ſo many dayes added to his life for ought he knew, as that he might herein have equalled them, why then doth he ſpeak of theſe 130 yeares, as the whole time of his life? Anſ. He lived yet after this 17 yeares, but he ſpeaketh, as not expecting now to live any longer, as it is the part of every aged perſon eſpecially to do. And we ſhould all make account of this life, as but a pilgrimage, thinking long to be at home, that is, to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt; ſpeaking therefore in the phraſe of Jacob, not the yeares, but the dayes of our life. And theſe dayes we ſhould count to be few in compariſon of the dayes of glory to come: and if to Jacob they were evill, and to Job 14.1. let not us be grieved to be filled with miſeries here alſo, thus drinking of the ſame cup with theſe worthies, that we may with them be feaſted ever enduring joyes.

Queſt.

Note.
Ferus.
Phil.1.23.

Verſe 11. And Joſeph placed his Father and Brethren in the Land of Rameſes, as Pharaoh had commanded.

Here Saint Auguſtine maketh a queſtion, forſomuch as Goſhen was the place aſſigned for them to dwell in, whether Rameſes were a part of this or no? but by putting the queſtion thus, he meant certainly, that it was, and the beſt and furtheſt part, being thus called by anticipation, for Rameſes was a City, in the building whereof the Hebrews were afterwards imployed by another Pharaoh, when they were made bondmen, but when Moſes wrote this, that City ſtood, and therefore he calleth that place, as things then were. And that this was in Goſhen, is plaine, Exod. 12. 37. and here the Hebrews then dwelt not alone, but mixt with the Egyptians, for which cauſe they marked the poſts of their Doore with the blood of the Paſchall Lamb for diſtinctions ſake. Howſoever it is to be thought rather in the time of Joſeph, that they pitched their Tents, and dwelt therein by themſelves, eſpecially after the comming of all the Countrey into the hands of Pharaoh, when in all parts he removed the old Inhabitants.

Auguſt. in Gen. quæſt.157.

Exod.1.11.

Verſe 12. And Joſeph nouriſhed his Father, &c. according to their families, in Hebrew לפי הטף, Lepi hattaph, to the mouth of the infant. Hereby ſaith Calvin, ſome underſtand, that without all care on their part, they were nouriſhed, as Infants taking the ſpeech, as emphaticall. But the moſt genuine meaning is, that he fed them from the greateſt to the leaſt, there was not one of them that wanted. But in Egypt there was no bread, and fainted, &c. The word fainted is הלה. which Calvin ſaith, may be taken two wayes, either for fainting, or for waxing mad through want; Tremelius turneth it furebat, ſaying that the Egyptians madly ſtirred up tumults. Indeed in the time of want men are moſt apt unto this, as experience teacheth: it is moſt likely, that both were done, ſome fainted, and ſome ran madly about, ſeeking food. Here is a ſtrange change, ſaith Ferus, Egypt did erewhile abound, but Jacob with his wanted, now Egypt wanteth, and they are ſupplyed; and ſo it ſhall be at the laſt, the hungry ſhall be fed with good things, and the full ſhall languiſh.

Calvin.

Verſe 13. Calvin. Tremel.

Ferus. Note.

Verſe 14. And Joſeph gathered all the money in Egypt and Canaan for food, and brought it into Pharaoh his houſe.

The rich men that had money, bought food therewith, as long as it laſted, till that all was ſpent, the poore that had none, being fed with the courſeſt

all all this time out of charity, or partly for the money gotten with their labour, and partly out of charity. And all this money Joſeph faithfully brought into Pharaohs treaſury, purloining no part thereof, as many man in the like office would have done.

The money being ſpent, the Egyptians call ſtill for food to Joſeph, then he agreeth to give them corne for all their cattell another year. We read not of any coming ſtill out of Canaan, now that their money was ſpent, ſo that it is moſt probable, that many of them periſhed by famine, and others lived upon roots and other vile food moſt miſerably to the end of the famin; when Jacob with his family was come from thence, their calamity increaſed more and more. But it may be, ſaith Calvin, that the famine was not thenceforth altogether ſo great in thoſe parts, or they gat food from ſome other countreys. But was it not a cruel part, ſaith he, in Joſeph, when all their money was ſpent, to exact their cattell alſo for Corne, Pharaoh had already gained ſufficiently, his treaſury being filled with money, ſhould he not therefore now rather in pitty have given them Corne to live upon? He anſwereth, that he was an Officer for the King, and therefore to give gratis was not in his power, unleſſe he would have been unfaithfull. If it be ſaid, he might have perſwaded the King; it may be anſwered, haply this exchange now for cattell proceeded from the King and his Counſell, and therefore he ought to obey. He had bought up their Corne in the plentifull yeares with the Kings money, although, as is moſt probable, for a little, and therefore he ſhould have wronged the King, if whileſt they had any thing remaining, he ſhould not have ſold it out for his benefit againe. We muſt in all this look at God, who (to make Joſeph ſtill the more gracious with Pharaoh, when by his policy he was thus inriched) by his ſecret providence ordered all things thus to be done, to confirme Joſeph the more in that high honour, to which he had ordeined him, and for a judgement upon the Egyptians for their former abuſes and ſinnes.

Verſe 15, 16.
Verſe 17.
Calvin.
Queſt.

That yeare being ended, they came the ſecond yeare, ſaying, We will not hide from my Lord, &c. Verſe 18.

By ſecond yeare here we are not to underſtand the ſecond from the beginning of the famine, but from the time of their money being ſpent. Two yeares were gone, when Jacob was ſent for to come into Egypt, the third yeare, wherein he came downe, the Egyptians haply had ſomething to feed upon ſtill remaining, the fourth they brought all their money, the fift their cattell, and now, it being the ſixt, they ſold their Land for Corne, ſo Luther. And as for Seed-corne, he gave not that unto them, till the beginning of the 7 yeare, ſo Philo lib. de Joſeph. We will not hide. Theſe words, ſaith Vatablus, ſome read thus, Seeing our money faileth, and our cattel, we have nothing left to give to my Lord. The word נכחד, tranſlated hide, ſaith Fagius, ſignifieth alſo to be rooted out, and ſo it is rendred by the Septuagint, Shall we be hidden, or cut off from our Lord? The plaineſt is, as hath been ſaid, We will not hide. So they offer themſelves and their Land for corne to live upon, and to ſeed their ground, becauſe they knew, that now the time of the famine was almoſt at an end. Of this offer Joſeph then accepted, and bought them and their Land for Pharaoh, and having done this, that it might appeare, that all the Land was now Pharaohs, he cauſed them in all parts to change their habitations, and to remove from one furtheſt part of the Land to another; the words are, He removed the people to the Cities from one end of the borders of Egypt to the other end, which Calvin expending ſaith, Another expoſition may be given, viz. That Joſeph made them to come from all parts into the Cities to receive Corne, and to ſeal Inſtruments of conveyance, becauſe if he ſhould have removed them, it might have turned to the detriment of the King and Common-wealth for the want of experience in new farmes. But his former expoſition is better, that he made them that dwelt in one City to go to another, and thus to acknowledge, that they had no propriety

Luther.
Philo lib. de Joſeph.
Fagius.
Verſe 19, 20
Verſe 21.
Calvin.
Vatablus.

propriety in any part of the land, but all was the Kings, thus alſo Vatablus, and this was done all over the land from end to end. If this ſhall ſeem hard dealing, it is anſwered, ſeeing no ſervile works or tributes were impoſed upon them, it was tolerable to enjoy every man a farme, and to pay the fift part of the increaſe to the King, he finding them ſeed, for ſo they might notwithſtanding live comfortably, becauſe Egypt was very fruitfull, and tilled with little coſt, ſo that Joſeph herein dealt moſt graciouſly with them, as they alſo confeſſe, v. 25. where they acknowledge, that they found grace in his ſight to become upon theſe good terms the ſervants of Pharaoh. And for the detriment imagined by thus removing, it may be ſaid that Egypt in all parts was very fruitfull, and therefore there could be no great errour in their husbandry any where for want of experience, and it may be, that he cauſed them to change ſervants alſo, by whom the nevv comers into any place might have ſome light into the beſt courſe of husbandry for profit.

Verſe 22. Queſt. Onely the land of the Prieſts bought he not, for they had a portion aſſigned them by Pharaoh, &c. It may be demanded here, whether the Prieſts had this portion at other times, or now onely, when their own land yielded them no corne? To this Muſculus anſwereth, that it is moſt probable, that it was an allowance onely at ſuch times made unto them, becauſe they had fields of their own, whereupon they lived at other times. But I rather think, that the King at all times dealt with the Prieſts, as is here ſaid, as the Prieſts of the Lord had, beſides their land, tithes and offerings to live upon, ſo likewiſe Ferus. And Herodotus ſaith, The Egyptian Prieſts enjoy no ſmall benefits, for they have every day provided for every of them Beefe and other boiled meats, and Gooſe in abundance, and wine; ſo that they ſpend nothing of their own. And Diodorus ſaith, that they have the third part of all the tributes for ſacrificing, and to live upon, for the care that they have of the gods, and for their inſtructing of others, and their giving counſell to the King, and foretelling things to come, both by ſacrifices and by skill in the ſtarres, for which they have alſo the ſecond place of honour and dignity to the King. And he ſaith, that they inſtituted noble mens ſonnes in the knowledge which they called ſacred, and of Geometry, Arithmetick and Aſtrology. Jerome ſaith, that theſe Prieſts came to be in ſo great honour for their wiſdome and continency, and piety. For ſaith he, Cheremon relateth, that of old the Prieſts of Egypt lived alwayes in the Temples, neglecting all worldly affairs, and giving themſelves onely to ſearch into the nature and cauſes of things, and the reaſon of the ſtars, and that they never married, or ſaw kinsfolkes, neighbours, or children, they abſteined from fleſh and wine, and ate little bread, they ate no milk or egges, &c. but by the report of Herodotus they were not ſo abſtemious, but full fed. And according to the order taken by King Pharaoh, Iezabel the wife of King Ahab provided for the Prophets of Baal, there were 400 of them that ate bread at her table continually. This care had by Heathens for the Prieſts of their gods, ſheweth much more, that Chriſtian Princes ſhould provide for the Miniſters of the Goſpel in their dominions, that they may be ſufficiently mainteined. And therefore all Expoſitours here cry out againſt thoſe that neglect this duty, as Theodoret, who ſaith, Even wicked men did ſo reverence thoſe that were no gods, that when all others were brought into bondage, their Prieſts were free, but the Prieſts of the living God do not enjoy this immunity. And Ferus complaineth, that neither Superiours do provide for Prieſts, nor Prieſts do their duties, but they take away, and theſe require living, when they do ſervice in none of the Churches. If it be demanded, how Joſeph could with a good conſcience nouriſh thoſe Prieſts, being moſt ſuperſtitious and idolatrous? Ferus alſo anſwereth, that Joſeph had better inſtructed them in the worſhip of the true God; for it is ſaid that Pharaoh ſet him over his houſe to teach his Princes, as himſelf. But Calvin ſaith, that although they were wicked, Joſeph was to fulfil the Kings command by giving them food, as the other Courtiers, forſomuch as Ferus. Herodot. in Euterpe. Sacerdotes Ægypti non exiguis afficiuntur commodis, nam neque aliquid de re domeſtica conterunt aut erogant, ſed ſingulis eorum quotidei cibi ſacri cocti præſto ſunt, &c. Diodor. Siculus. Lib. 2. tradit. Hieron. lib. 1. adverſ. Jovinian.

1 King. 18.

Theod. quæſt. 106. in Gen. Uſque adeò venerabantur homines impii eos, qui non erant dii, at verò ſacerdotes Dei viventis non gaudent hac immunitate.

Queſt. Ferus Chap. 41. 40. Calvin. Muſculus.

as he was not an abſolute Lord, but under Pharaoh. Indeed if he did not ſeek to reforme them, he was to blame, eſpecially having ſo ample rule committed unto him, According to thy word ſhall all my people be ruled.

Then Ioſeph recounted unto the people, that he had bought them and their land for Pharaoh, giving them ſeed, and appointing them to pay for a rent the fift part of the increaſe, which continued for a ſtatute in Egypt a long time, and they were well content with it. And whileſt the Egyptians were thus brought into ſervitude to the King, the Hebrews dwelt in Goſhen, and had poſſeſſions therein, and multiplyed exceedingly. Calvin thinketh, that the places inhabited by them were not given them, as their proper poſſeſſions, but that they were ſuffered to live quietly there, and to occupy for a time freely, which was the foundation of their ſo great increaſe: for they came onely to ſojourn there, the lot of their inheritance being the land of Canaan, in the expectation whereof Jacob and Joſeph ſtill reſted by faith. Verſe 23,24 Verſe 25,26 Verſe 27. Calvin.

And Jacob lived 17 years in Egypt, &c. It is ſtrange, that the five years of famine being paſt, for which time Jacob came to ſojourn in Egypt, that he returned not again, but lived ſtil there 12 years more. But it may be thought that he could not have free egreſſe out of that land any more, which muſt needs be another great triall of his faith in reſpect of Gods promiſe to give him Canaan for an inheritance. For howbeit he wanted nothing, but was wonderfully bleſſed in Egypt, yet he was out of the promiſed land, and he might fear, becauſe he could not ſee how, that his poſterity ſhould never return: thus Calvin. But when I conſider the divine oracle before, Chap. 46. 3. wherein it was promiſed, that he ſhould there grow into a great Nation, I think rather, that Iacob ſtayed all his life-time in Egypt, willingly reſting in this Revelation, neither can it be imagined, how he ſhould be there otherwiſe, conſidering the great power of his ſonne Joſeph, and that by the King nothing but kindeneſſe was offered unto him. He believed, that the time ſet before to Abraham, Gen. 15. muſt now be fulfilled, before the going out of his poſterity, and therefore ſubmitted to the good pleaſure of God herein. So all the years of Jacobs life were 147. He lived, as was before ſhewed, 77 in Canaan where he was born, 20 in Meſopotamia, 20 after his return again in Canaan, before the ſelling away of Joſeph, and after that 13, and laſtly, in Egypt 17. Verſe 28. Calvin. Vatablus.

Then Iacob deſired Joſeph to put his hand under his thigh, and to ſweare unto him, that he would not bury him in Egypt, but in the ſepulchre of his fathers, which he did, and then Iſrael bowed himſelfe upon the beds head. When Iacob perceived, that the time of his death approached, he is ſolicitous about the carrying of his bones to be buryed in the land of Canaan, in the ſepulchre of his fathers. Here it may be demanded firſt, why Iacob would not by any meanes be buried in Egypt, but in Canaan? To this Theodoret anſwereth, that hereby he would comfort and teach his family, that God would bring all them out of Egypt, and give them the promiſed land, which is alſo expreſſed by him unto Ioſeph in the next Chap. Verſe 21. and whereof Joſeph alſo ſpeaketh, when he taketh order for the tranſporting of his bones to the ſame place, Chap. 50 Verſe 24. And this is followed generally by other Expoſitors, onely it is added by ſome, that Jacob knew, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer & be buried there, in hope therefore of riſing again with him, he deſired ſo earneſtly to be buried there; & they ſay, he might foreſe haply by the ſpirit, that the bodies of many dead ſaints ſhould ariſe then, of the which number he hoped to be one, & it is by all good Catholicks held, ſaith Toſtatus, that he was one. But forſomuch as Chriſt was crucified and buried at Jeruſalem, and Jacob at Hebron, betwixt which two places were almoſt 30 miles, and they were the bodies in Jeruſalem only that aroſe then, this opinion is without ground. Jacob alſo had a deſire to be layd with them in his death, with whom he was joyned in the ſame grace, and expected to reign together in glory, for hereby he ſhewed, as Ferus ſaith, that he ſerved God with the ſame faith, that his fathers had done, and died in the ſame hope of the Reſurrection. And he addeth Verſe 29. Verſe 30,31 Queſt. 1. Theodoret. Lyranus. Scholaſt. hiſtoria cap. 100. Toſtatus. Ferus.

addeth moreover ſome other reaſons of this his ſolicitude about his buriall, not becauſe he had a care of his body, or thought it a miſerable thing to lye in a ſtrange country, or held Egypt not to be ſo good a place, for every Countrey is the Lords, but that his children might not love Egypt ſo, as to forget Canaan, but ſigh after the time of their being brought thither, and that when they ſhould after their coming into Canaan, have ſuch an example of piety continually before them, they might be put in minde of enſuing piety, and that for their impiety, they might not loſe it again. And much like unto this is the ſaying of Rupertus, the land of Canaan was a gift promiſed to Iacob and to his forefathers at ſundry times, and every gift of God, for the honour and charity of the giver, whether it be ſmall or great, earthly or heavenly; is precious in the eyes of a wiſe man, and therefore Iacob was ſo deſirous to hold it at the leaſt with his dead body, and therefore the living who ſhould afterwards hold it, ought to have been admoniſhed hereby to take heed, leſt God ſhould deprive them being ungratefull of this great gift again.

Rupert lib.9. in Gen.cap.21. Terra promiſſionis donum erat Dei, donum autem Dei qualecunque ſit, ſive parvum ſive magnum, ſive cœleſte ſive terrenum pro honore & charitate dantis, in oculis ſapientis eſt pretioſum, &c. Auguſt. lib.1. de Civit.cap.12,13 Tobit.2.

If it be further demanded, whether we ought to have any ſuch care about the buriall of our dead bodies in this place or in that? Saint Auguſtine anſwereth, ſaying, that to be well buried is not a thing to be neglected or deſpiſed, but the bodies of thoſe eſpecially, whom the Holy Ghoſt hath uſed, as his Inſtruments and veſſels, if it may be, ſhould have a due buriall. 1 Becauſe thus we ſhew how greatly we are affected unto them, as he that keepeth carefully his fathers ring or veſtiment. 2 Becauſe holy men, as Iacob and Joſeph, have been ſolicitous about their buriall. 3 Becauſe their ſurvivours beſtowed coſt in burying them, and Joſeph of Arimathea is commended by this, that he buried the body of Jeſus, and in Tobias it is ſpoken of as a point of piety, that he buried the dead. 4 Becauſe thus we ſhew our hope of the reſurrection, and ſo what we do about the dead bodies of Gods Saints cannot but be well pleaſing unto him, as an act of piety in us, although to relieve the living be much more pleaſing. Yet in caſe, that any of Gods ſervants die and have no buriall, as in times of war or perſecution, ſaith the ſame Father, there cometh no hurt unto them hereby. 1 Becauſe he biddeth us not to fear men, who can do nothing farther, but onely kill the body, and therefore by expoſing it unburyed, they cannot hurt it. 2 Becauſe a pompous buriall doth the body no good, as is to be ſeen in the example of Dives. 3 Becauſe even Heathen men have not weighed a buriall. Mecœnas ſaith, Nec tumulum curo, ſepelit natura relictos: and Lucanus, Cœlo tegitur, qui non habet urnam, &c. But in all this nothing is ſpoken of the place of buriall, Ferus therefore ſpeaketh more fully to this queſtion, ſaying, that from this and the like examples the Church of God hath taken up a cuſtome to bury in Church-yards and Churches, where other faithfull perſons have been laid before, and where the living having their monuments in their eyes, might be continually put in minde of their own mortality. And he cenſureth thoſe that would bury their dead in the fields apart, ſaying, that they hereby ſhew, that as in their life-time they were ſeparated from the Saints, ſo they are in their death, and they would by this meanes keep away the remembrance of death, when as Jacob being buried in the midſt of the land, his poſterity might by beholding his ſepulchre be remembred hereof. And laſtly, he taxeth thoſe, that by their dying friends have been deſired to lay them amongſt their kinsfolks, but would not after their death performe this their deſire, whereas Ioſeph did with all care ſatisfie the deſire of his dying father herein. For burying in generall, it is certainly a bleſſing of God to have a buriall, and to be caſt out without buryig, a curſe: for Joachim is threatened that he ſhould have none other buriall then an aſſe, and it is complained, *Pſal.*79.3. that at the coming in of the Heathen the Saints were ſlain and caſt forth, and there was none to bury them, ſee alſo *Eccleſ.*6.3. But as all other outward things, ſo this bleſſing is common to the good and to the evill, and is by all to be preferred, when it may behad; yet in caſe that it cannot, to the faithfull it is not Matth.10.28.

Ferus.

Jeremy.22.

not to be counted a curſe, becauſe all things ſhall work together for their good, and they ſhall have the more honour in heaven, but onely to the wicked it is a curſe, becauſe in wrath laid upon them. And for the place we ſhould now do, as is the cuſtome of the Church of God, provide, that the faithfull, as they are committed to the ground in one hope of the reſurrection, ſo they ſhould there ſleep together, and that neereſt unto the place, where they have aſſembled together in the teaching, learning, and profeſſion of the ſame faith. Secondly, it may be demanded, why Joſeph is ſpecially charged thus about his fathers buriall rather then any other of his brethren? Anſw. He was the chief by reaſon of his great dignity, and it lay in his power to do it for his authority in the land of Egypt, and not of the reſt, and grace did moſt ſhine in him, for which his father might chiefly repoſe his truſt in him, and his ſingular affection alſo towards Joſeph might carry him to this. Thirdly, if it be demanded, why he would have him binde himſelfe by oath? I anſwer, that he might lawfully do it, becauſe it was a matter of great moment, and tending to the glory of God, as hath been ſhewed, and there was a neceſſity ſo to do, that Joſeph might by reaſon of this oath without ſcandall to the Egyptians and to Pharaoh, ask leave of him afterwards to tranſport his fathers corps for the buriall, whereas otherwiſe, if he had not been thus tyed, ſome offence haply might have been taken at it, as if he thought no part of the land of Egypt good enough to bury his father in, or his minde were eſtranged from the land of Egypt; for theſe three things muſt concurre that an oath may be lawfully taken. 1 The matter muſt be ſerious. 2 There muſt be neceſſity. 3 To Gods glory. And by cauſing Joſeph to take an oath to bury him in Canaan, Iacob gave occaſion to his ſonnes and poſterity the more ſeriouſly to conſider of it, to think upon and to expect the poſſeſſion of that land, & therefore not to ſettle to Egypt, or to grow as one people with the Egyptians in their wickedneſſes and groſſe ſuperſtitions. Fourthly, if it be demanded, why he cauſed him to put his hand under his thigh to ſwear? This hath been reſolved already, Chap. 24.2. and whereas he doth not command as a father, but intreat him, as a Superiour, if I have found grace in thy ſight; herein he acknowleged his royall dignity, yielding ſome veneration to him, as was foretold long before in Iaſephs dreames, that his father, mother and brethren ſhould worſhip him, ſo Muſculus. Laſtly, there is ſome queſtion made about Iacobs worſhipping upon the bed, becauſe in the Septuagints tranſlation it is ſaid, He worſhipped, leaning upon the top of his ſtaffe, ſo likewiſe, *Heb.*11.21. and in the vulgar Latine, Adoravit faſtigium virgæ; the word upon being left out; but of the altercations about theſe divers readings, ſee my Expoſition upon Heb. 11.21. Iacob being joyfull for the promiſe of his ſonne Joſeph boweth himſelfe, and worſhippeth God in praiſing of him, for this great mercy, as the Hebrews afterwards did, when Moſes came unto them, and told them of Gods compaſſion towards them, Exod. 4.32. and becauſe he was weak and feeble, he holpe himſelfe with his ſtaffe, or ſat upon his bed, and there by bowing his body worſhipped. The word מטה as it may be pointed, ſignifieth a bed or a ſtaffe, and this is the cauſe of the diverſity.

Queſt. 2.

Queſt. 3.

Calvin.
Muſculus.
Ferus.

Queſt. 4.

Muſculus.

Queſt. 5.

Touching the Allegory of this place, as Ioſeph placed his Father and Brethren in the Land of Goſhen, which was the beſt of all Egypt; ſo Chriſt giveth a poſſeſſion to his Brethren, which be the faithfull, *Math.*12 in the beſt Land, that is, the Land of the living, *Pſ.*16.

Iſidore.

One beginneth the Allegory higher: As Joſeph went in to Pharaoh, v. 1. and ſpake for his Father & brethren, ſo Chriſt intercedeth with God for us, and bringeth us before him, that we may be where he is, Iohn 14. and Ch. 17. and he inſtructeth his to ſpeak to the father, Luc. 11. as Ioſeph did his brethren. And as they ſtill contented them ſelves to be ſhepherds, ſo muſt we live always humble and lowly. And as they wanted nothing, when the Egyptians were pinched with famin, ſo the time ſhall come, when the hungry ſhall be filled with good things, but the rich shall be sent empty away. Moreover, as the Egyptians sold all that they had and themselves to be servants for food, so the wicked subiect themselves for the belly to perpetuall servitude, for he that committeth sin, is the servant of sin. And the time shall come, when they shall be stript of all, as the Egyptians were, whereas they abounded before, but the servants of God, which suffered want, shall be provided for. Againe, the Priests were excepted from those that suffered, so the Lord saith, The Labourer is worthy of his hire, and they that preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel. Rabanus saith, that Iosephs buying of the Egyptians with corn, setteth forth Christs redeeming of all the world with his blood: his giving them seed, &c. Christ commanding of us to sowe the seed of the word, that fruit may spring up thereof, &c. But Gregory better, We are fed and have seed given us as the Egyptians had, when we are bought for servants unto God, and then only do we receive the seed of the word to fructify and bring forth fruit thereof, when we submit our selves to be his servants. Touching Iacobs desire to be buried in Canaan, Augustine saith, that the burial of the dead figureth out the remission of sins, wherefore Iacob would have his dead body buried in Canaan, to set forth the remission of sinnes by the blood of Christ, which was shed there, and in a place 30 miles off from Mount Calvary, where Christ suffered, to signifie his age, when the Holy Ghost came down upon him. But in allegorizing upon these histories, we must be wise and wary, lest we turn things written in the word to some sense never intended by the enditer thereof.

Ferus.

Matth. 10. 1 Cor. 9. Rabanus.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 6. in Iob 5. Servi facti etiam ad semen frumenta percipimus, quia cùm plenè Deo subdimur, verbo prædicationis replemur. August. qu. 161. in Gen.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Verse 1.

JOseph now hearing, that his Father Jacob was sick, hastened unto him, and took his two Sonnes with him.

Hereby he shewed his great piety to his Father to the end, in that he could not by his great imployments be hindered from visiting him in his last sickneſſe. But why doth he take his Sonnes with him? Doubtlesse to be blessed of that good old man, before his departure, as Ferus saith, and his blessing upon himselfe also he preferred before all the wealth of Egypt; Iacob was a Prophet, and therefore now towards his end, saith Calvin, the grace belonging to the Church of God was to be transfused by his blessing, as other men at such times by their last Testaments do passe away their worldly goods. Ioseph needed no wealth for himselfe or his, but only his Fathers blessing, which he knew would do his children more good, then all that he was able to leave them, in such account were the blessings of those Ancients, and contrariwise, of such power were their curses, as of Noah upon Canaan. Ioseph by bringing his Sonnes thus to Iacob did emancipate them, as it were from Egypt where they were borne, and restore them to their true originall. But in thus doing, he could not but make them stink before the Egyptians, when they should be counted Hebrews, yet even this disgrace he preferred before all the riches of Egypt, to incorporate them into Gods holy Church. And the same should we count to be our chiefe glory, although, as the first Christians we should have it imputed unto us, as a baseneſſe to be of this holy society.

Quæst.

Ferus.

Calvin.

Quòd filios suos adducit, perinde est, ac si ab ea terra, in qua nati erant emanciparet, ac suæ origini restitueret, &c.

Note.

Verse 2, 3.

Verse 4.

Iacob hearing, that his Son Ioseph was come to visit him, was cheared up hereby, and sate up upon his bed. Then he declared the vision, that he had long ago at Luz, and how God promised to increase him, and to give the Land of Canaan to his seed for a perpetuall inheritance. Of this vision read Gen. 28, and Chap. 35. Luz was the common name of the place, but Iacob for the apparition made unto him, had given it a new name, Bethel. Of Gods promise touching the increase of his seed made then, he now speaketh; and touching the possession of Canaan to be given for ever unto them, that hereby it might appeare, why he would adopt the two Sonnes of Ioseph for his his that they might be comforted in expectation of the accompliſhment of this promiſe, and not in their hearts be taken up with the pleaſures of Egypt, ſo as to think alwayes to ſettle there. This promiſe Jacob hereby ſheweth that he made ſingular account of, and ſo would he have Joſeph to do, as doubtleſſe being ſo holy a man he did. Of the meaning of the words of the promiſe ſee before, Chap. 28. and Ch. 35.

Now therefore thy two Sonnes, Manaſſe and Ephraim, ſhall be mine, and the Sons which thou ſhalt beget after them, ſhall be thine, they ſhall be called after the name of their Brethren. Verſe 5,6.

His meaning is, that whereas they were his Grand-children, yet they ſhould be counted, as his Sonnes; ſo highly did he eſteeme of Joſeph, that whereas of one other Brother came one tribe only, which had a ſingle inheritance, viz. the twelfth part of the Land of Canaan, theſe two comming of him ſhould grow into two Tribes, and ſo in them he ſhould have a double inheritance, viz. the ſixth part of the Land. And what he ſaid here was propheticall, and accordingly received by Ioſeph, and afterwards accompliſhed, although at this time Iacob might ſeeme to have talked but idly, ſeeing he lived in a ſtrange place, and whileſt he was in Canaan, had alwayes hitherto wanted the poſſeſſion thereof. For Ioſephs other children, he ſaith, that they ſhall be called by the names of theſe two, as belonging to their Tribes, and not making any more diſtinct Tribes, as theſe two did. Muſculus. Calvin. Rabanus. Ferus.

But whether had Joſeph ever any more ſonnes? Anſ. When his children are reckoned up afterwards we read of no more, as Numb. 26. 28. 1 Chron. 5. 7. but it may be, that although he had other ſonnes, they are not ſpoken of, becauſe they came under the names of theſe two, as is here appointed. Queſt.

Ephraim and Manaſſe were thus adopted by Iacob, ſaith Ferus, leſt after his death, there ſhould have been a ſtrife about them, as not perteining to the holy ſeed, becauſe they were borne in Egypt. Ferus.

Then Iacob telleth Ioſeph, that Rachel his Mother died, as he came out of Padan-Aram, and was buried in the way of Ephrath, the ſame is Bethlehem. Verſe 7.

This ſaith Ferus, is added, as a reaſon, why he adopted the two Sonnes of Ioſeph, that his Brethren might not take indignation at it, viz. becauſe Rachel died ſo ſoone, having brought him only two Sonnes, whereas ſhe might have lived, if it had pleaſed God, to have brought him more. Now then to ſupply this defect, he would have Manaſſe and Ephraim, the two Sonnes of Ioſeph to be numbred amongſt his Sonnes, and he ſpeaketh of her buriall, that Ioſeph might not take it ill, that ſhe was not laid in the Sepulchres of his Fathers, as from which ſhe was by dying upon the way prevented. Calvin ſaith, that this is ſpoken of to ſtimulate Ioſeph, when he remembred how his Mother came out of a farre Countrey to go into Canaan, that he and his might not think much, ſometime leaving Egypt to returne thither alſo. Calvin.

Of Rachels buriall ſee before, Chap. 35.16. We may joyn both theſe ends together, as haply aimed at by Iacob in this relation. And Auguſtine ſaith, It may be he ſpeaketh of her buriall in Bethlehem, becauſe Chriſt was to be born there.

Then Iacob ſeeing Ioſephs two Sonnes, asketh who they were, becauſe being dim-ſighted, he could not diſcerne. And underſtanding, that they were Ioſephs, he requireth to have them brought neare unto him, that he might bleſſe them, that is, by laying his hands upon them, being firſt imbraced and by their neareneſſe better diſcerned. Then he kiſſed and imbraced them to declare his good will towards them, as Chriſt imbraced little children in his armes, and as Simeon took Chriſt into his armes. And he ſaid, I had not thought to have ſeen thy face, and lo, God hath made me ſee thy ſeed. This he ſpeaketh, as praiſing God therefore. Verſe 8,9. Verſe 10. Luther. Verſe 11.

And Joſeph brought them out from betweene his knees, and he bowed himſelfe with his face to the earth Verſe 12.

Some referre this to Joſephs knees, as if he had taken his Sonnes from his owne boſome, or from between his owne knees to ſet them to his Father to be Vatablus. Calvin. Ferus.

be bleſſed by him. But it ſeemeth rather, as Ferus hath it, that he took them from his Fathers knees, who had hitherto imbraced them, and made them to kneele downe before him to receive his bleſſing, he himſelfe alſo doing this low reverence unto him, and humbly thanking him for accepting ſo favourably of his ſonnes, as of his owne, wherein he gave an example to the greateſt to humble themſelves to their Parents, although far inferiour to themſelves in degree.

Verſe 13,24

Then Joſeph placed his ſonnes, Manaſſe, to the right hand of Iacob and Ephraim to the left, but he contrariwiſe ſtretched out his right hand to the head of Ephraim, and laid his left upon Manaſſe, guiding his hands wittingly, in the Hebrew it is, He made his hands underſtand, an Hebraiſme to ſet forth, that he did it wittingly, for Manaſſe was the elder. His ſight was ſo dim, that he could not thereby well diſtinguiſh the elder from the younger, but it is noted here, that by the extending of his hands he diſtinguiſht them, which ſheweth that he was guided herein by the Spirit of God, and ſo what he did, came of God. This was an externall rite, whereby he confirmed the foreſaid adoption unto them, even by laying his hands upon their heads, ſo Calvin. But whether was there any thing ſpiritually and myſtically ſet forth by the croſſing of his hands? Iſidorus and Ferus ſay, that the croſſe of Chriſt was figured out by this, as whereby the bleſſing of God ſhould be conferred upon us: for being a Prophet, ſaith Ferus, and ſpeaking of his waſhing his robe in Wine; he could not be ignorant, out of what Wine-preſſe this Wine ſhould be preſſed. And Iſidore ſaith, that the right point of the croſſe being made to the younger, and the left to the elder, prefigured the Gentiles obteining grace, when the Jewes were deprived of it. And Rupertus, whom Ferus followeth, ſaith, Without doubt the croſſe of Chriſt was by Jacob figured out here, becauſe otherwiſe he could have cauſed Joſeph to ſet Ephraim againſt his right hand, and Manaſſeh againſt his left. However, I finde nothing in any of the ancients from hence commending ſuperſtious croſſing, as a bleſſing from evill, according to the uſe thereof amongſt the Papiſts at this day.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Queſt.

Ferus.

Iſidore.

Rupertus lib.9. in Gen.c.24.

Queſt.

But it may further be demanded, why the younger is thus preferred before the elder, as alſo Jacob was before Eſau, Moſes before Aaron, David before his elder Brethren, Judah and Joſeph before their Elders, Abel before Cain, and Shem, who as Theodoret ſaith, was the ſecond, before Japhet, the eldeſt, &c? Anſ. This was done partly to ſhew that God ſeeth not, as man ſeeth, as was ſaid to Samuel touching the Sonnes of Iſhai, and that they, who are neglected before men, are preferred before God, and contrariwiſe: and partly to prefigure the preference of the Gentile before the Jew, to which alſo the parable of the younger being firſt a prodigall, Luc. 15. tendeth. And Iſidore will have Manaſſe in ſpeciall a figure of the Jew, becauſe Manaſſe ſignifieth forgetfulneſſe, and the Jew forgat God, and Ephraim ſignifying fruitfulneſſe of the Gentile, becauſe the Gentiles imbracing the faith of Chriſt are fruitfull, filling all Lands. If it be further ſaid, could not Jacob have preferred Ephraim by laying his left hand upon his head, as well as his right? Anſ. The right hand hath alwayes been accounted the chiefe, & therefore when honour hath been given to any, he hath bin ſet on the right hand, as Solomon ſet his Mother, and the Lord ſetteth Chriſt, Pſ. 110. Rom. 8. Act. 7. and Chriſt ſetteth his Church, Pſ. 45. yet the Perſians, as we may gather out of Xenophon, were herein contrary to all others; for, he ſaith, that Cyrus their King at a Feaſt placed him, whom he moſt honoured on his left hand, and the next on his right, the third againe on his left, the fourth on his right, &c. till they were all placed about him.

1 Sam.16.

Iſidore.

Queſt.

Xenophon.lib.8. Cyripaidræ.

Verſe 16,17

And he bleſſed Joſeph, and ſaid, God in whoſe ſight my Fathers, Abraham, and Iſaac, have walked, &c. 17 The Angel, that delivered me from all evil, bleſſe theſe lads, and let my name be called upon them, &c.

Queſt.

How did he bleſſe Joſeph, when he ſaid nothing of him, but only prayed God

God to bleſſe his children? Anſ. In bleſſing them, he bleſſeth him, becauſe their multiplying was his multiplying, forſomuch as they were his, ſo Luther: but Vatablus ſaith, Some underſtand theſe words in the end, Bleſſe thee: O my Son Joſeph. But this is needleſſe, for children are of their Father, and the Father may well be ſaid to be bleſſed, when they are bleſſed. In bleſſing them we may note, that he prayeth to God, ſhewing hereby that he was but an inſtrument and the power of bleſſing reſted in God only, ſo the Prieſts were directed afterwards to bleſſe the people. But why doth he ſay, Before whom my Fathers walked, and not before whom I have walked? To this it is generally anſwered, that he ſpake thus in modeſty, not attributing any thing to himſelfe, of how great grace ſoever he was made partaker, as is commanded, Luc. 17.10. And more particularly, as Ferus hath it, that he might faſten the memory of Abraham and Iſaac in Joſeph and his childreu, that they might be ſtirred up to imitate them, who becauſe they were faithfull were in high account with the Lord, and that remembring Abraham and Iſaac, to whom and to their ſeed the promiſes were made, they being their ſeed might be the more confirmed in faith to believe the bleſſing to come. But how doth he pray the Angel to bleſſe them? To this Calvin anſwereth, that the Angel here ſpoken of is equall to God, and therefore in praying to God he is joyned with him, for which cauſe he cannot be taken to be an ordinary Angel, but the Son of God, Chriſt Jeſus, who appeared as an Angel, and led and provided for the faithfull, although he had not yet taken fleſh, as we may ſee, 1 Cor. 10.4. Tremelius likewiſe alledging other places, wherein the Lord is ſet forth by the name of an Angel, as Exod. 13.21. chap. 14. 19,24. Gen. 31.11. Mal. 3.1. R. Menahem alſo ſaith, he mentioneth Gods Majeſty, Shechinah, when he ſpeaketh of the Angel, that redeemed him, whereby he ſeemeth to hold, that this Angel was God. Ferus contrariwiſe ſaith, He knew that Angels were by God deputed to take a care of men, and that God worketh by meanes, and therefore he excludeth not the meanes, but thankfully accepteth what God giveth by whom ſoever, whether by himſelfe or by any other. If we look back to that which befell Jacob, we ſhall finde, that as God, ſo his Angels have ſometimes been ſeen about him as an army in tents, intimating, that they vvere ſet to defend him from evill, and ſometime aſcending and deſcending vvhere he lay in the night, to ſhew their watching over him: And as Peter had his Angel, Act. 12. ſo it is commonly held, that every one of Gods ſervants hath an Angel guardian about him, as I have ſhewed, Mat. 18.10. Conſidering which I cannot but incline rather to think, that it was a very Angel of whom Jacob ſpeaketh here. And it is not neceſſary to hold, that he prayed to an Angel, as to God, although it be underſtood thus, but having prayed God for his bleſſing, he mentioneth the Angell, as his Inſtrument to guard and to preſerve his; but only as if he had ſaid, God by his Angel preſerve and be about theſe lads, as he was about me, or by the Angels his Miniſters convey a bleſſing upon them; for if a Father can bleſſe his childe, and it ſhall be effectuall, as when Iſaac bleſſed Jacob, and his bleſſing may be asked, then the bleſſing of an Angel appointed to guard a man. For that which is added, And let my name be called upon them, not only Calvin, but Ferus ſaith, it is, as if he had ſaid, Let them be named Tribes of Iſrael, as the reſt of my ſonnes: ſo likewiſe Chryſoſtome; By theſe two, the number of 12 being made up, when Levi ſhall be taken out, and the whole Land of Canaan ſhall be divided amongſt 12 Tribes. So that ſuch Papiſts are over-ridiculous, as hereupon ground the calling upon Saints departed. Let them be increaſed in the midſt of the Land; that is, both of Egypt, for there Ephraim grew into 40500, and Manaſſe into 32200, and afterwards in Canaan.

Luther.

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Numb.6.24.

Queſt.

Ferus.

Queſt.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Gen.32.1.

Ged.18.12.

Chryſoſt.

Muſculus.

When Joſeph ſavv his Father to put his right hand upon Ephraim, and his left upon Manaſſe, he vvould have placed his hands othervviſe, but Jacob perſiſted, ſaying that Manaſſe ſhould be a great people, but Ephraim greater, and

Verſe 17.

Verſe 18,19

and his ſeed, ſaith he, ſhall be the fulneſſe of the Gentiles. Jacob ſaw by the ſpirit that which Joſeph did not, and therefore it is no marvell, although he did things unſeemly in his eyes, in preferring the younger before the elder. It was Gods will that Ephraim ſhould be moſt fruitfull, and that Kings ſhould come of him, although in merit there was no difference betwixt him and his brother, but the meer grace of God was the cauſe of this, and therefore he howſoever younger was thus preferred. Touching the laſt clauſe, It is, ſaith Vatablus, an Hebraiſme, as if he had ſaid, Many peoples ſhall be borne of him: the Chaldee Paraphraſt, His ſons ſhall be mighty amongſt the peoples.

Vatablus.
Chald. Paraphraſt.

Verſe 20.

And he bleſſed them, ſaying, In thee ſhall Iſrael bleſſe, ſaying, God make thee as Ephraim and Manaſſe: that is, they ſhall both ſo multiply and live in ſuch glory, that when any ſhould wiſh unto any other the greateſt increaſe, they ſhould commonly ſpeak in this forme.

Verſe 21.

Calvin.

Then Iſrael ſaid to Joſeph, I die, but God will be with you, and make you return to the land of your fathers: that is, although I die in Egypt, Gods promiſe ſhall not die, wherefore be not weak in your faith, but expect certainly hereby a return thither, and the poſſeſſion thereof in Gods good time. This he inculcateth again the rather, becauſe his ſonnes ſhould have no Revelations, as he and his fathers had, to confirme them, that the words of him dying might alwayes ſound in their eares, and be believed as firmly, as if God ſhould reveal this from heaven unto them, becauſe he was a Prophet, and ſpake by the Spirit of God. And ſo indeed all the words of Gods Prophets to be received by us, and live ſtill in our memories to ſtrengthen our faith, although they be all dead and gone.

Note.

Verſe 22.

Moreover, I give to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my ſword, and with my bowe. Some, ſaith Calvin, underſtand by this one portion nothing elſe, but in generall: whereas they had each one a ſingle portion, he had two for his two ſonnes: but this is contrary to the text, deſcribing this portion, as taken from the Amorite. It was therefore without all doubt the place where the Shechemites dwelt, and the word tranſlated portion is שכם, being the very name of the place Shechem. How he ſaid that he had taken this from the Amorite with his ſword and his bowe, ſee before, Chap. 34. 25. Calvin. How the tribe of Ephraim and Manaſſeh come to poſſeſſe it, ſee, Joſh. 24. 32. viz. that whole tract of ground belonging ſometime to the Shechemites, and not the little plot purchaſed onely Gen. 33. 19. Some, ſaith Calvin, to clear this ſpeech, flee to an Allegory, as if by ſword were meant money, wherein, as great ſtrength lyeth, ſome to a Prolepſis, as if it had been ſpoken of as done, which was afterwards done. But howſoever Simeon and Levi took it, yet he diſpoſſeſſeth them, as coming upon the Shechemites after the manner of thieves, and falling to him by the divine providence, he ſpeaketh of it as gotten by his proweſſe. Ferus having expounded this as taken by the ſword of his ſons, and by their power, againſt which impious fact he greatly ſtormed, but knowing the Will of God, he took it as his own, as being a thing by him ordeined: he addeth, that by ſword and bowe we may alſo underſtand Jacobs juſtice and faith, to which God gave this portion, taking it from the wicked. So likewiſe, and as bought with his money, which coſt him great labour and toile. If it ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that he would once ſpeak, now that he was dying, of a piece of ground upon earth; it is to be underſtood, that he did it to avoid contention afterwards, if Simeon and Levi ſhould ſtand for it, as being formerly by them ſubdued, which is a godly care in parents by Will to ſettle their Eſtates, to prevent ſtrife amongſt their children after their departure. Saint Auguſtine, becauſe it ſeemeth improbable that Jacob would ſpeak of this portion ſo taken from the Amorites, if it be underſtood literally, as glorying in it, ſaith, that a myſtery is to be ſought herein, for if he meant literally, as the words ſound, how could he ſtill have upbraided Simeon and Levi hereby,

John. 4. 5.

Raban. Maur. Tremel.

Ferus.

Hierom. in tradit. Hæbraicis.

Note.
Auguſt. quæſt. 167. in Gen.
Aliquod procul dubio hîc latet Propheticum Sacramentum.

Chap 49. Without doubt therefore, ſaith he, there is in this ſome propheticall Sacrament, by Joſeph Chriſt is to be underſtood, and by this portion of ground wherein Jacob had hidden in the ground ſtrange gods, the Gentiles, who renouncing their idolatries, became a poſſeſſion of Chriſt, and received his faith. Thus alſo after him Rabanus and Ferus. Novv although I deny not a myſtery to lie hid herein, yet, as in all other hiſtoricall paſſages, ſo here the literall ſenſe is firſt to be given, and then the myſticall. Whereas Auguſtine cannot yield to the literall meaning, as it hath been before delivered, becauſe Jacob ſhould thus both approve and condemn the ſame thing finally. It may be ſaid, that he alwayes altogether condemned the bloody fact of his ſonnes, but ſeeing it to be Gods will, that this land ſhould fall to him by the extirping of the Shechemites, he took it unto him, as his own, and therefore he kept his flocks there afterwards, Gen. 37.13. and now he giveth, as gotten by force of the armes of his family. And peradventure, after his departure from Shechem for fear of a revenge, the Amorites came to poſſeſſe that place being void, but he expelled them by force of armes again, as having more right unto it, for which cauſe he ſaith not, that he took it from the Hivites, ſuch as the former inhabitants the Shechemites were, but from the Amorites new incrochers. Others have reſolved this doubt otherwiſe, as Aben-Ezra, and Toſtatus, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt, holding that by ſword and bow, his moſt ardent prayers are to be underſtood, ſeeing hereby as by ſword and bowe Moſes ſometime prevailed againſt Amaleck, and Jacob cauſed a terrour to be ſtricken into the Amorites, ſo that he might take and uſe Shechem afterwards at his pleaſure. Andreas Maſius, that ſome part of the land neer to that, which he bought is meant, which had formerly belonged to the Shechemites, but being poſſeſſed by the Amorites he ſmote them, and joyned it to his purchaſed land, for it is not to be thought but that many things were done by Jacob, which are not recorded. I reſt in the firſt, as moſt genuine, eſpecially if that be added of a future expulſion of the Amorite, as I have ſaid. Muſculus ſaith, Whereas the names differ, for the Shechemites who were Hivites poſſeſſed that place, and not Amorites who are here ſpoken of, that of Emor or Hamor they might eaſily be called Amorites; as from Shechem Shechemites: and that Amorite was the common name of thoſe Countrey-men, Hivites of ſuch as inhabited a particular tract of ground in that land, and ſo they were Amorites by a name more generall, and Hivites by a more particular.

Nam & Joſeph Chriſtum præfiguravit, & ei datur illa terra, ubi Jacob diſperdiderat Deos alienos, obtinendo eos in terra, ut Chriſtus intelligatur poſſeſſurus gentes Deos patrum ſuorum renunciantes & credentes in ipſum.

Aben Ezra.
Toſtatus.

Andr. Maſius in Joſ. 24.

Muſculus.

CHAP. XLIX.

HEre Jacob calleth his ſonnes together to hearken to that which ſhould befall them in the laſt dayes. It is moſt likely, that they were preſent before when he bleſſed Joſeph, but he calleth them neerer together, that they might the better hear and underſtand and remember, what he ſhould ſay touching every one of them. And to ſtirre them up to the more attention, he ſetteth forth himſelfe as a Prophet enlightened by the Spirit to ſpeak of things to come a long time after, which is meant, when he ſaith, in the laſt dayes, that is, after the time expired of your living, as exiles from the land of Canaan in Egypt, &c. to the coming of the Meſſiah, not that he meant to ſet forth all particulars, but the heads of thoſe things that ſhould befall them, and firſt, and chiefly in the diviſion of the land of Canaan, but Ferus by the laſt dayes underſtandeth alſo the time of the Goſpel commonly ſo called. And Rupertus before him, becauſe Jacobs ſonnes were not onely according to the fleſh, but according to the Spirit, viz. the faithfull under the Goſpel, yet generally by the laſt dayes, onely times following after a certain ſpace are meant, as, Dan. 2.28. 1 Tim. 4.1. 2 Tim. 3.1. But why doth he ſay, Ye ſonnes of Jacob, and then varying the word, Hearken to Iſrael your father? To this Origen ſaith,

Verſe 1,2.

Calvin.

Queſt.

as Rabanus hath it, that they had not atteined to that perfection, to which he had atteined in ſeeing into the things of God, and therefore the father is ſet forth by the name of Iſrael, which was in ſingular favour given unto him, but they by the name of the ſonnes of Jacob, as he was called from his birth.

Ferus. But this is over-curious, that of Ferus and others is better, he biddeth them twice to gather themſelves together, and twice to hearken, that they might be preſent, and attend with the ears both of their bodies and mindes, and he nameth himſelf not onely by his name Jacob, but of Iſrael for the ſame cauſe, that they might with reverence hear him their father, and their father enlightened by God to foreſee things to come. The firſt end of Iſrael herein then was to aſſure them of receiving the land of Canaan for a poſſeſſion, becauſe he aſſigneth here to each one his part, as if he had been preſent at the diviſion, and then to foretell things to come afterwards, that they by the remembrance hereof might be made to ſtand in a continuall expectation of a deliverance out of Egypt, and of being brought thither, and herein be comforted againſt all their future oppreſſions and miſeries in Egypt. Abraham and Iſaac did not the like before their deaths, although Abraham had many ſonnes, the reaſon is, becauſe Jacobs ſonnes onely, and not theirs, were appointed by God to grow into one people, and therefore he ſingularly would have them come thus together unto him to receive his bleſſing, wherein Abraham reſpected Iſaac onely, and Iſaac Jacob for ſuch, as in whom the holy ſeed was, their other children being ſeparated to make divers other Nations by themſelves. That which followeth here as uttered by Jacob, is commonly called his laſt Teſtament, or his bleſſing of the twelve Patriarchs, but it is rather his prophecie touching every one of them, mingled with curſings and bleſſings, as will appear, if we conſider his words, or that which is ſet down here by way of Preface, for he propoundeth to tell them things to come.

Verſe 28. But yet becauſe in the winding up of theſe prophecies, it is ſaid, This is that which their father ſpake, and bleſſed them, each one according to his bleſſing: It may be called his bleſſings of them alſo, as which in thoſe laſt words are implyed to have been added in the end of his prophecyings. According to this example of Jacob, his twelve ſonnes are ſaid alſo, when they were neer the time of their departing, to have ſpoken each one to his children, diſſwading from vice, and exhorting to vertue, and foretelling divers things to come, as appeareth by the Book, called the Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, which is ſet forth amongſt thoſe called Monumenta Patrum. And afterwards Moſes did the like, Deut. 33. and Joſhuah, Chap. 24. and Samuel at the end of his time as Judge giveth divers admonitions to the people, 1 Samuel 12. and David, 1 Chron. 29.

Verſe 3. Verſe 4. Reuben my firſt-born, the beginning of my ſtrength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power; unſtable, as water, thou ſhalt not excell, becauſe thou wenteſt up to thy Fathers bed, &c.

The ſons of Jacob are in divers places reckoned up, but alwayes in a different order, as Gen. 30. 46. and Numb. 1. 2. 7. 10. 12. 13. 24. 26. and Deut. 27. 33. Joſ. 15. which Ruffinus obſerveth and admireth. Here they are placed according to their age, viz. the 4 eldeſt and the 2 youngeſt, but not the reſt, of this divers order Origen alſo ſpeaketh, but deferreth to give the reaſon, till that he cometh to ſpeak of each one in particular.

Ruffin. lib. de benedict. Patriarcharum.

Origen.

Calvin. Touching Reuben the words are diverſly read by divers, in the vulgar Latin, for the beginning of my ſtrength, is the beginning of my grief, becauſe the vvord is אוֹן ſignifying alſo griefe, and then this is rendered, as a reaſon, vvhy he calleth him ſo, becauſe vvhen a man beginneth to have Children, he beginneth to have care and ſorrovv, as Ferus hath it, he meaneth his griefe for ſin committed by his children, then vvhich nothing could be more grievous unto him: but becauſe all that is firſt ſaid here, till he cometh to reproof, is altogether matter of excellency, My firſt-born, my ſtrength, the excellency of dignity, &c. To aggravate the ſin of Reuben the more it is better to expound it by ſtrength, and he calleth him the beginning of his ſtrength, becauſe he vvas the firſt branch, vvhich ſprang from his gegenerative vertue, and in him he began firſt to revive again as it vvere, and begat him, vvhen he vvas ſtrongeſt. The next vvords alſo are rendered in the vulgar Latine, prior in donis, major in imperio. Hieronym. rendreth it, major ad portandum, major robore; the Septuagint hard to beare, hard in procacity and injury: But Pagninus rendering it word for word, according to the Hebrew, hath it, the excellency of dignity and the excellency of ſtrength. The Cald. thus, Thou ſhouldeſt receive 3 portions, the birth-right, the Prieſthood and the Kingdom. Targum Hieroſol. for the ſin of Reuben the double portion of the birth-right is given to Joſeph, the Kingdome to Judah, and the Prieſthood to Levi. Ambroſe readeth the whole thus, initium filiorum meorum, durus portari, durus et temerarius affeciſti me contumeliâ.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr.

Ambroſ. lib. de. benedict. Patriarch.

It availeth much to make a man the more aſhamed, and to humble him the more, to recount what he is faln from, of what dignity he was, but how baſe now he is, what obligations of favours there were to binde him to duty above others, which notwithſtanding he ungratefully hath gone from his duty, and ſhewed inſolency. And therefore Jacob ſpeaketh of this to humble Reuben the more, and to warne both him & his poſterity to take the more heed of ſinning afterwards, when they ſhould conſider, what excellency they were already fallen from by ſin, and what they had loſt hereby, even the Kingdome and Prieſthood of right belonging to the firſt-born, and the double portion to the reſt: ſo Ferus, Unſtable, as water, in the vulger Latin, poured out like water, Pagninus readeth it according to the Hebrew, light as water, all to one effect, as water, if it can finde any place to run over, breaketh forth, ſo haſt thou done in thy luſt, or he ſpeaketh of this, as a puniſhment, that he was unſtable in his dignity, ſaith Calvin, becauſe of his ſin. Ferus ioyneth both theſe together as meant hereby, as water breaking out ſtirreth up froath and bubbles, which make a great ſhew, but preſently vaniſh, ſo thou haſt been proud of thy primogeniture, thou haſt thought thy ſelf great, and that whatſoever thou ſhould'ſt do, thou could'ſt not be driven from this right, but now thy glorying hath an end. And he proſecuteth this alluſion to water yet further. 1 Becauſe, as water breaking out is carried without reaſon, onely by violence, ſo was he by the violence of his luſt. 2 As water breaking out bringeth loſſe, ſo he brought loſſe to himſelfe and to his poſterity. 3 As water running away leaveth nothing behinde it, as doth oil, after which remaineth a fatneſs, and wine, after which remaineth a ſmell: ſo he had no priviledge left him, but all were quite gone. 4 As water runneth to low places, ſo he ſhould be low for his pride. Thou ſhalt not excell, here he expreſſeth further Reubens loſſe, he ſhould be deprived of all dignity and priviledge, and there was good reaſon for it, becauſe he had diſhonoured ſo foulely his father, the originall of all his dignity and of his being unto him. For theſe words, thou ſhalt not excell, the vulgar Latine hath it, ne creſcas, but it is expounded to the ſame effect, grow not, or thou ſhalt not grow in excellency, or becauſe it is an excellency to increaſe in number, it may be underſtood ſo, and then the ſaying of Moſes, Deut. 33. touching Reuben is a further illuſtration hereof; Let Reuben be ſmall in number: and ſo indeed he may be noted to have been, Numb. 26, &c. in compariſon of the other tribes, neither did he ever any great matter, and he is upbraided with pride and ſlothfulneſſe, Judg. 5. 15, 16. If it be doubted, how this may be juſtified in Jacob, for his ſinne againſt him to curſe his ſonne? It is eaſily anſwered, he curſed him not, but by the ſpirit propheſied thus againſt him. Thou wenteſt up to thy fathers bed, thou defilea'ſt it: theſe words are by Kimhi and Aben-Ezra read thus, Since the time that thou wenteſt up, my bed was cut off, that is, I companied no more with Bilhah, with whom this great ſin was committed, holding that Jacob ſeparated her from him for ever after this, as David did afterwards his ten Concubines abuſed by Abſolom, How great this ſin was, and therefore how worthily Reuben was thus puniſhed, we may ſee by the Apoſtles aggravating of the like, 1 Cor. 5. 1.

Note.

Ferus.

Vatablus.

Calvin.
Ferus.

Lyranus.
Toſtatus.
Muſculus.

Luther.

Object.
Sol.

D. Kimhi.
Aben Ezra.

2 Sam. 16.

Saint Ambroſe rejecteth this expoſition, as coming from the Jews, who have held Reuben to be curſed here for his inceſt, becauſe that was a thing done long before, whereas Jacob profeſſeth to ſpeak only of things to come, and therefore he followeth only this myſticnll ſenſe, that Reuben figureth out the Nation of the Jewes, who were as Gods firſt-borne, for ſo they are called, Exod. 4.22. and they excelled by many priviledges, but that Nation aſcended into the Fathers bed, and offered contumely to him, when they crucified the body of Chriſt, and abuſed his humane nature, wherein as in an holy bed, the Saints anciently did quietly repoſe themſelves by faith, who were their Fathers; wherefore this Nation is curſed of God, and deprived of all their ancient dignity In rejecting the Hiſtoricall interpretation Ambroſe is againſt all other Expoſitors, and againſt the truth: for although it was the purpoſe of Jacob here to ſpeak of things to come, yet when he foretold evill to any of his ſonnes, he meant to lay downe firſt the cauſes, their ſinnes, that their poſterity and all men living after, might be warned hereby, as he dealeth here by Reuben. The literall ſenſe then is firſt to be lookt at, and then the myſtery. And ſo I deny not, but that this touching Reuben may be further applied, then to Reuben and the Reubenites, viz. to the whole Nation of the Jews according to this of Ambroſe; ſo likewiſe Origen, and Iſidore, and Ruffinus, but that Origen and Ruffinus by the Fathers bed underſtand the Law, which is as a Concubine, for it is compared to Hagar, and is defiled by the Jews in that they did corruptly expound it, underſtood it only carnally, and ſinned greatly againſt it. Or it may be applied to Hereticks, as it is by Rupertus, and after him by Ferus, who glory, as if they were the chiefe of Gods ſervants, and were of moſt excellent gifts, but they pollute their Fathers Bed, when they pollute the Church with their Hereticall Doctrines, and therefore are accurſed, and ſhall finally be brought downe. And generally it may be applied to all the wicked, for howſoever their judgement may be deferred, as Reubens was, yet they ſhall not finally eſcape, but for a little vile pleaſure of ſinne for a moment, they ſhall be deprived of infinite good things for ever, and eſpecially they that are contumelious to their Parents, as Reuben, and Ham before him. And Parents may learne of Jacob to exerciſe ſeverity againſt ſuch impious children, and not lenity as Eli did.

Ambroſ. lib. de benedict. Patriarch.

Exod.4.22. Rom.9.4. Aſcendit cubile patris, i. carnem Domini Jeſu patibulo affixit, in qua velut in quodam cubili & patrio thoro ſancti ejus ſalutari refectione requieſcunt. The Allegory of Reuben.

Origen. Iſidore. Ruffin. Gal.4. Rupertus. Ferus.

Note.

1 Sam.2.

Verſe 5,6,7. Simeon and Levi are Brethren, Inſtruments of cruelty are in their habitations, my ſoule, come not thou into their ſecrets, &c.

Vatablus. Theſe were the two next in order, and in wickedneſſe, he recounteth here their crueity againſt the Shechemites, and profeſſeth, in what abomination he had that bloudy fact, aſſigning them their puniſhment therefore. And he calleth them Brethren, not becauſe they two alone came of one Mother, but becauſe they were alike in wickedneſſe; Inſtruments of cruelty, &c. this is rendred by the Septuagint, they perfected injuſtice by their invention. How great this ſinne of theirs was, I have ſhewed before, Chap. 34. and how Jacobs execrating of it notwithſtanding, it is praiſed by Judith. All his ſonnes indeed had an hand in that murther, but becauſe theſe two were leaders to the reſt, he cenſureth them only.

Judith 9.

Verſe 6. O my ſoule, come not into their ſecret, &c. By theſe words he purgeth himſelfe from being in any part of their counſell in that matter. To their aſſembly let not mine honour be united, the word כבד hered uſed ſignifieth glory, that is, as ſome ſay, my honour, my good name, my ſoule, or my tongue, which is chiefly to be preferred, for as he did not in heart, which was touched before, ſo neither in tongue did he give any the leaſt aſſent unto it. And this ſhould be exemplary to us, to deteſt cruelty and perfidy in any caſe.

Ferus. Vatablus. Muſculus. Note.

Vatablus. For in their anger they ſlew a man, and in their ſelfe-will they digged downe a wall. By a man, ſaith Vatablus here, underſtand the Shechemites, the ſingular number being put for the plurall, or rather Shechem is to be underſtood, whom ſpecially they ſlew, as the defiler of their Siſter; cutting off all the reſt alſo with him, that were of his City. The next words, digged downe a wall, are by the Septuagint rendred, they cut the nerves of a Bull: and the Septuagint.

word word שור is often uſed to ſet forth a Bull or an Oxe, ſome by this Bull underſtand the ſame man, Shechem, being thus called for his ſtrength; others, Joſeph, for his might and power afterwards in Egypt, as alſo Moſes ſpeaketh of him, Deut. 33. according to this ſenſe the Targum Hieroſolymitanum render the words thus, They ſlew a man in their anger, and at their will ſold Joſeph, who is likened to an Oxe, and to make this the more probable, they ſay, that theſe two doubtleſſe had the chiefe hand in ſelling Joſeph, becauſe Reuben the eldeſt was againſt it, and they were the eldeſt next, and therefore Joſeph bindeth Simeon afterwards, as we have ſeene. But becauſe the matter of the Shechemites is that, for which they are cenſured, and theſe words may have a good conſtruction, being underſtood of the ſame, and the ſelling of Joſeph was nothing pertinent to that, it is rather to be expounded of the wall of that City demoliſhed by them. For although none expreſſe mention be made of this thing in the Hiſtory, yet it is ſaid, that the reſt of Jacobs ſonnes under their conduct came upon the ſlain, and deſtroyed the City, whereby this is implyed, viz. their digging downe of a wall.

Targum Hieroſolymitan.

Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce, and their wrath cruell, I will divide them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael.

Verſe 7.

Calvin maketh a queſtion here, and touching the reproofe of Reuben before, whether they had not yet repented them of theſe ſinnes, and if they had, how Jacob could now juſtly upbraid them hereby? and he anſwereth, It may well be thought that they did not hitherto ſeriouſly repent them, becauſe their anſwer made to their Father, when he firſt reproved them for it, ſavoureth rather of obſtinacy, and it is moſt probable, that the more time had paſſed ſince, the more ſenſleſſe they grew of their ſinne by a brutiſh kinde of torpour, or at the leaſt they were not ſeriouſly touched with bitter ſorrow therefore. And if he ſhould not have novv taxed it, haply their poſterity might have been animated to the like ferity, and others after them, unto whom that which is here ſaid, may now be a continuall terrour from attempting the like. And this he ſaith of Simeon and Levi, but touching Reuben, Luther ſaith, that he had long ago repented, and had his ſinne forgiven, becauſe he vvas in all things ever after ſo carefull to pleaſe his Father, but yet the reproofe of his ſin vvas novv neceſſary, leſt his children ſhould by Jacobs ſilence herein be more incouraged to the like, thinking vvith themſelves, Reuben our Father did thus, and vvas not taxed for it, therefore vve may do likevviſe. And touching Simeon and Levi, Calvin ſaith, that although their ſinne vvas remitted, yet Jacob might thus to good purpoſe reprove them for it, that hereby both they and others might be held from the like cruelty for time to come. God doth not, ſaith he, hereby ſhew, as the Papiſts teach, that the ſinne being remitted, man is to beare temporall puniſhments therefore ſtill, but the puniſhments now inflicted ſerve only to purge the heart from Hypocriſie, and to make the humiliation the more, and that hereby Gods elect, as by a bridle of feare and reverence may be held from ſinning for time to come.

Calvin. Queſt.

Luther.

Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce. He curſeth, ſaith Ferus, their anger, but not their perſons, ſo muſt we not hate the perſons, but the vices of the wicked: and he curſeth not every anger, but that which is over-much, hard and pertinacious, ending in fury: for there is a blameleſſe anger, of which it is ſaid, Be angry, and ſin not. I will divide them in Jacob, &c. Here is their puniſhment, which was accordingly inflicted, when the Levites were not permitted to have any inheritance by themſelves, as the other Tribes, but Cities in divers Tribes all over the Land of Canaan, and the Tribe of Simeon had none inheritance apart, but was mixed with the Tribe of Judah, as vve may ſee, Joſ. 19. and aftervvards going to Mount Seir, they expelled the Amalekites, and dvvelt there, ſo Ierome, and Calvin, &c. They had been united together in ſinning, and therefore they ſhould for a puniſhment be ſeparated and ſcattered afterwards in Canaan. The Hebrewes ſay, that of the Tribe of Ferus. Non quamcunque iram damnat, ſed duram, nimiam, pertinacem, & quæ in furorem exit. Pſal. 4.

Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

1 Chron. 4. 42.

Simeon

Simeon came Pedagogues, who went into all Tribes to teach youth, and in the Targum Hieroſolym. it is ſaid, It is not meet, ſaid our Father Iacob, that theſe two ſhould dwell together, becauſe ſo no City or Kingdome could ſtand before them, I will therefore divide the Tribe of Simeon, that they may be Scribes and Doctours of the Law in the Synagogues, and Levi to be over Sermons, and contentions amongſt the people. And this, ſaith Calvin, was a favourable puniſhment to the Tribe of Levi, and turned by God into a means of the great good of his Church, their ſcattering being nothing elſe, but a ſcattering of ſeed in all parts, and a ſending out of the Miniſters of his grace every where, and their reproach being thus turned into an honour, and the like may be ſaid of Simeon, if the Hebrews report be true, as is moſt likely. But as in the Prophecie touching Reuben, ſo in this of Simeon and Levi. Ambroſe admitteth of no Hiſtoricall ſenſe, but only myſticall, becauſe Simeon and Levi being long agoe challenged by their Father for the ſlaughter of Shechem, yielded a good reaſon, why they did it, he abuſed their Siſter, as an Whore, wherein he reſted, and therefore he could not now againe reprove them for it, and the field ſo wonne by them he gave to Joſeph, as wonne by his ſword, thus coũtenancing the fact. But of this enough hath bin ſaid before, to ſhew Jacobs utter diſlike of it. Myſtically, ſaith Ambroſe, under the names of Simeon and Levi is ſhewed, how the Lord abhorred the Prieſts and Levites, the Scribes and Doctours of the Law, that came of Simeon and Levi, as being the chiefe in the crucifying of Chriſt, and in murthering and perſecuting the Prophets and Apoſtles, yet there is ſome grace of bleſſing added by the diſperſion cauſed by them, the Gentiles being congregated together, according to that, I will ſmite the Shepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered, that the Gentiles being come in, all Iſrael might be ſaved. Now the Prieſts and Scribes were the chiefe in crucifying Chriſt, this is plaine, becauſe he ſaith before, the ſonne of man is delivered into the hands of the chiefe Prieſts and Scribes, and their anger may well be ſaid to be fierce, becauſe, Pilate being ſo unwilling to crucifie him, yet they perſiſted to urge him unto it. They truly alſo killed a man Chriſt Jeſus, and digged down a wall, that is, pierced his body with nailes and ſpeares, or they enervated a bull, ſpreading his hornes as the moon to compaſſe in all the world, or the wall of Jeruſalem is meant, the ruine whereof came by this bloody act of theirs. And they were ſcattered alſo, and divided when they were beſieged by the Roman Army, making warres amongſt themſelves, and afterwards diſperſed into all Nations, thus partly Ambroſe, and partly Rupertus, Iſidore, and Ruffinus, and Ferus, and Rabanus, who alſo addeth, that they were divided, when ſome of them turned Chriſtians, but ſome hardened their hearts, and ſo Origen ſaith, he heard one of the ancients once teach, but he maketh them more generally a type, of the Jews crucifying Chriſt, and not of the Prieſts and Scribes onely.

Targum Hierolymitanum.

Calvin.

Ambroſ. lib. de benedict. Patriarcharum.

The Myſtery.

Mr.th.20.

Rupertus.
Iſidore.
Ruffin.
Ferus.
Rab. Maurus.

Verſe 8.

Judah, thou art he, whom thy brethren ſhall praiſe, thy hand ſhall be in the neck of thine enemies, thy fathers children ſhall bow down before thee. Judah ſignifieth praiſe, and therefore he beginneth accordingly with his praiſes, the Septuagint read it, Thou haſt confeſſed, and not been aſhamed, which they that follow underſtand, ſome, of the matter of Tamar, when he ſaid, ſhe is more righteous then I; ſome, of Joſeph, whom he ſought to deliver from death; and ſome, of the confeſſion that ſhould be made of all his brethren of him, when from him, as acknowledged moſt worthy, they ſhould be called by the name of Jews, the preterperfect tenſe being put for the future for the certainty of the thing, after the manner of other propheſies. But the ſenſe according to the Hebrew is plain, the right of the firſt-born ſhall be in thee, that is, in thy tribe whereby thou ſhalt be ſo highly exalted, being placed in a kingly throne, that all ſhall count thee happy for ſo great dignity, and for the priviledge of having the King of Kings, Chriſt Jeſus, to come of thy line. Thy hand ſhall be in the neck of thine enemies, the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, Thy hand ſhall prevail againſt thine enemies, they turning their neck, and being ſcattered before,

Gen.38.
Gen.37.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

before, and coming to ſue unto thee for peace, whereby the meaning is ſufficiently ſet forth. And this was verified ſpecially in David and Solomon, and the bowing alſo of all his fathers children unto him, which followeth next, although afterwards the ten tribes revolted, for the right ſtill remained in this tribe; and that of Iſrael was but an adulterine Kingdome, and an unlawfull confuſion forcibly brought in, and therefore proſpered accordingly, whereas ſome underſtand this of their bowing to him, when in Joſuah he is made the firſt to go againſt their enemies, this was nothing to the royall dignity belonging afterwards to this tribe, although even then his hand began to be upon the necks of his enemies. Ferus reckoneth up many things ſetting forth the dignity of this tribe. 1 They entred the red ſea, next to Moſes, the reſt being afraid. 2 They fought firſt againſt the Canaanites. 3 Famous Kings were of this tribe. 4 All had their name Jews herefrom. 5 Chriſt came of it, and therefore he was worthy of all praiſe.

Calvin.

Muſculus.

Ferus.

Judah as a lions whelpe, from the prey, my ſonne, thou art gone up, he hath bowed himſelf, and couched like a lion, &c. He was, as a lion for his great ſtrength, being more in number, then any other tribe, and fuller of courage and boldneſſe, eſpecially this was verified in David, who came ſo often home with prey, and in Solomon, who couched and lay down in peace, none daring to rouze him up, ſo Ferus. But Calvin thinketh, that the laſt words do imply a divination of the ſtrength of this lion, at the renting away of the ten tribes, but even then, he ſaith, that Iudah lay in his den, as a lion, ſtriking ſuch terrour into his enemies, that none durſt rouze him up. And according to this the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath theſe words, Thou ſhalt have power in the beginning, and in the end a Kingdome ſhall be magnified out of thy houſe, becauſe thou haſt refreined thy ſoul (my ſonne) from the judgement of killing, meaning doubtleſſe, in the caſe of Tamar and of Ioſeph. But yet in rendering this place according to the words of the text, he hath it, As a lion and as a lioneſſe reſting, or couching, he ſhall dwell in his ſtrength, or fortitude, there is no Kingdome that ſhall move him. And certainly here is nothing ſaid, implying that renting away of the ten tribes, but this muſt needs rather be underſtood of Iudah, whileſt that tribe flouriſhed moſt in David and Solomon. And David that was of Iudah, fought with a Lion and a Beare, and overcame them, and Goliah alſo. When that Kingdome was more weakened upon the diviſion, there were, that durſt rouze up this lion. For lion and old lion, as we read it, ſome read a lion and a lioneſſe, as Ierome, &c, but the word ſignifieth properly a greater lion, howſoever in the plurall number it be of the feminine gender, and therefore may be thought to ſignifie in the ſingular both ſexes And all things are ſpoken hitherto in the preterperfect tenſe, which is put for the future in propheſying for the certainty, as was touched before.

Verſe 9.

Calvin.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Hieron.

The ſcepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, till Shiloh come, and to him ſhall the gathering of the people be. After the prophecie of Kingly dignity to Iudah, here followeth the eſtabliſhment of it, untill the coming of the Meſſiah. The ſcepter, in Hebrew שבט Shevet, ſignifieth virgam, and is ſometimes put for a ſcepter, as Pſ. 45. The ſcepter of thy Kingdome is a righteous ſcepter, and Eſter 5.2. and ſometime for affliction, ſo Aſſhur is called the rod of Gods fury, and Pſal. 2. it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt rule them with a rod of iron. Here affliction cannot be meant, becauſe onely joyfull things, reign, power and victory are ſpoken of, but a ſcepter, that is, rule and dominion over a Kingdome ſhall not depart, or ſhall not go back or fall away, as the word סור here uſed ſignifieth, the Septuagint have it, ſhall not fail. The word שבט alſo is noted to ſignifie a tribe, v. 16. and 28. &c. and if it be ſo taken, the meaning is, that the tribe of Iudah ſhould continue, and return after the Babyloniſh captivity, as others did not. Nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, this ſerveth further to illuſtrate that of the ſcepter meant before, and not a rod of correction, for to cauſe to write, as the word מחוקק Mecokek ſignifieth, and to eſtabliſh lawes belongeth not to any, but to the higheſt power. From be- tween

Verſe 10.

Eſay.

tween his feet, that is, of his ſeed or ſtock, Onkelus and Ionathas render it, from his ſonnes ſonnes, That he might not offend chaſte eares, ſaith Ierome, he named the thigh, which is next to the genitals, that he might not name them, and ſometimes the womb is named even of men, as Gen 15. 2 *Sam.*16. For this expoſition that by the Lawgiver is meant principality is Tremelius alſo; and he ſaith that a Lawgiver between his feet is ſpoken of in alluding to the cuſtome of childrens being brought up at their fathers feet, the like ſpeech unto which is, Deut. 28.57. and Joſephs childrens children are ſaid to have been brought up upon his knees, *Chap.*50.23. Others yet by the word מחוקק underſtand a Scribe, which uſed to ſit between, or rather at the feet of him that rules, who whileſt he went not from his feet, the dominion continued; Now although the word ſignifieth a writer, as well as one that cauſeth to write, I preferre the former expoſition of one in authority, deſcending of Judah, becauſe the ſigne of dominion, the ſcepter being ſpoken of before, the office being now ſpoken of alſo, maketh it the more plain, what was meant, till Shiloh cometh: the vulgar Latine, donec veniat qui mittendus eſt, the Septuagint, donec veniant, quæ depoſita ſunt ei, and in another tranſlation, donec veniat cui repoſitum eſt, the former of theſe is followed by Auguſtine and Cyprian, the latter by Ignatius, Irenæus, Tertullian, Ambroſe, &c. the word is שילה, ſome ſuſpect, that ח hath been changed into ה, as Calvin ſaith, which he thinketh not improbable, and if it be שילח with ח, it ſignifieth mittendus. If the word be parted into שי and לה, as it is by ſome, the firſt ſignifieth, quis, quæ, or quod, and the ſecond ei; and ſo it is to be read, donec veniat quod, or quæ ei, repoſitum eſt, or repoſita ſunt being underſtood, whereby we may ſee the ground of the Latine and Greek tranſlations. Others derive it from שיל filius, and ו for which ה is put, ſignifying ejus, and this, ſaith Calvin, muſt follow: and Tremelius tranſlateth it ſo, ſaying, that שילה ſignifying ſecundinas mulieris doth moſt properly ſet forth this ſeed of the woman promiſed, *Gen.*3.15, Onkelus rendereth it, Meſſiah, non deficiet in ſæculum ſæculi, uſq; dum veniat Meſſiah, turning miſſus into Meſſiah or Meſſias. There is alſo a place called Shiloh, in the tribe of Ephraim, where the Tabernacle was ſet up and remained a long time. If the word be expounded, which way ſoever, it ſetteth forth the Meſſiah, for of the ſending of whom was it ever ſo much ſpoken, as of him? and what is ſaid to be laid up for any, but ſome moſt precious thing? and what ſo precious as the Meſſiah? and touching the laſt tranſlation, to which I chiefly aſſent, his ſonne, who may rather be underſtood hereby, then the chiefe ſonne of Judah, Chriſt Jeſus, in whom his Kingdome ſhould be farre more inlarged then ever before, and eſtabliſhed unto perpetuity, or elſe we may derive it from שלה as Vatablus ſaith, ſome do, ſignifying to do proſperouſly, or to be peaceable, and ſo Shiloh cometh, is his proſperity or felicity cometh, which is in Chriſt, ſo likewiſe Ferus, applying that, Pſ. 45. hereunto. Of the place called Shiloh, it cannot be underſtood, as ſome Hebrew Rabbins would have it, ſaying, that this was fulfilled when Saul was anointed King in Shiloh, and more fully when Jeroboam was anointed there, taking from the houſe of David, who was of Iudah 10 tribes, for then all his fathers ſonnes did no more bow down to him. But this is contrary to the hiſtory of theſe Kings, for Saul was made at Mizpeh, 1 Sam. 10. 17. and Ieroboam at Shechem, 1 King. 12. And if it ſhall be thought, their firſt coming to Shilo, Ioſ. 18. and placing the arke there, is meant, as if he had ſaid, Till Shilo cometh to be poſſeſſed by my ſeed, this cannot poſſibly hold, becauſe Judah had then atteined to no Scepter or Kingly authority, but long after. That place therefore cannot be meant, but that proſperous and happy peaceable ſonne of his, Chriſt Jeſus. And that the Chriſt is meant here, appeareth, becauſe even the Rabbins of the Jews themſelves do divers of them expound Shiloh of the Meſſiah, as R. Solomon, who ſaith, that even ſtill Judah reigneth in Media, Aſſyria, Babylon, and about the Mount Caucaſus, and ſo ſhall do according to this prophecie; till the Meſſiah cometh.

Hieron. Honeſtati aurium conſulens ne nominaret genitalia, quod proximum erat poſuit de fœmore.
Tremel.
Vatablus.
Calvin.
Auguſt. contra Fauſt. lib. 2.
Cyprian. lib. 1. contra Iudæos.
Ignatius.
Irenæus.
Tertull.
Calvin.
Onkelus.
Joſ. 18.
1 Sam. 4.
Vatablus.
Rabini.
1 Sam. 3. 22.
1 Sam. 10.
R. Solomon.

cometh, other Rabbins that by שבט a rod of affliction, is to be underſtood, which ſhall not depart from the Jews till the Meſſiah cometh. Others turning the words ſay, that the ſcepter ſhall never more depart, when the Meſſiah ſhall be once come; Laſtly, others ſay, that this prophecie is to be underſtood conditionally, the ſcepter ſhall not depart, if Judah keepeth Gods Commandements, (as all other promiſes of perpetually poſſeſſing the land of Canaan) till the Meſſiah cometh, but for ſin, the Kingly dignity may faile in this tribe, before that time. But whereas, notwithſtanding their agreement with us in the maine, they expound this prophecie ſo, as that it may not be hereby concluded, that the Meſſiah is already come, they may eaſily be confuted. For who beſides R. Solomon himſelſe, ſaith, that the Jews have any dominion in any part of the World, but rather that they are ſubjected and made tributaries every where? And for the affliction pretended to be meant, how doth this agree with a Law-giver, or a lion, or other things, that are likewiſe ſpoken of touching Judah? Again, to ſay that the ſcepter ſhall not depart when Shiloh cometh, and till he cometh, are two divers things. And laſtly, to ſay that any prophecie of a ſigne of the Meſſiahs coming is conditionall, is to make prophecie uncertain and of no credit. The Meſſiah then was without all doubt here pointed at, although ſome Jews, to elude this teſtimony, ſay that Nebuchadnezzar and not the Meſſias was meant by Shiloh or mittendus, becauſe he was ſent of the Lord, and then there was an end of Davids Kingdome in Zedechiah. But this is eaſily confuted, if we receive not this expoſition of the word, but hold us to this his ſonne, or his felicity, ſith it is not שלח with a ח, ſignifying to ſend, but של ה with ה, as was ſhewed before. Moreover, God did expreſly promiſe, that Davids Kingdome ſhould never have end, Pſal. 89.29. 1 Sam. 7.16. and therefore Jacob could not mean, that in an enemy, ſuch as Nebuchadnezzar was, waſting and deſtroying all things, it ſhould have an end, but that it ſhould indure till the Meſſiah his coming, and thence-forth for ever, this being a ſigne the ceſſation of Judah his Kingdome of the true Meſſiah being come. And to all that hath been ſaid before we may adde that of the Targum Hieroſol. upon this place: Kings ſhall not ceaſe from Judah, nor Doctours that teach the Law, untill the time that the King Chriſt doth come, whoſe the Kingdome is, and all Kings of the earth ſhall be ſubject to him. But this being granted, a great difficulty ſtill remaineth, how this prophecie was verified, ſeeing the Kingly dignity of Judah ceaſed in Jeconiah according to Jeremy his prophecie? Ferus anſwereth, that although in the time of the Babyloniſh captivity it was intermitted, and the royall dignity indeed ceaſed, yet there was at the returne out of captivity a Ruler ſet up again of the tribe of Judah, untill that Herod a ſtranger gat the Kingdome. And Calvin ſaith, that Chriſtian Writers are wont to ſet down this Government thus; firſt, there were Princes, who ruled to the time of the Macchabees; then the High Prieſts; and laſtly, the Council, conſiſting of 70 choſen out of the royall blood, whoſe Authority was ſo great, that Herod being cited to appear before them, he hardly eſcaped with his life, becauſe he contumaciouſly refuſed to come. But he rejecteth this, becauſe for 500 years together, before the coming of the Meſſiah, they were tributaries, and in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, all Kingly dignity in that tribe was extinguiſhed; and laſtly, the Aſmonæi uſurped the title of Honour and power, till that they came to be under the juriſdiction of the Romans. Wherefore he yieldeth, that after the Babyloniſh captivity, even till the comming of Chriſt, this dignity failed in Iudah, and that it ſhould do ſo, was intimated by Amos 9.11. The dayes come, that I will raiſe vp the Tabernacle of David, which fell; and by Ezech. 21.26,27. ſaying, The crown ſhall be no more, till he cometh, whoſe right it is, and I will give it him: that is, to Chriſt Jeſus. This prophecy then, ſaith he, is not to be underſtood, as if there ſhould be alwayes an outward ſplendour of royall dignity in this tribe, till the comming of the Meſſiah, but that a famous Kingdome out of it ſhould be ſet up, which Jeremy 22.30.

Ferus.

Calvin.

although it ſhould be buried again for a time, yet it ſhould at length riſe up again and flouriſh for ever. And to ſhew the fall of this principality for this time, he applieth Eſa. 11.1 of the branch ariſing out of the root of Jeſſe, naming Jeſſe, a private man, and not David a King, to intimate this private and obſcure condition, to which Davids houſe ſhould be brought, and out of it ſo brought downe, at length the Meſſiah ſhould come forth, ſo Calvin. He holdeth then, that the meaning of this prophecy, is that the ſcepter ſhould not ſo depart from Iudah, although in this long time of vacation it might ſeeme to be utterly extinct, as that there ſhould be no farther hope of the reſtitution thereof, as to other tribes, for by faith the people of God ſhould ſtill ſtand in expectation ot reſtoring it to Iudah, till Chriſt the King of Kings ſhould come of that tribe. But being thus underſtood, no firme argument can be drawn from hence to convince the Jews, that the Meſſiah is already come; becauſe they may in like manner ſay, that howſoever all regall dignity hath lyen dead hitherto in this tribe, yet by faith they believe, that it ſhall be reſtored, when the Meſſiah cometh, which may be as well 3000 yeares after the Babyloniſh captivity, as 500. And as for that opinion followed by other Chriſtian Writers, which Calvin rejecteth, I finde that many learned Authours ſtand for it, as Cyril, who ſaith, that Zorobabel of that tribe had the principality firſt after the Babyloniſh captivity, & then they that came of him from age to age to the time of Herod, and other learned Writers, who ſay, that Iudas Macchabeus and his brethren, although they were high Prieſts, yet muſt not be denied to have been of the tribe of Iudah, becauſe they are called the men of Iudah 1 Macchab. 5.63. And Lyranus, Toſtatus, &c. who ſay, that the high Prieſts, that reigned then, were of the tribe of Iudah by the mothers ſide, ſeeing they commonly matched with that tribe. And Paulus Burgenſis, Ioannes Myrandulanus, and Galatinus, &c. who ſay, that the Council conſiſting of 70 was erected out of the tribe of Iudah. And Melchior Canus, who ſaith, that by the tribe of Iudah the Kingly dignity was, as a Depoſitum, committed in that time to the high Prieſts for the ſafeguard of the people, until that ſome prophet ſhould ariſe, to ſhew, who of that tribe ſhould reigne, or untill the comming of the Meſſiah the King expected. But that of Cyril may juſtly be excepted againſt, for it is not true, neither doth any hiſtory ſhew, that Zorobabels poſterity reigned after him, but the Aſſamonæi, otherwiſe called the Macchabees, who were Prieſts. 2 For the 1 Mach. 5.63. alledged to prove them to be of Iudah, the words are miſinterpreted, there being nothing but the man Judas, but that the Aſſamonæi coming of a mother of the tribe of Judah, were in part of that tribe, is plain, and therefore the dominion in Judah continued till Herod: but let us look alſo into the writings of other ancients, to finde out how this prophecy was verified. Chryſoſtome ſaith, The meaning is, there ſhall be a Prince of the Jews, till Chriſt commeth. Auguſtine, There was not wanting a Prince of the Jews comming of the Jews themſelves till that they received Herod, the firſt ſtranger for their King. Rupertus, ſaith, Then the Scepter departed firſt from Judah, when Herod obteined the Kingdome of the Jews by the gift of the Romans, he comming of a father an Idumean, and a mother an Arabian. And Iuſtin Martyre laboureth to convince the Jews by this that the Meſſiah is already come, becauſe they have had no more Prophets or Kings of their own ſince the comming of our Chriſt, whereas before they cannot ſay, that they vvanted ſome kind of King or Prophet. From hence vve may gather, that theſe holy fathers by a King in Iudah & a Lavvgiver there underſtood, not a ſucceſſion of Kings or Governours coming of Iudah particularly at all times, but of Kings and Governours of the Jevvs even until the coming of the Meſſiah. And ſurely this prophecy may vvel be ſo underſtood, ſeeing vvhileſt Rulers of the Ievvs held vvho vvere Ievvs, the ſcepter vvas in Iudah, although he that ſvvayed it, vvas of another tribe, for they were all in thoſe dayes called Iudæi, Jevvs of Judah, the only Tribe vvherein the Kingdome then ſtood: and for the Levites and Benjamites, that vvere mingled vvith them, they being fevv

in

Cyril. lib 8. adverſ. Julianum.

Lyranus.
Toſtatus.

Joan. Myrand.
P. Burgenſ.
Galat. lib 4. de arcanis fidei.
Melchior Canus lib 2. de locis theolog. c. 11.

Chryſoſt. hom. 67. in Gen.
Auguſt. lib. 18. de Civit. c. 45.
Non defuit Judæorum princeps ex ipſis Judæis uſque ad iſtum Herodem quem primum acceperunt alienigenam regem.
Rupertus lib. 9. in Gen. c. 29.
Juſtin. Martyr Dialog. cum Tryphon.

in compariſon, carried not the name, but Judah, that was moſt populous. for after the Captivity, ſaith Joſephus, the name of Hebrews and Iſraelites ceaſed, and both the Countrey was called Judea, and the people Judæi. Wherefore if there were Jews, Governours of the Jews, even till Herods time, the Scepter was in Judah, although one of the Tribe of Levi, or others with thoſe of the Tribe of Judah governed together with them. For who were theſe Princes or Rulers now but Iudæi, the name of Levites and Benjamites being in the common ſpeech, and intituling of them worne out? ſo that the government was in Judah, becauſe Judah only bare the name, and who ſo governed, in appellation pertained to Judah. But all this doth not yet ſo fully ſatisfie, but that ſome exception may be taken: For, did not the Scepter go away from Judah in the time of the Captivity, and after Zerubbabels time till Iudas Machabeus? and if ſo, how is it ſaid, it ſhall not depart till the Meſſiah cometh? I think therefore that the meaning is. Firſt, that a famous Kingdome ſhould ſpring out of Judah, as there did in David, continuing in him and his ſucceſſors, to the captivity of Babylon 473 yeares. Secondly, that this Kingdome ſhould afterwards grow into another kinde of Principality, and therefore the word is altered, and a Law-giver from between his feet. Thirdly, a Royall authority ſhould continue in Judah, firſt by Kings, and then by other Governours; and howſoever, for their ſins, it might be ſometimes interrupted divers years; yet it ſhould not be tranſlated to any ſtranger comming of another ſtreine, that he ſhould be a King in Judah, till the comming of the Meſſiah. And if it be thus expounded, I cannot ſee how it can lie open to any exception, but all Jews muſt needs be convinced that the Meſſiah is already come; becauſe the Royall dignity over the Jewiſh Nation was long ago tranſlated to Herod, in whoſe time Chriſt was born.

Joſeph.

And to him ſhall the gathering together of the people be. In the vulgar Latine, He ſhall be the expectation of the Gentiles. Onkelus the Chaldee Paraphraſt, The Gentiles ſhall obey him: Jonathas, All the Kings of the earth ſhall be ſubjected unto him. The Hebrew word is יקהת; which Jerome deriving from Cana, to expect, tranſlateth the expectation; but then ה muſt be ſuppoſed to be put for ב, which is not done, when the word beginneth with jod, as this doth, and therefore the moſt skilfull in the Hebrew tongue turn it, The gathering together. But by people, the Gentiles are certainly meant, as Calvin hath it, becauſe although the poſterity of Iacob grew into peoples, yet when he ſpeaketh of them obeying Iudah, he ſaith, all thy fathers ſonnes; but here varying the phraſe, peoples, meaning the Nations of the world, which at Chriſts comming ſhould be gathered to him by the preaching of the Goſpel, the Jews diſobeying it. They that follow the vulgar Latine, ſay, that he was the expectation of the Gentiles, not in reſpect of his firſt comming, becauſe before that time they knew not of him, but in reſpect of his ſecond, which ſhall be at the laſt day; for this time the Gentiles, being now faithfull do moſt earneſtly expect. And from this clauſe of the gathering together of the Gentiles unto Chriſt, propheſied of alſo in many other places, it is moſt apparent, that our Chriſt is the true Meſſiah. And that the appointed time of his comming was then, and commonly held ſo to be, when he did come, may well be gathered from the ſpeech of the woman of Samaria, ſaying, I know that the Meſſiah commeth; that is, even now, or ere long will come: which whence can it be conceived that ſhe had it, but from a generall grounded opinion now that Herod had taken upon him the Principality over the Jews, and ſo the Scepter was gone from Judah, his comming muſt needs be at the doores.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.
Jonathas.
Hieron.
Calvin.
Juſt. Martyr Dial. cum Tryphon.
Auguſt. lib. 8 de Civit. cap. 35.
John 4.

Binding his foale to the vine, and his aſſes coalt to the choice vine; he waſhed his garments in wine, and his cloaths in the blood of grapes. The word tranſlated his foale, is עירה, and ſignifieth properly his aſſes foale, which is further expreſſed in the next words. Here is in a figurative ſpeech deſcribed a moſt plentifull Countrey to be inhabited by this Tribe. Vines ſhould be as plen-

Verſe 11.

Calvin.

tifull and thoſe of the beſt ſort, for ſo the word Sorecha properly ſignifieth, as briars or thorns, to which men commonly tied their aſſe-colts; and ſuch abundance of wine ſhould they make of them, that wine ſhould be as common amongſt them, as water, that if it were convenient ſo to do, they might waſh their cloaths herewith. For he meaneth not that they ſhould do ſo, but by this hyperbolicall ſpeech, ſetteth forth their abounding with wine: ſo Calvin, and others generally. And in like manner they expound the words following, His eyes ſhall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk; he meaneth not that they ſhould uſe it to exceſſe, to cauſe redneſſe of eyes, but only figuratively declareth by this circumſtance alſo, their abundance of wine: even as they that have drunk wine plentifully, ſhew it by the redneſſe of their eyes: and there ſhould be ſuch plenty of milk, that they ſhould often fill themſelves herewith, even to the bringing of their teeth, if frequent eating of it would do it, to the ſame whiteneſſe. Here is no pretext for exceſſive drinking of wine, this being often condemned in thoſe that uſe it, Eſay 5. Hab. 2.14. Eph. 5.19. Amos 6. &c.

Verſe 12.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.
R. Solomon.

The Chaldee Paraphraſt, and R. Solomon hold, that theſe words are figuratively to be underſtood thus; by the beſt vine, the Law; by the colt, the children of Judah; and by binding, adhering; and ſo the meaning is nothing elſe, but that the children of Judah ſhould cleave to the Law, and be moſt juſt; and the waſhing of their garments in wine, of their precious garments of purple and ſilke, being red in colour like wine, that the Princes and Nobles of that Tribe ſhould weare; the eyes red with wine, of the Mountains in that Tribe growing full of vines; and the teeth white with milk, of their fields and other ſpacious places whereupon abundance of cattell fed, yielding milk in a plentifull manner. Which way ſoever the words be taken, a moſt pleaſant countrey, and fruitfull is allotted unto them; as indeed they had, dwelling in the chiefe of the land of Canaan, flowing with milke and wine; a ſigne whereof was the cluſter of grapes brought between two, when the ſpies came from ſearching that Land, for it was taken out of Eſhcol by Hebron, which was in their lot.

Numb.13.

Toſtatus. Burgenſ. Carthuſianus. Ambroſ.lib.de benedict. Patriarcharum.

Some will have theſe words underſtood of Shiloh before ſpoken of, and not literally of Iudah, but onely myſtically, becauſe they are ſet down in the third perſon, but this is a weak reaſon, as any Reader of himſelfe may ſee, and therefore the literall is to be preferred. Saint Ambroſe who is altogether for a myſticall ſenſe, expoundeth both this and all things from the beginning ſpoken of Judah, of Chriſt: For he is praiſed of his brethren, of whom it is ſaid, I will declare thy name amongſt my brethren, being our Lord by nature, but by grace our brother, and his hands were upon the neck of his enemies, when with the ſame hands ſtretched out upon the croſſe he covered his, but ſubdued contrary powers, and we his brethren do all bow down before him, to whom he vouchſafeth, that we may call God, our Father, and ſo to be his Fathers children. Again, he is a young lion, and a great lion of more years, becauſe he is God of God, and leſt he ſhould be thought to be not equall in time to the Father, having called him a lions whelpe or young lion, he addeth, as an old lion, and he couched when he lay in the grave, neither could any then raiſe him up, but he raiſed himſelfe by his own divine power. And he tyed his Colt to the Vine, when by faith he united his Congregation to himſelfe to become branches of him the moſt excellent Vine. And he waſhed his garment in wine, when in his humane nature, which is, as it were the garment covering his divine glory, he was waſhed in Jordan, the Holy Ghoſt as moſt exhilerating wine, coming down upon him, and filling him, which waſhing he was waſhed withall, not for himſelfe, but to waſh away our filthineſſe, and his veſtiment he waſhed in the blood of the grape, when his blood was ſhed upon the Croſſe for the cleanſing of all Nations from their ſinnes: And laſtly, his eyes were red with wine, and his teeth white with milk, that is, his Prophets, as his eyes foreſeeing his coming, were full of joy; therefore Pſal.22.

Phil.2.6.

Revel.5.

Pſal.39.
Pſal.102.
John 8.

therefore, as it is ſaid of Abraham, that he ſaw his day and rejoyced, and his Apoſtles, who for whiteneſſe may be compared to milk, after that he had called them, becauſe they were not afterwards ſullied with any ſpot. Thus alſo Ferus, after the literall expoſition of every thing, ſaying that the whole work of our redemption is myſtically ſet forth here, Chriſts preaching when he is praiſed of his brethren in the declaring of his Goſpel, his paſſion and buriall, reſurrection, victory and calling of the Gentiles. And in ſpeaking of his binding of the foale to a Vine, and waſhing, he noteth, that this muſt needs be ſpiritually underſtood, becauſe he ſaith nothing of riches, or worldy glory, but of an aſſe, and binding, and waſhing, whereby we may eaſily note Chriſt Jeſus, and he ſpeaketh of a colt, and the colt of an aſſe, to figure out the converſion of two peoples, Jews and Gentiles. And by the red eyes made ſo with wine, he underſtandeth the Spirit for the manifold graces thereof compared to ſeven eyes, which is given now under the Goſpel, and by the white teeth, the ſtrong men in Chriſt, able to take ſolid meat, who are more white then milk, that is, more free from the ſpots of ſinne, then babes in Chriſt, whoſe food is milk. Hitherto Ferus. And not much unlike to this Iſidore, Rabanus, and others. And truly, I think all this prophecie touching Judah to be full of divine myſteries concerning Chriſt, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, both for his paſſion, whereby he overcame all his enemies and ours, ſinne, hell, and the Devill; and for his lying down to ſleep, intimating a voluntary laying down of his life, like unto the lions couching, which he doth, not by compulſion, but of himſelfe. And as it is noted of the lions whelpe, that it ſleepeth at the firſt three dayes, and then is rouzed up by the roaring of the lion, ſo Chriſt lay till the third day in the ſepulchre, as it were in a ſleep, but then was raiſed up again by the divine power. And for all his fathers ſonnes bowing unto him, and praiſing him, and the gathering of the Gentiles unto him, it is plain, ſo doth the event anſwer the prophecie, that it was ſpoken with an aiming at Chriſt. Laſtly, I cannot but think, that in the Vine, and the aſſe-colt never uſed the yoke before, there is a myſtery, as in Chriſts riding upon an Aſſe-Colt, of the Gentiles to be ſubdued, and to be brought to cleave unto Chriſt the beſt Vine, and for this that paſſage in Targum Hieroſ. is notable, he ſheweth us here, that when the Chriſt ſhall come to ſave Iſrael, he ſhall make ready his Aſſe, and ride upon him, and come to Iſrael with poverty. And for his waſhing his Garments in Wine, and in the bloud of Grapes, what is it, but as another Prophet ſetteth it forth in other words, his treading of the Wine-preſſe, making all his Garments to look red, when he did undergo thoſe bloudy paſſions for our ſinnes? But by his Teeth white with milke, & his eyes red with Wine, I would not underſtand his lights in the Church and perfect ones, for all things ſhould be accommodated to his owne perſon, and rather Babes then ſtrong men in Chriſt may be ſaid to have made their Teeth white with milk, which is their food. By this then I underſtand the majeſticall aſpect of Chriſt through the fulneſſe of the Spirit, ſtriking terrour into his enemies, and yet his affability and courteſie towards the faithfull, his mouth being alwayes ful of the nouriſhing milk of the Word to feed them unto everlaſting life.

Ferus.

Zach.

John 2.

Eſay 63.

1 Pet. 2.

Zabulon ſhall dwell on the Haven of the Sea, and his border ſhall be to Zidon. Verſe 13.

Zabulon is the tenth ſonne of Jacob in order, but he is placed here the fift, what the reaſon may be, I can neither finde in Ambroſe, who in the beginning made ſome promiſe to ſhew it, nor in any other Writer. Haply Jacob by the ſpirit of Prophecie foreſeeing, that this Tribe ſhould be dignified by Chriſt coming of the Virgin Mary, who dwelt in Nazareth a City of Zabulon, and that the light ſhould by his preaching firſt break out there, according to the Prophecie: The Land of Zabulon, and the Land of Nephtali, &c. the people that ſate in darkneſſe have ſeen a great light, gave the next place to Judah, of whom Chriſt ſhould come to Zabulon. The word Zabulon ſignifieth habitation, and therefore in ſaying, Zabulon ſhall dwell; he alludeth to the Eſay 9.

Joſhua 19.10.

the name. All that he ſaith of this Tribe, is that he ſhall dwell upon an Haven of the Sea, &c. as he was indeed by lot afterwards placed, wherein if there ſhall ſeem nothing worthy to be now ſpoken of, it may be ſaid, that his aſſigning of the place ſo particularly 200 yeares before, was of great moment, that when the children of Iſrael ſhould come to inherit each one his lot, they might remember that it came not by chance unto them, but by Gods ſpeciall appointment, ſpeaking ſo long before of it by their dying Father, and therefore in way of thankfulneſſe to God uſe it to his glory. But whereas it is ſaid, that his border ſhall be Zidon, it may be doubted, how this was verified, ſeeing in deſcribing his lot Zidon is not once mentioned? Andreas Maſius ſaith, that this is ſpoken, to ſhew that by Sea he ſhould paſſe to Zidon, and by traficking with the Zidonians gather great wealth. The Chaldee Paraphraſt readeth it, He ſhall ſubdue the regions with ſhips, and eat the good of the Sea, and his border ſhall extend to Zidon, and the Septuagint pertendet uſque ad Sidon, ſignifying, that by their navigation they ſhould make Zidon their border.

Calvin.

Andreas Maſius in Joſ. 19.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Ambroſ.

Ambroſe, according to his manner maketh Zabulon myſtically to ſet forth the Church dwelling neare the Sea of many troubles and worldly dangers by hereſies and wickedneſſe, ſeeing how others are toſſed upon theſe Seas, but is herſelfe out of this danger, and a ſafe harbour for thoſe that will flee unto her. Again, his extent to Zidon ſetteth forth the Churches ſtretching forth to the Gentiles, becauſe Zidon was the Son of Ham. Thus Ambroſe.

Verſe 14.
Verſe 15.

Joſhua 19.

Iſſachar is a ſtrong Aſſe couching downe before two burthens, and he ſaw, that reſt was good, &c. and he bowed his ſhoulder to beare, and became a ſervant to tribute. Iſſacar was the ninth Son of Jacob, but is placed the ſixth here, becauſe his lot ſhould lie next to Zabulons, having Zabulon on his north-ſide. He aſſigneth to this Tribe a fat and fruitfull place, wherein labouring in the workes of Husbandry they might grow to that wealth, that they ſhould not need to ſeek out by merchandize, or by warfare to increaſe it, but reſt quietly at home, although for their immunity in the caſe of Warre, and by reaſon of their Countreys fertility, great tributes were impoſed upon them. Calvin thinketh, that they are by this ſaying upbraided for their ſluggiſhneſſe, which indeed moſt probable, or elſe they ſhould not have been compared to an Aſſe, which maketh me to admire the Chaldee Paraphraſt, inſtead of theſe words, became a ſervant to tribute, putting theſe, he ſubdued the provinces of people, and deſtroyed their Inhabitants, and ſuch as remained of them, were made his tributaries, for they are cleane contrary to the Text, and the beaſt, to which this Tribe is likened, is altogether unfit for ſuch exploits, which are rather of a Lion then of an Aſſe. The Septuagint read the laſt words, he was made an Husbandman, but Jerome mentioning that tranſlation ſaith, that according to the Hebrew it is, factus eſt in tributum ſerviens: the words (a ſtrong Aſſe) as Jerome alſo obſerveth, are Aſinus Oſſeus, a bony Aſſe, having great and ſtrong bones to beare burthens, and the words, couching downe between two burthens, he ſaith, are recumbens in terminis, lying in the bounds, and the meaning, he ſaith, is, he ſhould be as a ſtrong Aſſe labouring in tilling the ground, and carrying his commodities to be ſold to the Sea-ſide, as he lay fitly having on the Weſt the mediterranean Sea, and on the Eaſt, the Sea of Tiberias, which were his bounds here meant, or elſe, that he lay between two in his lot, viz. Zabulon and Naphthali, as Ferus ſaith. But R. Chimhi ſaith, that the word משפתים properly ſignifieth two burthens, ſuch as Aſſes uſe to carry. Of the fertility of the Land of Iſſachar one field called Eſdrelon for the moſt part lying in that Tribe, and the moſt fruitfull of any in Canaan proveth, for it aboundeth with Wine, Oile and Corne, and all other things neceſſary for mans life, unto this Iſſachar Chriſt is likened by Ambroſe ſaying, that as the word ſignifieth a reward, ſo Chriſt is our reward freely given to us, and as he deſired the good Land, ſo Chriſt the good only and no evill, and he couched likewiſe between two burthens of the old and new

Calvin.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Hieron. in tradit. Hæbraicis.

R. Chimhi.

Ambroſ. lib. de benedict. Patriarch.

Teſtaments,

Teſtaments, and ſubjected his ſhoulders to beare the burthen of our ſinnes, &c. Iſidore otherwiſe, the Gentiles were as an Aſſe rude, and uncleane, but receiving the Goſpell, they came to ſee the good land to come, and therefore ſubmitted themſelves to Chriſts yoke, couching, as it were, by the expectation of the end of the world between two termini, not regarding what they ſuffer in this world, and paying the tribute of faith and good workes unto Chriſt, their King. Others otherwiſe, as their phantaſies led them But me thinks, Iſſachar may beſt be the embleme of a ſluggard, or wicked perſon ſlugging in ſinne, being drawne by ſome ſeeming and ſenſible good in this world ſo far, as that he lieth down under the two burthens of pleaſure and profit, and ſo is made a ſlave of ſin, and to pay for tribute his ſoule at the laſt. Iſidore.

Dan ſhall judge his people, &c. 17 Dan ſhall be a Serpent in the way, and an Adder in the path, that biteth the horſe-heels, ſo that his rider ſhall fall backward, 18 I have waited for thy ſalvation (O Lord.) According to the ſignification of the word Dan, he ſaith, Dan ſhall judge. This was ſpoken, as all Ancients generally expound it, of Sampſon, who came of this Tribe, for in him Dan was a famous Judge, and becauſe he was ſuch an eminent type of Chriſt, he placeth him before the reſt as he was indeed before them in ſeniority, for he was next to Judah, and he ſaith, He ſhall judge, as one of the Tribes of Iſrael, meaning, that Judges ſhould not ſpring out of him only, but alſo from the reſt, for there were Judges raiſed up out of divers Tribes. But Calvin rejecting this Expoſition, ſaith, that the meaning is rather, that Dan, howſoever he came of a ſervant, ſhould be an head, and have part in the government of Iſrael, as well as they that came of free women. I rather preferre going with the ſtreame herein: for if he had meant none eminent Judge in this Tribe, but only as he hath expounded it, why did he not comfort Naphthali, Gad and Aſher in like manner, ſeeing they came of ſervants alſo? Sampſon therefore is certainly meant, to make which the more plaine, the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath theſe words. Of the Tribe of Dan ſhall riſe up a man, and in his dayes the people ſhall be redeemed, and in his yeares the Tribes of Iſrael ſhall reſt together. His terrour ſhall fall upon the peoples, and his ſlaughter upon the Philiſtines, as a Serpent he ſhall lurke in the way, and kill the ſtrong in their Tents, the Horſemen with the Footmen, he ſhall ever rate their Horſes, and caſt their Riders downe backward. And Sampſon was as a Serpent in the way, when he ſuddenly and unexpectedly ſet upon the Philiſtines and deſtroyed them, as is the manner of Serpents, which are not ſeene, till they are felt ſtinging deadly; and as Serpents make men afraid to go that way, wherein they lie, ſo the Philiſtines were for their ſlaughters made by Sampſon afraid of him. The Adder in Latine Ceraſtes, or rather in Greek, ſo called from the little hornes thereof, which, as Solinus ſaith, it ſheweth, being like wormes lying as a prey for Birds, and nothing elſe of the Serpent being ſeen, whereby they are allured, and ſo before they know by whom, deſtroyed: this Serpent, ſaith Ferus, doth moſt aptly ſet forth Sampſon in his laſt act of pulling downe the houſe upon the Philiſtines heads to their deſtrnction, and as this Ceraſtes biteth the Horſe-heels, & overthroweth the Rider, ſo Sampſon ſtanding low, laid hold upon the Pillars, as the Heels and Legs of that building, and brought downe thoſe that ſate thereupon. Jerome for Ceraſtes hath Baſiliſcus or regulus. But why is this added, I have waited for thy ſalvation, O Lord; Here divers Expoſitors conjecture diverſly, ſome that foreſeeing the malice of this Tribe, he by theſe words bleſſeth himſelf therefrom, as before from the wickedneſſe of Simeon and Levi, as if he had ſaid, Save me (O Lord) from this Serpentine ſubtlety, or being old and weary, and vveary vvith much ſpeaking, he maketh a pauſe here, calling unto God to ſave, and to ſtrengthen him. Some, that foreſeeing the admirable vertue in Sampſon, he vvas a vvhile in ſome doubt, vvhether he vvere the Meſſiah or not, but becauſe he ſavv, that he ſhould die and not revive againe to ſave the people, he recanted

Verſe 16, 17
Verſe 18.

Calvin.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Solinus c. 30.

Ferus.

Hieron.

Oleaſter.

Hieron. Rupertus. Lyranus. Targum Hieroſolymitanum. Chald. Paraphraſt. Pererius. Muſculus.

recanted, profeſſing that he looked for another Saviour yet to come. In the Targum Hieroſol. upon this are theſe words, as a Paraphraſe: I expect not the redemption of Gideon or of Samſon, which is tranſitory, but of the Meſſiah to come.

Calvin.

Some, that he ſpake thus of Samſon, or both of him, and of other deliverers, by whom the Lord wrought the ſalvation of Iſrael at ſundry times, being therefore called Saviours. The Septuagint refer this unto the rider thus, And the rider ſhall fall, expecting the ſalvation of the Lord, but as Muſculus noteth, it is a particle inſerted apart, as being ſpoken of ſome other thing, and therefore to be referred to Jacob, who being moved at the troubles which he ſaw ſhould come to his poſterity at thoſe times, when God ſhould ſtirre up deliverers for them, could but as ſenſible of the miſeries of his, break out into this ſpeech full of faith, whereby he comforted himſelf, and they in thoſe times might be comforted in expectance of ſalvation from the Lord, when their extremities ſhould be greateſt: thus alſo Calvin and Muſculus. For the firſt expoſition, there being no ground for it, it cannot ſtand: for the ſecond, if Jacob would have inſerted any thing touching the Meſſiah to come, he might more fitly have done it in ſpeaking of Judah, of whom the Meſſiah came. Touching the third, it is the ſame in effect with this of ours.

The Myſtery.

But beſides the expoſition of this prophecie concerning Dan, there is another imbraced by many Ancients, that Jacob ſeeing into the time of Antichriſt ſpake thus of him, as who he ſaw ſhould come of Dan, and be followed chiefly by the Jews, meant by this, that he ſhould be a Judge, and as a ſerpent and an horned ſerpent, becauſe he ſhould ſpread the poiſon of corrupt doctrine with power to the deſtroying of mens ſouls, and the rider ſhould be overthrown by him, that is, the proud, and he ſhould ſtrike at the horſe-heels, that is, at the end of time, for at the end of the world they appoint the time of his coming: ſo Gregory and Theodoret, Auguſtine, Irenæus, Hypolitus, Ambroſe, Proſper, Andræas Cæſarienſis, Haimo, Anſelmus, &c. and therefore ſome note, that in the Revelation, when 12000 are ſealed of each other tribe, the tribe of Dan is omitted. But we that live in theſe times, and ſee the Antichriſt of Rome tyrannizing by a ſerpentine ſubtilty, cannot ſubſcribe to this, but oppoſe it as a common deception, whereby thoſe holy Fathers were deceived one after another, as they might eaſily be before that by the event any light was given into the myſtery of Antichriſt. And whereas the Popiſh faction are tooth and naile for an Antichriſt, yet to be born of a woman of the tribe of Dan, ſome even of themſelves acknowledge, that this cannot be made plain by any evidence of the Word of God, as Pererius; ſome, that it is an uncertain thing, as Toſtatus; and ſome, that it is fabulous, as Oleaſter. And therefore leaving this, we may rather thinke the Antichriſt that now is, to be figured out here, although not deſcending of that tribe, no more then the Gentiles did of Iſſachar, or the Church of Zabulon, touching whom it hath notwithſtanding beene ſhewed, that they were figures in ſome ſort of theſe.

Tiçod. quæſt. ult. in Gen. Gregor. Moral. lib. 30. Auguſt. quæſt. 22. in Joſ. Iren. lib. 5. in hæreſes. Ambroſ. lib. de benedict. Patriarch. Ferus. Andr. Cæſar. in Apoc. 7.

Verſe 19.

Pagnin. Gad exercitum ſuccidet, & ipſe ſuccidet calcaneum.

Gad, a troop ſhall overcome him, but he ſhall overcome at the laſt. Theſe words are diverſly read by divers; by Pagninus, Gad ſhall cut off an army, and he ſhall cut off the heel: by Jerome, Latrunculus latrocinabitur eum, & ipſe latrocinabitur plantam: by the Septuagints, Gad, a temptation ſhall hold him, and he ſhall try it beſides or nigh the feet. The Hebrew is גד גדוד יגודנו, that is, Gad, they ſhall gather or joyn themſelves together in armies, or troops, and then followeth והוא יגד עקב, and he ſhall gather together the heel, or the foot. The meaning may well be, as it is commonly expounded, Gad, according to his name, ſhall go out in companies before their brethren againſt their enemies, and afterwards, ſignified by the heel, he ſhall by companies, none of his men being loſt, return again to his poſſeſſion. For ſo the event hath explained this prophecie. Gad with Reuben, and the halfe tribe of Manaſſeh had their poſſeſſion on this ſide Jordan, but upon condition to go over Jordan,

Jordan armed before their brethren to helpe them to their possessions, and then to return home again, which they did accordingly, thus Jerome and others, and Jerome saith, that returning home, they encountring other enemies who came against them, prevailed also. Of their going out, see Jos. 8. of their return, Jos. 22. and Numb. 32. and of their valour and great victory, 1 Chron. 5. The Chaldee Paraphrast in approving this exposition, saith, Of the house of Gad shall be armed tents, when they shall passe over Jordan before their brethren, they shall go to the warre, and shall return afterwards with much substance into their own land. Gad is placed here again out of order next to Dan, when as Naphtali was next, but Jacob saw this eminency in Gad, and therefore speaketh of him here, as is most probable. Some think that Iphtah came of Gad, concerning whom and his gathering of armies and fightings first against the Ammonites, and then the Ephraimites, this was spoken: for the Gadites dwelt in Gilead, as we may see, 1 Chron. 5. 16. and Iphtah was a Gileadite.

Hieron.

Chaldee Paraphrast.

Cajetan.

Judges 11.

For the mystery, Ambrose, who followeth the Septuagints Translation, saith, This was fulfilled in Christ, when the Pharisees and Saducees being gathered together tempted him, but he tryed, and put them down with a question at the last. Isidore, and Rabanus Maurus say, that hereby is set forth his fighting in humility at his first coming before Antichrist, and his fighting and destroying of him afterwards at his second coming. And they labour to confirm this the more, that Gad was herein a figure of Christ, because Moses compareth him to a Lion, and describeth him by conquering and going before his brethren; which indeed maketh much for the foregoing exposition: and haply, if the words of Moses be well considered, we shall not go from the meaning of Jacob by taking in the gestes of Iphtah a Gadite also. But for the mystery, I prefer rather that, whereby Christ is indeed held to be figured out here, but in and with his Church, which is long busied in gathering troops, and bearing the brunts of many encounters, but prevailing over all enemies, and overcoming all troubles in the end; thus almost Calvin and Marlorat, apply these places, John 16. 33. Rom. 8. 31. 2 Cor. 4. 9. 1 John 2. 17.

Ambrose. Match. 22.

Isidore. Rab. Maurus.

Deut. 23. 20.

Calvin.

Verse 20.

Out of Asher his bread shall be fat, and he shall yield royall dainties. Vatablus, Out of Asher a fat land his bread shall be, which is more sensible; or if (land) being left out, we say, Out of fat Asher his bread shall be: by bread all manner of corporall food being meant. The word translated fat, signifieth properly the fatnesse of the Olive making oile, and therefore the abundance of that fruit also is intimated. These words he shall yield royall dainties, are by Pagninus and the Chaldee Paraphrast rendred, He shall enjoy the delights of Kings; but the word is יתן, he shall give or yield. This, it is most likely, is spoken of his oile, of which precious ointments were made, wherein Kings in those Eastern parts much delighted. For the fulfilling of this, Asher dwelt between the Mediterranean Sea, and Zabulon, even to Tyre and Sidon, and to mount Carmel, Josh. 19. 29. and their field, saith Josephus, about Giscala was so fruitfull, that they were all husbandmen; and such as have travelled in those parts say, that the Valley of Asher was very pleasant and fruitfull of corn, oile, and all manner of fruits. Mystically this is also by Ambrose and Isidore applied to Christ, who is truly a treasury of riches, or blessing, as the word signifieth, and his bread, that is, the food which he giveth, is fat indeed, viz. his flesh nourishing to eternall life; and he yieldeth to Kings delight, that is, comfort to such as rule over and subdue their inordinate affections. And indeed we may not amisse, by way of allusion, apply that which is here said unto Christ, who is not only most pleasant bread, but if there be any thing desirable for delight to the greatest, they may finde it in him, if he sheddeth his Spirit abroad in their hearts.

Vatablus.

Pagninus. Chald. Paraphrast.

Joseph. lib. 4. de bello Judaico.

Ambros. Isidor.

Verse 21.

Naphtali is an hinde let loose, he giveth goodly words.

Ierome upon these words saith, The Septuagint render them thus. Nephtali a thicket of young sprouts let loose, giving or yielding beauty in their growing up, but according to the Hebrew it is, Naphtali a watered field giving fair ſpeeches, it being hereby ſignified, that warm waters ſhould ariſe in that Tribe, and that the lake Geneſareth or Jordan ſhould water it. The Hebrews will have this ſpoken in reſpect of Tiberias there; in which place they ſeemed to have the knowledge of the Law. But it will be better to refer all things to the Doctrine of our Saviour, who taught much there, Mat. 4. And yet the words may be read, an hinde let looſe, noting the temporary fruits, and the ſwiftneſſe of their growing by reaſon of the fatneſſe of the ſoile, ſo Jerome. Ambroſe readeth it, Vitis remiſſa porrigens in germine decorem. Vatablus ſaith, that ſome think, that the ſwiftneſſe of Naphtali is hereby meant, being as an hinde taken in hunting, but preſerved for pleaſure, but he preferreth rather this, that they ſhould be peaceable, and with ſweet words pacifie wrath, and ſo avert warres, and ſome for emiſſa, let looſe, underſtand miſſa, ſent, as a preſent to ſome Prince for the beauty thereof, but the other expoſition is rather to be followed. The Hebrews apply this to Barak, who together with Deborah a Propheteſſe went with great expedition, having 10000 of Nephtalim with him againſt Siſera Captain of the King of Canaan, and overthrew all his hoſt: for although he may ſeem not to have made ſuch haſte in his going out, as an hinde, yet he came on ſo afterwards, that he is praiſed for it, as being moſt ſwift of foot, Judg. 5.15. in deſcending upon them, and then the next words, he giveth goodly words, are to be referred to the ſong ſung to the praiſe of God by him and Deborah.

Hieron. de tradit. Hebr.

Verba Hebræa poſſunt verti, ut habet Latina lectio Cervus emiſſus, quæ denotent temporaneas fruges & velocitatem tervæ uberioris. Vatablus.

Hebræi. Judges 4.

Andreas Maſius otherwiſe ſaith, that hereby is meant, that he ſhould inhabit a ſafe and plentifull place, taking his pleaſure therein, as an hinde at liberty in grounds, where there is plenty of paſture, feedeth and playeth with skipping and leaping about. I cannot ſee, but that all may very well agree, both that of Ierome, that their land ſhould be very fruitfull, fruits ſooner ripening there, then in other parts, as the hinde eaſily out-runneth all other beaſts, and that they ſhould live there pleaſantly, and be courteous; and ſuch as ſhould uſe good ſpeeches, attracting the mindes of other men unto them, as Maſius and Vatablus have it, and withall that expedition of Barak at one time in particular may be noted out, for he went as an hinde at the firſt timerouſly, but God fought for Iſrael, and granted a famous victory unto him.

Andreas Maſius in Joſ. 19.

According to Ierome alſo, Ferus maketh Naphtali herein a figure of Chriſts preaching in Naphtali, as in Zabulon, going over thoſe parts very ſwiftly, and no words can be more pleaſant, then thoſe of the Goſpel. Iſidore, of the Apoſtles going out from Naphtali with wonderfull ſwiftneſſe into all parts, becauſe there they were called: Ambroſe following another expoſition, by a Vine and comelineſſe in growing, of thoſe that are converted by the Goſpel preached in all parts, for they are ſet looſe and free from the bands of fear to profeſſe Chriſt, and through his grace are moſt comely. But this being raiſed without the ground of a right reading is not ſo current, but the other two may truly be thought to be myſtically ſet forth here.

Ferus.

Iſidor.

Ambroſ.

Verſe 22. Verſe 23. Verſe 24. Joſeph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitfull bough by a well, whoſe branches run over the wall. 23 The archers have ſorely grieved him, ſhot at him, and hated him, but his bowe abood in ſtrength, &c. As Iacob had been longer in ſpeaking of Iudah, then of any of his other ſons hitherto, becauſe he knew that there was an eminency of that Tribe in reſpect of Chriſt to come thereof, ſo now ſeeing by the ſame ſpirit an eminency in Joſeph above others both for the incomparable increaſe of his poſterity, and alſo becauſe he was a notable figure of Chriſt, he is larger in ſpeaking of him alſo. And that which he ſaith doth in the firſt part properly belong to Joſeph in his perſon, and in the other part to his poſterity. The firſt words in the vulgar Latine are, Joſeph is a growing ſonne, a growing ſon and of a comely countenance, the Daughters ran upon the Wall. The reaſon of this difference is, becauſe the words בן and בנות may be tranſlated Sonne and Daughters, as they commonly ſignifie, and the words על-עין by a well, may be tranſlated, in his eyes or countenance. But the Hebrewes ſay, when בן is not joyned with a reall Relative, that is, the word Father or Mother it may be expounded of divers other things, as a little one in ſuch or in ſuch, a kinde. And therefore Pagninus turneth it, Ramus creſcens, becauſe a bough is the little one or ſon of a Tree, as the Hebrews ſpeak. The Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, my ſon Joſeph ſhall be multplyed, as a Vine planted by the fountains of water, &c. and if the word בן be rendred by a bough or branch of a Vine, עין ſignifying a Well or a Spring muſt needs be ſo tranſlated, becauſe thoſe Trees are moſt fruitfull that grow in ſuch places. They that follow the vulgar Latine, ſay, that Joſeph is thus ſpoken of for the beauty of his perſon, whereby the Daughters of Egypt were drawne to run up to the Wall to behold him paſſing by. Rupertus noting that the word tranſlated, run, is of the ſingular number, ſaith, that the Wife of Potiphar is ſpecially meant, who would be every where running about to behold him, whom ſhe ſo greatly loved. I prefer the firſt Expoſition both for the reaſon already rendered, and becauſe עלעין properly tranſlated, is, by or beſides a Well or Fountaine, there being no word to ſignifie comely. He ſetteth Joſeph forth then, as one that ſhould incomparably increaſe, and he calleth him a growing bough, to intimate his two Tribes. The Archers have ſorely grieved him, &c. this is generally underſtood of his Brethren conſpiring formerly againſt him, & of his maſter Potiphar and his Wife, whoſe Arrowes ſhot againſt him were bitter words.

בן is

Hebræi.

Pagninus.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

R. Maurus.

Ferus.

Rupert.

Verſe 23.

But his bowe aboad in ſtrength, &c. the ſtrength wherein his bowe is ſaid to have aboad, is the ſtrong God, who is ſaid alſo to have ſtrengthened his hands, ſo that what was wickedly intended againſt him, when he was thus aſſaulted and treacherouſly dealt withall, turned to his vvonderfull advancement, ſo that in fine he vvas no vvhit vveakened, but ſtrengthened the more, and made the greater. The Chaldee Paraphraſt ſaith, Becauſe he made the ſtrong his truſt, Gold vvas put upon his armes, and he poſſeſſed the Kingdome. From thence is the Shepherd, the ſtone of Iſrael. Calvin and others read it, from whence he that feedeth, the ſtone Iſrael; Tremel. From whence he is the Paſtour and the ſtone of Iſrael. Our nevv tranſlation is vvord for vvord according to the originall, and Calvin diſliketh not the reading (of ſtone) in the Genitive caſe, but that he ſaith, they turne it to a vvrong ſenſe, by Stone underſtanding Iſraels family, vvhich ought rather, ſaith he, to be referred to God, committing the office of a Paſtour to his ſervant. But Vatablus underſtandeth hereby, that Joſeph vvas the nouriſher and the prop of his fathers houſe. And I cannot ſee, hovv the vvords ſhould beare any other ſenſe, from the time, that God thus magnified Joſeph, he fed Iſrael, and his family, as a Shepherd his ſheep, and ſo vvas as a ſtone to the foundation of a building to them, to uphold them from falling by the famine. The Hebrevvs obſerve a myſtery in this vvord אבן ſtone, for being parted into tvvo אב is Father, and בן Son, intimating his ſupporting Iſrael, both Father and Senne. Some underſtand theſe vvords, (from thence) as having reference to Joſephs family, as if he had meant, that Judges and Kings to feed, that is, to governe Iſrael ſhould come therefrom, for of it came Deborah, Gideon, Abimelech, Jair, Judges, Jeroboam and Nadab, Kings, and Ephraim vvas the head of the Kingdome of Iſrael; but I reſt in the former Expoſition.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Calvin.

Vatablus.

Hebræi.

Verſe 24.

By the God of thy Father, who ſhall help me, and by the Almighty, who ſhall bleſſe thee, with the bleſſings of Heaven above, bleſſings of the deep beneath, &c. In Hebrevv the vvords are properly thus in Engliſh, From the God of thy Father, and he ſhall help thee, and from the Almighty, and he ſhall bleſſe thee, &c. that is, as Vatablus hath it, all the things before ſpoken of, came from God, from him vvas Joſephs deliverance out of his dangers, and his great promotion, ſo likevviſe Calvin. And he ſaith of God, the God of thy Father, becauſe God had made a Covenant in particular vvith him to be his God, from vvhence he vvould have Joſeph knovv, that theſe bleſſings did flovv upon him, and this God he calleth Almighty, becauſe theſe vvere acts of greateſt might: vvhich he had done for Joſeph. And as he commemorateth bleſſings paſt, to teach him

Vatablus.

Calvin.

Verſe 25.

him to aſcribe all to God; ſo likewiſe he promiſeth by a propheticall Spirit to his Tribes bleſſings to come. As if he had ſaid, Thus he hath heretofore done for thee, and he ſhall ſtill help thee, and bleſſe thee, with bleſſings of heaven above, and of the deepe beneath, that is, with the dew of heaven, the cauſe of fruitfulneſſe in the earth, and with the riches that are gotten by the Sea, with bleſſings of the breſts and of the wombe; that is, with great increaſe both of men and cattell, who being brought forth, are well nouriſhed with breaſts abounding with milk, or with dugs. And this was accordingly verified in the two Tribes which came of Joſeph, Manaſſeh and Ephraim. But much more in Chriſt, figured out by Joſeph He was ſhot at and hated, but was ſtrengthened, and is the ſhepherd and chief corner-ſtone whereupon Iſrael the Church of God is founded. He was indeed an increaſing bough, and moſt comely, and he was bleſſed with the bleſſings of heaven and the deepe, when all things in heaven and in earth were ſubjected to his dominion, and bleſſed in the breſts and in the wombe, that is, ſaith Rupertus, of his Spouſe the Church, bringing forth innumerable children to Chriſt; and having two breſts full of milk, the one of the Word, the other of the Sacraments, to nouriſh them; or of the two Teſtaments, as Rabanus.

Iſidore.

Rupertus.

Verſe 26.

The bleſſings of thy father have prevailed above the bleſſings of my progenitors, unto the utmoſt bound of the everlaſting hils, they ſhall be upon the head of Joſeph, &c. Theſe words are otherwiſe read by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, The bleſſings of thy father be added upon the bleſſings wherewith my fathers have bleſſed me; as if he meant that he ſhould reap the bleſſings which he had hitherto uttered, and as his heire, all the bleſſings of his fathers before him. The vulgar Latine is, The bleſſings of thy father have been comforted by the bleſſings of his fathers, which Rupertus following, ſaith, The ſenſe is, my bleſſings have ſtrength and efficacie from the bleſſings of my fathers. But in the Hebrew there is an expreſſe compariſon, as ſome hold, My bleſſings have prevailed more, or have been ſtronger then the bleſſings of my fathers: But in what ſenſe he preferreth his bleſſings, is the queſtion; Rabbi Solomon ſaith, that more was promiſed to Jacob, then to Abraham or Iſaac, viz. that he ſhould ſpread to all parts of the world, which is meant here, but this is falſe, for the ſame was promiſed to Abraham, Gen. 13. as touching the world of Canaan, and none other Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South is meant in ſpeaking to Jacob, but in that Land. Lyranus and Toſtatus ſay, that he meaneth that he had more divine revelations touching things to come, than his fathers, and ſpecially touching the Meſſiah: but this alſo is improbable, for Abraham by faith ſaw Chriſts day, and rejoyced, and for his piercing eye of faith, to ſee into divine myſteries, was called the father of the faithfull; neither doth the abundance of revelation make a mans bleſſings the ſtronger, or to prevail more, ſeeing whatſoever holy Father bleſſeth by the guidance of the Spirit, as Abraham alſo did, and after him Iſaac is by the power of the ſame Spirit alike powerfull. Calvin ſaith, that he ſpake thus, becauſe he ſaw that his bleſſings ſhould now forthwith begin to be accompliſhed; as if he had ſaid, the bleſſings of thy father have been more efficacious, becauſe he liveth to ſee them take more effect in the increaſe of thine, and thy brethrens poſterity, or becauſe they ſhould live to ſee themſelves extraordinarily bleſſed with increaſe of poſterity, ſo as his fathers before him had not done, but only ſaw this increaſe to come afar off. For Abraham had onely one promiſed ſonne Iſaac, and Iſaac only Jacob, but Jacob twelve, and they were already multiplied into many more. Tremelius rendereth it, The bleſſings of thy father are ſtrong with the bleſſings of his fathers, that is, having their bleſſings with them, ſo that thou mayeſt confidently reſt aſſured of the accompliſhment of theſe things, according to that of Rupertus before. The words alſo may as well be thus tranſlated, wherein there is no comparative, as amongſt the Hebrews there is none in any place. For they are גברו על ברכות ſtrong above the bleſſings, or, with, nigh, beſides,, or to the bleſſings: and therefore to avoid all further queſtion, Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Rupertus.

Queſt. R. Solomon.

Gen 28.

Lyranus. Toſtatus.

Calvin.

Tremel.

I think it should rather be so read, and then the sense hath been made plain, whereas, if he shall be construed to have spoken comparatively, no such reason thereof can be rendered, but he must lie open to the imputation of some boasting, the least shew whereof is not to be found in any of the Lords Prophets, in comparing their Prophecies with those of other holy Prophets, but only of false prophets.

To the utmost bound of the everlasting hils, &c. In the vulgar Latine, Even to the desire of the eternall hils: In the Chaldee Paraphrast, The desire of the hils of the world, understanding the desire of the Kings and Princes of this world, so that they should desire to partake of such blessings. The word תאות signifieth both bound and desire: and the word translated everlasting is עולם saculi Rupertus following the vulgar Latine, giveth the sense thus, till the Messiah desired by the holy Patriarchs, who for vertue were high as hils, or whilest there shall be mountains and hils upon the earth, and this last is most commonly followed by Calvin and others, but then the former word is translated bound, or terminus, till the last terme or end of the hils, for so Tremelius translateth it, which be of longest continuance. It will not be amisse, to take it both wayes. 1 Literally, the stability of the blessing upon Joseph being set forth; and then mystically, till the coming of the Messiah so much desired by the holy Patriarchs, as Ambrose hath it, and Rabanus, (who also apply the word נזר to Christ called a Nazarite, here translated separated, as it followeth; Upon the crown of his head that was separated from his brethren: whereupon Vatablus noteth, that it may be translated, either coronatus, or separatus; and some, he saith, turn it, upon the crown of the head of the Prince of his brethren; and he saith, that by separated we are to understand separated in dignity, but it may be taken either so, or with reference to his first separation, when he was by them sold into Egypt; or else taking Moses his blessing for an explication of this, Deut. 33.15. hereby is meant that Josephs posterity should enjoy a most fruitfull land, on the hils and mountains, and in every part, so likewise Tostatus.

Chaldee Paraphrast.

Rupertus.

Calvin.

Ambrose.
Raban. Maurus

Vatablus.

Benjamin shall raven as a Wolf, in the morning he shall devour the prey, and in the evening divide the spoil. Some, saith Calvin, think that an infamous thing to be done by the Benjamites, is here noted out, when they should grow so licentious, and kill and abuse the Levites wife, as the Hebrews: Some, that this is spoken to their honour, Mordecai, and afterwards Saul, who were both of that tribe being pointed at; and some draw it to Saul, otherwise called Paul the Apostle, who was first a Wolf, and then a Preacher; but the most probable opinion is, that the manners of that tribe are hereby set forth, that they should live upon the spoils of others. And upon this did Theodoret touch long before, and Tostatus saith, that he meant, that this tribe should be strong and stout, raging like a Wolf amongst his enemies, and spoiling and destroying them, and how able they were thus to do, is intimated in those warres which they had with all the other tribes, overcoming them, and making great slaughters amongst them two times. Now because some famous persons of that tribe are set forth to have devoured the prey, as Saul, who in the morning of his Kingdome spoiled the Amalekites, and they being killed up, took the spoile, and Mordecai afterwards destroyed the Jews enemies, and spoiled their houses; I cannot but think, that these notable exploits also in particular were fore-seen by Iacob, and here pointed at: and thus it is expounded by Rab. Solomon. There is also another exposition of Jerome, that hereby is meant, that in the tribe of Benjamin, the Temple should be situated, wherein many beasts should be killed for sacrifices morning and evening, part of them being divided amongst the Priests. And this is favoured by the Chaldee Paraphrast, who saith thus upon these words, In the land of Benjamin shall rest the presence of God, and in his possession shall be built the Sanctuary, morning and evening the Priests shall offer oblations, and in the evening they shall divide amongst them the residue thereof. And agreeable to this is that of Moses,

Verse 27.
Calvin.

Theod. quæst. ult. in Gen.
Tostatus.

Judges 20.

1 Sam. 15.

R. Solomon.

Hieron. in tradit. Hæbraicis.

Chaldee Paraphrast.

Deut.33. Moſes, The beloved of the Lord ſhall be ſafe by him, &c. but this expoſition is rather a forcing of the words here, then a giving of the true ſenſe, as any man may ſee; and touching Moſes, he doubtleſſe in his bleſſing meant the Temples ſite, but that was another thing, and not the ſame with this of Jacob, which the Chaldee Paraphraſt not conſidering, was thereby deceived, and ſo induced to make a wrong conſtruction of theſe words.

Ambroſe. Hieron. Chryſoſt. Ruffin. Theod. Beda. Rupertus. Auguſt. Serm. 14. de Sanctis. Pſal.119. 1 Cor.3. Touching the Allegory, the Fathers generally hold, that the Apoſtle Paul of this Tribe was figured out here: for he was firſt fierce, as a Wolfe deſtroying Chriſtian people every where, but afterwards being converted he laboured mightily in the Goſpell, and prevailed to bring in rich ſpoiles of the Gentiles, who were converted by his Miniſtery. Rupertus by ſpoiles divided underſtandeth his holy Doctrine, for with ſpoiles is this by David compared, ſaying, I will joy as much in thy word, as he that findeth many ſpoils, and Eſa 9. 3. theſe ſpoils he divided, when he gave to Babes milke, and to men in Chriſt ſtronger meat.

Verſe 28. Theſe be the 12 Tribes of Iſrael, and this is that which their Father ſpake unto them, and bleſſed them, &c.

This is added, to ſhew that theſe words were not uttered touching the perſons of Jacobs ſonnes only, but of them and their poſterity to come. Queſt. But how can he be ſaid herein to have bleſſed them, ſeeing that which is ſpoken of Reuben and Simeon and Levi is rather an objurgation or a curſe, then a bleſſing? Calvin. To this Calvin anſwereth, that the bleſſing lay in the Covenant of grace, which he ratified to them all, and this was not by temporall puniſhments overthrowne, which he here allotteth unto them for their ſinnes: But, as was ſaid in the beginning, it is rather to be thought, that after he had humbled them by propheſying of their puniſhments, he did in the end comfort them, by giving his bleſſing to each man. Then Verſe 29. Jacob commanded his Sonnes to bury him in the field of Ephron the Hittite, where Abraham was laid, and Iſaac, &c. The ſame charge was given before to Joſeph, of whom he took an Oath for it, but he dealt with him by intreaty, here by command, having reſpect to Joſephs greatneſſe. He added this charge here, that his other Sonnes might joyne with him in his buriall, but why he took ſuch care about the place, I have ſhewed there; and for the burying place mentioned, ſee Chap. 23.9. and for the phraſe uſed, I am gathered to my people, Chap. 25.8.

Gen.47.29.

Verſe 33. Then Jacob plucked up his feet into the bed, and died, &c.

This is ſpoken to ſhew, how quietly and peaceably he died, even as a man, that goeth to bed to take his reſt. He ſat, as it ſeemeth before upon the bed, his feet hanging downe, but now having finiſhed all, that he intended to ſay, he plucketh them up into the bed, that he might the more decently lie in the bed with his body at his death. Muſculus. Some die in a farre more turbulent manner, but here is the fruit of a good conſcience to be ſeene in the end, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, The end of the juſt man is peace. Note.

CHAP. L.

Verſe 1,2. JOſeph then fell upon his Fathers face, and wept upon him, and kiſſed him, and commanded his ſervants the Phyſicians to imbalme him, &c.

Muſculus. Naturall affection wrought ſo with Joſeph towards his deare Father, that he was carried hereby to weep over him, and to take his laſt farewell of him by kiſſing his pale and liveleſſe face; It is to be thought that ſome of his other ſonnes wept alſo, but becauſe he exceeded through the ſingularity of his love, he only is ſpoken of. This was a true mourning indeed, that which followeth, of the Egyptians was only for pompe and faſhion. Calvin. And there is good uſe of mourning for the dead, and reaſon of it, becauſe the firſt coming in of death by ſinne may now ſpecially be remembred by the living, which was the firſt beginning hereof. Only two abuſes muſt be taken heed of. 1 That our our ſorrow be not counterfeit, as it is amongſt many, from whence the Proverb riſeth, The heires mourning is laughing under a vizard. 2 That we exceed not meaſure, 1 Theſ. 4.13. To keep a time of mourning is to pay a duty to the dead.

Hæredis luctus ſub larva riſus eſt.

Verſe 2.

Touching the embalming of Iſraels dead body by his ſervants, the Phyſicians: the word tranſlated Phyſicians, is by the Septuagints rendered ἐνταφιασταὶ; which we may Engliſh, Preparers to the Buriall: for the word Buryers whereby it is commonly expounded, as Auguſtine noteth, is not ſo proper, becauſe theſe buried not the Corps, but ſeaſoned it, and wrapt and bound it up to be kept againſt the time of buriall. The ſame amongſt the Romans were called Libitinarii, from the Goddeſſe Libitina, in whoſe Temple were ſuch things kept, as they uſed about the embalming of the dead. Diodorus writing of the cuſtoms of the Egyptians, ſaith, that there were certaine Officers, who Generation after Generation, as they had learned of their forefathers, did this Office about the dead, ſome being cutters, who with a certaine Ethiopick ſtone did cut the ſide of the dead body, and purged out the panch and entrailes hereby, and ſome curers of bodies, who were called, Salitores, that did ſeaſon, and binde them up againe, filling the head, after that the braines were drawne out by the noſtrills, with preſervative medicines, and the panch and entrailes being cleanſed with Phœnician wine, Myrrh and Caſſia, and other odoriferous ſpices, except Frankincenſe continuing thus to ſeaſon them in ſome ſecret place 70 dayes, after which they waſhed the body, and bound it up with ſilken cloth cut out into Thongs, and glued with Gum, ſo delivering it to the Kinsfolke to be into a wooden Statua like a man, and to be kept therein; of theſe two ſorts of Officers, the firſt were ſo hated of the Egyptians, that immediatly after ſuch cutting of the dead body, they made haſte away, and were purſued by the friends of the dead, caſting ſtones at them, & curſing them; but the other were had in honour. And this I have partly out of Diodorus, & partly out of Herodotus: for the firſt ſaith only, that they anointed the dead bodies with ſweet ointments above 30 dayes, the other 70. And the coſt about dead bodies was divers, touching which theſe Officers would firſt know, how much ſhould be beſtowed: for upon ſome a Talent of ſilver was ſpent, upon ſome 20 pounds, and upon other ſome very little. Amongſt the forefathers of Jacob we do not read of any, that were embalmed, nor of any of that line after, except Joſeph, till Aſa, the King of Judah, 2 Chron. 16. So that herein Joſeph doubtleſſe followed the cuſtome of the Egyptians, but rather fearing to expoſe his Father to contempt, if he ſhould not have beſtowed this coſt, then out of judgement, as Calvin ſaith, whereas he ſhould have done better, if he had reſtreined himſelf to the frugall uſe of his Fathers. But this, although haply excuſable then in him is not allowable in us, unleſſe we will over-whelme the glory of Chriſt. The rites of burying did firſt come from the faithfull, who might and did lawfully beſtow more labour about burials in token of the reſurrection: but ſince the ſpecimen of the reſurrection exhibited in Chriſt, to uſe many rites and ceremonies cannot be without ſuperſtition, and is derogatory from Chriſt; thus Calvin. The Jews uſed to waſh dead bodies as we may ſee, Act. 9.37. and to embalme them with anointing and ſpicing, Luke 23. 56. 24. 1. and this was not diſallowed by the Lord, as we may ſee by his juſtifying of the Woman, who poured upon his feet a Box of precious ointment, which he ſaith, ſhe did unto the buriall, praiſing her therefore. Petrus Comeſter ſaith, that the Hebrews had a cuſtome to keep dead bodies, waſhing them with warme water 7 dayes, as the heathen did 9 dayes, and after to anoint and ſpice them 30 dayes, as Jacobs ſonnes uſed his dead body, and thus the Egyptians cuſtome being firſt obſerved of embalming him 40 dayes, theirs of 30 dayes following made up 70, which if it were ſo, then Joſeph followed not altogether the cuſtome of the Egyptians, but did in part, as the cuſtome was amongſt the people of God, though hitherto paſſed over in ſilence.

Auguſt. lib. locutionum in Gen.

Diodorus lib. 2. cap. 5.

Herodot. lib. 2.

Calvin.

John 12.

Petr. Comeſtor. cap. 114. hiſtoriæ in Gen.

lence. And truly theſe two ceremonies were very ſignificant, the one of waſhing ſetting forth in what purity the body ſhall riſe againe, the other of embalming with ſpices preſerving from corruption, ſetting forth the incorruptibility, that is, that it ſhall not ſo corrupt, but that it ſhall be renewed again, and then continue incorruptible for ever.

For the embalming of dead bodies in theſe dayes, I muſt needs ſay with Calvin, that this being a time of more light, ſhadows are not now ſo uſefull, and therefore it is better left then obſerved, and to ſupport our faith of the reſurrection in the reſurrection of Chriſt, and in taking care onely about a decent buriall, ſuperfluous coſt being cut off, and turned rather to the living poor. But for my part, I leave every one to his own liberty herein, ſo that vain pomp and oſtentation be avoided. Maimony in ſetting down the manner of the Jevvs about the dead, ſaith, They cloſed up their eyes, and tyed up their chap falne down, and ſtopped all their holes, and waſhed, and anointed, and put them in a clean linnen cloth of mean price, and none in ſilk or gold, &c for this was groſſe pride. Herodotus lib.3. It vvas not the cuſtome either of the Egyptians or Perſians to burn dead bodies, becauſe the Perſians vvorſhipped the fire as a god, and the Egyptians thought the fire to be an animate beaſt devouring all things, and then periſhing vvith the thing devoured. The Papiſts out of an apiſh imitation, inſtead of ſpicing 30 dayes, ſay Maſſes 30 dayes for the dead, but ſpecially the third, for theſe three, the ſpirit, ſoul, and body, and the ſeventh for the Sabbath of reſt, to vvhich the ſoul paſſeth. There hath not been more diverſity of cuſtomes about any thing, then about the dead amongſt divers peoples. In Ibera they gave them to the Vultures, in Hircania to the Dogs to be devoured, in Egypt and Pontus they embalmed them, amongſt the Garamantes they buryed the naked body in the ſands, in Lybia in the deep of the Sea: The Celti gilding dead ſkuls drink in them, the Cecropians burn them to aſhes, and the Scythians put them in coffins to conſume there: ſo Silius Italicus. Novv in the embalmimg of Iſrael 40 dayes were ſpent: And the Egyptians mourned for him 70 dayes. Of the time of embalming, ſomething hath been already ſaid out of Herodotus, whereby we ſee, that this was the time of mourning uſuall amongſt the Egyptians, and of embalming. But at this time when Jacob dyed, it was not ſo, for the embalming was onely 40 dayes, to which effect almoſt Diodorus writeth, 30 dayes and more, ſo that at divers times they obſerved more or fewer dayes, and the 30 dayes uſed amongſt the Jews, of which Petrus Comeſtor before made theſe up 70. And hereby it appeareth, in what honour Joſeph ſtill lived amongſt the Egyptians, in that for his ſake they would thus honour his father a ſtranger amongſt them.

Silius Italicus lib.13. Punicorum.

Verſe 3.

Verſe 4,5.
Verſe 6,7.
Verſe 8,9.

After theſe 70 dayes, Joſeph deſireth by the mediation of Pharaohs family to have leave to carry and bury his dead father in Canaan, as he had adjured him, and ſo he taketh his journey thither, being honourably accompanied. He uſeth the help of the Courtiers, and alledgeth the oath whereby he was bound, becauſe he knew, that Pharaoh would be ready to take it heinouſly, that the land of Egypt ſhould not be thought as holy and as good to bury in as Canaan: but now deſiring it upon this reaſon, and uſing the help of the Egyptians themſelves to intreat the King, it was the more likely, that all diſtaſte would be prevented. But how ſaith he, v.5. that Jacob had digged him a grave there? To this Saint Auguſtine anſwereth, that we do not indeed read of any grave digged by Iacob, in the cave of Machpelah, but becauſe it is here ſaid, that he digged one, we muſt believe it without doubting, for all things done by him are not recorded. Others conſidering that the word digged is ſometimes uſed for bought, as Hoſ. 3.2. In Hebrew, I digged her unto me for fifteen pieces of ſilver, Deut. 2. Hebrew, Ye ſhall dig waters of them for ſilver, that is, buy; reſolve it thus, that Jacobs buying thereof is meant, and that not by himſelfe but by Abraham, whoſe heire he was, and ſo when he bought that ſepulchre, he might be ſaid to buy it in his loines, as Levi

Queſt. Auguſt. quæſt. 170.

Lyranus.

is is said else-where to have paid tithe to Melchizedeck in Abraham, because he was in his loines. The company that went with Joseph is said to have been, all the servants of Pharaoh, the Elders of his house, and all the Elders of Egypt, that is, Counsellors, Senators, Presidents and Governours, all the most honourable of the land. Moreover, the whole house of Joseph and Jacob, except little ones and flocks; that is, all his children and grand-children that were able to go, and their wives, which could be spared from little infants, the care of the rest being committed to women-servants, till their returne. Lastly, chariots and horsemen, these also went to guard them from the Arabians and Philistines, that they might not be subject to their robberies, and for the more honour.

Heb.7.9.

Musculus.

Verse 10.

And they came to the threshing-floore of Atad, beyond Jordan, and lamented there with a great and grievous mourning seven dayes. The word Atad signifieth a great thorne, and this place was thus called, because such thorns grew abundantly there. Jerome saith, that this place was the third stone from Jericho, two miles beyond Jordan, and is now called Betagla, that is, the place of a ring, because they went round about mourning for Jacob there seven dayes: One saith, that from Goshen to this place is 240 miles, and that it lyeth upon the further side of Jordan towards the East, and that it was farre about to go this way to Hebron, but they went this way, lest going with so great a company through the Idumeans Countrey, which was the direct way, they should have been moved to come out against them, and from hence to Hebron, where the cave of Macpelah was 40 miles. Saint Augustine saith, that Atad was beyond the cave in Hebron, where Jacob was buried, as they that know, report, 1050 paces, so that their seven dayes mourning being past there, they returned back again over Jordan to come to Hebron. And in resolving why they did thus, he saith, Peradventure some may say, they went about by the wildernesse that way, by which Moses afterwards led the children of Israel to avoid some enemies; but surely it is to be believed, that this was done mystically, to set forth the coming up of Israel that way to passe over Jordan, when the time of their entering the land of Canaan to possesse it was come. I believe that through necessity they were forced to avoid trouble by enemies, to go thus about, and that for the like reason they kept their mourning here, and not at the very place of buriall: and although this onely was the cause, that they then knew of; yet as the sequel proved, God made this a præludium of their future coming that way. Some will have this place to be the same where many of the Israelites were afterwards destroyed by fire for their murmuring, and therefore this mourning was made for that great impiety and destruction to come. But this is a meer conceit, neither is it probable to have been the same place; see both *Numb.*11. and *Chap.*16. Touching their mourning here seven dayes, besides the 70 dayes before spoken of, in 40 of which they were embalming the dead corps through a necessity, as Ferus hath it, because he was to be carried a long way. There was cause of great mourning then, as the same Authour also saith, because death was not overcome, as now it is, and yet still to mourn for the dead out of naturall affection, is not to be condemned, so that it be not out of measure through infidelity, and specially when a good man is taken away. To mourn for the dead is commanded, Eccles. 22. and *Chap.*38. and when Aaron died, they mourned for him 30 dayes, and likewise for Moses, but for Iosiah many years. The manner of the Egyptians mourning was thus, certain women put dirt upon their faces, and went about the City lamenting, and laying open their brests, and over against them went men mourning and beating their bodies, being made bare all the time that the dead corps lay unburied, and all this time they are not washed, drink no wine, nor eat meat, but course, neither do they weare any good cloaths. Numa Pompilius ordeined, that there should be no mourning for any under three years of age, and they should mourn no more moneths for others, then they had lived years, and not above

S. Munsterus.

Hieron. de locis Hebr. Tertio ab Hierico lapide, duobus millibus à Jordane, & &nunc vocatur Betagla, quod interpretatur locus gyri, eò quòd ibi more plangentium circuierunt in funere Jacobi.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

*August. qu.*171. in Gen.

Glos. interlinear Scholast. historia

Ferus.

1 Thess.4.

Numb.20. Deut.34.8. 2 Chron.35.25 *Herod. lib.*2. *Diodor. lib.*2.

Numa Pompilius.

10 moneths for any, except for such as deserved extraordinarily well of the Common-wealth, for whom they might mourn a year. Rupertus weighing this matter of mourning so long for Iacob, saith, This is not to be imitated by those that confesse themselves pilgrimes here, and that they look for a City to come, for the Israelites learned to mourn thus long of the Egyptians, as not being so well instructed at the first, but afterwards they reformed from this superstition, mourning but a little, as is commanded, Eccl. 38.17. And these kinde of mournings are not properly so called, because there are some mournings in name, but indeed are Funerall-playes or interludes. For as Horace saith, Some are hired to act mourners parts, which make more shews then they that grieve from their heart, and the derider is more moved then the true praiser. Saint Augustine alloweth the mourning of seven dayes in token of the rest, unto which the dead cometh, but not of nine dayes, which was used amongst the Heathen, being called therefore Novendial. and these seven dayes were multiplyed by the Egyptians by 10, in that they mourned 70 dayes.

Rupert. lib. 9. in Gen. cap. 41.

Horat. in arte Poetic.
Atqui conducti plorant in funere dicunt, Et faciunt prope plura dolentibus ex animo, sic Derisor vero plus laudatore movetur.
August. qu. 171. in Gen.

Verse 11. The inhabitants of the Land hearing this great mourning, said, It was a grievous mourning to the Egyptians, and the place had the name therefrom, the mourning of the Egyptians. And thus, saith Calvin, there was a monument, as it were, set up of the faith of Iacob touching the bringing of the Israelites into that Land, although the Egyptians who were actors also in this mourning, and the Canaanites giving the name to the place, were ignorant of it. For if he had been privately and obscurely buried, the fame of Iacobs lying there would have bene presently extinct. Yet this tumultuous and loud crying was not altogether without the fault of excesse. Thus Calvin, to whom I subscribe in the first but not in this, holding that the Egyptians indeed mourning thus excessively in shew and not out of true sorrow are to be taxed, but not Ioseph, whose mourning was affectionate, and end good.

Calvin.

Verse 12. Then Iacob being brought to the cave of Macpelah, was buried there. Of places of buriall see before, Gen. 47. v. 29.

Verse 13.

Verse 14. The funerall being ended, they all returne again into Egypt, and then

Verse 15. Iosephs brethren fearing, that now he would be avenged upon them for the evill which they had done to him, pretend their fathers command, who bade them say unto Ioseph in his name, I pray thee forgive, &c. The time of their

Verse 16. abode in Egypt was not yet ended, as they knew by the oracle, Gen. 15. and

Verse 17. therefore they submit themselves to returne, and to wait, when God would Verse 18. bring them back again into the land of Canaan, whatsoever they should suffer there in the mean season.

Verse 15. Note. Touching their fear of revenge, we may see, as many observe, how great an evill sin is, being once committed, it is still always ready to strike terror into the minde of the sinner, even to fear and flee when none pursueth, Prov. 28.1. Lev. 26.36. and that sometimes after repentance and remission, as in these men. For there was no cause to fear, because they had had long experience of Iosephs kindnesse. And therefore let every one that he may be free from such feares, keep a good conscience, and flee sin, being warned by this example.

Ferus. Calvin. Luther.

Verse 16. Note. Touching their fiction, it was childish and easie to be discerned, because if Iacob had willed any such thing, he would doubtlesse in all this time have spoken himself to Ioseph for them. When men have done wickedly, we may see what slender shifts they are oft-times put to. The words are, they gave commandment to Joseph, saying, &c. but the meaning is, they gave this message in charge to one, whom they sent to him. But who might this be? The Hebrews think that Dan and Naphtali, the sons of Bilhah were sent, because it was said before, that Joseph was with them. Calvin thinketh, that some of their servants were sent, but to me it seemeth more probable, that they sent one or two from amongst themselves, haply Judah and Reuben that had faulted least. Howsoever, it is not to be read in the singular number, they sent a messenger, because the plurall by and by followeth.

Quest. Hebræi. Gen. 37. Calvin.

And

And the way being thus made, and haply Joſeph upon this meſſage ſending for them, they came all unto him, and humbled themſelves, as his ſervants. Upon this asking of forgiveneſſe by Joſephs brethren, Maimony noteth, that when a man is injuried in his goods, atonement is made if there be reſtitution; but if in his perſon, not unleſſe he asketh forgiveneſſe, and the party wronged forgive him, no not although he ſhould bring for ſacrifice the Rammes of Neroth, and make any ſatisfaction to him beſides. Verſe 18.

To whom Joſeph ſaid, Fear not, for am I in the place of God? If the vvords be read thus, as they vvill bear, the meaning is, am I equall to God to turne that to deſtruction, vvhich he hath ordeined to preſervation? if thus, for I am under God, as they may alſo be read, for then the ſenſe is, It is my part to follovv God, as being under him, and to preſerve and not to deſtroy thoſe vvhom he vvould have preſerved. In the Chaldee it is, for I fear before the face of God: others think that he ſpake thus rejecting the honour given to him by his brethren; others, that he vvould not take revenge, vvhich vvas Gods part; others, that all this vvas done not by theirs, or his, but by Gods counſell. Let the Reader followv vvhich ſenſe he pleaſeth: but to me this ſeemeth the beſt, Do ye think, that I vvill take upon me as God, as if I vvere an abſolute Lord and had none above me? for even thus I ſhould do, vvhen God hath ſo plainly ſhevved, that the ſelling of me into Egypt came of him for the good of many, if notvvithſtanding I ſhould meditate upon revenge. And this to be the true and full ſenſe, the next words do declare, v. 20. of which ſee, Chap. 45.5. As Joſeph forgave his brethren deſiring it, ſo, ſaith Maimony, is every one of the ſeed of Iſrael bound to do, and not to be cruel for the injury received, Treat. of Hurt and Damages, Chap. 5. Verſe 19. Calvin.

Joſephus writing this hiſtory, ſaith, that Joſephs brethren being in Canaan, would not return again with him into Egypt, till they had thus made their peace, but by the courſe of the hiſtory of Moſes this was done in Egypt after their return thither. Joſeph. lib. 2. Antiqu.

And Joſeph lived 110 years. The age of Joſeph is here ſet down, ſaith Chryſoſtome, that it might appear, how abundantly the Lord recompenced him with much more time of proſperity then he had been in adverſity: for he had ſuffered from 17 to 30, but had reigned in great glory from thence to 110, for 13 of adverſity having 80 of proſperity. In this time alſo the children of Iſrael being favoured in Egypt might increaſe greatly, as God had promiſed. Now although Joſeph lived thus long, yet his time was much ſhort of his fathers, even 37 years, and it ſeemeth, that howſoever he was one of the youngeſt, yet he died before his other brethren, ſeeing he gave them a charge at his death, as it followeth, v. 24. and of Levi it is expreſly ſaid, that he lived 137 years. The reaſon hereof might be partly his former ſorrows, which he ſuffered 13 years together, and partly his great cares and troubles afterwards in managing the affairs of the Common-wealth; for as cares and ſtudy do bring grey hairs ſooner, ſo they bring death ſooner alſo, the labour of the minde conſuming and waſting the ſpirits more then that of the body. Verſe 22. Chryſoſt. hom. 67. in Gen. Exod. 6.

And Joſeph ſaw the children of Ephraim, unto the third generation, and the ſonnes of Machir, the ſonne of Manaſſeh, were brought up upon Joſephs knees. Verſe 23.

This is added to ſhew that Jacobs bleſſing upon Ephraim before Manaſſeh was not in vain, nor his conſtituting of them for two tribes. For the phraſe of bringing up upon his knees, Vatablus ſaith, the word ſignifieth, were born upon Joſephs knees, but then it muſt not be properly underſtood, but onely that they were brought up by him, and therefore the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, the ſonnes of Machir, the ſonne of Manaſſeh, were born, whom Joſeph nouriſhed. And it is not to be thought, ſaith Muſculus, that they were born upon the knees of their grand-father, but being born, were brought and put into his boſome, to exhilerate and to comfort him, that being thus ſtirred up he might praiſe God the more affectionately, and ſo bleſſe the nevv-born babes. Calvin gathereth hence, that Joſeph had long ſince left the Court to come himſelfe Vatablus. Chaldee Paraphraſt. Muſculus. Calvin.

ſelfe unto his brethren, preferring rather to be a member of Gods Church, then to live perpetually in the greateſt glory of Egypt. But I ſee no ground for this, and it made more for their common good for him to hold his ſtate ſtill, and therefore I rather think that he did ſo, and at this time, death approaching, ſent for his brethren to give them the charge here following.

Verſe 24. Then Joſeph ſaid to his brethren, I die, but God will ſurely viſit you, and will bring you out of this land, &c. It is uncertain, whether his brethren, properly ſo called were yet living, although ſome of them, as hath been ſaid, were now living: ſome think, that his kinſmen, the chiefe of each family are meant, but I think rather it might be ſpoken of his brethren, properly ſo called. But how came Joſeph to be ſo aſſured? Quæſt. Anſw. He had not indeed had any viſion, but he heard of the promiſe of God to his fore-fathers, and by faith believed this as firmly, as if it had been by the Lord revealed unto him. And ſuch a firme faith ought we to have by hearing of the Word of God preached, or elſe we ſhall be unworthy to enjoy the promiſes thereof. Note.

Verſe 25. Therefore Joſeph adjured the children of Iſrael to carry his bones thence with them, when God ſhould viſit them. Why the holy Patriarchs took ſuch care about the place of their buriall, hath been ſhewed, Gen. 47. But why would he not have them carried forthwith, as were Jacobs, but afterwards, and whether the bones of his brethren were carried alſo, and where they were laid, and why not in Hebron with Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, but in Shechem, and how the Oath given to his brethren here, could tie them that lived afterwards to do this? To the firſt it was anſwered, that partly becauſe he thought that the Egyptians might take offence at it, if he ſhould have offered to carry them away immediately, or that they would not ſuffer it, he being a man ſo honourable amongſt them: and partly becauſe their faith might thus be the more confirmed, that they ſhould be delivered out of Egypt, for a pledge whereof they had his bones lying there. Touching the other Patriarchs, in all the Hiſtory of Moſes, nothing is ſaid of the tranſporting of them; yet becauſe, Act. 7. 16. Stephen ſaith that they were tranſported and buryed in Shechem, it is moſt probable that taking example by Ioſeph, they cauſed their bones to be carried likewiſe: See my expoſition upon Act. 7. 16. Touching the place where he was laid in Canaan, it may be ſaid that his bones were rather laid there then in Hebron, becauſe Shechem was his poſſeſſion peculiarly, and they were wont to bury their dead in their own poſſeſſions, as we may ſee, Ioſu. 24. 32, 33. And laſtly, for the tie of their poſterity by this Oath, they could not but take themſelves to be bound hereby, the Oath being given for them and their poſterity, and therefore they were mindfull to do accordingly, Exod. 13. 19. Joſhua 24. 32. Heb. 11. 22.

Verſe 26. Then Joſeph died, and when they had embalmed him, they put him in a certain coffin in Egypt. Some think that this was marble, but it is rather to be thought that it was wood, becauſe more portable. It is to be noted, that they ſet not up his bones as holy reliques to be worſhipped, as the ſuperſtitious of later times, but as was moſt fit, buried them, ſo that they were not then certainly of the Religion of the now Roman Catholikes. Cajetan. Note.

EX-

EXODUS.

CHAP. I.

THese are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt, &c. In the Hebrew it is, and these are the names, this Book being thus connected to the former, wherein promises were made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, of multiplying their posterity exceedingly; as if he had said, and now mark how these promises were fulfilled. But why is there a capitulation made of the number coming into Egypt with Jacob here again? Answ. That we considering how few they were at their first coming, might the more admire their wonderfull great increase in so short a time, when we shall come to see their whole number at the going out of Egypt, Exod. 12. and that it might appear what stirred up the Egyptians to envie them. Verse 1. Simlerus. Quest.

In reckoning up the souls that came with Jacob, he particulariseth only the twelve Patriarchs in this place, understanding the rest, concluding as before, that they were 70: of the reason of the account whereof, and the difference of the Septuagint and Stephen, Acts 7. making them 75, I have spoken before, upon Gen. 46. and of the divers reckonings, another order in placing these twelve being used here and elsewhere, Gen. 49. But Ferus specially noteth, now that they had been blessed they were equall, none being before or after other, and therefore it was not materiall in what order they were set down, they being one people, as all Christians are, distinctions being taken away in Christ Jesus. Touching the number of twelve, thus the Tribes were kept distinct, and not confounded, that it might appear, that the Messiah came of the Tribe of Judah, and yet Simlerus saith, that he doth not doubt, but in this number of 12 some mystery lieth hid; because also of the twelve Tribes 12000 are sealed of each Tribe; and of the new Jerusalem there are twelve gates, and twelve manner of fruits, and each part of the City is 12000 furlongs: But touching the full knowledge of this mystery, what it is, we must expect it when we shall dwell in that heavenly City. Verse 2,3. Verse 4,5. Gal. 3. 28. Revel. 7. Chap. 21. 22.

But Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation. Whether Joseph died first of all, hath been already considered, Gen. 50. v. 24 by that ge- Verse 6.

Generation, we muſt underſtand the Fathers, and Children, and Childrens Children, even all that company which came together into Egypt, viz. thoſe 70 ſoules. For although the word Generation is ſometime put for 100 years, and ſometime for 30, as Simlerus hath it, yet here it muſt needs be taken in the ſenſe before-ſaid. And the Children of Iſrael were increaſed, &c.

Ferus.

Verſe 7.

That is, dwelling peaceably in that Land all this time, they multiplied exceedingly, as long as Joſeph lived, or any of that Generation, and his benefits towards the Egyptians were remembred. In all this time they felt not the cruelty of that people, God providing thus for the accompliſhment of his promiſe unto Jacob at his going downe thither, and this time of their multiplying was 100 years, after which their oppreſſion began: thus Calvin and Simlerus but others, according to the order herein followed: Joſeph being firſt dead and all that Generation, as Auguſtine, Origen, Iſidore and Ferus, ſo that for many years after their coming into Egypt they did not multiply ſo exceedingly, but the laſt 145 years of their ſtaying there. I think that the meaning of Moſes is to ſet forth their greateſt increaſe, even to the ſtirring up of the Egyptians to envy, to have been after the death of Joſeph and of all that Generation, not that they increaſed not before, but becauſe now being growne into many more families, and ſo their Semenaries being many more, the Populouſneſſe of this Nation beganne from henceforth to be more remarkable. In the Hebrew there are foure ſeverall words uſed to ſet forth their increaſing 1 פרה ſignifying to fructifie. 2 שרץ ſignifying to multiply after the manner of Fiſhes. 3 רבב ſignifying ſimply to multiply 4 עצם ſignifying to ſtrengthen, and therefore it is well rendred, they were fruitfull, increaſed abundantly, multiplied and waxed exceeding mighty. for a few are weak, but many joyned together are mighty. How long a time they were growing from 70 to 600000, as we read, (hap. 12. is not certaine, but it is commonly held to have been in 210, or 215 years, as I have touched, Gen. 15. 15. although I ſtand there rather for a time much longer. Howſoever we muſt not impute this extraordinary great increaſe only to a naturall fruitfulneſſe, but to God, who promiſed it, and wrought wonderfully herein. The Rabbins of the Jews ſay, that the women brought forth three or foure at a time, but this favoureth, as an invention of their owne. They might by Gods extraordinary bleſſing, having more wives thus multiply by unities, and ſometimes having Twins or more together.

Calvin.
Simlerus.

Auguſt lib. 16. de Civit. c. 7.
Origen hom. 1. in Exod.
Iſidore.
Ferus.

Auguſt. lib. 18. de civit. c. 7.
Rabbini.

The Allegory

Origen, Auguſtine, Iſidore, and other Ancients ſay, that myſtically Joſeph with his Brethren figured out Chriſt and his 12 Apoſtles, the 70 ſoules here mentioned, the 70 Diſciples ſent out by Chriſt: for as the Iſraelites multiplied exceedingly, Joſeph being dead: ſo Chriſt being dead, the Church conſiſting of ſpirituall Iſraelites increaſed in all parts, being at the firſt very ſmall, yet as they continued ſtill in Egypt, ſo muſt the Church in this world, till ſhe be tranſlated into the heavenly Canaan at the laſt day. Moreover, as Joſeph being dead, they multiplied thus, ſo if a man hath received Chriſt dead into him to mortifie ſinne, good and ſpirituall graces ſhall be multiplied in him daily more and more. And Ferus going yet higher ſaith, that Iſrael comming from Canaan into Egypt repreſented man caſt out of Paradiſe: for as they for their ſin againſt Joſeph were brought thither and ſhould there have utterly periſhed, had it not been for Gods ſingular mercy towards them, ſo man caſt out of Paradiſe for his ſinne ſhould have periſhed, had it not been for the ſingular mercy of God in Chriſt Jeſus: and as the means to bring them out of Canaan into Egypt was a famine, and Egypt was a place of darkneſſe and ſuperſtition, and to them of intolerable oppreſſions; ſo man having ſinned, the earth was curſed, and he expelled into a place of darkneſſe for the ignorance of God, and the corruption that is in him, being ſubject to all manner of miſeries. If we take heed, that we do not with Origen turne all into Allegories forſaking the Hiſtories, we may not unprofitably thus meditate upon this Hiſtory.

Origen.
Auguſt. Serm. 84. de Tempore.
Iſidore.

Ferus.

Now

Now there roſe up a new King over Egypt, which knew not Joſeph: and he ſaid unto his people, Behold, the children of Iſrael are more and mightier then we: Come on, let us deale wiſely with them, leſt they multiply, &c.

In the Chronicles of Euſebius and of Jerome divers Kings of Egypt from the time of Jacobs comming into Egypt, till the birth of Moſes are ſet downe, with the times of their ſeverall reignes in this order. 1 Amoſis, who reigned 25 yeares. 2 Nebron 13 yeares. 3 Amevonphis 21. 4 Mephres 12. 5 Miſphar-mutuſis 26. 6 Tithimoris 9. 7 Amonaphis 31. in whoſe reigne, and Anno 18 thereof Amram begat Moſes being 70 yeares old. But whether of theſe was this new King, and how any King of Egypt could ſo ſoone ariſe, that knew not Joſeph, is the queſtion, becauſe Joſeph had made himſelfe memorable by preſerving the whole Kingdome, and by inriching the King with the fifth part of the Revenues of the Land eſpecially? Euſebius ſaith, that Mephres was this King, and that Joſeph died in the firſt yeere of his reigne, and then he entred into this Counſell, ſo likewiſe Vincentius, but that he maketh of Joſeph to fall out in the nineth year of his reigne. But thus from Iſraels comming downe into Egypt till this, ſhould have paſſed but 68 yeares at the moſt, as appeareth by the Chronology before ſet down, whereas Joſeph lived longer then this time by 3 yeares, for he was 39 when Iſrael came into Egypt, and lived till Anno Ætatis 110. To ſay nothing, that a King, at the beginning of whoſe reigne Joſeph died, could not be ignorant of Joſeph, nor of the dying of all that Generation, before this happened: Gerardus Mercator ſaith, that the name of this King was Armeſeſmianus, who reigned 5 yeares before the birth of Moſes, and continued 66 yeares and two moneths, after whoſe death Moſes was called to returne to bring Iſrael out of Egypt. Cajetan ſaith, that this King was an Aſſyrian, a ſtranger, that came in and reigned in Egypt, and ſo it is no marvell, though he knew not Joſeph, applying to this purpoſe Eſa 52. 4. but moſt fondly, as will appeare to him that ſhall look into the place, there being two afflictions commemorated together, one in Egyyt, and the other by the Aſſyrian. To ſay nothing that the Chronicles of the Kings of Egypt make no mention of any ſtranger reigning there, but of Egyptians only till 1000 yeares after this, when Cambyſes added this Kingdome to his Empire. Joſephus ſaith, that this King was of another family, and therefore knew not Joſeph: but this could not hinder from knowing Joſeph, that was ſo famous in Egypt. Some think, that Rameſſes was this King, becauſe he cauſed a City to be built now called by this name, v 11. but he lived not, till long after the going out of Iſrael from Egypt, viz. in the dayes of Deborah and Barak, according to the computation of Euſebius.

The Author of the Scholaſtical Hiſtory and Toſtatus ſay, that this King was Amonaphis the 7 before named, in whoſe time Moſes was borne, he was otherwiſe called Memnon, whoſe Image uſed to ſpeak at the Sun-riſing even till the birth of Chriſt. And this is moſt probable, becauſe two Kings reigned between him and Joſephs death, one 26 yeares, and another 9. to the third yeare of the former of which Joſeph lived; but counting it thus, 32 yeares were paſt ſince his death, when this King began to reigne, and haply ſome yeares paſſed of his reigne, before he thus oppreſſed them. If in the beginning of his reigne, Iſrael had lived in peace 32 yeares after Joſephs death; and whereas he is ſaid not to have known him, this might well be in all this time, for this King haply was not borne when Joſeph died. Or although he might know ſomething of him by the relation of others, yet he paſſed that over, as not willing to take any notice thereof to favour this people, who he thought might be dangerous to his State. And if this were the King here ſpoken of, then the Children of Iſrael had lived in proſperity in Egypt above 100 years, and yet Moſes, in the 80 yeare of whoſe age they were delivered, was not borne: wherefore it was a great errour in Cheremon an ancient Writer to ſay, that Joſeph and Moſes were both of a time, and in Juſtine to ſay that Joſeph was the Father of Moſes. Joſephus contrariwiſe ſaith, that Joſeph died before the birth

Verſe 8.
Verſe 9.
Verſe 10.
Euſeb. Chronic.

Queſt.

Vincentius lib. 1 Speculi hiſtor.

Gerard Mercator Chron.

Cajetan.

Joſeph.

Author Scholaſt. hiſtoriæ. Toſtatus.

De Cherem. loquitur Joſeph. lib. adverſ. Appion. Juſt. lib. 36.

birth of Moſes 170 yeares, but as it is generally held erroniouſly. Herodotus and Diodorus make mention of Menas, as the King, under whom Joſeph flouriſhed, and the King, in whoſe time Moſes brought the children of Iſrael out, is by Clemens ſaid to be Nechephres, by others Amoſis. There are two things, ſaith Simlerus, noted here as the cauſes of this great alteration. 1 The coming on of a new King, under whom haply another forme of government was ſet up, the Laws made in Joſephs time being abrogated. 2 He knew not Joſeph, this is by the Chaldee Paraphraſt applied thus, He knew him not, that is, he kept not his decrees, but abrogated them, making new Lawes, or he kept not the Covenant, that the Hebrews might ſtill injoy Goſhen: but I think, that the meaning is, the memory of Joſeph and of his beneficence to Egypt was now quite obliterated, as Daniel was forgotten by Belſhazzar the ſonne of Nebuchadnezzar, Mordechai by Ahaſhueroſh, and as Teucer Sophocles the Brother of Ajax complained after the death of Ajax, the benefits being forgotten, which came by him, ſaying, Alas, how ſwiftly doth the grace of one being dead flow away amongſt mortall men, Some think, that he is ſaid not to have knowne Joſeph, becauſe he diſallowed his geſtes. Hitherto Simlerus. It is noted here by Calvin, that Joſeph had been very modeſt in his life, not ſeeking in the time of his greatneſſe to magnifie his family, or to get priviledges for his Brethren, to free them by publick acts from impoſitions or taxes, but only a convenient place for them to ſojourne in: but the ingratitude of the King ſo greatly inriched by his means, is the more for this to be condemned. If he had ſought himſelfe and his poſterity, he might doubtleſſe have made many of them great in Egypt, and farre above a ſervile condition, but all fell out for the beſt, ſeeing dignities and proſperity in Egypt might have made them forget removing to the promiſed Land, and to have ſettled themſelves in Egypt. And forſomuch as even Joſephs poſterity was dealt withall, as the reſt, it ſeemeth that they lived together with them, as one people, ever ſince the death of Joſeph, he appointing them ſo to do, or elſe it is to be thought, that afterwards in their miſery they would not have joyned themſelves with them.

Clemens Alex. lib. 1. Strom.

Simlerus.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Heu mortui quàm velox mortalibus gratia diffluit? Calvin.

Note.

Note.

Verſe 9:10. The cauſes of the cruelty uſed by the Egyptians againſt the Iſraelites were their envy and feare of them, they envied their multiplying, and (as is moſt probable) had heard, that the God of their Fathers would one day remove them into Canaan, and give them the poſſeſſion thereof, at what time they feared they ſhould not be able to hold them any longer, but that they would go and carry away all their goods with them, and rifle all Egypt alſo. Joſephus ſaith, that they did not only envy, but hate the Hebrews, becauſe they hated their Idolatries, and would not worſhip ſuch baſe things, as they did, but only the true God: ſo likewiſe it is ſaid, He turned their hearts to hate them. Pſ. 105.25. And more particularly they entred upon this Counſell, becauſe a Prophet amongſt them foretold, that a Childe ſhould ſhortly be borne to the Hebrews, who ſhould overthrow the Kingdom of Egypt, and wonderfully promote the matters of the Hebrews. They ſpeak of Warres, which might happen, and that then the Hebrews might joyne with their enemies to their deſtruction; what Warres might theſe be? To this Simlerus anſwereth, peradventure the Warres of the Syrians, Phenicians, or Arabians, but there was no reaſon to feare their joyning with them, becauſe there was no familiarity betwixt them. They were now multiplied exceedingly, but had not yet practiſed any treachery againſt the State, why then did they feare this? verily they did after the corrupt nature of man, whereby the fewer and the weaker do feare the more and the mightier, and therefore are ready to oppreſſe them by treachery, to prevent being oppreſſed by them; but this is a moſt wicked and horrible thing in whomſoever. They feared herein where no feare was, as is threatened to the wicked, Pſ. 14. and ſo made a way for that to come upon them, which they feared, viz. their owne deſtruction; and the Hebrews going out of the Land, and into the danger of deſtruction Joſeph. lib. 2. Antiqu.

Queſt. Simlerus.

Note.

do do all they likewiſe run, that by wicked and unjuſt means ſeek to provide for their own proſperity. But what is the going out of the land, of which the King ſpeaketh? Anſ. Peradventure he meaneth their going out of Goſhen to joyn with ſuch ſuppoſed enemies, but it is more probable, as I ſaid before, that he meant their going out to Canaan: thus alſo Simlerus, who noteth hence, that the Hebrews did not ſpare to ſpeak of their hopes to be removed thither, and this yet aggravateth more the wickedneſſe of this King, that he would go about to prevent that which the Lord had appointed, and conſidering, that this people were not bond-men to him, but free, and came dovvn onely to ſojourn, that he vvould not rather provide for his ovvn ſecurity by giving them free leave to depart, as he ought to have done to ſtrangers. But he calleth this dealing vvith them vviſe, which vvas rather crafty and deviliſh: but ſuch do the men of the vvorld count their ovvn vvayes, vvhen they ſavour not of any true vviſdome, but altogether of vvicked and abominable policy. The Hebrevv Rabbins ſay, that they thought great vviſdome lay in this, to deal ſo vvith the Hebrevvs, as that they might not be in danger of being puniſhed in like manner again, and therefore they conſulted not to kill them with the ſword, or to burn them, becauſe ſo God, that uſeth to requite like with like, might have brought upon them the like deſtruction, but to drown their little ones, ſuppoſing, becauſe God had promiſed never to drown the world again, that in thus doing they ſhould keep themſelves out of danger. But he, who taketh the crafty in their craftineſſe, found out a way to drown them, although he kept his word of not drowning the world; and ſo all the wicked, although moſt cunning, muſt look that it ſhall happen to them in the end: there is no policy againſt God.

Quæſt.

Note.

Hebræi.

Note.

Therefore they ſet task-maſters over them to afflict them with their burthens, and they built for Pharaoh Treaſure-Cities, Pithom and Raamſes. Philo ſpeaking more largely of this oppreſſion ſaith, that the King made ſlaves of them, as if they had been taken in the warre, or bought. He laid burthens upon them which they could not bear, that is, he exacted work of them beyond their ſtrength, and if any for his infirmity withdrew himſelfe, he was put to death, and ſuch as were moſt cruel, were ſet over them to exact the doing of theſe works to the full. Their works were the making of brick, digging ditches, building, and night and day carrying together matter for theſe buildings, and when being worne with unceſſant toil they died, they would not ſuffer their friends to bury them, or to lament their death. Joſephus likewiſe, adding that they made them labour in digging divers ditches, to convey the Rivers other wayes, and in their Piramides 400 years, but he meaneth certainly, that ſo many years paſſed in the whole time of their being in Egypt. Eupolemus writeth, that the King commanded the Hebrews to weare a garment diverſe from the Egyptians, that they might the better be known and derided and abuſed in every place, but God ſmote this King morbo Elephantiaco, whereof he died. Of this Euſebius maketh mention in his ninth book, de præparat. Evang.

Verſe 11.

Philo. Judæus.

Joſeph.

Euſebius lib. 9 de præparat. Evang.

Calvin.

Simler.

The words tranſlated Task-maſters, are שרי מסים, which are rendered by Calvin, Governours or Preſidents of tributes, for מסה, as ſaith Simlerus ſignifieth tribute, and they both note, that they both exacted money of the Hebrews to diminiſh their ſubſtance and work beyond their power. And yet Simlerus acknowledgeth, that the works impoſed upon them might come under the name of tributes, in that they were compelled to finde a certain number of men continually for the Kings workes: for thus Solomon is ſaid to have impoſed a tribute upon all Iſrael of 30000 men. I thinke, becauſe no mention is elſewhere made, or by any other Writer of any tributes of money, that tributes of worke onely are meant, and ſo it is according to the meaning beſt rendered Task-maſters, and in the vulgar Latine, Maſters of the works, that is, ſuch as ſhould overſee and appoint them unto hard and laborious works, and compel them to do them, to the exceſſive toyling of their bodies. And hereby they thought to keep them from increasing, such extream labour being an hinderance to generation, and a discouragement, when they should think of the bondage, to which their children should be begotten. Treasure-cities, Hebr. ערי-מסכנות, which may be translated either Cities of Tabernacles, as in the vulgar Latine, or defenced cities, as in the Septuagints translation, or Cities of treasures, as in the translation followed by Calvin, Simlerus, Oleaster, and others, or Cities of Armories, Armamentariorum, as Tremelius. It may come of סכן signifying to hide, and then it may best be rendered by treasures, because they are laid up and hidden, peradventure large Granaries are meant to lay corne in, and other provision, so Lyranus and Simlerus noteth, that this word is thus used, 1 Reg. 9. 2 Chron. 22. Yet he is indifferent, whether it be taken for Treasure-cities, or defenced, saying, that the Cities to lay up corn and treasure in, most probably were well defenced also; and haply, he saith, a Garrison was placed there to keep in the Israelites. Jerome followeth the Septuagint, 1 Chron. chap 8. turning this word by, defenced, and Tabernacles, saith Eugubinus, are by the Hebrews commonly put for Towers or defenced places, Pithom and Raamses. In the 70 translation On is also added, which is Heliopolis. But this City, as Jerome noteth, was built before the coming of the children of Israel into Egypt; for Potiphar, Priest of On, was the father in law of Joseph, and Gen. 41. the 70 themselves call him Priest of Heliopolis. This is therefore a great mistaking. Touching Raamses, it may be doubted how they could be said to build it, seeing Gen. 47. Raamses is spoken of, as being then. But it is there resolved, that the place was then, but the city built there not till now, which most probably was called by the same name, or else Moses spake there of Raamses, because when he wrote the history it was standing, and therefore although it were not at Jacobs coming into Egypt, yet he calleth it so by anticipation.

1 Kings 5.

Lyranus. Oleaster. Calvin. Hieron. Eugubinus. Quest.

Verse 12. But the more they oppressed them, the more they multiplied and grew, &c. The King of Egypt is by God disappointed of his ends, who can make his Church to flourish and increase most, even in the midst of persecution, as also was noted long after, when it grew into a proverb, Sanguis Martyrum, semen Ecclesiæ. Now the Egyptians seeing this are said to be grieved at it, the word ויקוצו were grieved, is rendered by Calvin, anxietate constricti sunt; by Simlerus, nauseam habuerunt; in the vulgar Latine oderant filios Israel. The word is used sometimes for abomination, as Gen. 27. 46 Numb. 21. the Israelites are said by this word to have loathed Manna: sometimes for anxiety, as Numb. 22. the Israelites were distressed by the Moabites, and Esa. 7. 16. and this agreeth best, because the increase of the Israelites contrary to their expectation, could not but perplex them to think, what the issue hereof would be, when as they feared them before, but now having so injuried them, they might justly be afraid of them much more, their power still increasing, the more they laboured to suppresse it.

Note.

Verse 13. And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour. 14 And their life was made bitter unto them, &c. Seeing that the burthens of workes before imposed upon them would not keep them under so, but that still they multiplied, now they make their estate altogether servile, putting them to the basest works, the tempering of dirt for brick, and the making of Morter, and husbandry works of all sorts, and of this last Josephus saith, that they made them carry dung and filth into the fields. And all this they were compelled unto by rigour, which is twice mentioned, to shew the greatnesse of the rigour wherewith they were used, and hereby it also appeareth the more, because it is said, their life was made bitter unto them, so that they preferred death before life, to this effect Calvin and Simlerus. But why did the Lord suffer his people to be so long thus cruelly used by the Egyptians? To this Tostatus answereth, that they were tainted with the Egyptian Idolatries, and therefore God did thus severely punish them. This is not here indeed spoken of, but by Ezechiel who saith, that Samaria and Jerusalem committed Whoredomes in Calvin. Simlerus. Quest. Tostatus. Ezech. 23. 3.

Egypt

Egypt in their youth: for Jerome upon that place, ſaith, that their Idolatries in Egypt are meant, and if they had not there been corrupted, it is not probable, that they would ſo ſoone have worſhipped the Golden Calves. Thus alſo Theodoret upon the ſame place, and that they were even then an Idolatrous people, we may conjecture, becauſe they were ſtill alwayes moſt prone to Idolatries. As for the ſilence of Moſes touching this, no argument can be drawne herefrom, becauſe he is intent only to the hiſtory of their oppreſſions and deliverance, and therefore no marvell, although he paſſeth this over in ſilence. And it may be many of them were free from this infection, amongſt whom the pure worſhip of God was ſtill upheld. Partly then for the puniſhment of this great ſinne God permitted the Egyptians thus to rage againſt them, and partly to puniſh their ſinne againſt Joſeph, and partly to ſtirre up in them an hatred of the corruptions of Egypt, to make them more earneſtly to deſire to returne into Canaan, and to give them cauſe ſo to do, and at their departure to ſpoile the Egyptians, and that the Lord might hence take occaſion to work his wonders in Egypt for the manifeſtation of his power and mercy, and that the Hebrews might never more have a deſire of returning into Egypt, unto which how prone they ſtill were the following Hiſtories do declare, Numb. 11. and Numb. 14.

Hieron. in Ezech. 23. Theodoret.

Then the King of Egypt ſaid to the Hebrew Midwives, Shiphrah and Puah, &c. The Hebrews ſay, that theſe Midwives were Hebrew women, the one called Jochabed the Mother of Moſes, the other Mary his Siſter, but Joſephus contrariwiſe ſaith, that they were Egyptians, and it is not likely, that Pharaoh would have committed ſuch a buſineſſe to women of the ſame Nation, and their ſpeeches to the King afterwards do ſhew, that they were Egyptians, for they ſay, the Hebrew women are not like the Egyptian, for they are lively, &c. v. 19. Simlerus therefore agreeth to this, but Calvin ſaith, they were Hebrews, and proveth this, becauſe they feared God: but heathen Rahab in Jericho feared God alſo, wherefore this is no argument againſt their being Egyptians. But why did the King give this command only to theſe two, for the Hebrews being ſo many, it is not probable, that they only were imployed amongſt them? Some think, that theſe two went to the chiefe mens wives, whoſe children he chiefly thought he would deſtroy, not regarding ſo much the inferiour ſort, whom he did weare out with continuall toile: ſo Cajetan: but Calvin and others think, and that better, that theſe were Midwives of greateſt note, and therefore he giveth the charge to them, that either others hearing it by them might alſo do the like, or elſe when he ſhould ſee, how they executed his command, he might proceed to enjoine the ſame to others. For the Egyptians without putting difference oppreſſed with their importable burthens all the Hebrews, and not the meaner ſort only, for even the chiefe of them were ſcourged, when the taſk impoſed was not done.

Verſe 15.

Hebræi. Joſeph.

Queſt.

Cajetan. Calvin.

Exod. 5.

The thing commanded to theſe Midwives was to kill all the Male-Children of the Hebrews ſo ſoon as they were borne, but to keep the Females alive. A tyranny, the like to which was never exerciſed before or after by the moſt cruel: for although ſome in the heat of Warre have ſlaine even Infants in the expugnation of a City, and ſome have expoſed a childe or two to death, by whom danger hath been threatned unto them, as Amulius expoſed Romulus and Remus, Aſtiages Cyrus, and ſome all one linage, as Athalia, ſome the children of one Town at one particular time, as Herod, yet there was none ever that in the time of peace plotted the deſtruction of all the Male-children of a Nation, being alſo ſubject unto him from time to time, as they ſhould come into the world. What might the Hebrews think now of the promiſes made to Abraham, &c. when they ſaw themſelves by this meanes in danger to be cut off, ſo as that the name of Iſrael ſhould no where remaine any more upon the earth? Doubtleſſe their faith could not but be greatly ſhaken hereby, yet Pharaoh, as all the Tyrants before named, did but plot

Note

thus the ruine of himselfe, his people and posterity, as the sequell will declare, why he was willing that the Females should be kept alive may be easily conjectured, viz. because the Males being taken away, he thought there could be no danger in them, and women might be profitable to his King some for work and the increase of posterity. The Mid-wives are said to have feared God, and not to have done, as the King commanded, and being questioned withall about it, they answer, The Hebrew women are lively and are delivered, ere the Midwife cometh at them. They knew by the light of nature, that innocent bloud ought not to be shed, and haply by living amongst the Hebrews they had learned, that their God would have them to increase thus wonderfully, and therefore to seek to destroy their off-spring, was but to fight against God, which rather then they would do, they would disobey the King, and herein they shall rise up in judgement against many men, that are better instructed also and condemne them, in that whether it be right or wrong, they will put in execution whatsoever the King commandeth, for such do not feare God, who is of greatest power, but impotent man, contrary to the precept, Math. 10.28.

Verse 17,18

Verse 19.

Simlerus.

Calvin.

Note.

Touching their excuse that the Hebrew women were lively, &c. in the Hebrew it is חיות, which signifieth either lively or beasts, that is, if it be so taken, as the beasts, bringing forth their young without help. In the Targum Hierosolymitanum it is thus. They themselves do vivifie or keep alive their Males, for before the Midwife cometh at them, they pray before their Heavenly Father, and he heareth them, and they are delivered. In the vulgar Latine it is rendered, They have the skill of Midwives the Chaldee: They are wise. If it be demanded, whether they said true herein or no? The Rabbins answere, that they certified the Hebrew women of the Kings charge, and thereupon they kept close their travelling in Childbed, till they were delivered, and so the Midwives came not indeed unto them before. This is rejected by Augustine, Gregory, Calvin, &c. who affirme that, which they said to be a lye, and that their charity and mercy was rewarded, which they shewed towards the people of God, but not their lye, which needed pardon, their good will was rewarded, not their fallacy, the benignity of their minde, not the iniquity of a liar: But Tremelius thinketh rather, that they said true, and I see no reason, but that we should think the same: for if they feared God, would they not devise the safest way to preserve the Hebrews children, and to keep out of danger also, and what could they for this end have done better, then give notice to the Hebrew women of the decree made by the King? whereas it is said, they saved the Hebrew males alive, this may be understood, as Simlerus hath it, by their Counsell and admonition. Or it may be, that God also did give a more easie and speedy deliverance in those times to the Hebrew women for the present necessity, so that they could bring forth without the help of Midwives.

Targum Hierosolymitanum.

Quest.

Rabbini.

August. quest. in Exod.
Gregor. Moral. lib 18. c. 26.
Calvin.
August. lib. contra mendac. cap. 10.
Non est his remunerata fallacia sed benevolentia, benignitas mentis, non iniquitas mentientis.
Tremel.
Simlerus.

Verse 20,21

Tremel.

Because the Midwives feared God, he dealt well with them, and made them houses. This of making them houses is by some referred to the Hebrews, as by Tremelius, who expresseth them thus, God made for those children houses, so that they lived to mans estate, and begat children, and had families, because the word is לה בתים in the masculine gender: but this is a thing not unusuall to speak of females in the Masculine Gender, as Gen. 31. Jacob saith to his wives in the Masculine Gender, The flocks of your Father, and Exod. 2. speaking of the Daughters of Jethro he saith, the Shepherds drove them away, in the Masculine Gender, thus Simlerus, who yet in fine yieldeth rather to that Exposition, whereby it is expounded of the Hebrew children, herein following Calvin, who is so earnest for it, that he wondreth, that any interpreter should expound it otherwise, both because the word (them) is Masculine; and also because women are not the heads of families, but men, so that houses cannot be said to be built to any women: wherefore he concludeth, that it is a wresting of the words to turne them to the Midwives, but being applied

Simlerus.

Calvin.

to

to the Hebrew children, he saith, that they will excellently agree, because the Midwives feared God, he built them houses, that is, by the piety of these women the Hebrews obteined an happy propagation. For in this sense God saith, he would build David an house, which is spoken of in divers places, that is, establish the Kingdome to his posterity, and to Eli, that he meant to have built him an house, that is, to have continued unto his family the Priesthood; wherefore here is nothing else meant, but that God by these weak Instruments magnified his power, preserving and establishing the families of Israel, which now must needs else have perished. Thus Calvin. But amongst the Fathers I do not finde any question made, but that the houses of these Midwives are here meant. Augustine a little altering the reading saith, they made themselves houses, and demandeth whether they had not houses before? and whether the increase of their wealth was not hereby meant? Theodoret likewise saith, God rewarded the Midwives by bestowing riches upon them. Gregory saith, because of their lie God turned an eternall into a temporall reward unto them, of building them houses here. Jerome saith, that they thus built them mansions in heaven, and Rupertus, God built the Midwives houses in heaven, seeing that which God buildeth is eternall, in the heavens. Ferus also mentioning this of the Hebrew children, saith, that the other referring it to the Midwives is to be preferred; and whereas God is said to build them houses, those externall are not meant wherein they dwelt, but they had houses built them, when they were made fruitfull, as Sarah desired to have it built unto her, as the word signifieth, out of Hagar, and Rachel and Leah are said to have built Jacobs house. And to this sense do I subscribe: for the word being of the masculine gender argueth nothing to the contrary, seeing masculines are sometimes joyned with females, and feminines with males, or by them, may be meant these midwives and their husbands together, the whole family being blessed greatly for this their piety. And thus they were recompenced in their kinde, they had preserved children, which should have been put to death, and accordingly their posterity is increased, and haply they in their posterity went out of Egypt with the Hebrews, and so their families stood, when others were destroyed. Lyranus saith, that they joyned with the Hebrews and were married to chief men amongst them, as Rahab afterwards did, and so were established, but this is onely a conjecture. There be divers other strange Expositions brought here by divers; by some, that the Hebrews made these midwives strong houses, wherein they might be safe from Pharaoh; others, that Pharaoh made them houses, to which the Hebrew women should be brought, that they might be delivered before them; others, that the Midwives being Jochebed and Mary had houses built them when the Priesthood was established in Jochebeds posterity, and the Kingly office in Maries, who was married to Caleb of Judah: but I passe these over, as fantasies. David Chimhi saith, that by building them houses is meant Gods protecting of them, and hiding them, that Pharaoh could not hurt them, as he is said to have hid Jeremiah and Baruc, Jerem. 36. But still I cleave to that of multiplying and enriching and establishing their families. And the words going before in this verse and in the former, do plainly shew, that it is spoken of the Midwives, for the Hebrews multiplying is inserted, Verse 20. so that it had been superfluous to repeat it again here, and the words used immediately before these, do plainly direct to hearken to a blessing upon them for this their piety, because they feared God, what did God for them, he made them houses, for if these houses had been for the children preserved from death, where had the recompence of the Midwives been? and it might be demanded, what was that which God did for these children, to the Midwives? to say nothing of the discrepancy of this verse in it selfe, being otherwise understood: whereas if we understand it of the Midwives, here is a proceeding plainly from a generall, v. 20. God did well for the Midwives, to declare in particular, wherein he did well for them in this, v. 21. He made them

2 Sam. 7. 27.
1 Sam. 25. 28.
1 Sam. 2. 35.

August lib. 2. locut. in Exod.
Theod. quæst. 2. in Exod.
Gregor. Moral. lib. 18. in Job cap. 26.
Hieron. in Esa. 65.
Rupertus in Exod. ca. 7.

Ferus.

Gen. 16.

Lyranus.

D. Chimhi.

them houſes. For the conceit of Gregory, that God changed the reward of theſe Midwives into a temporall benefit for their lie, he was certainly deceived herein; becauſe although they lied that was pardoned, as proceeding from infirmitie, and they truly fearing the Lord might notwithſtanding be ſaved eternally. For if they had not greatly feared and reverenced God, they would not have put their lives in hazard by doing contrary to the Kings command. Wherefore I doubt not but the grace of God wrought with them, and where grace is, he crowneth it with glory. No ſuch thing indeed is here ſpoken of, neither to other faithfull ſervants of God under the old Teſtament, but rarely, the common propounding of an eternall reward in heaven being reſerved till the coming of Chriſt, who opened the way of life by the merits of his paſſion.

Verſe 22.

Then the King commanded all his people, to drown every male-childe of the Hebrews. The Tyrant hath no conſideration of Gods being againſt him in his enterprizes, and therefore he furiouſly goeth on to take another courſe to fulfil his bloody will.

Simlerus.

R. Solomon.

R. Solomon ſaith, that it was foretold by the Aſtrologers, that one ſhould be born who ſhould deſtroy Egypt with waters and therefore the King would have them drowned in the water, but this came upon Egypt in the end as a juſt reward of ſuch monſtrous cruelty. Hitherto he had ſecretly ſought to deſtroy the holy ſeed, but not prevailing ſo he breaketh out into open violence, neither do we read that the people refuſed to obey him, as the Midwives had done, and their hatred of the Hebrews was ſuch, as that without doubt they acted this cruel part, and therefore were juſtly afterwards plagued and deſtroyed together with their King in the Red Sea.

Calvin.
Ferus.

Ferus.

For the Allegory, this King of Egypt doth aptly figure out the devil, who is King of all that live in darkneſſe, and wickedneſſe, the ſpirituall Egypt; he knew not our Joſeph Chriſt Jeſus, for he hated him and ſought his deſtruction; he alſo envied the multiplication of the elect by the preaching of the Goſpell, as he had done from the beginning of the world, not enduring, that men ſhould be more happy then he. Wherefore he ſtirred up the Potentates of this world againſt them, that he might keepe them from going out of the power of darkneſſe; and with perſecuting Kings and Princes here he joyneth evill ſpirits, that by their temptations they might draw them to ſin, and thus they are laden with his burthens, for ſinne is an heavy burthen, which we cannot beare; and he maketh them to build for him Pithom ſignifying the mouth of defection, or of the bottomleſſe pit, which is by cauſing them to lie, and by deceit to prepare pits of deſtruction for themſelves: and Raamſes ſignifying one that holdeth malice, which is by putting, malice and covetouſneſſe into the minde But the more the elect are preſſed with perſecutions, the more do they proſper and increaſe in vertue. But then the Midwives are called, theſe figure out Preachers, with whom the devill is moſt buſie to corrupt them, that either none may be regenerate, or if any be, they may by their meanes be cut off againe, and thus he hath drawne many to be falſe prophets of old, and Authours of hereſy ſince, but chiefly he deſireth, that all goodneſſe may be killed in the males, that is, in the moſt mighty and wiſe, and in governours, or that vertue may be killed in all, that which is carnall, effemenate and vicious, being ſtill left to ſurvive; but as theſe worthy Midwives, ſo we that are Preachers ſhould withſtand all temptations tending to the corrupting of us, and keep vertue alive in the people, and in thus doing we ſhall be bleſſed, as they were. But the devill will not yet reſt, if by the Preachers he cannot deſtroy vertue, then he will ſtirre up the common ſort to corrupt one another, if men be not carried away by hereſie, then he will drovvn in vvorldly pleaſures or covetous deſires, and that in the time of youth, becauſe he knovveth, that vvhat vvay one entereth into in his youth, he vvill not depart from it in his age, and if there be any good purpoſe in the minde, he ſeeketh in the very entrance to extinguiſh it, Thus Ierus and Rabanus, &c. But Origen by this Pſal. 38. 4.

Prov. 22.

Origen.

nevv

nevv King underſtandeth the vviſdome of the fleſh, ſpeaking to carnall pleaſures about the corrupting of Gods people, vvhich vvho hearkeneth to follovv theſe pleaſures and profits, is under this King labouring in brick and morter; yet having mentioned this, he falleth upon the former allegory alſo. But coming to the Midvvives, Siphrah ſignifying a ſparrovv, and Phuah ſignifying red or modeſt, he maketh them figures of the tvvo Teſtaments, the nevv being red by the blood of Chriſt, and the old being ſpirituall, for hereby the Devil vvould deſtroy vertue, by cauſing men, to underſtand them in an erroneous ſenſe, but vertue is not hereby deſtroyed, but preſerved, &c.

Rupertus making this King a figure of the Devil ſaith, that his oppreſſing of the Iſraelites vvith burthens ſet forth the miſerable caſe of men till the coming of Chriſt, by vvhom they vvere delivered. But I preferre the firſt of Ferus, and let every one take heed of Origen, becauſe he doth ſo hunt after allegories, as then he deſtroyeth the Hiſtories. Calvin applieth the laſt of deſtroying the males unto Antichriſt, vvho vvhere he findeth any man like to reſiſt his corruptions, he deſtroyeth them, but if effeminate, vveak and yielding, he as vell pleaſed and triumphing in them, ſtayeth his hand.

Rupertus.

Calvin.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1, 2.

1 There was a man of Levi, who took to wife a daughter of Levi. 2 And the woman conceived, and bare a ſon, and when ſhe ſaw that he was a goodly childe, ſhe hid him three moneths. The name of the man is here concealed, and likewiſe of the woman, but he was Amram the ſonne of Chaath, the ſonne of Levi, and ſhe was Jochebed his fathers ſiſter. Of this Amram Euſebius ſaith, that he was born 14 years before the death of Joſeph, and at the 77 year of his age begat Moſes, by which account Moſes muſt be born 63 years after Joſephs death, and 80 years being added, at which age Moſes brought the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, they together make 143, and if Joſephs time after the coming of Iſrael into Egypt be put to, which was 71, the time of their continuance there will be 214 years. But what is to be thought of this, I have examined before upon Gen. 15. Of Amram, Joſephus ſaith, that being noble in his family he was very ſolicitous for the ſtate of his people, and becauſe his wife was now great with childe, wherefore he prayed to the Lord, and the Lord told him in a dream, that his wife ſhould now bear the childe, who ſhould deliver Iſrael, and be marvelouſly preſerved, and that the Prieſthood ſhould reſt in his brother; and accordingly ſhe was ſpeedily delivered of this childe, and thus had opportunity to hide him, and to ſave him alive. The thing ſaid here to have been done, viz. Amrams taking Jochebed to wife, was not now done, but before, for ſhe bare him Aaron 3 years before this, and Miriam 7, ſo Calvin, who alſo thinketh, that when this couple met firſt, that cruell Edict of murthering the males was not come forth, becauſe there is no ſuch care ſpoken of, touching the preſervation of Aaron. It is indeed moſt probable, that the charge was not given to all the people of drowning every male till now, but onely to thoſe two Midwives that ſpared them, in whoſe time Aaron was born. If it be demanded, how any man of worth, as Amram was, could frame his minde to enter into the eſtate of marriage in thoſe times when as nothing could be expected, but either intolerable ſervitude or death to their iſſue male? I anſwer, they might hope by faith for Gods promiſe ſake, that they ſhould not continue long in that miſery, and indeed it appeareth by the Hiſtory following, that this cruel decree continued not till the time of their going out of Egypt, but was again intermitted long before, becauſe otherwiſe there could have been none males at their gonig out leſſe then 80 years of age, as Moſes was, whereas mention is made of a very great company 20 years old, and under, who were preſerved in the wilderneſſe, all that were above

Exod 6. 20.

Euſeb. lib. 9 de. prepar. Evang. cap. 11.

Joſeph.

Calvin.

Quæſt.

Simlerus.

Num. b. 14.

above 20, except Caleb and Joſuah, being cut off. And here it is worth the noting, that God diſpoſed ſo of the birth of Moſes, that it was in the heat of this perſecution, and not when it was again allayed, to ſhew, that the moſt earneſt attempts of men are of no force againſt God, but to ſhew how light he ſetteth by and derideth the machinations of Tyrants, he bringeth his whom he meaneth to preſerve through their armed troops, they not being able to hurt them.

Note.

Queſt. Exod. 6.20. Septuagint. Chaldee Paraphraſt. Euſebius de præparat. Evang. l. 9. c. ult. Lyranus.

Touching Jochebed, whom Amram took to wife, ſaid to be his fathers ſiſter, in the Hebrew דודתו, there is ſome queſtion, whether ſhe were his Aunt, or his Uncles daughter? for the Septuagint render it, his Uncles daughter; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, his fathers ſiſters daughter; and Jerome in the vulgar Latine, Patruelem ſuam, his Uncles daughter, or Cozen-German. And Euſebius accordingly ſaith, that Amram married Jochebed, the daughter of his Uncle; thus Lippomannus in his Catena, but he was deceived in the Chaldee Paraphraſt, wherein it is not his fathers ſiſters daughter, but his Aunt. Lyranus ſaith, that Jochebed could not be Amrams Aunt. 1 Becauſe then ſhe muſt have been Levi his daughter, and ſo 130 years old at this time, which is an age paſt childe-bearing. 2 Becauſe all that generation was dead before this. 3 Becauſe no good man, but would marry according to the Law, even before it was expreſſed in writing, and therefore not his Aunt, which is contrary to Law. But Calvin, and Junius, and Simlerus, and Toſtatus, and all that follow the Hebrew, hold that ſhe was his Aunt. There are ſome that defend the other reading, his Uncles daughter, becauſe the word ſignifieth love, or beloved properly, being tranſferred to an Uncle or Aunt, or Uncles daughter: for the nearneſſe in blood, making them to be ſingularly beloved, and to prove this true, they bring ſome places of Scripture, but in vain, for there is none, wherein this word is taken for any other, but an Aunt. For the obiections of Lyranus, although ſhe were Levi his daughter, yet ſhe might be begotten after Joſephs death, her father being 115 yeares old, for he lived 137, and ſo ſhe was not now above 63, at which age it was no marvell to beare children in thoſe times. 2 Levi might have a daughter ſtill living, although all that generation, which came downe into Egypt was dead, becauſe by that generation are meant only ſuch as were then born, numbered to be 70 perſons. 3 Although this was afterwards forbidden, yet now it was not, neither did the beſt obſerve all things, although they obſerved many, before that they were ſet downe in writing: thus Toſtatus, who alſo alledgeth the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and the Targum Hieroſolymitan. for this reading. Others, as Calvin and Simlerus, who ſtand for her being his Aunt, yet do not defend Amram, but condemne him herein, as making an inceſtuous marriage, becauſe although nothing was yet ſet downe touching this in writing, yet it was a lavv in nature, as appeareth in that the Canaanites are condemned for doing contrary, as doing an abomination, and therefore they commend the humble and candid minde of Moſes, in that he ſpared not to ſet dovvn his ovvn inceſtuous comming into the vvorld. For mine ovvn part, I dare not cenſure Amram herein, becauſe that vvhich vvas abominable by the light of nature, muſt needs be ſuch a thing, as men led by natures light alvvayes abhorred from, eſpecially the beſt; but they did not, neither could in the beginning abhorre from ſome marriages forbidden, Levit. 18. viz. the Brother vvith the Siſter, there being none elſe to marry vvithall. Wherefore vvhen the Lord uſeth this, as an argument to move his people to keep his lavves, After all theſe abominations did the men of the Land, that were before you; it is not to be extended to every particular, but generally to moſt of the ſinnes mentioned; but then the Law being given, to contract any marriage prohibited was thenceforth an abomination.

Calvin. Junius. Simlerus. Toſtatus.

Levit. 18.

Levit. 18.27.

Verſe 2.

Touching the hiding of this childe three moneths, here it is ſaid, that his Mother ſeeing him to be a goodly childe, hid him: but, Heb. 11.23. that by faith he was hid three moneths by his Parents, becauſe they ſaw he was a proper childe,

Calvin.

childe, they not fearing the Kings commandment. His mother, as is moſt probable, with the conſent of his father hid him, or ſhe being the firſt Authour of this counſell they hid him. But how is this imputed to faith, when as his outward forme wrought with them? It is anſwered, that faith firſt moved their mindes, and the goodlineſſe of the childe, making them the rather to entertain an extraordinary opinion of him, that he was one ordeined not to be of a vulgar condition, was as a prop to their faith, ſo that believing, that he ſhould be the man that ſhould afterwards deliver Iſrael, they took courage to themſelves, contrary to the Kings command to keep him alive. Yet Calvin thinketh, that this of his outward forme is added, as a thing obſcuring their faith, and ſhewing, that it did not ſhine ſo clearly in their hearts. But how could they believe, that this particular childe ſhould be the Deliverer? Anſ. If that of Joſephus be true touching the Revelation made to Amram, it may eaſily be conceived, how they were brought to believe this, and if not, there was a promiſe that in the fourth generation they ſhould come out, whereas Amram was the third, and therefore they might well believe their deliverance to be now at hand, and ſeeing the countenance of this childe to promiſe ſomething extraordinary, God might work ſo in their hearts, as to make them believe that he ſhould be the inſtrument. But why did they hide him only three Moneths? Ferus anſwereth, that the Hebrews ſay, that ſearchers were appointed by the King to come into every mans houſe once a quarter, ſo that novv there would have been danger of hiding him longer, both to him and them. Philo ſpeaketh only in generall, that there were ſome, who to curry-favour with Pharaoh, would have diſcovered their act, and then they ſhould all have been cruelly ſlaine, wherefore they thought it better to caſt the childe upon Gods Providence, and ſo to expect the iſſue. And to the ſame effect Joſephus ſaith, he had rather commit his ſonne wholly to Gods Providence, having a certaine hope, that he would provide that the event ſhould declare the truth of the Oracle.

Simlerus.

Queſt.

Queſt.

Gen.15.

Queſt.

Ferus.
Philo.
Joſeph.
Maluit ſalutem ſilii totam Dei providentiæ committere, certam ſpem habens, cum proviſurum, ut oraculi veritatem eventus declararet.

And when ſhe could no longer hide him, ſhe took an Ark of Bul-ruſhes and daubed it with ſlime and pitch, and put the childe therein, and laid it in the flagges by the Rivers brink.

Verſe 3.

Joſephus goeth here from Moſes, ſaying, that ſhe made a little bed of paper, daubing it with ſlime, that the water, might not enter, and putting the childe in, ſhe caſt it into the River, appointing Mary his Siſter to watch, whither the ſtreame carried it. In which time Pharaohs Daughter called Thermutis playing upon the Rivers bank, eſpied this veſſell floating upon the water, and ſent ſome that could ſwim, to fetch it unto her. And having opened it, ſhe ſaw the childe and was wonderfully pleaſed with it, then ſhe cauſed an Egyptian woman to give it ſuck, but the childe refuſed, yea when a ſecond and a third offered the Dugge unto it. Then Mary, as coming by chance told Thermutis, that ſhe did in vaine ſeek to have the childe nouriſhed by an Egyptian, but if ſhe would ſend for an Hebrew woman, it was likely, that it would ſuck of one of his own kinde, &c. Here Joſephus is to be taxed for writing, that this veſſell was caſt into and carried about by the water, whereas it was only put into the water, or where the water uſed to flow amongſt the Bulruſhes, whereby it was ſtayed from being carried away.

Joſeph lib.2. antiquit.

But becauſe he calleth this veſſell a papery one, and the Septuagint likewiſe, but the vulgar Latine ſiſcellam ſcirpeam, the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Pagninus and Vatablus, an Arke, the queſtion may be, what kinde of thing this was? Anſ. the word תבת properly ſignifieth an Arke, and the word גמא joyned to it, a Bulruſh, or, as it is tranſlated by ſome, paper, for ſo the Septuagint render it Thebin papyraceam, or θήκην and Simlerus (arcam papyraceam) who alſo ſaith, that the Egyptians had a certaine fruit called Papyrus, which was triangular, of which in times paſt they made paper to write upon, and therefore that which is uſed for writing at this day, is alſo called paper, and of this Papyrus, Pliny ſaith, that they uſed to make Boats, and therefore Queſt.

Simlerus.

Plin.lib.13. cap.11.

no marvell, though an Arke to put this childe into were made hereof. Touching the vulgar Latine, Fiſcella is a little cheſt, and ſcirpus is the ſame with juncus a Bulruſh, being a kinde of Bulruſhes. Calvin. Calvin rendereth it arcam arundineam. But becauſe according to Pliny that Papyrus ſerved uſually to make water-veſſels of, I think, that an Arke of ſuch ſtuffe was meant. The place where it was laid, was a place of flagges, in caretto ſaith the vulgar Latine, and this is followed by Calvin, Simlerus, &c. Pagninus in junceto; Kimbi, in arundineto; Septuaginta, in palude; others, in Papyreone. It was a place as all agree, where Flagges, Reeds, Bulruſhes, and the foreſaid Papyrus grew, making a kinde of thicket, being produced in watery grounds by the overflowing of Nilus, but yet never covered (except at the great overflowing once in the yeare) above two cubits high, ſo that this little Arke being put there, could not either be overturned or carried away, and ſo the childes Mother might have him ſome times fetcht againe from thence to give him ſuck, that he might not periſh for want.

Queſt. Touching the queſtion, which is commonly moved here, whether theſe Parents ſinned not in thus expoſing their childe? It is anſwered, that although it may ſeem in regard of the dangers both of men of Egypt and of wilde beaſts, that might have deſtroyed the Infant, being thus expoſed, yet his Parents are by all means to be juſtified; for they ſavv deſtruction coming, if they had kept him in their houſe ſtill, and being inforced to caſt him out, they ſet a ſpie to look to him, and as the ſequel proved, this motion came of God, yea, the Hebrevvs ſay, that Miriam vvas ſtirred up by God, as a Propheteſſe to direct them herein, promiſing a good event. Note. See in this example, to vvhat a deſperate caſe they are brought ſometimes, vvho are ſingularly favoured of God, that vve may never deſpaire, but alvvayes hope for his help, even vvhen vve ſee no meanes of eſcaping death.

Verſe 5. Then Pharaohs Daughter went downe to the River to vvaſh herſelfe, and ſeeing this Arke in the flagges, ſhee ſent her maid to fetch it.

The name of this Daughter, as Philo and Joſephus ſay, vvas Thermutis. The Chaldee Paraphraſt ſaith, that ſtretching out her arme ſhe drevv it to her, but the moſt learned of the Hebrevvs rejecting this, expound it of ſending her maid to fetch it. Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Verſe 6. And when ſhe had opened it, ſhe ſaw the childe, &c.

It is alſo ſaid, that ſhe knevv it to be a childe of the Hebrevvs, and had compaſſion upon it, this ſhe knevv moſt probably by the circumciſion, ſaith Simlerus, but becauſe the Egyptians uſed circumciſion alſo, I rather think, that ſhe conjectured ſo of it, becauſe for the ſtrictneſſe of the Kings Edict it vvas caſt out to the vvaters by ſome Hebrevv vvoman, as ſhe might vvell conceive. Simlerus.

Verſe 7, 8, 9. Then his Siſter ſeeing her affection tovvards the childe, offered to call her a Nurſe for it, vvhich ſhe accepting, the childes Mother vvas called, and the childe vvas committed to her to be nurſed. Joſephus ſaith, that ſhe vvould have had an Egyptian vvoman Nurſe unto it, but one and another being brought, the childe refuſed to ſuck, vvhereupon Miriam his Siſter, as if ſhe had paſſed by by chance, vvhen ſhe ſavv this, offered to call an Hebrevv vvoman as is aforeſaid, & vvhen the mother vvas come, the childe ſucked of her moſt willingly. Joſeph. Note. All this was ſo brought about by a ſingular Providence of God, that he might be ſaved alive and grow up, whom God would have to be ſaved for the working of the great workes, to which he had appointed him in his ſecret counſell, and continually he ſwayeth the hearts of men and women, as he pleaſeth.

Verſe 9. And the childe grew, and ſhe brought him to Pharaohs Daughter, and he became her Son, and ſhe called his name Moſes, becauſe, ſaid ſhe, I have drawne him out of the water. Philo ſaith, that Pharaohs Daughter having no childe, but being very deſirous of one, when ſhe had ſeen this, feigned herſelfe to be with childe, and afterwards in travell, and ſo to have brought forth this childe, Philo.

ſo

so great was his beauty, and so amiable his person, as that at the very first sight of him she was allured by him thus to do. But Josephus saith, that wanting children herselfe she brought him to her Father, telling him, that she had him out of Nilus, and desired that she might have him for a successour in that Kingdom, by whose perswasion the King consented, and she adopted him for her Son. But upon a time the King also being greatly delighted in the childe, set his Crowne upon his head, which he cast to the ground, and troad it under his feet, which being seene by one of his Prophets, he cried out, that this childe should be the overthrow of Egypt, and therefore stirred him up to kill him. But God, whose purposes none could frustrate, preserved him still, and he lived in great grace and favour with all men, yea so delighted were they with the beholding of him, that they would come from their work to look upon him, being grieved, when they must depart againe from seeing so pleasing a sight: to this effect Josephus; and this is rather to be approved, then that of Philo, because his name Moses taken from Mos signifying water in the Egyptian tongue, sheweth, that Pharaohs Daughter did not conceale from her Father what had not happened touching her finding of him in the waters, or neare unto them. For from this word both Philo, Josephus and Clemens Alexandrinus derive his name, although some contend, that it is derived from Massah, to draw out, in the Hebrew tongue, as Tostatus, Oleaster, and Aben-Ezra saith, that it is an Hebrew name derived from the Egyptian, and he addeth also, that he found him in a certaine Arabick book called Monion, and Clemens Alexandrinus saith, that Moses was also called Joachim signifying one rising againe, confirming or revenging, and in Heaven Melchi, my King. It is not likely that Pharaohs Daughter would name him by an Hebrew name, being herselfe an Egyptian, although I doubt not, as Tostatus alledgeth it for a reason, but that she learned by conversing with Hebrew women that waited upon her, that Language. She named him by an Egyptian name, but so as that it was common to both Languages, so likewise Simlerus. and Calvin, although he saith also, Peradventure she asked the Nurse, what fit name she might give unto him, and so had this name from her, but I rest in the former. For the name (drawne out of the water) it is a marvell, that Pharaohs Daughter would give him such a name, whereby he should be continually put in minde of his originall from the Hebrews, or that she durst present such a childe, preserved contrary to her Fathers decree, unto him. But this name giving, saith Calvin, is to be imputed unto God, who guided her tongue, as afterwards the tongue of Balaams Asse to speak, to call him thus. And for the preserving of him contrary to the Kings decree, this could not in this case offend the King, because he was not preserved, as an Hebrew, but translated by his Daughters adoption from the Hebrew to the Egyptian kinde, that being thus augmented the more by one. In what doubt his Parents now were, we may imagine, as touching the accomplishment of the things foretold of him, because he was altogether gone from his kinred to another people, and to a Kings Court, the corruptions and fascinations whereof were very great. But his name could never suffer him to let the remembrance of his originall to go out of his minde; so doth God provide even by the means of those that knew not God, for the good of his children; and this name did well agree to him afterwards, leading the Israelites through the waters, and so saving them, as Christ also since saveth by Baptisme. Touching the learning, to which Moses was brought up, nothing is said here, but Stephen saith, that he was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in word and deed, and this must needs be implied in that here it is said, he became the sonne of Pharaohs Daughter, seeing Princes children are commonly brought up to all good learning. Philo saith, that the learning to which Moses was brought up, was Chaldee, Greek and Egyptian. Of the Egyptians he learned Geometry, Arithmetick, Musick, and Astrology, which he calleth popular or open learning, and the Hieroglyphicks by certaine symbols noting Ioseph. lib. 2. antiquit.

Clemens Alex. and l. 1. Strom.
Tostatus.
Aben-Ezra

Simlerus.
Calvin.

Note.

Simlerus.

Act. 7.22.

Philo lib. 1. de vita Mos.

ting out the moſt grave myſteries of Phyſiology, Theology and the Politicall faculty, which he calleth ſecret and ſacred. Of the Grecks he learned Philoſophy, and of the Chaldees Aſtronomicall and Sidereall learning, eſpecially for prediction of things to come. And herein he ſaith he was ſo apt, that he excelled in a ſhort time all his Teachers. And the ſame is alſo reported by Clemens Alexandrinus out of Philo, yet he ſaith, that Eupolemus ſaith, that Moſes was a wiſe man, and was the firſt, that taught letters and Grammar to the Jews, from whom the Pheniceans taking their learning tranſlated it to the Grecians, which if it be ſo, then Moſes could not be taught by the Grecians, as Philo ſaith, and in truth forſomuch as Cadmus was the firſt, that brought learning into Greece, who was after Moſes, it cannot be, that he ſhould have any Maſters from thence. And by the ſpeech of Stephen ſaying, He was learned in all the wiſdome of the Egyptians, but not of the Chaldees or Greeks, it is more plaine, that Philo affirming the contrary was deceived.

Clemens Alex. lib. 1. Strom.

Verſe 11. And Moſes being growne went out to his Brethren, and looked on their burthens, and he ſpied an Egyptian ſmiting an Hebrew, &c.

Acts 7. 23. Queſt. Moſes as Stephen hath it, was now 40 yeares old, and if it be demanded, what made him after ſo long a time now ſingularly to ſhew himſelfe to his Brethren? it is anſwered by ſome, that he uſed thus to do in times paſt, being carried by a naturall affection to his Parents and Brethren: but others anſwere and that more probably, ſaith Simlerus, that hitherto having forgotten his kinred, and being taken up with the pleaſures and honours of Pharaohs Court, he was now by a ſingular motion of the Spirit carried out unto them to commiſerate and help them what he could. And this ſeemeth to be confirmed by that of Stephen, who ſaith, that he ſuppoſed, his Brethren would have underſtood, that God by his hand would deliver them, from which we may gather, that he had ſome ſecret intelligence from the Spirit, what God had appointed him unto, and was hereby extraordinarily ſtirred up. He had then at this time a ſingular faith, by which forſaking by ſtealth Pharaohs Court, he went and joyned himſelfe to the poore people of God, as the Apoſtle noteth. Upon what occaſion the Egyptian ſtrove with the Hebrew, and whether the act of Moſes in ſmiting him be juſtifiable, and how he ſmote him, ſee my Expoſ. Act. 7. 24.

Simlerus.

Acts 7. 24.

Heb. 11. 24.

Joſeph. lib. 2. Antiqu. Before this time, no particular act of Moſes is recorded here, but Joſephus ſaith, that by the appointment of the King of Egypt he made Warre againſt the Ethiopians, and having led his Army through a dangerous Wilderneſſe with admirable dexterity, he overthrew the Ethiopians, and beſieged Saba, the chiefe City, ſince by Cambyſes in the honour of his Siſter Meroe called Meroe. And whileſt he was in this ſiege, but not able to winne it, Tharbis the Daughter of the King of Ethiopia was ſo far taken with the love of him, that ſhe offered to deliver the City into his hands upon condition that he would take her to Wife, which he did, but the Author of the Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, that when he had taken her, he being deſirous to returne againe into Egypt, made through his skill in the Starres two Images in precious ſtones of ſuch vertue, that the one cauſed memory, and the other forgetfulneſſe, which being ſet in a Gold Ring he gave unto her, keeping the firſt unto himſelfe, and ſo ſhe began to forget her love towards him, and he had liberty to returne into Egypt. But whether theſe things be true or no, I leave it to be judged of by the reaſonable Reader. The Hebrevvs, vvho are full of fables, ſay that for this murther committed by Moſes, the Devill ſtrove vvith Michael the Archangell about his body, vvhen he vvas dead, and yet Maimony ſaith, that from hence a Lavv came amongſt the Jevvs, that an heathen being taken ſmiting an Iſraelite, vvas to be ſlaine therefore. Treat of Hurts Chap. 5. The Hiſtory of the birth, expoſing, adopting, and of this his exploit againſt the Egyptian is by ſome myſtically applied unto Chriſt, a notable Type of vvhom he vvas. For as Moſes, ſo Chriſt vvas borne in a time of oppreſſion under a ſtrange King, and chiefly of a ſpirituall thraldome of all to the Devill by Scholaſt. hiſtori.

The Allegory.

Idolatry

Idolatry and other wickedneſſe. And as Moſes was caſt out by his parents amongſt the waters, but was taken out by a Gentile, and grew into great eſtimation; ſo Chriſt being rejected by the Jews, and put amongſt many tribulations, as waters, the Gentiles received him by believing in him, and ſo he grew amongſt all the Gentiles into high eſtimation. And as from the birth of Moſes, and his taking out of the waters, nothing is ſpoken of him till that he was grown up, but then he ſlew one that wronged an Hebrew; ſo of Chriſt, nothing is ſpoken after his birth and circumciſion, till that growing up to 30 years of age he deſtroyed the Devil our adverſary. Again, as Moſes went from the Kings Court for this purpoſe, joyning himſelfe to the poor Hebrews; ſo Chriſt came down from heaven amongſt miſerable men. Thus Rupertus, Iſidore, Ferus, applying alſo every particular circumſtance, as prefigurative which I omit, becauſe over-much ſtreined. Rabanus will have Moſes to be a figure of the Law, and his hiding 3 moneths, of the Laws remaining hidden, as touching that which was figured out hereby three times of Judges, Kings and Prieſts; the coming of Pharaohs daughter to waſh her, of the waſhing of the Church of the Gentiles by Baptiſme, for till then the Law was ſhut up in a little Ark, daubed with ſlime, that is, was amongſt thoſe that underſtood it not, being ſhut up in earthly traditions of the Jews, but the Church of the Gentiles breaking open this cover by atteining to the true underſtanding of that which was figured out in thoſe Laws, brought it into the palace of true wiſdome, where it grew more mighty, as Moſes grew mighty in words and deeds.

Rupertus.
Iſidor.
Ferus.
Rabanus.

And when he went out the ſecond day, two Hebrews ſtrove together, and he ſaid to him, that did wrong, Wherefore ſmiteſt thou thy fellow? 14 And he ſaid, Who made thee a Prince? &c. Hereby it appeareth, ſaith Calvin, that Moſes had now propounded to himſelf to leave the Kings Court, that he might joyn himſelf to his brethren, for he went amongſt them day after day, which argueth a great faith in him, for that he was not deterred by their burthens and grievous oppreſſions. And this was another part of a Ruler, as to ſmite an oppreſſour, ſo to make peace amongſt brethren: but the Hebrew, that wronged his brother, ſhewed of what an ill diſpoſition that Nation was, in that he flew thus as it were, in his face for his good will. We may learn from this example to perſevere in viſiting the poor and diſtreſſed, and not to do it once onely. 2 When we do our duties, not to be troubled, if we meet with hard meaſure even from our brethren. 3 The wicked that do ill are moſt impatient of reproof, as the Jews were afterwards, when Chriſt reproved them ſeeking his death therefore, ſo that if we will approve our ſelves not to be of that ſort, we muſt patiently bear reproofs.

Verſe 13.

Calvin.

Ferus.
Note.

Pſal. 141. 5.

Moſes hearing him ſpeak of his killing the Egyptian, feared, and when it came to Pharaohs eare, he ſought to kill him, but Moſes fled. Heb. 11. 27. it is ſaid, that he forſook Egypt, not fearing the Kings wrath: but that this is meant of his ſecond going out of Egypt, ſee my Expoſition there. And now he fled not, as repenting him of that fact, as Simlerus ſaith, or to ſeek to pacifie the King being angry, as Calvin; but he went aſide for a time, reſerving himſelfe for the execution of the office of a Deliverer, when God ſhould the ſecond time call him unto it. But I preferre the former, ſeeing it is moſt apparent, that he was at this time afraid; and if he ſhould have come to ſeek reconciliation with the King, haply he might have doubted, that being ſeen, he ſhould never have eſcaped.

Verſe 14.
Verſe 15.

Simlerus.
Calvin.

The place to which he came, was Madian, a City, ſaith Joſephus, of Arabia Petrea, neer the Red-ſea, having the name from Madian, the ſon of Abraham by Keturah, and he ſate by a Well to refreſh himſelfe with water, as was the manner of travellers in thoſe hot Countreys to do. There were, as Jerome ſaith, two Cities of this name, one beyond Arabia in the deſart of the Saracens Southward towards the Red-ſea, and another by Arnon, the firſt of which, ſaith one, was of the Edomites, and the other of thoſe that came of Keturah;

Joſeph.

Hieron. de locis Hebraicis.
Hen. Bunting. Patriarchs travels.

Exod.18.

Keturah, the one, to which Moſes fled 180 miles from Egypt, and from Jeruſalem 160, and the other not above 24 miles from Jeruſalem. It ſeemeth, that this Madian was not farre from Mount Sinai, becauſe Jethro came afterwards from thence to Moſes with his wife and children, he being then about this Mount, and here Moſes fed the ſheep of Jethro, *Chap.*3.1.

Note.

Here was a ſtrange beginning for a Deliverer of his people, he began to do ſomething, but preſently he fled away, ſo that there could now according to man, be no more hope of any ſuccour by him. Long was it, after he was born, before he did any thing, even 40 years, and now he is abſent again 40 years, before that he offereth himſelfe again. But God, whoſe wayes are not like mans ways, carried him forth to this exilement by a ſingular Providence, that he might be the better fitted for his office, when he had been ſo long in a deſart place inured to ſuffer hardſhip, which yet he had not done liviog deliciouſly in Pharaohs Court: to this effect Calvin. Ferus rendereth other reaſons. 1 That it might appear, when he ſhould deliver them, that he did it by Gods power, and not by his own, that the Iſraelites might learn to truſt, not in man, but in God onely. 2 That he might be altogether ſeparated from the wicked houſe of Pharaoh. 3 That the Hebrews might be puniſhed for their ingratitude, being left deſtitute of a friend, who might have done them many good offices, to bear their miſeries yet 40 years longer, becauſe at the 40 year of his age, he offering himſelfe for a Deliverer was rejected. Thus the Jews rejected Chriſt, and were therefore left deſolate a long time, and ſhall be left, till they have throughly ſmarted for their ingratitude, but at length he will come again with his grace unto them.

Calvin.
Ferus.

The Allegory.
Rom.11.

Verſe 16,17
Verſe 18,19
Verſe 20,21
Verſe 22.

Moſes being by a Well in Madian, an opportunity was offered him to grow into acquaintance there; the ſeven daughters of the Prieſt going about to water their fathers ſheep, were repelled by the ſhepherds, but aſſiſted by Moſes, and this vvas an occaſion that Moſes vvas enterteined by Revel their father, and he gave him Zipporah his daughter to vvife, by vvhom he had a ſonne vvhom he called Gerſhom.

Here vvas a ſingular Providence, for the comfort of Moſes being novv ſolitary and deſtitute of all vvorldly comforts for his zeal for God and his people: for it vvas not chance, but Gods hand that brought him hither at this time, and vvrought further for him for his benefit. Here again he alſo ſhewed his Heroicall ſpirit in ſuccouring diſtreſſed Virgins after the manner of thoſe Worthies of old, celebrated by the Poets and other Writers, as Hercules, Theſeus, &c. Touching the father of theſe Virgines, he is called a Prieſt, or, as the word alſo ſignifieth, a Prince: but forſomuch as his daughters were put to this toil of keeping ſheep, and contending with ſhepherds, I think with Calvin, that he was not a Prince but a Prieſt, ſo likewiſe the Septuagint render the word, and Philo and Joſephus affirme him to be a Prieſt, yet the Chaldee Paraphraſt calleth him Prince, and Artapanus cited by Euſebius King of Arabia. But if he were onely a Prieſt, being the chief, he was a man of great account. If it be demanded, whether he were a Prieſt of the true God, or of Idols? I finde, that two Rabbins have been of contrary opinions; Aben-Ezra ſaith, that he was a Prieſt of the true God, proving it from his ſaying, Exod. 18. Bleſſed be the Lord, who hath delivered you out of the hands of the Egyptians, and he offered ſacrifices to God. But David Chimhi ſaith, that he was now an Idolatrous Prieſt, but converted, when he heard of the wonders done by the Lord in bringing his people out of Egypt, becauſe he ſaith, Now I know, that the Lord is above all gods, as if now firſt he began to know and acknowledge this. Calvin is for the firſt, and upon the ſame ground, and becauſe if he had been an idolatrous Prieſt, Moſes would not ſo readily have married his daughter. It is rather to be thought therefore, that this people coming of Abraham, were not ſo farre degenerated, but that they had ſtill ſome knowledge of the true God, and worſhipped him, although their worſhip was haply joyned, as in all places in thoſe times, with many corruptions. And for that

Calvin.
Septuagint.
Philo.
Ioſephus.
Chald. Paraphraſt.
Euſeb. lib.9 de. præpar. Evang.
Queſt.
Aben Ezra.
David Chimhi.
Exod.18.11.

Calvin.

that ſpeech of Jethro, Now I know, &c. it argueth no more, but that he was more confirmed in faith touching Gods almighty power.

For the name of this Prieſt, here it is Reuel or Reguel, as in the Hebrew, Exod. 18. Jethro. Judg 4.11. Hobab. Whereupon ſome have held him to be trinomious, or of three names, Jethro ſignifying, adding, becauſe he added one point unto the Law, Chap. 18. of appointing Captains over thouſands, hundreds and fifties; and Hobab, loving, becauſe he loved the Law of the Lord, being converted unto it; and at the firſt his name was Reguel, and hereunto they adde a fourth, Kenite, Judg. 4 16. But Hobab is plainly ſaid to be his ſon, and ſo the brother in law, and not the father in law of Moſes, although Judg. 4.11. may ſeem to ſpeak to the contrary. But whereas it is there ſaid, The children of Hobab, the father in law of Moſes, it is to be underſtood, the ſonne of the father in law of Moſes: Joſephus ſaith, that his proper name was Raguel, and his cognomen Jethro, the Septuagint render him Jethro in this place.

Lyranus. Teſtatus.

Numb. 10. 29.

Ioſeph lib 2. Antiquit.

Touching his ſonne, whom he calleth Gerſhom, becauſe ſaith he, I have been a ſtranger in a ſtrange Land: Moſes had not one Gerſhom only by Zipporah, but another called Eliezer, Exod. 18. yet of one only mention is here made, although the Septuagint are bold, and the vulgar Latin following them to put them both down here. It is not to be thought, that he had this ſonne preſently after his marriage, but many yeares after, becauſe he returning againe to Egypt the 40 yeares ſet his two ſons and their Mother upon an aſſe, neither had he yet circumciſed one of them, ſo that we may gather, that the firſt was born to him many yeares after his comming into Madian. For the reaſon yeilded of the name Gerſhom, Moſes would doubtleſs by giving his childe this name put himſelf in minde, that he muſt not alwayes dwell in Madian, but long after the promiſed Land, and Heaven, of which that was a type, and that in Madian, and ſo in this world whereſoever, he was but a ſtranger, as is ſpoken of him, Heb. 11. and his ſonne alſo might hereby be put in minde of the ſame. This name then was uſed, as a prop to ſupport his faith, and as a monument to declare it, and how that he believed a time would come, when he or his ſhould have a ſhare in Canaan for a continuing poſſeſſion. For the queſtion, whether this were the wife of Moſes called an Ethiopian, Numb. 12? It is anſwered by ſome, that ſhe was the Kings daughter of Ethiopia, ſaid before by Ioſephus to have been taken to wife by Moſes, when he warred in that Countrey. But becauſe Philo, who wrote of the life of Moſes before Ioſephus, ſaith nothing of that Marriage, it may well be thought to have been a fiction, and that he never had any ſuch wife, or if he had, ſhe being left in that Countrey, and never coming to him after, cannot be the woman meant, Numb. 12. Others therefore anſvvere better, that Zippora ſaid here to be of Madian, is the ſame that is ſaid there to be an Ethiopian. Thus Auguſtine, vvho ſaith that the Madianites vvere anciently called Ethiopians, as we may gather 2. Chron. 14. 10, 13. becauſe the Ethiopians, whom Aſa is ſaid to have overcome, and to have taken their Cities, may be noted to have had the ſame Cities with the Madianites, which argueth, that they vvere all one people. So likevviſe Theodoret ſaith that Zippora vvas an Ethiopian, for ſhe vvas of Saba a Citie of Ethiopia, belonging to the Queene of Ethiopia, and he rejecteth that of Ioſephus as fabulous, and another thing related by Apollinarius as more fabulous, that Moſes beſides Zippora took him an Ethiopian vvoman, in a figure of Chriſt his taking a Church of the Gentiles, black through Idolatries and ſinnes, as an Ethiopian. Ierom alſo ſaith, that Cuſh and Madian were one and the ſame, one being added to expreſſe the other. Haback. 3. 7. I ſaw the tents of Cuſhan, or Æthiopia in affliction, the Curtaines of the Land of Midian did tremble; for thou muſt, ſaith he, underſtand the Ethiopians and Madianites to be the ſame. There were two Countreys called by the name of Ethiopia, one Weſterne farre off from Egypt, and the other Eaſterne neare unto it, ſince called Arabia: ſo Strabo and Pliny; and here dwelt the Iſhmaelites, Madianites and Amalekites, who becauſe they came all of Abraham, are ſomtimes called

Exod 4.20.

Calvin. Simlerus.

Queſt.

Auguſt: quæſt. 20. in Num.

Theod. quæſt. 22. in Num.

Hieron. in Habac 3.

Strabo. Pliny.

called by this one name Ethiopians or Arabians. Euſebius ſaith, that Zippora was the Daughter of Reguel the ſonne of Adam, the ſonne of Gerſam, the ſonne of Abraham by Ketura, and ſo the fourth from Abraham, but the names do not agree.

Euſebius de præparat. Evang. l. 9. c. ult.

Verſe 23, 24 Verſe 25.

And in proceſſe of time the King of Egypt died, and the children of Iſrael ſighed by reaſon of the bondage, &c. In the Hebrew it is, In thoſe many dayes the King of Egypt died, that is, in the 40 yeares of Moſes his living in the Land of Madian. In the dayes of the King, called Orus, towards the end of his Reigne, Moſes fled into Madian, after whom ſucceeded Acengeres, and reigned twelve years, and then Achorus nine years, and laſtly, Chenchres ſixteen, who was the King, that periſhed in the Red-ſea: ſo Simlerus out of other ancient Writers. If this were ſo, not that King alone was now dead, but the ſecond and the third after him alſo, and the fourth now reigned. In the changes of Kings there was no change to the better of the ſtate of the children of Iſrael, unleſſe in reſpect of their children, who were not put to death, as before. They were ſtill oppreſſed with heavy burthens, under the weight of which they are now ſaid to cry and to mourn, not that they cried not before, but becauſe perſiſting till now in their ſighings and laments, the Lord began to provide for their deliverance: For which cauſe he is ſaid now to have heard them, and to have remembred his covenant, and to have had reſpect unto them, not that he at any time forgat his covenant, but becauſe he is then ſaid to remember, when he doth according to the ſame: ſo Calvin and Simlerus, &c.

Simlerus.

Calvin.
Simlerus.

Some think, ſaith Simlerus, that they were onely affected with ſo great grief out of a ſenſe of their bodily miſeries, but not out of true penitency. It cannot indeed be denied, but that grievous oppreſſions of any ſend forth loud and prevailing cries up to heaven, and the juſt Judge of the whole world is moved hereby to take revenge upon oppreſſours, and to deliver the oppreſſed crying unto him, for this redoundeth greatly to his glory, to right the cauſes of thoſe that ſuffer wrong. But there is great reaſon that we ſhould think more charitably of Gods people, and that their oppreſſions were a means to work true repentance in them, and that in penitency they now cried unto the Lord, and pleaded his covenant with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and ſo were heard and delivered. But it was a ſtrange thing that Moſes, the Deliverer, ſhould be left in a ſtrange Countrey ſo long, even to his old age, and then be ſent and not before. What hope or expectation in mans reaſon could now have been of comfort and helpe by him? but he that bringeth light out of darkneſſe, taketh his time now, when the Hebrews plainly ſaw, that by none other means they could have ſuccour, but by the Lords reaching out his helping hand in a miracnlous manner, that we all might learn, not to truſt to any worldly means, or to ſeek thereunto, but onely to God.

Note.

The Allegory. Rab. Maurus.

For the Allegory of Moſes his coming into Madian, as he ſate by a Well, and drove the ſhepherds away, watering the flocks of Reguels daughters; ſo Chriſt coming by his Apoſtles amongſt the Gentiles, when he had left the Jews, drove away the Philoſophers and idolatrous Prieſts, and gave refreſhing by his grace to all that believed in him, beginning with baptizing them with water at Rivers and Fountaines, and thus it cometh to paſſe that he hath a wife amongſt them, which is his Church, of whom he begetteth Gerſhom a ſtranger, becauſe all the children of his Church acknowledge themſelves to be pilgrims and ſtrangers here. After this, as the King of Egypt dieth, ſo the Devil with his kingdome is deſtroyed, and the faithfull mourn and lament for their ſins, from all which God is ready preſt to ſend them a timely deliverance. To this effect almoſt Rabanus.

Heb. 11. 13.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1.

AND Moſes kept the ſheep of Jethro, his father in law, and led them behinde the wilderneſſe, and came to Horeb, the Mount of God. Moſes had hitherto led a ſhepherds life, and ſtill continueth the ſame, being now aged, and in this courſe he muſt needs endure much hardſhip by heat and cold, and watchings day and night, yet he patiently perſiſted in it now 40 years, although his beginning had been in Courtly pleaſures and Princely glory. An example to be look't at by thoſe that are falne from riches to poverty to work patience in them. By this paſtorall life he is initiated to be a Paſtour of Gods people, as David was; for what is a Prince, but a Paſtour, and what elſe is his duty, but the duty of a Paſtour, to care for the good and welfare of his people? But why doth he now lead his ſheep behinde the wilderneſſe to this Mountain? Some ſay, both that he might be more ſafe, and lie hid there from his enemies, and more remote from the company of the idolatrous Madianites, and that he might more quietly meditate, and pray for the afflicted people, for by prayer a ſecret place is to be ſought. But Joſephus ſimply, becauſe this was a graſſie place, wherein he might beſt feed his ſheep, the warmth there cauſing the graſſe to ſpring the ſooner, and it was the Spring-time, when he thus brought them thither. And this is rather to be held; Moſes going, as his calling required, with his ſheep, where the beſt graſſe was, came unawares to him by a ſingular Providence to the Mount of God: thus God hath his ends in humane actions, when they think not thereupon, for his own glory and the ſpecial good of his people. Mount Horeb is called the Mount of God by anticipation, becauſe for Gods appearing and giving the Law there, it had that name afterwards, it is the ſame that Mount Sinai, call'd Horeb on the Weſt, Sinai on the Eaſt part, Horeb for the heat, and Sinai for the buſhes growing there. It was three dayes journey from Egypt, for which cauſe Moſes deſired Pharaoh to let the people go three dayes journey into the wilderneſſe to do ſacrifice. One ſaith, that from Midian to Horeb are 64 miles, and that it was diſtant from Jeruſalem 420 miles, and yet that it was in Madian, the chief City whereof to which Moſes belonged, being 160 miles from Jeruſalem, which relation cannot be true, becauſe contradictory in it ſelf.

Note.

Queſt.

Ferr.

Joſeph.

And the Angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midſt of a buſh, and he looked, and behold, the buſh burned with fire, and was not conſumed. Here were two things ſeen by Moſes, a flame of fire, and the Angel appearing in it, A moſt beautifull forme, ſaith Philo, not like to any viſible thing, a plainly moſt divine image, ſhining with moſt clear light, that a man might think it to be the image of God. He which is ſaid here to be the Angel of God, is by Calvin and Simlerus held, not to be an Angel properly ſo called, but the Son of God, ſhewing himſelf in this likeneſſe, who by Malachi is called the Angel of the Teſtament, by Eſay, the Angel of great Counſel, and by Zachary, a Prince amongſt the Angels, becaue Moſes afterwards wiſheth to Joſeph the bleſſing of the Angels, that appeared to him in the Buſh, and Saint Paul plainly ſaith, that vvhereas this Angel went before the children of Iſrael, it was Chriſt, that followed them, and led them; and laſtly, becauſe he ſetteth himſelf forth, as Jehovah, having his being of himſelf, and giving being to all other things, which no meer Angel would have done. Thus alſo all ours. And well may Chriſt the Son of God, be called the Angel of the Lord, becauſe he was ſent of the Father, as the word Angelus ſignifieth, although not now, according to that ſending in the fleſh, for which ſpecially he hath this name, yet to ſhew before by his appearing at certain times to the holy Fathers by that likeneſſe whereiu he was ſeen as by a præludium to his future incarnation, and coming in a true humane body. And of this opinion alſo was Theodoret, who ſaith, The ſpeeches uſed by this Angel, I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob: and again, I am that I am, do ſhew, that the Angel which appeared,

Verse 2.

Sim'erus. Hieronym. de locis Hebr.

Patriarchs travels.

Philo. Et vidit pomicabo ſplendi quædam pulcherrima vultu ipſius ſimile, diximus plane ſimulachrum, lucē fulgens clariſſimā, ac ſuſpicari poſſit Dei eſſe imaginem.

Mal.3. Eſay 9. Deut.33. 1 Cor.10.4.

vvas God. But he is called an Angell, that vve might knovv him not to be God the Father, for vvhose Angel could he be? but the only Son of God, vvho by Esay is called the Angel of great Counsell. And as in calling him an Angell he vvould shevv him not to be any of the ministring Angels, but the person of the only begotten, so he doth againe publish his nature and povver, in telling, that he said, I am the God of Abraham, &c. for this doth declare his divine substance and shevv his eternity. Saint Agustine speaketh doubtingly of it vvhether it vvere the Lord in the Angel or the Lord himselfe, vvho is called the Angel of great Counsell, Christ being hereby understood, but in another place, he saith plainly, Is an Angell the God of Abraham, &c? therefore our Saviour himselfe may rightly be understood. And againe, the Father cannot be understood, but either the Sonne, or the Holy Ghost, yet vve read not of the Holy Ghost called an Angel in any place, but of the Sonne most evidently in the Prophet, that he is the Angel of great Counsell. Justine Martyr also saith, that in this and other apparitions of the Old Testament not God the Father, or the Holy Ghost, but the Sonne appeared, so likevvise Tertul. lib. 2 contra Marcion. Hilarius lib. 4. de Trinit. Ambros. lib. 1 de fide. Chrysost. in Act 7. All vvhich I have noted before, Gen. 32. v. 24. Qu. 1 And on the other side, vvho have held him to be an Angell, and upon vvhat reason, and to vvhether of these I most incline.

Theodoret. q. 3. in Gen. Unive-sus iste locus demonstrat Deum esse, qui apparuit, vocavit autem illum angelum, ut cognoscamus, quòd is qui visus est, non fuit Deus Pater, cujus enim Angelus esset Pater? sed quòd fuit unigenitus filius, qui magni consilii est Angelus &c.
August. qu. 3. in Exod.
August lib 2. de Trinit. c. 12.
Just. Martyr Dialog cum Tryphone.

But what might be the cause of the Lords appearing by his Angell in this manner? Ferus summeth up divers reasons together, saying, that he which appeared, was not the Lord, but an Angel, this being a difference betwixt the Old Testament and the New, that the Old was given by an Angell, this by the Son of God, yet because this Angell represented God, he is called Jehovah, and God. The Angel of the Lord appeared now in a bush in flaming fire, because thus the state of the children of Israel was most aptly figured out, who were as a bush in the fiery flame of affliction, yet forsomuch as they should now be delivered, and were not by afflictions consumed, but wonderfully multiplied, the flame consumeth not the bush, but this was by the miraculous power of God, because the fire would otherwise soone have burnt up the bush, and it was by the same power, that the Israelites not able to beare such oppressions were preserved in the midst of them, for although an Oak may stand in the midst of a flame, yet a vile and weak bush cannot, but by miracle. And because fire is so raging, that nothing can stand before it, but it burneth downe most strong buildings, his appearing in a flame shewed, that Pharaoh, and all his armed Troups should be destroyed by him. The bush indeed, in which this flame was, was not consumed, to shew, that herein God is unlike to materiall fire, that burneth and consumeth things neerest to it, but not things further off, for the Lord contrariwise hurteth not those in whom he is, but the wicked who are farre from him, as Egyptians, he surely destroyeth. And the Jewes, saith he, will give this apparition to be so made, because in fire, or in a bush no Image can be made, lest afterwards comming to that place they should by idolatry corrupt themselves. Philo, who hath the first of these reasons, addeth this also as another: a bush, although it be weak, yet is thorny and woundeth with touching, therefore by this Bush was signified, that the present infirmity of the Jews should be turned into great power, and that they by many and grievous plagues should wound, as with pricking thornes, the Egyptians greatly, of whom they were then vexed. The former reason is also imbraced by Theodoret, Calvin, Simlerus and all others. And Calvin particularly saith, that this vision for signification was not unlike to that, Gen. 15 where a burniug Lamp was seen in the midst of a dark caliginous furnace, signifying, that God would not suffer his people to be extinguished in the midst of the darknesse of their oppressions in Egypt. And as the Hebrews, so the Church of God in all times under persecution is as a bush comprehended by a flame, but not consumed. This is also applied by Gregory to the Law given to the Hebrews, and to Christ, who Quest.

Ferus.

Philo. Rubus frutex debilis & spinosus vel solo contactu vulnerans præsignabat præsentem Hebræorum infirmitatem magnam in potentiam conversam iri, & quod ipsi per graves & multas plagas, quasi per spinas ubi vulneraturi essent Ægyptos severiter à quibus ipsi tunc vexabantur.
Hieron. Epist. 127. ad Fabiolam.
Gregor. Moral. lib. 25.

came came of them. For the Law is called fiery, Deut, 33. 2. but conſumeth not ſinnes, which be as thornes. And the Deity being as a fiery flame in the man Chriſt, who was for his outward vileneſſe and ſufferings as a buſh compaſſed with thornes, conſumed him not. Bernard applieth this to the Virgin Mary ſet forth by a woman clothed with the Sunne, ſhewing the coming of the glorious Spirit upon her, and yet able to ſubſiſt. Some to a regenerate man, in whom is the flame of concupiſcence, but not unto his conſumption, but only for his exerciſe. Laſtly, Iſidore ſaith, As Moſes ſaw the Lord in a repreſenting the Church, ſo in the Church only may a man come to ſee the Lord to his comfort, and not out of it by any means. Touching fire, by which God is called, as he is here ſet forth by it; Dionyſius obſerveth many wayes a ſimilitude betvvixt God and it. Fire is felt by all things, and is in them, but yet not mixed vvith them, overcometh all things, maketh thoſe things, that it layeth hold upon, to ſerve it ſelfe, reneweth vvith the vitall heat all things, inlighteneth them, and hath the force of diſcerning all things, is agil, ſvvift, tendeth upvvard, and can by no povver be made to tend dovvnvvard; if it be neglected, ſeemeth not to be; but being ſtirred up, it forthvvith breaketh out into a ſhining flame, and being imparted to all things, is never yet diminiſhed, all vvhich may be applied unto God.

Bernard. Serm. de beata virgin.

Iſidor.

Dionyſ. Areop. cap. 15. Eccleſi. Hierarchiæ.

Verſe 3.

And Moſes ſaid, I will now turne aſide, and ſee this great ſight, why the buſh is not burnt. It is a queſtion, vvhether Moſes being moved by ſome divine inſtinct turned to ſee this, or as a Philoſopher, the better to diſcerne the naturall cauſe hereof? For it is no rare matter in ſome places to ſee flaming fires, as in Lycia and in Iſeland, vvhere there is much Bytuminous and Sulphureous matter, and in Italy neare Naples novv that I am vvriting this Febr. 10. Anno 1631. it is reported, that a very great Mountaine hath moſt terribly burned ever ſince, Jan. 6. ſending forth by the violence of the flame ſtones and aſhes, and flakes of fire in incredible quantities an incredible compaſſe about to the deſtroying of many people and cattell neare unto it, and the fiering of houſes. And in Iſeland they ſay, that there are Fountaines of fire, which dry up waters, and yet burne not ſtubble. It is not therefore improbable, but Moſes a learned man in all kinde of learning, whileſt he was in Egypt, and having increaſed greatly his knowledge by ſtudy and meditation in the 40 yeares of his leading a ſolitary Shepherds life in Madian, would upon any new accident deſire to come with his skill to the contemplation of it, for the further improving of his learning. For of his ſpending his time in the ſtudy of Philoſophy and vertue in theſe 40 yeares, that he might be the more inabled for any function, Philo ſpeaketh. But both Ferus, Calvin and others hold that Moſes was now carried by a divine inſtinct, it being put into his minde, that this viſion was offered unto him of God, and did portend ſome great matter.

Philo.

Verſe 4.

Then God called unto him out of the midſt of the buſh, ſaying, Moſes, Moſes, &c. God maketh not a dumb ſhew, but as in all other viſions, ſo in this he ſpeaketh to his ſervant, and he doubleth his call, to move him to the more attention, and biddeth him put off his ſhoes, forbidding him to approach thither, becauſe the ground, that he ſtood upon was holy ground, to ſtrike into him the greater reverence in hearkening to that which the Lord ſhould ſay: thus Calvin. And he did not only, ſaith, Simlerus, by calling him twice by his name, ſtir him up to attention, but alſo comfort him, ſhewing this his good will towards him, for when a King calleth his Subject by his name, he ſheweth hereby his good will towards him, as Saul when he was well pleaſed with David, ſaid, Is this thy voice, my ſonne David? but at another time being offended, he ſpake of him by none other name but this, The ſonne of Iſhai. And it is noted of Scipio, that he ſtudied to call his Subjects every one by his proper name, to ſhew his good will towards them, and Cyrus likewiſe did ſpeak to each of his Souldiers by name. The Hebrews ſay, that to confirme Moſes the more, the Lord uſed a voice like to Amram, as in ſpeaking to

Verſe 5.

Calvin. Simlerus.

Hebræi.

Samuel like Eli, but this is vaine. For the prohibiting of Moſes to come neare, it ſeemeth hereby, that there was ſome humane curioſity at this time in him mixed with divine contemplation: for as Gods command is for humble drawing neare unto him in faith, ſo his prohibition is againſt humane curioſity and temerity in ſearching into the things of his Majeſty, as we may alſo ſee, in that bounds were afterwards ſet in giving the Law to keep the people from comming too neare. In forbidding him then to come neare we are taught not raſhly or without due reverence to approach unto God; we muſt take heed unto our feet when we enter into Gods houſe, and be more ready to heare, then to offer the ſacrifice of fools. But why doth he bid him put off his ſhoes? Anſ. Beſides the generall reaſon of reverence brought before, Theodoret yieldeth this, hereby he would teach Moſes before, how the Prieſts ſhould ſerve him in the Temple, or Tabernacle, that is, doing ſacrifice with their bare feet, for thus, ſay the Jews, the Prieſts were wont to miniſter in the Temple. He alſo nameth other reaſons of others, as 1 To ſignifie, that he ſhould put off worldly cares adhering to this mortall life, which ſhoes do moſt aptly repreſent, ſeeing they are made of the skins of dead beaſts. 2 That by putting off his ſhoes he might ſanctifie that ground; but this is contrary to the Text, wherein the ground is affirmed to be holy, and therefore he muſt put them off.

Exod. 19.

Eccleſ. 5. 1.

Queſt. Theod. quæſt. 7. in Exod.

Ambroſe ſaith, that hereby the Lord would teach him to put away the feare of death, in executing that office to which he would now call him, and whereby he vvas to flee out of Egypt before, as he put off his ſhoes made of skinnes of dead beaſts, ſo he ſhould put away the feare of death. The ſame Ambroſe alſo in another place, and Cyprian yield this as a reaſon, that by this ceremony he might ſhew, that he came not to the Buſh repreſenting the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt as the Bridegroome, but gave place herein unto Chriſt, becauſe the putting off of the ſhoe amongſt the Jewes, was a ſigne of yielding a mans right in the relict of his neareſt Kinſman to another, Deut. 25. Ruth. 4. Simlerus applieth this otherwiſe to the abnegation of a mans ſelfe, and yielding from the right of the old man, and becauſe ſhoes are made of the skins of the dead, to the putting off of the dead works of the fleſh. The maine reaſon next unto that of reverence, and acknowledging his owne unworthineſſe before the Lord, ſeemeth to me to be one not hitherto touched, viz. that by this ſymbole we might learn to put away all filthineſſe, that we may be fit to ſtand before the Lord, who is moſt holy, becauſe the holineſſe of the place is ſpoken of, and ſhoes have dirt and filthineſſe commonly about them, whereby the place trodden upon may be defiled, but this alſo is in Simlerus. The other of putting away worldly cares, and the dead works of the fleſh may well come under this, becauſe theſe do defile, or, as Ferus hath it, to put away the imitation of thoſe that are dead in ſinne. The affections are feet of the minde, if then they be upon ſinne or upon the world, when we approach to God, our ſhoes are not put off, the place is polluted, or if we come truſting to our owne righteouſneſſe with the proud Phariſee, or to a naked faith, as Ferus ſpeaketh. As for that application of Theodoret to the Prieſts miniſtring with naked feet in the Tabernacle, haply that cuſtome was rather in time taken up upon ſuperſtition through a fond imitation of this of Moſes, and afterwards of Joſuah, who was bidden to do the like, and not by divine inſtitution, becauſe in all the Lawes of Moſes there was no precept for it. And from hence it is likely that Pythagoras commanded his, ſaying, Do ſacrifice with bare feet, and pray ſo, and the Romans, as Tertulian reporteth, ſacrificed being bare-footed, and thus it is reported, that the Lacedemonians were wont to pray, and the Mahumetans come to their holy aſſemblies at this day bare-footed. The Papals alſo place great Religion in going to holy places bare-footed, taxing us, becauſe we reject this ſo ancient a cuſtome uſed to ſhew reverence. But we look to precepts, and herein finding that the reverence commanded outwardly ſtandeth in being uncovered our heads, and humbly kneeling, uſe this reverence only, rejecting the other as being perſo-

Ambroſ. lib. 7. in Luc.

Ambroſ. de benedict. Pat. cap. 2.
